In other words, that which harbors deep within you is amplified by feeling, by experiencing a sense of connection with the divine, a fact associated with your reflection in a spirit of understanding and compassion, which allows you to share your inner light with others and to you connect with the divine essence of every being.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-law-that-god-has-placed-in-my-life.html

The Laws Found In The Incandescence Of Creation

On June 14, 2014

Be consistent in developing and promoting science, so that people correctly estimate the value of art that deserves a thorough knowledge.

Eisenstein indulged in the assertion of the rigorously scientific construction of his works. The realization period study of the film "Potemkin" proves the spontaneity of the great director's creation, as well as his cold and lucid analysis. In 1937, V. Visnevska writes with a certain indignation to Eisenstein:

"I saw this analysis and it made me sick: there were mathematical proportions and much more. But the sequence itself was made ardently, passionately and enthusiastically. It was summer in the summer. It was passion for the sea and the subject, it was youth, and the city vibrated reliving the events... And then... the analysis – the cold analysis: you can give a key neither to us nor to anyone else..."

But the key existed. Eisenstein has created not only a specific work of art, but by it, general laws of cinema. The subsequent scientific analysis is only the discovery of these laws found in the incandescence of creation. Acts, we will see, contradict malicious opinions of those who saw Eisenstein not as a pathetic artist, but as a skilful engineer, who build his movie with the ruler and with abstract formulas composed in advance... Let us thus address to facts. *

Leadership: Is the relevance of your leadership given by the character of your scientific creations endowed with a number of exemplary attributes?

Professional orientation aimed at finding new forms of art manifestation have not become obsolete or increasingly unlikely following structural transformations that have marked the evolution of society in the last decades. On the contrary, they have as reference point a man's experience in relation to the progress and rigor of his science, correctly acquired through experimentation and research.

And the principles of this science form the foundation of power to draw aside the veil covering the future and the main condition of all obligations to reveal the secrets of "magic" formulas, which can lead to a new appreciation of original art or an architecture of agreement with the fundamental lines of creative thinking that no imitation can offer.

Leadership becomes, in the light of this architecture that opens to welcome "novelty", combining with the whole framework of interpretation and judgments arising inside a prolific mind, an integrator of the authenticity of events that integrates into the criteria of a profound aesthetics, and at the same time idealistic.

Before deciding on the leader's quality, people estimate the value of an art that deserves a thorough knowledge. This art can have as a support model the repetitions of certain fragments of current events, inscribed in the plan of expression that we attribute to the value taken by the correlation between idea and image in the interest of constructing an organic articulation of man with the world.

Does your leadership offer the possibility of including personal creation among support elements of an art that leaves traces?

But the key exists, and this fact is recognized repeatedly by the followers of progress. The most important artists create not only a specific work of art, but also general laws of an art fighting to survive long, bearing in it the germs of perception towards value and the consequences of thinking towards a parallel orientation. Subsequent scientific analysis is only the discovery of these laws found in the incandescence of creation.

Leadership provides the possibility of including personal creation among support elements of an art that leaves traces, generating huge territories of applicability, through which other professionals can realize the value of scientific additions that speed up the process of forming a principled and more active and innovative thinking, hence the contingency man-art-society.

The production of sine qua non elements has the main role in your professional development, in order to elaborate rules and tendencies of science enforcement in a unique leadership framework by rethinking those exceptions to the rules imposed by the forerunners and creators of its foundation.

As a continuator of progress, you have the role to make theoretical and applied research useful, wholly or partially based on the experiences of the other founders of science, in order to endow your leadership with new trends and, especially, with a number of exemplary qualities.

An art that leave traces offers us the suggestion or equivalence of a prototype of thinking that remains anchored in an evolutionary path that is of interest through the exemplary attributes of predicting, organizing, commanding, coordinating, and controlling the impact that events have had on you.

The laws found in the incandescence of creation highlight the leader's effort to develop the field underlying science as a generally accepted and worth following art model. People should follow and continue the same vision as the creator of the actual science.

 Note: Ion Barna -Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-laws-found-in-the-incandescence-of-creation.html

The Leader's Secret

On November 29, 2009

Leadership must find such a huge echo in your soul, that it radiates an intense glow around you.

In 1971, someone claimed firmly: "John Lennon never fails." Edison Arantes do Nascimento's football coach never worried: "Pele will surely score a goal in the first half." It is a well-known fact that Jim Carey, nowadays considered the best comedian in the world, managed from early childhood to make everyone laugh with great ease, and Christina Aguilera – the little girl with a high voice - started her career in music at the age of nine and was successful beyond all expectations.

Of course, you wonder what all these four different people had in common. Well, they always managed to succeed from the first try. While thousands of musicians practiced for months to compose a single song, John Lennon released an entire album, and almost every song composed and song by him reached the first spot in music charts. Many football players failed to score a single goal during an entire season, while Pele scored in almost every match and even from the first half. Jim Carey did not have to struggle much to make people smile – his nature did it for him, and what can I say about Christina Aguilera – her voice did it all.

In short, all these people who had a crazy success and who continue to overshadow us with their outstanding results and their glow discovered their talent they were gifted with. This is why they manage to connect so easily to the public. They find easy what others find hard. They achieve in a month what others fail to realize in a year. They discovered in time their true potential and learned to use it. And the world loves them for it.

How realistic is leadership in your areas of influence in the context of the accumulation of a set of values and conceptions of the attitudes and actions required by the rules of a ranking in the first position?

As a leader, you must show that leadership is realistic, not subjective, in your s areas of influence. You can say with reason that there is realism in your leadership only if it allows for that knowledge to stand out, that expression of your potential which arises from the act of introspection and self-assessment of your own abilities.

Leadership is an art that expresses your most precious qualities. Your strong character, your efforts and your passions characterize it – it must find such a huge echo in your soul, that it radiates an intense glow around you.

Leadership is not a science based on calculations, analysis and probability, it is not a science that uses methods and techniques, it does not move on qualitative information – but an art, a work of sensibility, taste, style, seeking a certain naturalism that occurs only when you emphasize your highest potential.

Leadership it is closely related to your inner structure and tends to certain objectivity. It is not a logical approach, but a call to that depth of your conscience that says: "Yes" or "No" when you fail to focus well your attention to whom you really are, when you tend to deflect from the perception of reality.

Ranking in the first position is the expression of a constructive attitude to the model of decision that demands a certain habit of functioning in terms of self-determination, of imperative value: fight or give up.

Leadership creates a stable and constant connection between you and other people. If you reject your own inclinations and ambitions, if you do not turn to good account your maximum potential, if you talents do not stand out, you will fail to build relationships with other people.

You will never be able to master the art of leadership, you will never feel fully happy and fulfilled if you do not try to discover what makes your potential "tick", if you do not discover in which field you excel. What do you do best? What makes your potential "tick"?

The potential of your activity sphere is like a mirror: the way you look and show your results reveals that power of passion for improving performance.

What Mark Fisher, the author of the famous work "The Instant Millionaire", said is very true: "Successful people are driven by the passion in their hearts. They are romantics, whether it is art or business. They join the action because of the joy they feel for what they do and because of their desire to discover new products or services, to take new risks, to face new challenges."

This is The Leaders' Secret: they do exactly what they know best and therefore they easily establish links with others. John Lennon, Pele, Jim Carey, Christina Aguilera confirm this truth. Does your leadership have an effect of "glow"?

The art of leadership begins with the identification of what you want to achieve as a result of your involvement in a certain activity and is continued with increasing the potential value for success.

To become a leader in a certain field, consider only the thing that you do best. If you are talented in a certain direction, then your leadership will not encounter too many difficulties.

How can you produce an intense "glow" around your leadership? Do you have a particular talent? Discover it and use it to the maximum – this is the secret in leadership.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-leaders-secret.html

The Leadership Horologe

On December 17, 2010

The initiator character of leadership is nothing more than a distinct reflection of how you function in case of overcoming the limits and conditions of life.

A man who has enjoyed a tremendous popularity in the last 20 years is the American writer and director Stephen King. He did, if I may so express myself, an amazing job, writing over one hundred fantastic novels full of connotations, most of them becoming very loved and appreciated by readers around the world.

But at a certain point, says Stephen King in the introduction of his novel, "The Gunslinger" (the first volume of the series "The Dark Tower"), that he went through a difficult moment - when he was hit by a car. He escaped with life only by a miracle. Thus, he was forced to interrupt his work for a while, which displeased him.

However, in 2001 – when he began to feel better, Stephen decided to carry out Roland's adventure (the main character of the series). He put everything aside and started writing the last three volumes. He honestly confessed what he felt deep inside: "I did this not so much for my readers, as for myself ".

Leadership: Do you exploit any situation for your own perfection between the benefit of a partisan vision of addressing a certain limit and the benefit of possessing a state of mind?

In some extent, Stephen King saw himself as a hero – that hero whom he gave birth to in many of his novels, a hero whom no one and nobody could stop his boom to the highest peaks. And inside this hero, there was a voice, like a whisper or a close breath, something alive and full of grace, which always inspired him optimism and confidence, supported him with interest and called his attention when he made a mistake or when he was about to forget his passion.

Stephen always has a passion for writing and reading, he had imagination, delicacy, ideas, he was endowed with all qualities and virtues of a true writer. Since the first moment when he started writing, during school, literature has become a passion for him, which he maintained all of his life. Because of writing, where he skillfully blended his vision and his creative ideas, he felt his whole life ennobled. His unforgettable words: "I did this mostly for myself" carry great weight. You can feel in them the writer's desire to carry out with his work; you can feel the passion, force and energy that characterize him.

The validity term of the personal perspective on the experience perceived as dangerous and painful is replaced by the expiry date of the solitary detention in the area of that reality that urges you to escape from what you wear in the soul.

The virtue of maintaining what you built is an extension of the term of life to the need to strengthen that perception of yourself that reaches the latent content of the dream.

Perfection is in you. Just like a sculptor carves his statues in stone, at leisure carving in it quiet and immortal forms, so does Stephen King create his novels, always creating new scenarios and fantasies. And so you will be able to prove your mastery in the field you are passionate about.

To get to the top of the hierarchy in your profession, you must strive to become a Stephen King; you must do everything with passion and professionalism, and not so much for the people requiring it, but especially for yourself. If you cannot find any pleasure in your work and you don't find yourself full of enthusiasm, then people will have great expectations from you in vain – you will surely disappoint them.

Leadership: Does the self-image that you offer to others contribute to the awareness of your feelings of belonging to a prolonged living condition that allows you to respect your commitments to what you cannot escape?

Enda Larkin, executive of HTC Consulting, mentioned: "The cornerstone of the leader's way of thinking means having a real desire to lead and being prepared to translate this commitment every day. It is built on passion, self-confidence and full harmony with human nature." Nice !

A leader improves his limits by improving his performance. Stephen King would never have reached the top of science fiction and fantasy fiction novel writers if he hadn't persisted in enthusiastically running up the walks of professional life. He was able to evolve because he always "worked" at full capacity, even in the difficult moments of his life. He was and still is rising to it in everything he does, because he always claims more of himself.

And, especially, because he has a certain responsibility towards himself, a certain moral obligation (he feels he always must give more) which, once broken, will affect his career.

Leadership is the sacrifice you assume on the road to excellence, whose significance can only be elucidated by the reconstruction of a world that is about to be lost or a dream on its way to becoming reality.

The Leadership Horologe marks every second of your professional development in time so, therefore, it also marks your image in the world. But the leadership horologe will shut off if your work begins to dissolve and be ineffective. The clock that indicates your level of performance will work and last as long as you firmly impose your ideas and your vision, and especially as long as you are willing to proceed with your career.

Excellence in leadership is difficult to obtain, and if you have a different opinion, then you're terribly wrong. To get to the top of leadership, you must climb the mandatory professional stairs, work with dedication and passion, tenacity and enthusiasm, and take a commitment to yourself not to give up or surrender to failures and difficulties but, at the same time, not to get overly enthusiastic when being successful, because success can be momentary.

Conclusion: Through your work and the experience you gained during this whole time (Including when working with people – who can be your friends or feared enemies), you can achieve the maximum of your potential.

Leadership is nothing more than the distinct reflection of the way you act and evolve.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-leadership-horologe.html

The Leadership Of Santa Claus

On October 16, 2010

Allow other people to focus as fast as possible on you, in order to accomplish your goals as easily as possible.

The craftsman had sold all his toys and was returning home. At the city limit, he stopped to look at a window. He knew that there lived a poor family and wondered what toys had the children in that house received.

Three kids were dreaming out loud:

- If we had a lead soldier, only one, it would be enough for us...

- We would play together and we would never argue for it. The old man knew that he didn't have any other toys, but he would have liked to give them at least on. But what a miracle ! There was a lead soldier, he didn't know how, on the bottom of his bag. And thus, the three poor brother's dream became true.

On his way home, the old man thought to himself: "I would like to make so many toys, so that I can give one to every child in the world, especially to poor children, who don't have someone to buy anything for them". And walking like that and thinking, he saw in the snow a wounded deer. The old man tied it's wound with whatever he had at hand and helped it get up.

What you want to receive from life is the natural consequence of what happens to you when you are willing to do a deed that molds to your values from the very beginning.

Then, the fragile creature talked to him with a clear, childlike voice:

- Now I see you have a good heart. Your wish will come true.

All of o sudden, a magic sleigh appeared, carried by some wonderful reindeers. He was taken into a snowy land where a little house, with lighted windows was waiting for him. A multitude of elves, just like in the stories, greeted him happily.

The elves were industrious and crafty, ready to get to work. Materials were abundant, because, nobody knew how, but it always multiplied and never ran out. And the old and witty craftsman lead the elves and together they made toys, always in larger numbers and more beautiful – for every child in the world, the toy they wanted.

The Christmas Evening is the night when the children's dreams come true. The next day, in the Christmas morning, around the Christmas tree, their joy is endless. None of us was forgotten. And just like the holiday is known, the kids called him Santa Claus it remained as such until today. *

Can the tendency to create a "legend" of your own leadership patterns meet certain needs or expectations of people, especially if their demands on the effectiveness of your practices will always increase?

Just like the story of Santa Claus is always catchy, situating in that key-segment that almost all businesses still study and seriously promote – by using a campaign for raising awareness regarding the importance of your leadership, you will vertiginously improve your ability to relate to other people. The tendency to create a "legend" from your own leadership patterns can fulfill certain needs or expectations among people, especially that their expectations regarding the effectiveness of the practices you apply will always grow.

The correct, profound and ample understanding of your leadership is the key that opens the gate to people's appreciation. But first of all, you must level the ground that suits you best in order to win people over on your side, you must fit in that area by which you can totally control your area of influence. You can fundamentally mark the quality of your impact only if people will be aware of the values that your leadership rests upon and if they would give any undeniable importance to it – just like the coming of Santa Claus is mandatory in order for the children to be thrilled.

Allow other people to connect to you as soon as possible, in order to accomplish your goals as easily as possible. But in order to connect to you, they must consider the importance of your leadership. Ask yourself: what is the pattern of leadership that can meet certain needs or expectations of people? Can your leadership be a "Everyone gets a gift" pattern, or a "believe in something more than miracles" pattern?

Leadership: Does the meaning you give to your expectations depend on how you want your image to look in a context of increasing commitments to what you can control when you know your level of self-motivation?

The leadership you practice will always represent the subject of pragmatic, spiritual research, but also a relevant criteria for the evaluation of your impact – just like Santa Claus' benevolence is evaluated by children by the gifts he brings them. Of course, it is not enough to wish for the development of a myth in a certain direction, in order for your leadership to be accomplished as easily as possible, especially if the respective evolution would contradict the reality. But the major impact that an awareness raising campaign would have on the results is decisive for your success.

You can create a legend by which your leadership can receive a special significance, loved by everyone? Can you impose by it a feeling of holiday which can generate an atmosphere full of joy?

Such a practice is exactly the opposite of the dominant way of thinking in leadership, but it just might be the needed strategy in order to rise to a higher level, based on the necessary difference. I encourage you to at least consider this option.

Is your leadership unanimously accepted? Our dear Santa Claus, the old man with white long hair and beard, with red clothes and a bag full of gifts is a unanimously accepted leader, never contested, even though he has a rule: what goes around, comes around. He is a leader, he has no competition, everybody accepts him just the way he is. From his origins up to this day, he was and is waited for with joy by people from all over the Earth. One must ask, why is he so persistent in time and accepted by the entire world? Almost all countries adopted him as such or equivalents.

What is the meaning of your leadership? Does it mean prosperity and authority? Do you gradually increase your means of influence, fully profiting from the acceptance of people to enter their souls? Do you keep up with their needs and expectations? Are you an unanimously accepted leader?

Leadership is the meaning you give to a good deed done with the intention of self-assessing your qualities in a different form of focus in the present moment, when everything around you is so firmly anchored in a new worldview.

Spirit or faith? Nobody revolts against the decisions of Santa Claus, nobody denies him, nobody strikes because of him, nobody asks for his replacement – even though he is not as giving with all people, bringing consistent gifts only to rich people and cheaper ones to the poor; or he won't bring anything material, but only hope for the suffering.

Why does Santa Claus makes the most of us better, more analytical with ourselves and the most of us he helps to find better ways towards prosperity in the following year?

Spirit or faith, the leadership of Santa Claus can be a model for everybody.

 http://craciunul.blogspot.com/2007/12/poveste-luimos-craciun.html

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-leadership-of-santa-claus.html

The Leadership Play

On December 05, 2010

Leadership is a play you need to understand very well, to penetrate its essence, and to create the end in the way you want.

Often, telling you about the famous character, The Count of Monte Cristo, I felt that would be much easier or you to understand the real human side of leadership. As only certain thing that stands in the way of achieving the desired performance is your own interior "design" - that integrates your true identity and your true potential to create results.

After escaping from the dreaded Castle d'If, and after finding the amazing treasures of Cardinal Spada, Edmond Dantes has created a new identity buying the title of Count. His only thought was to punish his perpetrators and to help his old friends. The performance that he gave to everyone in the role of the Count of Monte Cristo was effective enough to open for him new horizons and new opportunities for achieving goals. His success was complete.

Leadership: Are you part of the chameleon artists category that can assume extremely different identities according to the décor that gives the impulse to put on the wishlist the price of liberation from the past?

Edmond managed through a rare skill to give life both to a comprehensive character, the more perfect, and also to a charming "show" with prime. He played with an unparalleled virtuosity an extremely credible role, of a filthy rich man, always appeared dressed in a cleverly designed outfit - that of a magician, who gave the prestige, as well as an aura of power, of an authentic leader dominating the world.

An impressive performance, a good idea, a well thought scenario, as only a perfect director can make it, the formula for a qualitative leadership and a presentation of big days. This is the formula for a qualitative leadership.

Only a man of great intellectually abilities can portray with a great realistic force and at a level of high art a unique character by his complexity, moving the "public" by the innocence and simplicity. Only a perfect artist can give a realistic interpretation of the character that plays and cause a sensation.

A journey full of the power and glory of God has as its essence the testing of the painful sensitivity to the irreconcilable forces of time that shatter dreams and the character of a role constituted according to the reactions and expectations of others who, like in tragedy and drama, turn life into a sum of incredible contortions.

Without a thought-driven process, sometimes at high psychological tension, there can be no overcoming of life experience based on the history of painful wounds. Just as without being creative and expansive, you cannot reach relatively easy goals, which, responding to the soul, are active extensions of the prisoner's condition of the past, forced to redefine its own identity repeatedly.

Inspiration, the only direct feeling that contains the consecration of an important role according to the reactions and expectations of others, is not a happy gift of nature, but a rich inheritance of those creative merits that do not provide for holiness, but justify you to receive guidance from the Lord, harsh within the limits of a correct severity.

The thoughts of vengeance taken all the way, sometimes the only forms of interpretation of the divine punishment to committing iniquity and transgression, make you the worthy and legal master of this, often casual, heritage.

Concerning the Count of Monte Cristo, artistic craftsmanship, originality and actor's image played a fundamental role in resetting the relationship between the scene and the backstage, while affirming that reality of the divine embrace, the firm conviction of the existence of an unexpected and superior power. In their absence, all his purpose would have been lost, it would have been wasted.

It is clear that only by combining the contradictions between the attributes of action, permissive attributed to God, the authentic artist is formed.

Leadership: Can you compose a big role and masterfully interpret it in a life scenario that has every chance of proving to be true only if it tests your ability to "feel" at what page you are on in a novel full of intrigues and mysteries?

Dare to take the first step worthy of being taken into account by other people: compose a big role in that to blend perfectly with that of the leader and to anchor it in your script. You will have a huge success only if you give proof of fantasy, if you succeed an authentic innovative interpretation by a full role of substance, full of passion and energy.

Demonstrate, releasing force of character, that you are tailored to a very important role. And try capsizing the entire concept of leadership - be a magician ! Be a magician who by his skill and theatrical accomplishment gives proof of great creative capacity in his role. So do not lack the favorable appreciations from the "public" grateful for your beautiful performance.

Leadership is the role you take with the will of the Lord, whose only scenario is written with that "trace" of pain left somewhere in a corner of memory and with that reward of the soul's victory over evil.

Your personality will be defined as that of an artist of great sensitivity, made for powerful and complex roles, where there is no possibility to flaunt. Your leadership should not resemble to a circus where people laugh out loud. But one authentic, real, serious, full of emotions and feelings, adapted to your own vision - a show that what seems impossible becomes possible.

A leader has to make a big role in any circumstance. He never does figuration. You cannot take a leader and put him to interpret the role of a servant to bring a tray and serve without losing any of it. The servant is only figurative, but can never play the role of a leader.

It is said that once King Charles IX asked Catherine de Medicis, after the night of St. Bartholomew: "How do you think I played my little role?"

The same I ask you: How did you play your own role? Have you succeeded in interpreting with an unparalleled virtuosity the leadership role in the "play" that you created by yourself? If not, leave for the future this role and give it to another one truly gifted.

A chameleonic artist is the man who knows how to turn his life into a painting in which each color finds its correspondent in the thinking of being superior to others through the refinement and backstage subtleties but also through the manifestation of the aspiration in a dream that he can talk about over the years.

The Leadership Play is an explosive combination of masks, events, trials, emotions, and life lessons that you need to know how to assemble and dominate so that you build the perfect character of a spiritual confession of emotional sincerity.

If you aspire to the title of leader, you need to know from the start that a tremendous job expects you in a "play" where you should held permanent headlines, a play written and directed by you which final is anticipated by you, but is in favor of all. Depends on you the quality of your performace and the benefit you provide.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-leadership-play.html

The Leadership Score

On May 21, 2010

Enter the corridor of champions, by adjusting your potential to the optimum value.

Yesterday afternoon, I enjoyed the visit of a family friend, who is a manager at one of the largest consulting companies in Romania. I invited him to play ping pong with me because I heard he was a huge addict of this sport in his youth. Could I try my strength against him in the game-style and tactical schemes?

After we exchanged a few balls, I realized that I was better than him. I said to him with a slight tinge of regret that I did not want to play for scores, lest he felt offended in case he might lose. However, he, with a smile that showed that he was very confident in himself, looking at me with a thoughtful expression and, at the same time, I think, full of admiration, immediately answered me with great joy:

- Nicu, I can't enjoy myself only with exchanging balls with you. I'm only interested in the final score. Since, I was little, I was dominated by the spirit of competition, the desire to throw myself in the battle and fight, and, in order to prove to myself that I am able of so much more, I always played for scores with everybody. Besides, I can't even play well if I don't play for scores; I play with inattention, carelessly, without being urged by anything.

A brief moment of silence followed, a silence which he again interrupted:

- Nicu, I like the results. I want to see results. Regardless of the game, regardless if I lose or win, I want to see results. Even if I lose, eventually this is a result as well, but good to reflect on. I can't ambition myself and do my best if I don't really have anyone to compete with.

Saying this, he wanted me to understand that the final score is very important to him. The final score makes the difference between winners and losers. The final score encourages people to win.

Leadership: Do you try to ensure yourself of a position of inferiority or superiority in relation to yourself, depending on the result of the difference between "acquired value" and "the pressure of trying"?

The area of contention between what is innate and what is acquired, between what you own and why you fight to get more from yourself in situations where you are not confident, involves a touch of distinction, setting a standard that helps you identify, prioritize and manage perception differences of what it means "to be better".

In these conditions, the presence of leadership is felt even more than ever. This explains why leadership is insistently claimed today as necessary presence not only in competitions conducted by professionals, but also outside of them, so "at home", to ensure the desire for personal affirmation and expression.

An unmistakable dimension, related to interpersonal trends, is that position (of inferiority or superiority), with a dominant note of interest for what remains to be discovered: the quality of personal performances.

Sometimes the view that you build and adopt in relation to others around you by eloquence in expressing the value of what you feel for a particular achievement can be qualified as a desperate gesture or act of courage in the conditions in which you must accept and follow certain rules in a game called: "Do not be upset, brother ! "

In addition, you need to make an objective analysis of your winning potential by the quality of the free regime performance, from a desire to prove your potential when you contribute to a genuine process of redefining what it means to be good.

That is, given that you have come to some performance in shaping or building a form of power that originates in your need to produce a new type of resource that can change your inner state. The great challenge is not to make sure that you are better than others at any time, but to regain that part of you that deserves to be supported and promoted.

The value you have gained over time in the context of various attempts to overcome certain records, which in fact are attempts to overcome the human condition, recommends you as a better candidate than others to win the winning position. But what will always pull you down like a boulder thrown into the sea is the pressure of trying you exert when you have to adjudicate your victory laurels.

As a leader, the real test you can be subjected to is to see victory as a trivial kind of happiness that you cannot experience, to use it as an old coat put on the hanger, which you would neither throw away nor wear it.

Leaders always play for scores. When you play with someone by score you adjust your potential to the optimal value - the result can raise you, or can descend you in your own eyes. Only then you prove yourself what you can, only then you prove your real respect for your leadership, and only then emerges that real confidence that you have in you. Only then, you make progress.

Do you amplify your potential, or you decrease it to the value of rest? What exactly gives value to your leadership?

It is difficult or even impossible to be a leader, "a seed", if you confine yourself only for exchanging balls with each one. In order to reach the top of the hierarchy, and to maintain there, you must be prepared to play for scores with everybody, but especially with the most tenacious enemies.

People who never get to be "a seed" are those who do not play for scores, and are reluctant to participate in competitions. Thus, they show hesitation and uncertainty, they are definitely not worthy to enter "the corridor of the champions".

A leader must be a tenacious player, iron willed, dominated by that crazy desire to fight in order to obtain the first place. Only the one, whose single aim is to win, will be able to get involved with more dedication to the game, and to rise above others.

Leadership: Do you undertake the consequence of winning based on the "Only results count" clause or based on a screenshot called "Once upon a time"?

Just as the buildings are depreciating, just as the cars become worn, just as systems expire - so your potential decreases if it remains in its current form. Do you improve your potential by improving your skills, or you keep it to the normal limit?

Leaders want to achieve results, that is why they systematically focus on the "game" they play. Is it possible to be a leader without being interested in the results? The answer is NO. Leaders analyze their potential according to the results obtained from them and from those obtained by other "competitors". Those who are not interested in the results are moving away step by step from the "corridor of champions."

Making a winning screenshot called "Once upon a time" so there is no longer any conflict between you and what is happening in your life, or between what you can achieve and what is tormenting you, is similar to asking "How can I live authentically?"

It is like climbing with confidence in something or in keeping with personal values, but without straining the rope around the middle.

And yet it is possible, especially when you present yourself as something you are not. When what ties you to a strong man is an unmerited victory, obtained by mistake or by luck. Or when what fulfills you is not near you. When what rejoiced you before, gives you no emotion. When what has fascinated you for so many years, must take another form.

The most necessary form undertaken by full victory is the life you gain through the experience called "race" or "battle".

The leadership score is closely linked to the stake of the "game" and the stake is nothing but the success achieved before other competitors of the market. There where it is not a stake, there can't be a fight, respectively a competition. "The game" is considered to be finished when one of the competitors has achieved the goal pursued by all others, and the final score shows which is the position of each competitor.

Losing does not always mean a failure. By analyzing and correcting the causes of failure, bringing improvements and innovations, the score can be changed in your favor, and from a beaten to become a winner.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-leadership-score.html

The Leadership Vacuum

On June 01, 2010

Give life to a useful leadership, which would contain depths, without reproducing the reality of others in your own interest.

I still remember clearly the day when the master took me to a painting exhibition with sales, of some local artists, an exhibition, he said, was worth visiting under all aspects. I even took my camera, hoping that I would see one or more interesting paintings, hoping to make pictures of them and, then, at home, to try to reproduce them in pencil.

For, many times, my master warned me: "To become an excellent painter, you must first learn to reproduce in pencil any image. If you cannot draw very well in pencil a sky, a tree, a human face, you will never get to be an exceptional painter." The master took a severe look at my camera, but he didn't say anything.

We walked about twenty minutes, during which I admired a lot of paintings with great pleasure. However, suddenly, while walking, my eyes stopped on a painting at my right, in a well-lit corner. The painting, very funny, full of color, extraordinarily well shaped and clear as a photo, featured a very young, very beautiful woman, dressed by the Italian fashion. Probably, the painter, whose name I don't remember, took inspiration from the famous work "The woman with the pearl" of the famous French portrait painter Jean Baptiste Camille Corot, but I must confess that I found the young woman in his painting a lot better than the one made by the famous French painter.

As soon as I saw the painting, I fell in love with it. I immediately took out my camera from my dry-bag (I was allowed to take pictures), but just when I wanted to take the first photo, the master stopped me with a flashing gesture: No !

He looked straight into my eyes for a second, then he added with a tone that admitted no reply:

"Nicu, when you draw an object, you can see it become alive, but when you take pictures of it, it dies. Don't take any pictures, try and imprint the image in your memory ! Trying to reproduce out of your memory the image you saw and enhancing it, you will have your personal contribution and, at the same time, you will also put your spirit into the work you perform."

Leadership: Do you have an emotional experience to share by means of an entity that comes to life or one that dies?

Sharing an emotional experience by means of an entity that comes to life or one that dies, from the striving towards the unity of idea and shape, means to expose a part of your personality, to become transparent, to allow people to know you.

It means to know yourself in what is deepest in you, to treasure yourself in what you have most secret and authentic, which implies absolute confidence and a strong connection with what animates you as a spiritual ideal, a connection to what you will be, at some point, in the lives of others.

I thank my master for everything he did for me, the lesson he taught me that day. He told me:

"Whenever you start a painting, start everything from scratch. First, by making contours, hatching, then work at the shadows and only in the end color everything. And as you color, you'll see how the painting comes to life. For when you create something by your own hand, you have the satisfaction of having made it by yourself, that it is part of your soul, while a picture is nothing more than something automatic, reproducing a momentary reality."

To create something with your own hands is the way to show yourself faithful to a vision that implies an optimal combination between that perfect form of life that wants to perfect itself and the concession of a part of your being.

The master was quite right. A picture of the painting would not have been more than a faithful copy of the original, and I would not have had any contribution to making it. I could never have enjoyed a picture, while, if I would have had enough patience, skills and I would have tried to make the painting myself, I would have really treasured it. Taking a picture of it would have meant getting everything done, and if I get everything ready, I would have no satisfaction, the satisfaction of the work I made, that I was able to do something with my own hands.

Someone once remarked: "Worthy is not the man who knows where the treasure lies, but the one who works and brings it to light." The time spent for your work makes it so precious. Only if you do something with an extraordinary ardor, with a special impetus of the soul, enthusiastically and optimistically, you will be truly pleased by yourself, by the work which came to life from your desire to create something extraordinary.

Only a person who, after a lot of searching, a lot of unsuccessful trials, toil and swat, finds the treasure can truly enjoy it, not the one who has not moved any finger, who never made any effort to obtain it.

Leadership: Do you warm your soul with an unfaithful copy to the original from someone who brought to light a work of art and turned it into a "background" of his own purpose and his own meaning in the world?

What would happen if at the leadership of a company would be appointed, only on the basis of references or recommendations, an ordinary individual that did not ascend all the professional steps, who is not endowed with a great sence of leadership, which has no extensive knowledge of leadership, or who has no inclination for such a qualification?

Well, I doubt that such a man will ever succeed in winning over the people on his side, making a merit in the trust he proves in them. I doubt he will ever start that type of magnetic force to make himself loved and admired by the people around him. I doubt that he will be able to revive in people the spirit of solidarity, and I am almost certain that he will only be an obnoxious man who will ruin everything, who, otherwise, will not even bother to fulfill with a maximum of responsibility and conscientiously all his duties.

Why? Because he lacks the background. Because he has never created something by his hand starting from zero. Because he didn't give life to a useful leadership, which contain depths, to be part of his soul, that would open his horizons, which involved him as much and give a bright sheen of his own model of thought, of attitude and professional conduct.

The meaning you give yourself in the world can be formulated depending on the reality captured during the presence of a stimulus that can be: a person, a natural phenomenon, or a unique situation that allows for the undertaking of a new identity.

And such a man, who does not get to surface his true potential, who does not thoroughly understand his mission, it will miss the continuity, it will miss the spirit of good householder, sense of initiative and, most importantly, perseverance - and probably more serious than that, it will reproduce the reality of others in his own interest without building a minimum level of skills and competencies.

A true leader creates something for himself and wants to leave behind him several accomplishments. However, he has the satisfaction of the work he has done. While, if he "passes the baton" the person taking it might not have the same satisfaction as he does because he hasn't made any effort, and he can only have the satisfaction to continue the leader's work.

And everything the leader built in years can crumble in a moment if the one following him in the leadership doesn't prove to be at least the same skillful. Because they say that, anything obtained easily is lost. When a man is given significant powers, but doesn't know how to use it, he is not meant to stay a long time on the top.

The stimulus that triggers a culture of leadership is that fraction of a dialogue between an artist and his creation whose particular aspect is "the drawing comes to life."

The vacuum of leadership appears when "drawing" is not your greatest talent. That is when the leader's position is taken by a man with no inclination and ability to lead or when, for various reasons, more or less founded, the leader is changed in a short period of time.

Give life to a useful leadership, which would contain depths, without reproducing the reality of others in your own interest.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-leadership-vacuum.html

The Leap Of Science Towards A More Important World

On April 04, 2020

Be an example of thinking for the spread of science, so that science becomes a state of mind through which to protect yourself against any discouraging influences of old dogmas.

Now as I write this article, the world is locked in total chaos due to a pandemic called Covid-19. The Pope of Rome urged the world to have faith, beautiful words, but only half comforting. In Italy, only yesterday there were about 800 deaths. The death toll is likely to rise tomorrow. And that's because faith is misunderstood. Faith does not mean going to church, making a cross, lighting candles, and praying to divinity. As proof, churches have closed, and the Corona Virus is spreading faster and faster around the world. And if you think about it, there is only one way out: SCIENCE, finding an antidote.

Please pray that scientists find an antidote, a vaccine. Have faith that they will find it. Faith means science. It is the only escape. The church has become a real source of infection. In Italy, not even priests enter churches... or are already saying their last prayer. Why are they so afraid? Because they are also aware that the virus does not forgive anyone at all, because the virus itself is a mystery of nature, and every year other new viruses are discovered. More and more, which scientists were unaware of, and more and more afraid of.

Nature is much stronger than man, even if man tries to imitate the forces of nature. Only science can bring equality between the mind of man and the force of nature.

Did God have to send a virus for us to understand that science is above the church? Giordano Bruno transmitted this just before he died, being condemned and burned at the stake for his pantheistic conception, according to which divinity and nature are identical. He died at the behest of Cardinal Bellarmino, who did not accept his point of view. His death is revenge. This year Easter is compromised, there are only 9 days until the celebration of the Resurrection of the Lord, and Italy recorded over 16,000 deaths in a single month. So far, it is the highest number of deaths in the world.

Leadership: Is your way of perceiving reality firmly grasped in terms of the expression "science is the only escape", but unrealistic in terms of the perception of a slowdown in the trend called "dogmatic position"?

With the spread of the pandemic, humanity will learn not to look at everything in terms of money, consumer goods or excessive fun. Few people now leave their homes, malls are closed, flights are canceled. There is only one way of recreation left: the INTERNET.

Now, more than ever, people will begin to use the information and technology provided by the World Wide Web. Even 5th graders have built blogs that their teachers read regularly. We all become addicted to the internet. Perhaps it is a means by which nature wants to unite more than ever all the minds of men in one place. Every mind has access to another mind, to many other minds, or to all minds.

The eyes will begin to notice the values of true faith such as creativity, temperance and peace. We will SHARE the productions of our minds, little by little. A thought, an idea, a feeling, a memory. Over time, the focus will be on information and technology, as the eyes will no longer be blurred due to a lack of perspective and progress. The gaze will be immortalized on the image of a large intellectual construction, as a universal sphere, in which all the resources of knowledge are gathered. The eyes will see only what the information wants to provide them from the millions of existing sources in different variants. It is the beginning of a new era.

The elderly are dying more and more during this period, precisely so that the young people have open ground to change the old mentality for good.

Whoever seeks wealth will lose it. So start looking closely around you. Whoever manages to fully manifest his potential and give the world the fruits of his creation, will gain a fortune. The wide-open eyes may encompass an atypical reality, but only the penetrating gaze can identify an order and architecture in this reality.

The Church will almost completely lose its influence over minds everywhere, it already seems to have abandoned its dogmatic position in a number of matters of faith. Mankind will be free to express itself without the consent of the great representatives of the church. Science will pass into the hypostasis of the "new religion". We will not pray incessantly in churches, but we will focus more and more on discovery, creation and art. The world will look much different, but much healthier. The enlightened spirits who have been assiduously persecuted by the Inquisition will finally be avenged, they will be proud of the new world order.

True Faith is a state of mind in open accord with the norms of a sensibility animated by the pursuit of absolute ideality that believes in the power and miracle of science, both as a way to counterbalance false beliefs and as a way of thinking that puts you in touch with absolutely everything.

The Leap Of Science Towards A More Important World is a way of expressing spirituality by developing a way of thinking that puts you in contact with absolutely everything around you, with nature, with its principles, with divinity, through the way you relate to the new technological trends and evolutionary standards.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-leap-of-science-towards-a-more-important-world.html

The Life Cycle Of Leadership

On January 24, 2013

Try to capture the deeper essence of what you represent in a particular character structure so that you can reveal the pieces that make up the puzzle of your exceptionality.

Please read the following story carefully, as if it were your life story from which you draw the story of your becoming a man of great character. To get rid of any misinterpretation (or decoding) that the meaning of this story can provide, the protagonist of which is between art and utility, we must take into account the isolation of the "vicious" or "mild" factors that we are often tempted to associate with failure.

"In the middle of a beautiful city, there was a museum laid with beautiful marble tiles and with a huge marble statue as a part of the display. Many people from all over the world visited the museum every day and admired the beautifully crafted statue. One night, the marble tiles started talking to the marble statue.

Marble Tile: Yes ! I do, that is why i feel it is even more unfair. Both of us were born from the same cave and yet the world treats us so differently now. This is so unfair !

Marble Statue: Yes you are right my brother. But, do you still remember the day when the sculptor tried to work on you but you resisted his tools.

Marble Tiles: Yes, I despise that guy. How could he use those nasty tools on me.

Marble Statue: Well, Since you resisted his tools he couldn't work on you. When he decided to give up on you, he started working on me instead. I knew at once that i would be something different and unique after his efforts. I bore all the painful tools he used on me and allowed him craft me as he wanted !

Marble Tiles: But those tools were so painful.

Marble Statue: My brother, there is a price for everything in life. Since, you decided to resist and gave up half way, you can't blame anybody who steps on you now."

Leadership: Can you develop your tendency to be different from other people so that the experience that sets you apart as a "celebrity" can cope with the shaping and modeling of a valuable work of art?

The task of determining the right size for a certain virtue and placing a new work of art at the center of a well-meaning philosophy of life can sometimes seem daunting in the case of a man who does not know himself to be a creator or artist. By virtue of understanding those fundamentals of character that determine, to a large extent, the formation of a balanced personality, we will be able to more easily bring to light the human inclination towards success and celebrity.

We cannot refer to any man as we refer to an artist, looking for certain exceptional traits, unless we turn that man into a servant of God (or a tool of providence) meant to extend his freedom of manifestation in a restricted framework of receiving divine grace, more precisely following a harsh, but educational life experience.

When we think of man as an artist, we have to consider how he is willing to relate to God, because what makes a man a microcosm, the measure of all things and the image of God, depends on how the wisdom of facts crystallizes in the mind and soul, without putting their beliefs into theories.

To know God is to know yourself when you are subject to the test of character, without defending a state of fact that expresses a great degree of deviation from the ordinary.

Thus, the need to fully understand the message of the "Statue of marble" has as a consideration the need to believe in God and to spread his grandiose wisdom, which is based on the proof of character. It's not the pain that man must endure to some extent, taking contact with the will of a divine intervention, not about strength or perseverance, but it is about how you perceive that: "to where should I evolve so that I can build my strong and noble character?"

Someone wrote this well someone on a webpage: "Character content is expressed in a multitude of character traits: discipline, self-control or character orientation (the person's ability to select external, natural or socio-cultural influences, and to respond to them through behavioral attitudinal reactions."

The tendency to be different from other people depends on how you build your character in what regard's God's intention to turn you into a work of art, or at least make you realize how you can rise above the whole world with honor, dignity and pride.

Basically, nobility makes common cause with the "living water" of God, with that cleansing of the character through perseverance and consistency led to a level of perfection that will receive the praise of "Well done, my subject". The desire to fully understand God comes from the series of your efforts to live above defeat.

Leadership aims at fulfilling the ideal of "Serving Above Yourself" by adopting a formula of profound lucidity that is used by man of great character to equate his qualities with those of the Creator: "Always look to the power of God and you will forget about your weaknesses."

The Life Cycle Of Leadership takes place from the moment you realize that you cannot rise above yourself, at the level of "Artwork", and your only chance is to test yourself the faith that believes that God exists and that He is the One who rewards.

 Note: The Marble Statue

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-life-cycle-of-leadership.html

The Life Of An Old Man Put In The Service Of Emptiness

On September 30, 2012

The way you approach the reality of other people, can raise or demolish your inner world.

A scene from the movie "No Country for Old Men (2007)". Anton Chigurh, the cold-blooded killer, stops at a gas station, somewhere in the middle of the desert. He was the kind of man who has not aimed for a certain morality, but believed in an arrangement of all things in this world; a malefic force, a wanderer who threatens to condemn everyone to damnation. He had the tendency to treat people with an authority whom all received pretty badly.

In a polite manner, the old man from the counter, while calculating the price of gasoline, tries to carry a conversation with Chigurh, the foreigner. A fatal mistake. Such like a character of Victor Hugo, no special future seemed to await him. No bud of ambition, not longer dared to blossom in his shadow. He voluntarily has dug his grave.

Chigurh got out from his pocket a coin of twenty-five cents and threw it up, making it to spin in the cold and bluish glare of the fluorescent lamp from above. He caught it and dropped it on the back of the forearm.

"Choose, he said."

As a man caught in the trapping of an inexorable fate, the old man replied anxiously:

"I did not put anything at stake."

"Yes, you put it. You put your life at stake. Only that you do not realize it."

"There's no logic what you say, mister."

"Choose ! "

How impatient is death ! The old man put in front of an existential process. A confrontation between denial and acceptance, between death and life, between lucklessness and chance. A decisive response to the climate of insecurity in which he woke up suddenly. As if all the forces of destiny would have united against him.Credo in parem !

What an incomprehensible confusion, like a tangled network of cables connected to their own generator. Like if he was asked to willingly carry a huge cross on his back, a struggle, probably established for a long time with himself, the emptiness of a single roll of the dice. How much mind it takes for a man to put his life in such a way in the service of emptiness?

"Alright. Heads then."

Leadership: Did you question the distinction between "free will" and "the terrible promontory of thought"?

The way you contribute to the understanding of reality outlines that loop of responsibility that surrounds you, isolate you and pulls you to a state of perfect peace through detachment from the turmoil of the world. Or, conversely, it pulls you to a state of self-alienation, respectively, to not be able to see yourself as you thought you knew yourself.

At the moment of a different life experience you become more conscious of that Ego that experiences the fullness of sensitivity, weakness and indecision, which means the aspiration of the human spirit towards what is true, good and beautiful. Ego, which in its turn highlights your qualities, beliefs, mental and emotional structure.

Or, as someone said, you are the creator of your own reality, by the thoughts that you put together in order to form the overall picture, which after, through observation, you physically materialize it.

Freedom of the will may prompt us to believe that the end of our existence as free beings, endowed with conscience, will come as the years pass, once with the decision to separate us from our beliefs in favor of accepting the decisions of others, more authoritarian and better administrators of the campaign of transforming the objective reality. Through everything that we are and do in the transition towards a more responsible stage of maturation, through our reason and our emotions, we become more aware of our impact on what surrounds us and what we get in return from others.

Free will occurs when we become aware of our thoughts and keep them under control. It is responsible for what we create in our reality when we decide the choice of action.

Victor Hugo said beautiful in the thrilling study about Shakespeare: "Every man has in him his Patmos. He is free to go or not along that frightful promontory of thought, from whose summit the depths of darkness are visible."

In this case "the frightful promontory of thought from whose summit the depths of darkness are visible" refers precisely to the restriction of the freedom of will. It is the break between our inner and outer world for the benefit of someone else. It is the distrust that arises from our own beliefs, which limits our freedom of choice, limits us and turns us into the absolute slaves of a foreign and too invasive reality. It is the result of a struggle, probably established for a long time with ourselves. The emptiness of a single throw of the dice. A confrontation between denial and acceptance, between lucklessness and chance.

How much mind we need to put in this way our life in the service life of emptiness?

Leadership: Are you being asked to bear a blame that does not belong to you?

We catch ourselves in our own trap, misled by that state to feel defeated, destroyed, and lost like a blind eagle looking for his prey. Like a release of souls, of mentalities, attitudes, at the command of a supreme authority. The consequence of a decisive response to the climate of insecurity in which we woke up suddenly. As if all the forces of destiny would have united against us, we move away from the right track in favor of something else, wrong and unsafe - a departure from the freedom to be who we actually are.

To connect with the reality of people who cannot tolerate very well the idea of equality, harmonizing with them at the psychic and emotional level through a defeated attitude, it is as if someone would ask to carry a fault that does not belong to us, and to live with it forever. A fault that automatically isolates us, restricting all our rights and freedoms, imposing us other laws, other rights and other debts.

The main difficulty of the man subjected to doubt is to reach some safer conclusions in terms of supporting your solidarity towards a stronger reasoning that knows to capitalize upon itself in relation to its reference attributes and to use them for its own purposes.

To mount the promontory of consciousness full of regret and guilt means to approach the part of yourself that is still hurt by the number one aggressor: accepting to be a limited being.

Trying to get closer to a higher level of consciousness is an endless journey in search of inner truth, the highest virtues that make you a survivor of the phenomenon called "free will" or a master of the mental game.

The life of an old man put in the service of emptiness designates the dark side of reality, which guides us along the transformations that we experience. A kind of response to what happens when we accept that the outside world to dominate our inner world, in the matrix of the hazard.

God created us as little as possible, someone said. Freedom, this power of being the guide, this faculty of the merit, wants that the man to recover by himself ... by maximizing his abilities to be what he actually is, under the umbrella of the freedom of the will.

The way you approach the reality of other people, can raise or demolish your inner world.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-life-of-an-old-man-put-in-the-service-of-emptiness.htm

The Limitative Surface Of The Shadow Cone

On September 27, 2013

Create a new judgment platform, so that you get out of the shadow cone thrown over your mind.

Not only the mind can stimulate a person's renewal, the heart also can. It truly rouses, disturbing every crumble of the energy distributed in intensive series of consecutive pluses, exciting the consistency substance that provokes the senses and powers them alternatively, hurrying the primary process of self-activation.

And the unquenched Ego, this semiconductor of great sensibility can't operate in the absence of a powerful source of revitalized energy. Foreign blood, intense and spicy, sought with hungry careful eyes, awakens the deepest and most ferocious instincts, unleashing them with that treacherous satisfaction of the self-assured wolf that attracts its pray in a hidden place.

Of course, there's something savage in Hannibal Lecter, an animal thirst that dwells deep inside its soul for so much time. And that waits impatiently to burst, like a secondary reaction to a primary affliction.

I wonder how deep one must sink cold-bloodedly into someone else's mind, as though it descended from a higher, more scientific world in order to understand it? On the bottom of what obscure abysses, contradictions and doubts does his true self rest and from what distance must his diabolic plans be revealed, in order to keep safe?

Leadership: Are you prepared to make yourself a test of the force of chance by placing yourself under the influence of the force of redefining the personal identity resulting from the suggestion of a hidden reality?

A simple mission is transformed in a dangerous adventure, uniting two neighboring structures: power and weakness. Deceit and truth. Acceptation and damage. Because nothing in Hannibal's attitude alarms the two police officers, absolutely nothing is shaped as certainty, not a single nerve, not a single emotion. Only an exemplary self-control. The risk possibility is totally cancelled. But the secondary reactions flow inevitably after an orientate-determinant schematic.

The two supervisors, like two good hens walking with their bellies full through their hen-run, don't suspect that the wolf's heart beats regularly, delivering an abundant blood flow for the body. They let themselves carried away on the wave of ignorance and unawareness. They don't know that the reforming processes of matter, which differs from conscience, of a restless matter, depending on different interactions and relations between the entities of character, they suddenly rush through Hannibal's mind.

They have to come out as fast as possible from the shadow cone that the master of persuasion, the depositary of all human knowledge threw over their minds. They need to free themselves spontaneously from the somber perimeter. To somehow detach from this limitative surface through a better awareness of the situation they're into and the threatening danger. To destroy the energy directly proportional with the quantity of offensive, indistinguishable stimuli that gradually cancel the senses and reason.

But, amazingly enough, they accept to be absorbed by the shadow; they prefer to sink deeper and deeper in the muddy waters of psychological dominance.

Do you "check mate" the very veracity of leadership derived from your predictability on the outcome of actions that can increase the flexibility of your autonomy of will and decision?

As authentic and replicated art, and from another point of view, as art of persuasion, leadership proves to be impetuously necessary when trying to bring a plus of objectivity and safety in matters connected to control and human actions and moods regulation, that seem to be reserved for the initiates in the field.

But, an overload with the capacities of inducing adverse reactions, sensitizing the individuals, thus a growth of the domination expansion that annuls any possibility to optimally react, can place the credibility and correctness of leadership in a "chess mate" situation.

Leadership, in relation to other sciences, such as psychology or philosophy, approached from an innovative perspective, must be able to set with the help of advanced knowledge and through resonance, a deeper approach to the "disarming" reality and its support.

Each kind of art, someone said, has its own principles and rules and makes a Universe in itself. And this Universe, that can be translated through an exaggerated individuality, fully representing more and more leaders and accepted with no hesitation, sometimes even paroxysm. If it clashes with reality it often creates sparks, that do nothing else but break the trust and reputation threshold of one's own "brand".

"Check mating" the very veracity of leadership is similar to trying to exalt your Ego up to becoming God, maintaining the appearance of a struggle taken to finality with the impossible adversities of a hypostasis of guilt.

Of course, it's an instinct of every leader, that dwells deep inside its soul and that can hardly wait to burst free. Namely, the jump towards a new increase in value. The progress towards a more advanced operating stage, setting him free from the torment of his powerlessness, which involves a restriction in scope.

Hannibal Lecter was not interested in the consequences of his actions, but in deciding to subordinate morality itself to a psychological test.

The unbridled Ego, the semiconductor of great sensibility that can't operate in the absence of a power source of revitalized energy, insists to prove its superiority, thus benefitting from the "advantage" of stepping away from the correctness principles of leadership. Guilt is heavily installed in the chemistry of consciousness when something from within you, under the power of the instinct of domination and vanity, orders you to deliberately commit an incalculable act.

How deep should you sink into a leader's mind to understand him? On the bottom of what obscure abysses, contradictions and doubts, does his true self rest and from what distance must his uncertain plans be revealed, in order to keep safe?

Leadership: Can you set yourself up as a complementary trend of your autonomy and as a reaction to its "abusive" situation that forces you to choose between a compromise and the struggle against an Ego that demands everything?

When contact with leadership is made by facilitating its entrance in the human universe, there seem to appear a series of situations in which normal individuals have no defense against. Helpless in front of the influence that corners them, they go through a judgment complex; they are hit by the incapacity to rise above resistance. Like they were constraint to execute a court order that conflicts with one's own convictions. But they can't react. The major influence, ingenuously fit within their judgment errors, triggers a wave of weakness, a closure in one's self. The defensive territory is restricted. They let themselves carried away on the wave of ignorance and unawareness.

There is a trace of stability, more difficult to notice at first sight, which the meeting with leadership doesn't unconditionally ensure. Just as no one can go to the theater or to a concert in a beach outfit, neither can an individual trapped in the area of a shadow cone shape a unitary perspective of reality. He can't allow "the unformed vision" to experience the approaches in which "the pieces" combine and intertwine with each other, which determines their perfect functionality.

The measure of the power to be a profoundly moral person is about the compromise between the experience you experience through thoughts and deeds that dominate your mind, and the experience you consider tragic when it is experienced by "someone else" because of you.

The Limitative Surface Of The Shadow Cone points out the possibility of the human mind to enter into a more or less wide shadow cone. This happens when we lower our guard, reduce vigilance, or simply aren't ready to face some critical unforeseen situations. Or, on the contrary when we consider ourselves unbeatable.

The shadow cone can be drastically reduced by developing our own conscience, through a rational thinking that directs the individual towards maintaining a long-standing situation within normal limits, removing the chaos created by the narrow-minded or malevolent. Developing the quick response capacities through efficient actions, developing perspicacity, vigilance, thought mobility and creating "an armed experience" annihilates any shadow cone one might fall into.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-limitative-surface-of-a-shadow-cone.html

The Limits Of A Wanderer In The Sphere Of Darkness

On September 21, 2012

Perfect your personality through a closer approximation to those elements of a benefic reality that confer depth and growth to your leadership.

The darkness wrapped me slowly and unexpectedly, like a ghost, like a constant of my life that resonated only by the value that I assigned to it, heating my feelings, putting to test the skeptical and the visionary side of my nature.

A mysterious voice seemed to start from a bottomless depth, whispering to me in a penetrating way, under the form of an echo: "Come here ... sit next to me ... contribute to my existence ! " I felt it close, unhindered, superior, as a starting point into a new adventure of knowledge, as a judge ready to deliver a verdict, but also as a loving father, whose love for his child is unconditional.

I guessed that something was abiding close to me, an entity that cannot be uniquely identified by its attributes, drawing me in her own race, stretched with a decision that could not be tamed.

Being pushed towards a deeper understanding, as if I doubted the reasoning, substituting it with the magic, I was sniffing the trace of a long-lost territory. I became by myself a possible-lost territory. A human being, caught in a game that plays with the forms of knowledge and becoming, un voyageur à d'autres sphères.

Leadership: Is all of your psychic, spiritual, and emotional load from the time of a deepening in your most secret thoughts organized within the content of a variable of the "landmark" type?

As an artist, who centralizes ideas of the science of time in the images created by himself, I was keeping my energy alive, exploiting myself so cruelly, in the things that I wanted to valorize, but that I do not control. I was subject to a process of evolution towards an unsuspected dimension, establishing secret and mathematical relationships between things, without understanding, however, how to apply and how to maintain these relationships. In a moment, when the premises and conclusion, either true or false, were becoming very complex.

However, the light is off when you do not expect. I wanted to do something to get out of that state, not to hide from myself. There is no sense to suffer in silence, to strive for an innermost thing that is beyond understanding and to merge with it in the dense fog of darkness.

I was misguiding by myself because I profiled myself on a sea in the storm, pushed into a deeper contemplation of a virtual existence, instead of understanding the limitations of my own world. I had to reinvent myself. To calm the overwhelming anxiety of my entire universe. To recognize that essential, real, constant, and deep part inside me. To force my maturity. To hasten my transformation.

I had to grind my way of approaching the "darkness" in order to understand the "light".

The mark which I clung to in those moments full of spiritual confusion and agitation was given by the transition from the level of being absorbed by myself (the defect of closing in my own world of thoughts, ideas and emotions) to the context of virtues that pay off and lead to perfection. The virtue of bringing before the mind some nuances that no other tool, beyond words, can bring forth, the virtue of the administration of new creative principles in literature, were two of the scattered parts of my personality.

Leadership: Do the Terms and Conditions of Use of the reference "benchmarks" suffer a change by the provisions of the present that develop the way you approach the part of yourself that is hiding?

The present from which is developing the future of your personality may also include this phenomenon of "exploitation" of an existence created by the darkness of the mind, of your own uncertainties and ambiguities, if this it can be called like this, which dominates your skills in the concrete or possible interaction with the skeptical and visionary side of your nature. An operation in which sprout defining development options based on the findings disclosure ulterior motive beyond all desires, emotions and your thoughts, progressing towards assuming a new role and a new type of relationship with reality.

A remorse role in which you have to make up for some mistakes, believing that you owe it to your own conscience to ask yourself where you've gone too boldly, with your will, with your consent. Or a role of satisfaction with all manifestations and gestures full of endearment and meaning of passion from the feeling of being grateful for helping fulfill a difficult task that called for the best in you.

The type of relationship you want to define between the two diametrically opposite roles depends on how you respond to the provisions of the place of a rather sad past if you only relate to those things you want to capitalize upon, but you do not control.

The annihilation of the hypostases and the undesirable effects of personality must begin with the annihilation of that part of you, of that reasoning that is clouding your reality. You can add tremendous value to your potential, you can pave the way for a deeper understanding of what you are behind the scenes of your own existential adventure, if you understand your reactions and do not hide from yourself.

The state of mind in which you related with the experience of every moment results from the intersection of all subjective perspectives through which you view reality. And a reality that leaves you disarmed inside determines the value your level of significance of behavior in personal autonomy gains, which can become oppositional or of the type of a psychosocial crisis.

Leadership: The value of your character diminishes with each attempt of yours to tend towards "An innermost thing that is beyond understanding"?

Just as a "writer loses with every dream told one reader" so your character's value will diminish with every attempt to tend towards "an innermost thing that is beyond understanding" towards a false form of manifesting your potential, hanging up like a thistle of an immature reasoning that serves you improperly.

You will become a possible "lost territory" in which abounds the rational rejects, superficiality, the endless chain of suspicions, assumptions, and confusions of interpreting the reality.

Are you rushing your "transformation? Are you sniffing the trace of a long-lost territory? Are you forcing your maturation launching yourself into an adventure of a causative knowledge? Do you understand the limits of your own world? Do you recognize the essential, constant, and deep part inside you that guides you towards "light" towards a better understanding of what lies behind those real "discontinuities" of personality?

The Russian writer, Leo Tolstoy was quite right, when he said: "Everyone thinks of changing the world, but no one thinks of changing himself ! "

Continue to grow and define your personality, and do this without ceasing. However, remember that the way you approach reality can raise or demolish your inner world.

The effect of a personality who shares its experience of becoming in an "unheard", but persistent rhythm, can be attributed to an adventure of knowledge that begins with increasing the frequency of thoughts of investigating reality by ambiguating the real-virtual boundary and continues with the change of vision on the self.

The Limits Of A Wanderer In The Sphere Of Darkness refer to that process of assessment of your own existence, of your own identity, but also to the limits of "internal research".

To seek, to fight, not to find, even so we should never deviate from reality. This truth that we need to recognize in our lives refers to the process of self-discovery and self-evaluation both of our positive or negative parts. Maintaining permanently a balance in everything we do and think, should be our goal to not fall in the sphere of pathology.

Perfect your personality through a closer approximation to those elements of a benefic reality that confer depth and growth to your leadership.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-limits-of-a-wanderer-in-the-sphere-of-darkness.html

The Lively Background Of The Painting

On March 30, 2010

Fit in an appropriate background to give value to the understanding you give yourself in particular.

When I rejoined the great artist, a little while ago, I realized that, although he was very old, he still had a young heart, full of joy. He painted, as if he were overwhelmed by an extraordinary feeling, the portrait of a simple man. He seemed more pleased with himself, more rested, more poetic, I could say.

I saw how dedicated he still was to his work, touched by some state of euphoria, full of imagination to the slightest of details, full of warmth in his heart. The obvious obliges me to admit that he has more than innate talent; he has a peerless love for painting and beauty. He was an original that doesn't create his works like other artists.

Not being able to resist his innate aesthetic sense, looking to be totally satisfied by the quality of his work, he made his own art, a personal style, according to his own vision, more expressive, more varied, more compact, more heart-stirring than that of many. He is so complete that, even now, those who look at his paintings have the tendency to sit and admire them for a long time.

At one point, I addressed him a question, only out of curiosity:

- What makes a painting to be valuable?

Leadership: Does the privilege of composing the subject of a painting that transmits a powerful emotion have as its essence an understanding of who you really are in a reality that replaces your own appreciation?

The master waited for a little, he looked up at me and told me with some smile on his lips:

- For a painting to be valuable, it must have the appearance of reality and, instantly, to convey a certain message through its main subject. This is, in fact, the most important thing: for a painting to be well-made and appreciated by art critics, the painter must bring out the main subject. In general, the painting must impress those who look at it.

Then, after a short pause, he continued:

- As you can see, Nicu, my subject is this simple man, with his flaws and qualities, which leads a normal life. Even so, in order to reveal him, I also had to decorate the background of the painting, the flower garden, the clear sky, the sun rays, and to create a color contrast between the subject and the background. I would not have had to emphasize the main subject, if I would not frame it in a proper background. So, I feel like I'm part of a reality that's a lot more than I expected.

Leadership: Can you change the dimension of your own identity mingling the ideal and the experimental into a new visionary consistency?

Edgar Allan Poe wrote at one point: „Pure imagination chooses from beauty or deformity only elements that can seamlessly combine, which were not combined up to that point. The result, as a general rule, is composed of the beautiful or the sublime, to the extent that the beautiful and the sublime are part of combined elements."

For leadership to catch a well-defined shape, to be real and accessible to a wide „audience", first your must create the necessary conditions for an objective and comprehensive analysis of the genius manifestation form, by trying to reach to the height of perfection, by reflecting in a truthful way your „bright" parts, combining them into a single unit that would form the „sublime".

In the modernist painting of leadership, in this colorful universe whose elements, the beautiful and the sublime, once highlighted, can create the premises of framing into a specific style, there is a serious dose of subjectivity and exaggeration. They can unify the ideal and the experimental into a new visionary consistence, making the main subject more believable: the man, or rather, the presence of an intellectual attitude increasingly blurred in the life's landscape full of contrasts.

Think about the fact that you can calmly tackle your own exaggerations or errors made in the fire of creation, but not everyone can carry on your life visions.

Leadership: Without an adequate background you cannot be the main subject of the "painting" !

Here's an important thing: in order to become a successful leader, you first need to fit into an adequate"background". The background, which strongly reflects the transformations you go through, the professionalism you prove, the qualities you have, it is represented by the organization that you belong, by the people you lead, and can change its position and shape in time, depending on the practices you promote.

If you have nobody or nothing in the background, you won't be able to shine, to stand out in relief like a true leader. Moreover, if nobody follows you, then you are just a background character, and somebody else is the main character, not you.

A leader cannot exist without his organization and his people. If you are limited by your incapacity to interact with the others, or if you try to do everything by yourself, then, sure thing, your leadership has no value. How can you be above others if you are not surrounded by anyone? How could you climb in the hierarchy of your career so that you would have a better position if you don't win people by your side, and you don't convince them to follow you? Without an adequate background, you cannot be the main subject of the "painting".

Hence, in order to make yourself noticed and to get to the top, you have to form a team and focus on what you can accomplish together. However, do everything you have to in order to become better, and to be above others through the effects you have on them, through the intensity you influence their lives, their present and their future.

Every artist lives in a "reality" that he penetrates with his subjectivity without ever forgetting that the beauty of the painting depends on the admiration he instinctively gives himself.

The Background Of The Painting is what represents you in a privileged space of exposing your understanding of yourself. You cannot be a leader if you have nobody to lead and guide, or if you are not recognized as such. Furthermore, if you do not know instinctively to fit in an "adequate background" then you will lose value.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-lively-background-of-the-painting.html

The Lord Of The Destinies

On February 14, 2009

Focus on the essential of your leadership to be able to perceive the difference between what you imagine that you are and what you really are.

While crossing the sea, has sparked such a powerful storm, with thunders and lightning, that all the people from the ship's board, including Alonso, the king of Napoli, were seized by fear. Alonso still tried to encourage the sailors and handle the boat as well as possible. The fact was that nobody paid attention at him, because he was not at all familiar with handling such boats.

The captain of the crew, aware that the presence of the king on board of the ship, would only confuse things, shouted at him:

- Get out of here ! Silence ! Get down to the cabins, otherwise, you will give a helping hand to the storm ! If you cannot stop the storm, please leave ! Don't hinder things here.

Leadership: Do you favor the choice of a role that contains an opposition between what you do not want to happen to you and what happens to you to know what your power is?

- Well, well, buddy, slow down. Don't forget who's on board, Gonzalo, the old and the faithful counselor of the king, warned the captain of the crew.

Hearing this, the chief of the crew replied:

- I don't care about anybody more than about myself. I will slow down only when the sea slows down, as well. Go away ! Like the waves would care about the word of the "king" ! To the cabins ! Silence ! Stop molesting us !

If you read "The Tempest" by Shakespeare, you know that the king was forced to get down to his cabin. In the end, the ship has stranded on a desert island, but all the crew survived. The chief of the crew has shown a strong determination in that decisive moment, and an outstanding professional attitude. He unleashed his potential of leading by giving clear, precise and useful orders to sailors, with a great determination and efficiency.

Leadership: Many times, the key person is the solitary hero who keeps the helm !

In leadership, experience is irreplaceable. The king of Napoli was not able to command the ship because he did not have any kind of experience in this area. How could he appease the furious and unbridled sea, when seeing the thunderbolts, he was the first who lost his hope? Believing that any effort is futile and fearing for his own life, King Alonso listened to the advice of the captain and quickly retreated to his cabin, leaving him at the helm.

A true captain always remains with his crew, leading all actions in accordance with the situations arising. The ship can be veiled by the storm, can be carried by the waves in all directions, with no mercy, but the duty of the captain is to remain on board, and to make everything he can to avoid the sinking of the ship.

If you want to pass the bridge of the flow of events in the forefront of reality and the perception of a role for which you were born, it is more important to help create a pretext/context of intervention from "outside" the area of influence of the King (the supreme leader).

In leadership, we must see the development of the intelligence to use the material substance of events, conjunctions, and advantages of contradictory soul movements that cross the echoes of a struggle of orientation, survival, and domination instincts. But, more importantly, we must allow a radical reconfiguration of feelings in favor of a logic that aims to create personal value.

Leadership: Can you define the concept of "performance probability" as a measure of the chance of producing a decisive event that has an impact on your confidence in taking what you started even further?

The chief of the crew has raised to the height of his reputation of a leader being able to face danger with that inner enthusiasm, lively and uplifting, with that impetuous enthusiasm that only really determined people have it, while the king remained in the shadows.

Just as a painter possesses that complex of psycho-physical characteristics due to which he is able to perceive the difference between what he does and what he feels, so do you, in order to bring your leadership to the strongest form, you must possess that objective and fair spirit of self-assessment in order to be able to perceive the difference between what you imagine that you are and what you really are - a leader, a hero, or a just poor lonely?

By taking part in a large-scale action that you do not know how to end, you serve the reason to deny the guarantee of a long-awaited result from which derives an impeccable character. If you penetrate into the future of a positive outcome, quite different from your expectations, as a measure of your leadership potential, it still does not mean that this future will meet your demand and will give you what you asked to live with the true value you feel you have.

But it means that you have seen that there is no way out of a situation with great consequences, just as there is no way out of indecision. The only thing that remains to be checked is an overvalued concept in the experiences of life: the concordance between beliefs and behavior, without letting us subdue the dangerous form of illusion that the man in whom the majesty of a king mirrors.

Leadership is the quality of a lonely hero from which the destiny of a king is fed.

Do you possess a potential for leadership, even if you were not appointed to a very high leadership position - as a crew chief? Or, are you a leader known as King Alonso, but without clear guidance and sense of responsibility? Are you are a servant in the realm of others' proficiency?

Think better on you. What is the reality?

Conclusion: Just like a captain leaving the ship last, after he gave all of his interest to avoid its sinking, so do you, as a leader, must be able to cope with dangers, which can occur at any time – to face it, meaning to give precise and firm orders, to hide your fear, which can seize you, and to know how to take risks. And especially, not to spare any effort, because you are often "the lord of the destinies", the one who decides the success or defeat, life or death.

Focus on the essential of your leadership, to be able to perceive the difference between what you imagine that you are and what you really are.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-lord-of-the-destinies.html

The Lost Trace Of A Unique Path Amidst Astral Stretches

On September 15, 2018

Be able to ensure your visibility in the way you put your mark on the world, constituting yourself as a result of an event that is happening right now or has already happened.

My journey in time continued as when everything seemed to be detached from a magical remembrance, as far away as the stars, from a picture of the shaping of a path in the past of an unmoved historical memory, from a whisper of light upon which night had settled, or from a glance of the Creator comprised of the nostalgia of a past world.

It was not an ordinary journey, a mysterious urge to find out the purpose of a world accessible only to a narrative description, as is the case for banal writers looking for a miraculous subject. Rather, it was the discovery of an earnest aspiration to the clairvoyance of thought, to the echo of an unpredictable grandness of old. Every passing moment can at any point become the testimony of an immortal story.

I will not ask for anything from myself, nothing but the desire to understand the promise of an art to save the artist from the sphere of the phenomenal, transformed into the bizarre, from the only thing that is never present in his dreams: the finite character of the world in which he lives. The much-desired journey, opening new gates of perception of the artistic and proliferation of the aesthetic, stops at a moment from the eternity of the fate hidden behind a single name: Albrecht Dürer.

It is the victory that relies on the profound and intense experience of a work of art, a fragment of beauty and unmistakable harmony in the motion of the axis of the Earth, similar to that of a quill, to the destination of a particular sympathy I only wear to the living things only with the memory of their light, without ever leaving them.

Leadership: Have you ever tried to escape the patterns of a regular account of past events without wishing to show another facet of an image that mirrors the entire universe contained in one moment?

1496. I arrived near Durer, as the Persian poet Abu Nuwas reached caliph Hārūn al-Rashīd, just by chance, through a change in the cosmic order through a disregard of the fulfillment of the signs of the times. In that full moon night, I wondered, with the freedom that the distance from the world and the closeness to the stars gave me, if I could abandon my pioneering duties in exploring space to fit the present moment that passes so fast.

In the candle's light, the complex, so contradictory universe of the artist who barely sketched the "Portrait of Friedrich the Wise" was reflected more acutely. Attained by the breath of the Renaissance, Durer tried to render with a careless elegance a somber visage, but full of sparkle of light, to give the look of the image of a personality led not by religious beliefs, but rather by his conviction as a guarantor of protecting the state law.

I am sure that my unpopular presence inspired him to outline with tact and craftsmanship, from a touch of color, a psychological profile of firmness and vitality, a promoter of balance and indulgence, while at the same time bringing a spiritual perspective on wisdom always reincarnated in every generation. The moment I met him was characterized by an intense introspective focus that could be accessed at any of his portraits.

The portraits had become voices of the universe, the intimate components of an imagined space without boundaries. Because of me, Durer understood that the only way to determine the chosen features of an astral character is to try to bring about a new cosmogony by placing the sun in the interplanetary space or to claim the right to master the universe through the image of humanity in a vast expanse of ruins, things, and worlds.

Leadership: Can you think of yourself as exploring an enigma that has contradicted the world's most enlightened minds for hundreds of years, without reducing your credibility and image to anything that fades away in any passing moment?

Everything. In the imprecise lines, in the grace of the movements with which the colors spread only by the warm light of the candles, there was hope, trust in life. He would say that he wanted to innovate an image for eternity, an image that allowed him to confront the world in a time of creative accumulation, a time of overwhelming changes to the face, of shocking revelations that seemed to be repeated every century.

I stood beside him, motionless, as a model of wisdom that continues to last over the ages, mirroring the clairvoyance of mysteries elucidated by no-one other than himself. Somehow, I inspired him to experience the consuming desire for uniqueness and self-indulgence through the projection of his spiritual portraits. Durer had become more than a painter, he had become the firm consciousness of the artistic individuality that mirrors the thematic complexity of a universe without a temporo-spatial measure.

What stems from natural drive is always done with love. I had to give him the impression of being free in any creative gesture, with universal reference. And yet, I could not help but ask myself questions about the questions he was probably asking himself about me as he looked at me with hopelessly stifled hopes, burning prayers about something that can only exist as a consequence to something else.

An exploration of an enigma that cannot be fully elucidated begins with an image of the overthrow of the natural. I felt he was concealing something from me, a drive to revolt in everything he did, a glimpse of the beautiful structure of truth instead of broken-down errors, in order to encompass a reality for which only fiction or nonfiction are insufficient. But I did not insist to open his secrets, I allowed him get lost in the unknowns of my presence.

Leadership: Can you justify the credibility circumstances of delivering your art as a potentiator of expressiveness of a high-intensity image without linking your destiny to the external circumstances of a memorable event?

When the portrait was finished, exposed in front of an open window, I was no longer there. Time did not allow me to break the solemnity of my historical moment. The universe needed me elsewhere. But my stay was sufficient, for an astral moment, enough to induce to the master the idea that his life and his destiny had something divine, that his every gesture and deed were coming from God.

He continued to look up to the skies every night. That is because he continued to know everything, see everything, hear everything we talked together, because my presence remained forever etched in his heart and memory.

A few centuries later, in a night full of stars, I was surprised by a rudimentary easel, a man who reminded me of the painter I was delighted with in Nuremberg. In all aspects of art knowledge, he resembled Durer. In a mess of the house, he sat on a chest and spoke in a whisper with someone who looked more like an uncertain, unshaped portrait, colored in a conservative style.

Then, noticing my presence, he began to worry. He felt me, but as the universe makes its presence known, through a creative momentum amplified by the appearance of a momentary inspiration. Since then, his talent had made a considerable leap. The world will remember him as the author of 600 paintings, 300 engravings and over 2000 drawings. His name is Rembrandt.

And I have not yet finished my journey. The stars still shine in the night, every moment an artist looks for his originality and expression. I will always be present next to the one who calls the hazard to help with his artistic development. I will remain the secret fund of the cosmic memory that is left to the imagination and the power of expression of the one who attempts to transfigure historical art matter, opposing the amorphous.

Leadership is the presence that man assumes in a frame of reporting in time when he himself becomes the circumstance and event that marks the decisive moment of meeting a destiny with the grace of laying the deepest expression of creativity in the area of spirituality.

The Lost Trace Of A Unique Path Amidst Astral Stretches highlights man's ability to form himself as an integral part of the universe when the contribution he brings to its expansion is represented by the impact he has on world history over time.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-lost-trace-of-a-unique-path-amidst-astral-stretches.htm

The Lyricism Of The Artist's Vision

On October 19, 2014

Optimize your contribution to the creation of new models of inspiration, to outline in a realistic way the dimension of the personality you are willing to show to the world.

In January 1941, Serghei Eisenstein lays a few drawings to paper: his own visions of mythological figures. We have before us four drawings in the same series: Apollo, Dionysus, Poseidon and a faun. Each character has something in their hand: a lizard, a thyrsus, a mermaid, a flute. Characteristic is the lyricism of the artist's vision, the ethereal quality of the figures captured on paper. There are four bodies of adolescents (even Poseidon has the body of an adolescent and only a beard, but this too colored, marks his presence), four figures of an unusual transparency, one of melancholia, another candid, a third one ironic-meditative... the Mermaid from the hands of the candid Poseidon, has the look of an evil whore, while the lizard takes on its elegant-graceful lines of its body those of Apollo that holds her in his hand.

A legendary world, stripped of mystery and any trace of force or brutality, dominated by pure air, transparent, that the characters have. The drawings are dated 25th of January. The next day, Eisenstein sketches the first lines of his famous film scrip "Ivan the Terrible". That great Ivan who, like his previous works, is so violently colored by cruelty. *

Leadership: Is the present and future strength of your creation found in its character of reversibility, considering the total and complete presence of a character who is included as an omnipresent protagonist in a major theme?

The present and especially future force of a creation, which man can use to implement views on a particular subject, is found in its character of reversibility. That is, the director can combine several figures, situations, visions, decorations, scenes, all united in a single unit, and always promoted in another form, so that the message transmitted is understood only by those who have the quality of being a catalyst for change.

Nothing is lost, everything is transformed, combining itself in different ways, especially in terms of choice, probing and sizing all the constituting components of the process of creation. Everything returns and reinterprets in a changing context, gaining relevance as soon as new methods of representing identity by means of perceptual and conceptual additions are born.

But let us not forget that these transformation of the self, of image, of identity, can serve as instruments of measuring advanced finesse and sensitivity, in the continuous updating of forms of expression and autonomy, allowing the detection of varied stylistic phenomena. That assessment and capitalizing on the experience of working with the superior self feels them vigorously.

The remarkable creation of a director resides from the vision with which a character whose actions and traits produce echoes in the present of a conscience ready to rethink the meaning of life.

A revealing aspect of the program "be exactly as the need for transformation asks of you" is, for instance, the way in which you communicate with what is beyond you. Near a world flooded by new feelings and representations. With all shades, vibrations, in which the calls of a new reality resound differently. Thus, the echo of the claims of establishing a sort of supremacy of reason by means of identity updates that have an impact on the way in which you project your "improvements" on your skills as an initiator of novelty can be received.

Inspiration occurs when trying to reorient your own becoming through a creation that has as supporting base the dimension of personality that you are willing to show the world. The one who demonstrates a perfect mastery of the method of updating himself through resignification, i.e. through references relevant to other identities, in the grand problem of relevance of the finished product – a new representation of man of himself, can always demonstrate his superiority in supporting new models of leadership.

A ubiquitous protagonist in a major theme is a complex, powerful character, defined from several perspectives, but in such a way as to validate the status of "an example of a reality that will never be erased from the memory of the world."

The major theme of a creation that honors leadership is the acceptance of a written character destiny through a comparison between what is happening to you and what you are willing to change in reality to give a new meaning to life.

The Lyricism Of The Artist's Vision highlights the link between chosen models of inspiration and the aspects of your personality that you are willing to show to the world so you can make yourself understood in a different sense than the common, usual one. It represents the content of what you try to communicate and induce through inspiration, without expert mentoring that can have completely opposite effects, to reach that perfection of leadership of expressing yourself and placing your messages by redefining your own being, your own reality and your own creativity.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-lyricism-of-the-artist-s-vision.html

The Madness Of Knowledge In The Space Of Extended Reality

On January 16, 2015

Focus on reaching a certain stage of the process of refining and processing knowledge, strengthening your ability of suggesting authentic formulas for existence.

I didn't know all the relationships between existence and nonexistence. It seemed to me that nothingness was only an irreversible effect of extending an illusion, like that of space-time. And that it is made up of true unwritten laws. I could remain framed in the geometry of a world explored strictly scientifically, through the force of interpreting various types of concepts, situations, processes, and of the way in which I maximized the relationships between entities unobservable directly, conceived in the coordinates of a fantastic universe.

An act of consciousness beyond space and time. I was making an experiment that depended on reaching a certain stage of the process of processing the knowledge based on subjective beliefs, integrating certain entities of meaning in the space of my existence, through reduced analysis – beautiful-ugly, good-bad, love-hate. But especially by the combined use of the beliefs unaligned to the wave fields of the truths of the world. Nonconformist, I caught the phenomena that appeared daily before my eyes, succeeding and repeating itself without pause, as the rotation of moons around planets.

When an artist wants to experience that freedom of any unprofitable state, he takes as an inspirational character a person identified with the history of a world that preserves its identity and meaning in a wondrous space, wonderful illusions of new questions from other lives and other universes.

The great insanity of knowledge is to identify yourself with a character who has a world of his own, one you try to understand and create or recreate in a space of self-communication through the word of an almighty creator.

In the examples used for the manifestation of creation there is always a deviation from the spatial framework marked by the vertical and horizontal of a world dominated by two complementary powers: symbolism and universalism. If at first these truths I reached were proven to be pure speculation, simple curiosities that were utterly useless, a back-and-forth of lights and shadows, they later transformed into certainties that opened the gate of answers to the guiding question of German philosopher Martin Heidegger: "What is existence?"

In Cervantes' novel, the realistic and practical man, Sancho Panza, tries to cure Don Quixote of his madness. The idea was to put a mirror in front of his madness, to record each of his absurd and ridiculous illusions, so he can plainly see inside his own inner world and not allow any external factor to obscure the truth.

But Don Quixote's mind refuses to see with clarity the "obvious" and understand the transforming valence of his personality. However, he manages to perceive things more clearly than anyone around him, because he disregarded the mental clichés that clouded the judgment of others.

Leadership: Do you broaden the horizons of science by satisfying the aspiration of the extensive exploitation of discoveries that direct the existence into a framework of creation that pauses where the world usually ends it?

Science is what remains after you have justified your invasion of private life by the forces of a vision that borders on madness. Supporting a vision is a process that can be based on defining unknown truths, showing the world from a promising perspective. But, at the same time, it is a way of strengthening your capacity of suggesting authentic formulas to existence, which in turn creates all other forces.

My whole artistic approach aims at the activity of a creation that pauses where the world usually ends it, with a sense of poetry, combining fiction and reality in a story that goes beyond the immediate spectacle of life and projects a touching light over the most derisory of deeds. Vision gives an insight into the degree of incorporating science into a unique framework, in which leadership can manifest itself as a mental force of penetration and perception of a collection of truths that can change the way in which people see existence, the world and their place in it.

In fact, my madness was that I was living two completely separate lives: one in which science changed the way I was thinking about the world and one of a story in which I was the main character of a series of unwanted interactions of a reality with unpredictable effects. The discoveries can serve as a shining example of the power of doing science, even if the notions with which you operate, depending on the subjective interpretations attributed to reality, are as such constituted so as to offer existence a simplified fundamental meaning, unmarked by the positive or negative assessment of those around.

Here I refer to a type of leadership that can be fulfilled only if you progress on the path of the "Artificial Existence Form" experiment, aiming at building a reality that can be capitalized into a multitude of fictions in relation to several points of view. A creation that pauses where the world usually ends it is a whole of many elements such as imagination, composition, language, interpretation, chromatics, stylistic, perspective, message, which only a story succeeds in reproducing it best outside the life recognized as such through practice.

Is your leadership built on the science of questions that find their answers in the "sparkle of madness", as opposed to drawing new coordinates of humanist bills at the center of a fiction that must be taken as a reality?

The sparkle of madness, which has become a kind of attempt to render a strong emotion that reveals itself only in the practice of better positioning of thought in a direction of creation, can be perceived as a struggle between two distinct personalities: one who wants to change the world, another who wants to be part of a world that does not follow the rules of reality. It is like you are part of a story whose character is rising from mystery with an extraordinary force to immortalize a full, true existence.

This type of leadership, built on the science of questions that find their answers in the "spark of madness", is a form of self-employment in the act of defining and promoting a new reality constituted from true unwritten laws. That is, forged by integrating certain entities of meaning in the space of existence.

We resist the habit of mixing false conclusions with correct ones. We will say that leadership is based on producing revelations experienced and expressed by the individual who possesses a mind absorbing of new meanings and premises, subjected to a logical reasoning (meaning a correct one), resulting in something that contradicts the reality that others see. The leader is the individual who succeeds in perceiving things more clearly than anyone else around him, because he disregards the mental clichés that cloud the judgment of others.

He who tries to establish a new reality, a new tab of existence which can have more meaning, used as a substitute for an improvement of the act of scientific knowledge, by exploiting and recovering the unknown and the non-explicit, will be able to pave the way towards promoting a new definition of leadership.

A fiction that must be taken as a reality is an existence whose solemnity can be sustained, interestingly, depending on the act of creation to which you owe it to give it a note of "madness" through the very vision communicated through a self-portrait made from the perspective of an omniscient narrator.

The Madness Of Knowledge In The Space Of Extended Reality aims at that experience of creating a new reasoning that leads to the articulation of new points of view on existence that can condition the balance of the individual with the world. Man can master reality, world and existence only as he gets to know them scientifically. And only by the combined use of beliefs unaligned to the "wave fields" of universally accepted truths.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-madness-of-knowledge-in-the-space-of-extended-reali

The Madness Of Perfectly Achievable Requirements

On April 24, 2014

Establish the standard value you bring specifically and exclusively to science, so that the convergence effect towards yourself will be a visible and constructive one.

I hoped to find within me the very promise of that sublime virtue, under the form of the particular tendency of combination and association between the functions of the points of contact of a deeper reality. In which the supporting surface of the support-creation ensemble, determined by measurements of time in explicable and inexplicable phenomena, did not represent a risk for the imagination. Madness is man's demand to concomitantly reply to numerous requirements, without investigating the set of ideas that form the limiting framework of his whole thinking and experience of the world.

Something pushed me away from the strict routine of metaphysical thinking that I owed to a plethora of architects of the creative revolution, forming a new base of scientific support. The quintessences that trap within them all that means realistic standard, something that withheld me from enjoying the experience of supreme consciousness.

Basically, I was working with a lifetime's work of research that only the impossible of an eternal miracle made it more mysterious and powerful, due to the care of the incredibly tried life of a character trapped in a square of transformations beyond limits, not understanding the rehearsals and their sources of being. In the most ingenious way possible, I struggled to put another brick to my future plans in what regards the creation of an alternative thinking, formed from other, ever increasingly interconnected thoughts.

Leadership: Can you impose yourself as an unexpected consequence of developing more sophisticated reasoning models without falling into the trap of giving assumptions and approximations that can be abandoned in the space of an abstract representation of reality?

Rather, I think I was trying to resurrect a way of thinking that has been dead for thousands of years, without going through the trouble of reflecting on what I myself represent as an inventor of new forms of thinking. I felt somewhat embarrassed, uncomfortable in the presence of random thoughts, as if I had to cut down a tree with a blunt scythe. As if I had to create a new reality out of the nothingness of a black hole, a last hope that will surpass any imagination simply by accessing an already past literature.

In the volume "The wisdom of the ancients", famous philosopher Francis Bacon asked a single pertinent question: "When you put forward a simple body of light and truth, what use is there in placing in each corner small pale combatant lights? Why, when doubts are destroyed, stir up and somehow give rise to other doubts through resolve itself?"

The sadness that becomes a state of mind is justified only by the weight of defining a new reality through the prism of what man deduces from the laws of life, complicating them with assumptions that are not true. In this equation, I was gripped by that madness that marks the need of a new experience of knowledge that is very difficult to achieve, according to the general criteria of individualizing the manner of making art.

Leadership: Is the effect of convergence toward yourself realized by means that allow you to achieve real or imaginary virtues?

Man cannot be truly helped to surpass himself unless he is able to know his individual way of developing. In this regard, important role is played by the feeling of waking up from a deep sleep, that sort of liberation towards an aspired model of personality, with aspirations above its possibilities of progress, guided by the belief that he will be able to accede without stop from the essential and prestigious roles from his area of activity.

Leadership is formed and develops in a game of verifying the potential of surpassing yourself. But this effect of convergence towards yourself, towards what you do, towards your direction of development considered natural, to gauge the value you bring specifically and exclusively to the science you represent, must be pursued and achieved by means that allow you to achieve real virtues, not imaginary ones. Reaching values not able to be understood before, by living and feeling – only these can lift your being from an "Inferior Man" to a "Superior Man."

If you try to draw up a new base of scientific support, reviving a way of thinking that's been dead for thousands of years, without going through the trouble of reflecting on what you represent as an inventor of new ways of thinking, would mean to assemble a race car from various random parts.

This process of composition and organization, from pieces, of a scientific structure that helps you get as close as possible to great personal realizations, to test your limits, to discover yourself, challenging you to go beyond the border of palpable reality. And discover a new world.

But doesn't allow you to go beyond the walls of the imaginary prisons built over time in the process of adapting to a real that you cannot fully control. That, besides the fact that it restricts your access to the existential patterns and to the conditions of everyday living.

Leadership: Is the experience of seeing within yourself opposed by an experience that contradicts it?

Obviously, you can find motivation in your efforts to apply excessive force to overthrow the habit of thinking in the past, in the specifics of an identity in "balance" which you can carry in the relationship with the role you need to play in the game of verifying the potential of surpassing yourself, whose end you do not know. But I can neither be a guide for madness.

The experience of seeing inside of yourself, a part of the act of self-knowledge, is opposed by another experience that contradicts it, that of diversity of ideas and visions, when you become a prisoner in a square of transformations beyond limits, not understanding the repetitions and their sources of being, struggling to lay another brick for your future plans in what regards the creation of alternative thinking.

The image of reality focused on the experience of looking into yourself is the truth that returns to you after you have previously imparted a less expected, less predictable direction to reason.

The Madness Of Perfectly Achievable Requirements aim at the apparently untouchable developmental aspects of leadership. But when you passionately want something, when you want to contribute to this vast area and find the means of reaching the highest peaks of performance, madness turns into something grand and unforgettable.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-madness-of-perfectly-achievable-requirements.html

The Magic Fluid Of A Mysterious Alchemy

On June 26, 2011

Inspirit moral force to people by awaking in them those emotions that would bring forward their qualities.

In the previous article we talked about Dr. Jacques Mérey which managed in about four years to heal little Eva, who suffered from idiocy. However, the great transformation of the girl occurred in an unexpected moment, just when Jacques was about to lose confidence.

Hope, the long awaited, has cornered in the soul of the doctor when he brought home a mirror. As, for the first time the poor girl, until then, neglectful about her person, was seized by a feeling of joy. In the moment when looking in the mirror, from her mouth, which until then had brought only vague and hoarse sounds, to hear something completely new, understandable but inarticulately, consisting of two syllables: "Be...elle...".

Namely: "Je suis belle ! " (I'm beautiful !). *

For the first time in her life, little Eva has found a quality in her, but what a quality ! One crucial, which will stimulate all other senses, a quality that will track all her life and that will make her very happy.

Do you represent in particular a symbol of triumph over the manifestation of the sentiment of futility, from which the meaning of another reality originates?

The doctor was convinced he had discovered the philosopher's stone. Eva could do well. As, for a human with a single quality, but that it appreciates in particular, will always show willingness to engage in his own development.

He had to instill in the girl the desire to dream, had to stimulate her appetite for life, to develop curiosity in her heart, had to awaken moral feelings, to teach her the words to express thoughts, and to convey subtle intelligence of the creative human spirit, to teach her to show interest for things surrounding her. But how?

On the first day, he took a velvet coat in the closet and urged Eve to touch it, to walk slowly her hands over the fine material. In the next few days, he led her into the garden, showed her the flowers so that she would begin to feel and absorb all the smells. After a few weeks, he taught her to play piano. Then, taught her to read and write. Then, taught her more foreign languages. Then, he offered to her the works of the German and English poets whom she really wanted to understand.

Thus, Eva learned to appreciate world through the senses, developed her romantic nature, learned to be full of affection and love. That is she learned to develop all her feminine traits worthy of a princess of paradise.

Leadership: Do you have the strength to rise above something "unfathomable", by supporting and including the unfathomable in your being?

The purpose of a leader isn't to amaze by presenting a reality, which the majority can identify with, but to achieve, by experimental knowledge, by adopting a certain behavior, that transcending towards "There" where individuals manifest inability to self-understanding, evaluate and improve themselves in the small transactions with the moment and faith.

The unfathomable is something you can't find an explanation for, but you belong to in a certain way, perceived only with your senses, in a spiritual experience. It is something that overwhelms you, burdens you, but forces you to do something about it, to get involved in "its work" and to offer it another alternative to manifest itself. It's something beyond the immediate experience, something you can only feel, few understand it and accept it, you should extract out of it little by little, choosing the option "it's a true news story".

A man of a great spiritual refinement rises above that something "unfathomable", by supporting and including the unfathomable in his being, becoming that measure of magic healing which embraces, like some sort of "Good morning" in a corner of paradise, everything that people experience in the equation of a consumed relationship with life.

In every area, but especially in leadership, the combination of elements can lead to something more than its constituents. Leadership, by anticipating trends of human development or regression, by a summary or detailed sketch of their inner life, treats the cause of their stability or instability, the functional or non-functional version of their manifestation on the stage of passions, feelings and hopes in an expression of their uniqueness and value.

Just as a flower, to survive and to grow harmoniously you must give water, light and sun - so the people, to become more competitive, they need help to develop harmoniously all their qualities. As a leader, you must have the power and desire to penetrate into their hearts, to reach the fibers that make up their entire emotional structure and to generate that fine, intense impulse that would energize them and make them want to become better. A true leader possesses all means able to transform people.

Leadership: Can you cure an illness without knowing a whole range of symptoms?

When it comes to transforming people in good you have to show the same interest, the same ingenuity, the same presence of spirit, the same acuity of mind, the same initiatives as Dr. Jacques Mérey. You have to find those deep spiritual states making up the human being and to generate that mobilizing impulse to awaken people's curiosity, the desire to involve, the desire to create, to think and to improve continuously current performances.

However, for that you should place yourself in a psychological way in relation to them, to cause that intense emotional effect that to remove any complex, any concern, whereby to put forward their potential, values, personality, skill and renewing spirit.

But you? Can you find that unique quality of people that would give them energy and mood necessary for their development? Can you help them find those leverage points by which to charge their soul batteries soul and to awaken in them that feeling of power, of cheerfulness, that motivating attitude, stimulating, full of inspiration?

Just as to cure an illness, it is often needed to know a range of symptoms - so to strengthen ties with other people it is needed to know a number of features of exteriorization of their feelings. You must exercise that influence on them that would bring them to the point that they would feel the need to fulfill themselves morally and professionally through knowledge. Do not forget that moral force which defines the powers of the individual is given by the evolution.

To externalize your own feelings is equivalent to making a mental representation of something truly non-existent, which must first be created within you, then saved into the continuity of an Ego full of confusion that finds its liberation in God's work.

The magic fluid of a mysterious alchemy is the will that you exert on others for their personal and professional development. It is ingenuity and presence of mind to identify that unique quality that lies within them and that you can turn into a great advantage of them. There is no human who does not have a single quality. As a leader, you must endeavor to find exactly that quality and to empathize it. Be persistent, use your imagination, skill, to find the true value of people surrounding you.

Just as a painter continues to feed his art from amazement, always renewed, to nature and life - so you must feed your own happiness from the desire to be useful, focusing exclusively on your work to help people to overcome their weaknesses and to improve their skills.

* Note: Alexandre Dumas - The mysterious doctor, Cartea Romaneasca Publishing, 1973.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magic-fluid-of-a-mysterious-alchemy.html

The Magic Formula Of A Free Soul

On February 05, 2011

The more the leader's beliefs are deeply rooted, the more his ability decreases to broaden his horizons and human relations.

A sequence from the movie *"Leon - The Professional (1994)"*caught my attention in particular. If you remember well, Leon – the killer valued in a particular way a small plant in a pot which he leave on the window sill. He took care of it daily, taking with him anywhere he moved. That plant brought him little peace of mind and softened his life.

At one point, while watering the plant, smiling and gracious, Leon says to Mathilde - the girl that he had saved from death and that he "adopted":

- This plant is my best friend. It's always happy and doesn't ask questions. It's like me, see? It has no roots.

Mathilda hesitated a longer moment, thinking better over the words of Leon, and then responded with a weak smile:

- If you really love it, take it in the middle of a park, to make roots.

Leadership: Are you returning to the example of a life lived in spiritual values, because the way you understand the world leave traces in yourself?

Since a child Leon was trained to kill, the secret missions, and basically antisocial, was accompanying him everywhere, continuously, so removing him from other people, of love, compassion and true happiness. Always standing in the wings, hidden from the eyes of others, failing to communicate with people, he could not realize the true value of life. He never had made new plans, he never gone searching for meaning in life. His world was not a world full of dreams in which, always with hope, always with serenity, always with faith and desire for life to seek happiness and find it. But it was a dull world, hidden, and he was the robot that only responded to commands.

I think that the words of the famous writer Danielle Steel from the novel "Loving" which I reread it recently, render quite well the thoughts of Leon:

"My soul, so old, so empty, it is afraid of me, of my life, until my dreams, shiny new, will start again, in a different landscape, in another game, finally aware of what they know, of what they think, of what I am and I feel..."

Maybe we should think well through the words of Danielle Steel, respectively to Leon's thoughts, and instead of seeing the world through the prism of resignation, to start in the pursuit of happiness.

Leadership: Are you a number that divides in itself, or a number that varies depending on another number?

I have said countless times that leadership is based on the saying: "Man isn't a number in life that divides in itself, but a number that can be raised to "n", as long as it varies depending on another number." The question is: Can you find out the absolute value of the number that repeats itself?

By this, I am trying to point out that a person who pays attention to any clues that could uncover their true character, learning to look at the scanning and managing tasks of the self as some objective tasks that they need to face, counting on their true deeds and their consequences; they will be able to self-condition themselves consciously.

To condition your psychological answer "I can" to the sound of the alarm "I will be what I want to be", as a consequence of the results of your own evaluation, means to be at peace with yourself and to coordinate your existence so as to accept yourself with good and bad parts, without forging the data of the situation.

You shouldn't understand that you're not allowed to enjoy the results of your determination (to change and transform your life) that you easily consider self-explanatory. But everything takes on a different importance after you realize that the hardest way to reach self-love, or the "normal" status, is to think about yourself as a sinner, unable to forgive the sins of your past.

It is essential to perceive, through a thought process that resides in the analysis of counter-arguments, with the purpose of uncovering the truth, to open up for yourself, not for the world around you. Nobody can offer you a maximum of certainty regarding your spiritual base, your relations and bonds with others. That is why, the great interest shown for your life experiences, in different states, as you live them, constitute a major aspect for a harmonious development and for understanding the dominant role or the dependency on others.

A repeating number is a representation of the amount of action you want to get involved in, starting from that magical lever that triggers a reaction to the important events that appear before you. The absolute value of this number is given by the relationship between the objective and the subjective with which you perceive your suitability in the determinism equation that leaves room for free action, unconstrained by norms, rules, and principles in which you do not believe.

Leadership: Do you isolate yourself in your own universe, thinking that you will be able to find yourself, thus neutralizing a potential opposition from others ?

To do something against your wishes and aspirations is, certainly, to isolate yourself in your own universe. And if that happens, then you could not appease either with the inner world of other people.

Mathilda helped Leon to see another side of things, helped him understand what is joy, what is good because her way of seeing the world was not as limited as his way. She changed his beliefs and values, changed his habits and direction in life. She helped him to find and develop his true "roots". Leadership begins with a change of attitude.

With the plants, it is the same as to people. Eventually their roots rot if not water. Similarly, people who do not develop new horizons and new human connection end up by closing in themselves, by separating involuntarily of other people. A plant, sparingly watered will be more vigorous, as a grown man in the spirit of a life full of joy and contentment will broaden his horizons.

Leadership: Does your state of mind transcend common reality, able to live in other dimensions of the convergence of content that you receive from the surrounding space?

All the beliefs and feelings that you're forming it will create the life you will lead with all the daily circumstances. The more your beliefs are deeply rooted, the more decreases your ability to broaden your horizons and human relations.

You have a personality, a soul, an "ego" that makes you unique. You can change your own life as well as the others if you remain open to diverse viewpoints and perspectives. Detach yourself from the beliefs that "pull" you back, detach yourself from the thoughts, feelings and unhealthy values and principles, to free your mind to see and accept alternatives.

The content you receive from other people, such as the transmission of total affection or the amplification of the motivation to live with the awareness that you have a goal to accomplish, must resonate with the multitude of decisions that occur under randomness.

On the other hand, the content you receive from the surrounding space refers to the materiality of extremely diverse objects: from the transparency of crystal, to the hardness of metal, and the fragility of the dandelion puff. And one of the dimensions of this content can be the intensity with which you get attached to one thing and evolve alongside it.

But, as someone said on the internet, the problem arises when you get attached to something more than to those you love. Or chasing after possessions day and night, instead of stopping for a moment and appreciating how valuable and unique your life is.

The motivation to be someone else is based on what you get from life when you always wake up in the midst of things that shape you.

The Magic Formula Of A Free Soul is given by your opening towards other people. Your leadership is still far away from reaching that level of quality that best reflects your strongest values, if you do not adapt to the environment of others, if you do not experiment new ideas and new options that you have available. To widen your horizons and human relations, by all means you need to change your beliefs and reconsider your values and concepts.

Everyone is free to think as he wants, is independent in thought and in action. But he also must be in line with the thinking of others, with the possibilities of action, but also with the existing legislation at a time. The isolation in the own universe, the non-acceptance of a new way of thinking and the lack of a broad horizon are unfavorable for the leader. And to act outside the law because of the rigidity in thinking attracts harsh penalties.

What would be the magic formula of a free soul? Nobody can accurately define it. The fact is that the leader, as other people, must strive to create something great in his life. This can be achieved only if everyone is armed with a healthy thinking, if everyone is open to a broader horizon

A perspective vision, an effective communication, open, an action within the legal limits of generally accepted or even required, will allow you to develop your "roots" increasing your vigor and even your authority.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magic-formula-of-a-free-soul.html

The Magic Of Leadership

On November 09, 2010

Transform your leadership in a masterpiece, in order to remain forever hang in people's minds and soul.

Some memories are too vivid, too clear, and awake too many forgotten feelings. No, you can't lock them in a heavy box and then throw it in a well – you hear it splash, and then it disappears. Some memories do not disappear, never die, but remain deeply imprinted in our memory.

One painting – depicting a field of flowers of all colors, in the foreground having a bright purple lotus flower – says a lot about the painter who painted it. This picture reminds me of him, my master whose talent proved to be remarkable. The painting, which brings out his talent for combining colors, leads me to the past, when I used to stay with him for hours and listen to him speak so beautifully, sometimes touchingly, about the mystery of art and of the great secret of painting. This painting, the execution of which was very thorough, reminds me of the ease and grace with which the master used to move the brush on the canvas tight on the easel, revealing his passion for painting, risen from deep inside.

There is no forgetting. When I look at this splendid painting, I think of the past, I hear his words, the advice he gave me, trying to show me the path to the true knowledge of art. Talking with him, or rather listening to him talking, always with deepness and full of enthusiasm, watching him painting as striving to develop his senses, I penetrated many of the secrets of art. From him, I learned about the method of the shadow of figures projected on a wall or a screen, which was used by the ancient Egyptian ceramic artists.

Leadership: Your spirit moves freely among the people devoted to your "creation" ?

An artist's work is his life. You cannot detach completely from him, from his work, from the art he created. When you look at one of his paintings, you find yourself deeply excited, you keep quiet and respect. The artist surrounds you with his presence, which you cannot see, but which you can feel deep inside you, you feel it like being part of you.

To one man, one man on this earth, exactly to him, who felt an infinite passion for art, only to him, of all people, I owe my knowledge. Many, too many years I sat around the master. And I enjoyed a lot of affection from him. Often, when he talked to me about his knowledge, he looked at me kindly and told me: "Nicu, the more original a work is, the more it reaches perfection." His mastery was unmistakable. I realize this every time I look at his painting.

A consummate leader is a vivid and continuous presence in people's minds and souls. He resembles a painter who, even when not around you, has a great influence on you. Or, he's like a writer who stays in your mind long after you closed the book and put it back on the bookshelf. His spirit moves freely among the people devoted to his "creation".

Leadership: Can you reach a climax through the mastery of representing with skill what is most important from an expressive point of view in an unforgettable, living way?

Only one who has the ambition of a great and original style can manifest a particular interest in spiritual things. Only such a man can penetrate the great mystery of art and give expression to the highest ideals, values and principles, through his work. Only such a man, crossed by an intense passion, highly trained, gifted with a keen sense of professionalism and tending to perfection, can have a substantial contribution to creating a quality work, a work that would remain forever alive.

A true leader makes from his leadership a masterpiece, which focuses on Father-Son relationship. Leadership is like a painting that remains imprinted in the minds of people the more it is better realized and more beautiful. And it can be elevated at the rank of art only if the two entities - mentor and disciple – meet, intertwine and complement each other, only if these two entities are in a relationship of "part - whole".

Have you found someone highly trained, which would join you in your journey towards performance, and with whom you can form a whole? By achieving its full potential, is it creating a foundation, a synergy, from which and you could reach your potential?

You reach a climax through the mastery of skillfully representing what is most important from an expressive point of view in an unforgettable, living way, when your artwork creates its main consequence in the power to move hearts and in the right to pretend the belonging to an entity of an associative type with the personality you admire.

The climax of the path towards understanding art is represented by what you begin to appreciate when you have to experience the sensation of a direct contact with the great artists that serve the idea of "a Living Artwork".

The magic of leadership is nothing but what a quality leadership leave in people's minds and souls, even after the leader is gone, but having completed his mission, reaching his goals. It's a great performance for someone's leadership to remain imprinted in people's minds and souls, which indicates that it probably was of the best quality, which means it was not only good, but very good and worth following.

It would be absurd, and it is impossible for people to have a good opinion of you and accept your essence – your interest and your values – unless you don't master the magic of leadership.

Transform your leadership in a masterpiece, in order to remain forever hang in people's minds and soul.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magic-of-leadership.html

The Magic Of The Sorcerer (II)

On August 03, 2009

Highlight your skill of shaping characters, by adjusting your leadership potential according to your virtues.

There was a mysterious line in everything that happened on the island, which no one could understand, everything was driven by a strong, unseen hand, that of a sorcerer. No soul on the ship had suspected that that old, quiet, gray man, who lost his youth, was an exceptional human being who would amaze everybody with his great wisdom and which, using his magical powers, as he pleased, would condemn the guilty to terrifying ordeals. The past has been avenged.

Prospero managed to attract his two enemies into the trap, dominating and controlling them through his hidden power, subjecting them to tortures until they have repented of the injustice they made to him. With tears in their eyes and words full of grief and real regret, they have finally confessed sincere remorse and begged for forgiveness.

If you read "The Tempest", a play by Shakespeare, then you know that there was a happy end. Prospero reconciled with his enemies, returned to his native country and took possession of the dukedom.

Prospero has shown his brilliant leadership abilities through his power of shaping the human character according to his will, by using his virtues gained through faith and knowledge

Leadership: Do you have the power to detach yourself from the self-imposed artificiality that brings with itself an escape from the past?

For Prospero, the self-imposed artificial was an imitation of the power of nature impregnated with magical nuances, which he had integrated in a process of expansion of his own personality, beyond the barriers of the conventional. On the line of addiction to giving everything around a plausible explanation through a creator figure with clairvoyant capabilities, he managed to leave the past behind, being at the same time absorbed by a single possible motivation: vengeance.

We can indicate the trajectory of leadership starting from the idea of a relative knowledge of the investigated human Universe, or moreover from the parallel between the expected objectives and results that participate in the personality expansion process towards an uncontested supremacy.

On the bases of common characteristics for some identity processes, which have been developed in contact with a complex reality about which the common human doesn't hold information and for which he is constrained (by the uncanny evolution of things) to quickly assemble for himself a deformed image, we can determine the impact force that hides in itself the seed of a new order.

Leadership: Do you have to make the plausible become real before the real and the unreal are separated by the freedom of association with a superhuman fact?

In the context of the first production form of efficiency, managing the personality expressing resources, we can distinguish a kind of association between science and virtues, which makes the passage from the real truth that releases of any constraints and prejudice, to the truth revealed by a series of external factors that could come to light against you.

The second form of producing efficiency, calculated through a handful of decisive factors integrated in the area of the intellect that longs for the absolute, can ensure, on the long term, your inclusion in a domination status, modifying the meaning of the horizon that you can encompass only from a certain altitude.

From there on, we reach the conclusion that the evolution process towards a higher plan, which supposes a certain degree of wisdom and knowledge accumulation, is possible when the matter of plausible hypotheses is avoided. Through this procedure your true identity can be unveiled, overturning any kind of value that you promoted through exceptional diversions and through the power of inducing the impression of a chaos, or a rigid determinism, dominated by incomprehensible aspects that make almost impossible others' freedom of manifesting.

Leadership: Do you manifest your fascination for what dominates you, going on the premise that all surrounding elements correctly play a role in achieving the desired purpose?

A leadership that wavers between extremes is the result of the succession of more stages of refining the influence forms that, in contact with reality, don't detach from the self-imposed artificiality that takes the place of real values, bringing with itself that stiffness in perceiving other points of view, the lack of generosity, or purely dominant attitudes.

It depends on the impulse of your own nature to open up and choose to be confident in a superior Alter Ego, despite the past suffering and injustice, keeping at bay any reality that contradicts the convictions supported by a wall of pure value-generating ideality.

Power is what magic offers to you. A skillful leader shall ensure that all the elements around him play correctly their role in order to achieve the intended purpose. Do you have the power of shaping the human character after your will? What are the virtues that you need in order to facilitate this transformation?

What dominates a man found in a leap towards perfection is the very principle of his own person that he must respect and overcome: "Beware of losing yourself within yourself in order to win outside of yourself."

If a man had the gift of prophecy and knew all the mysteries and any knowledge, he would know how to run things by his own will. He would know how to attract souls, dominate them through knowledge, initiative, creativity, authority and persuasion. And, intoxicated with the feeling of his mission, he would annihilate the will of all everyone, asking them to listen in the name of his mission and the achievement of the most daring demands.

Through this increase of power, the influence of his personality would increase every day, unmeasured, it could assert his immense authority over all. And the one who would dare to doubt his powers, couldn't be worthy of HIM - The Sorcerer - the most powerful man in the world, a perfect leader, whom everyone obeys.

Leadership: Can you take on a role above the temporal form of existence, imposing upon all your manifestations a point of view that is a form of gratitude towards God?

To be a man everyone would follow, you must be one of those exceptional beings, full of resources, a Prospero, a man seized by the sense of justice, fairness and truth and having the skill to lead things, to touch and see unseen things.

to take care of all in order to make sure that all elements will play their role properly in achieving the intended purpose.

As a leader, you must also be a benefactor, a judge and a teacher at the same time. Certainly, nothing is more urgent in critical moments than to act firmly and wisely, in order to succeed overall change.

The one who lacks efficiency, the firmness to discipline, punish or fire people who do not comply with professional ethics and deontology, will never be able to impose themselves in front of them, therefore, he won't be called a leader, but a tool manipulated by those around him.

People shouldn't see you neither as something fallen from superior, invisible worlds - so something uplifting, a God, nor as a rag leader who never dares to impose himself.

To attribute yourself a characteristic of a superior man means to validate that experience of subjecting the world in a reality beyond their understanding, as being a complete manifestation of the nature of a supernatural Creator.

Conclusion: Being looked at from the outside, some leaders (the most skilled ones) seem to resemble sorcerers, because they accomplish everything they design to, having performances recognized by all those around them. But secret of an effective leadership does not lie in the "Magic of the sorcerer", but in a constant work, unceasing documentation in order to improve professional performances, know the human nature, the personal professional performances of working fellows, as well as their qualities and flaws, especially when it comes to respecting the truth.

Highlight your skill of shaping characters, by adjusting your leadership potential according to your virtues.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magic-of-the-sorcerer-II.html

The Magic Of The Sorcerer (I)

On August 03, 2009

Get involved in the magical act of individual transformation, in the virtue of a well-determined reasoning that allows you to personalize what you really are.

Prospero was the Duke of Milan, but because he loved silence and solid study, wishing to enrich his mind, he gave the affairs in charge of his younger brother, named Antonio, in which he had an unshakable confidence. Alone, leaving aside the worldly pursuits, buried between his books, he never saw his brother's plots against him, who deliberately wanted to be considered a real Duke.

Antonio succeeded with the help of King of Naples - Alonso, a powerful prince, to take possession of the duchy of Prospero.

Prospero, with his daughter, Miranda, were forced to climb a small vessel without ropes, canvas or masts, and were left to die at sea. Their luck was that a senior at court, Gonzalo, who was very kind-hearted, secretly left them food, clothes and the books of witching teachings, which Prospero loved most, on the ship.

Leadership: What exactly fulfills you if you let people guess that you are the manifestation of a power beyond any understanding?

Long after they were thrown by waves on the shore of a deserted island, Prospero's biggest delight was to teach Miranda, revealing her more than any princess could have learned from the most skilled masters. But not only that. But by the power of his knowledge - because he managed to penetrate all the mysteries of the world - Prospero freed Ariel, a spirit who had been imprisoned in a tree and subjected to terrible tortures by the direful witch Sycorax.

Spirits like Ariel remained unseen for any human being, except Prospero who, endowed with the gift of forecasting, found that the most tenacious and fierce of his enemies, Antonio and Alonso, were on a journey at sea. Then, he commanded to Ariel to stir such a terrible storm that the ship would cast away on the island he had arrived too.

Ever since its lifetime, a human being changes into a myth, a prophetical, superhuman character. Anything is possible for a sorcerer who has the power to command natural phenomena, who managed to penetrate all the mysteries of the world, who has developed the gift of materializing worlds and the ability to concretize any proposed goal. Prospero decided to use his magic science in order to punish his enemies for all the wrongs they had commited.

Leadership: Do you turn to the subterfuges of the science of "conversion" with the purpose to renew your own identity?

Someone aware of the subterfuges of the science of "conversion" with the purpose to renew his own identity by accrediting the additional parameters of a certain world that he can attach to for the sake of touching a perfection ideal, has to clearly distinguish between two reasonings.

The first reasoning, molded on a visionary and multidirectional thinking, tries the main explanation of the actual world, but by assembling it in a certain manner, going beyond the horizon of experience or reason. The second reasoning, with major and minor premises, connects to the events that happen in an imaginary world after its establishment is accepted as an aspiration towards greatness, towards the perfection of all perfections. This world is intoxicating through the vibrations it produces, because – paradoxically – you feel and act as a superior being.

Leadership is sympathetic to your orientation in a particular reference system, whose goal is the magical act of individual transformation. Not so much on the grounds of the gained experience, but by virtue of a well-determined reasoning that allows your orientation in a broad field of possibilities of understanding and personalizing what you really are.

So by virtue of a reasoning that observes, analyses and deeply understands the phenomenon of two superposed identities in their most intimate details, but also in the entirety of their existence. Everything is relative in leadership, and what you have uncovered (an interiority that becomes true reality or an interiority that completely rejects reality) is a continuous struggle of reasoning, especially in your position as a superior being.

The magical act of personal transformation aims at achieving a unique perfection, found at the heart of events, which not only creates an illusory happiness, but rather absorb the meaningful reason of understanding full power from the perspective of a God.

The enthusiasm for new conquests of high peaks, when patience is the performing unity of every mystery, constitutes proof that this way of declaring yourself unique (repaying yourself through an advanced knowledge and through a mysterious dignity that can serve as tool for a complex geniality) is a phenomenon of shaping leading experience that can be controlled.

The Magic of the Wizard points out the phenomenon of dual identity, the oscillation between the kind of reasoning you choose to act and think in the position of a superior being.

The significant force necessary for ensuring the total control of a defining identity is built on the experience of being yourself in a world that continuously struggles to transform you into something else. This, in relation to the experience of being yourself in another superior self, taking over the gift to exert your reasoning faculties through an unpredictable subjectivism – equivalent to replacing the real present through another present, the imaginary.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magic-of-the-sorcerer.html

The Magic Secret Of Mastery

On July 11, 2010

Rise up to the height of your potential, joining you in your leadership and entering the atmosphere in harmony with it.

The day was ending. The drawing in which I tried to depict the image of a famous Hollywood actress was not bad, but it definitely lacked expressiveness. The woman in the drawing did not emanate an irresistible beauty, like the one in the picture I inspired myself from, but she seemed rather lifeless. She lacked that spark, that "something" special, which makes you dwell your eyes upon her, which makes you feel that she is alive, which makes you scream out loud "Wow ! " I was deeply disappointed with myself, with my lack of professionalism.

The master was looking at me with deep and great indulgence. His eyes seemed to tell me "you still have so much to learn."

- Master, why didn't my picture turn out well? I asked him on a determined and penetrating voice.

The master paused, as if he hesitated to reveal a secret that he had kept until then only for himself. He poured his scented, green tea into a glass, by the Oriental custom, he dissolved in it two cubes of sugar and sipped a few drops, savoring the drink with an indescribable joy. Then, his lips uttered rarely, with perfect calmness, the following words:

- Nick, you paint without feeling anything for your work. Nevertheless, the painting has a life of its own, and you must relate your soul to its soul. In order for your picture to be well done, to come alive, you must transpose yourself into the other world, that of the painting, in its landscape and the characters it renders. If you want to achieve perfection, you must integrate into the atmosphere of the painting and get in harmony with it.

Leadership: Do you constantly remain in pursuit of an ideal of perfection in the light of your intention of exploring the depth of a self-evident course of art as a totality of a work of art?

Leadership is optimized by going from the hard work of gathering construction material for creating an exceptional image, with the purpose of making it known in the frames of a believable realism, to creating a masterpiece of clarity and insight. Leadership, just like art, systematizes its selection criteria for "expression" based on the decorum of the inner world that you translate into a vision.

What makes up your inner world decor, the beauty to convey an idea in an artistic manner and having a concept behind it is proof of the worthiness to carry a certain feeling through more plans. A requested plan in order to disclose the unfathomable dimension of the creation by trying to reveal what you can't express into word. And a requested plan in order to disclose that dimension called imagination or dream, determining the apparition of constructive emotions.

The potential to manifest authenticity in art is based on the coupling reaction between the two plans.

In order to realize what you have never realized before, you must do something you did not make before. You must become someone else, something you never were. You must become a master. And for this, you must increase your value, enhancing the quality of the work you create. You must make that daring leap over the realm of your reason, and start perceiving with your soul beyond what you create. When you paint, you must feel you are a part of the drawing, you must transpose yourself into the atmosphere created by the picture.

The greatest painters have eagerly strained their powers into an unmeasured intellectual, but especially spiritual effort, in order to manage to reach the eternal mystery of perfection. It is not enough to paint in order for your painting to be alive, you must try and transpose yourself into the atmosphere of the painting with all your senses, and with your mind and soul, to try to feel the way are feeling the characters from the work you create.

This focus on the reality expressed so beautifully by the "soul experiences" is the driving force of making a successful painting.

Leadership: Are you sure you can taste the wonderful experience of feeling embedded in the fullness of a force that rises from the depths of a faithful copy of yours, without remaining the prisoner of an obsessive idea?

Undoubtedly, the great secret of a successful creation is to own a superior execution technique, as well as the art of personal integration into the atmosphere of the painting.

The success of a leader depends on the quality and quantity of his results, implicitly of the team he leads. Everything that can prevent him from leading his team towards success, everything that may limit his actions, reduces the depth and the quality of his "work". And the work of a leader is nothing but the entire activity he develops in full harmony with himself, with the spirit and his personality, in order to achieve his goal.

Just like the key to make a very good painting is to have the ability to transpose yourself into your own creation, just the same the key to succeed in leadership means to have the ability to transpose yourself into the atmosphere of the "work" you create.

How could a leader to fulfill people's expectations and mobilize their energies if he is not able to transpose himself into the spiritual depths of the leadership he creates? Everything the leader creates largely determines his success or his failure. If he fails to get into that state, which helps him see things differently and establish a special relationship with them, then he will not prove maximum efficiency in what he undertakes.

Rise up to the height of your potential, joining you in your leadership and entering the atmosphere in harmony with it. A true leader relates his soul to the soul of his „creation".

The prisoner of an obsessive idea is the man who knows how to integrate his personality into a valuable work of art, but cannot detach himself from the image that really represents him.

Conclusion: As a leader, you must struggle to relate your soul to that of your "work". Only if you manage to transpose yourself into your work, and you will do everything with tireless passion, only then and you will have full control over what you create.

Just like in painting, there is mastery, an art in leadership, in the absence of which the chances of success decrease significantly and the proposed target becomes difficult to achieve. However, this mastery is achieved only after years and years of work.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magic-secret-of-mastery.html

The Magic Wand Of Jacques Merey

On April 13, 2009

Show your interest in people by highlighting their personality.

Someone announced Jacques Merey, who was at that moment at the command of the small battalion, that one of the soldiers who had fought under his command, wants to entrust him some various precious objects, and did not want to give them to someone else. It seems that the Corporal had found a bag of gold coins and precious rings. After the strict military laws, all this would accrue to the Commander, which was Jacques Merey.

However, Jacques Merey, was not the kind of man to want to get rich quickly on the battlefield, and decided to hand over that bag, with everything in it to General Dumouriez that will transmit it to the true beneficiary that is the Prince's wife who was defeated in the battle.

Even so, do you know what exactly did Jacques Merey to irrevocably win the trust and respect of the Corporal? He appointed right him to go to General Dumouriez, and to hand over the bag, as to not diminish the merits in front of his comrades. Here is a gesture of moral authority that only a true leader, a deep man, could make it.

Leadership: Can you get people to change their perspective on a viable opportunity and project a noble meaning to them against the background of the great events of life?

You cannot consider a man to be an object, assigning almost with disregard the role of a perfect passivity, as a man that should not have anything to say, nothing to ask, nothing to do than blindly following your orders. You must let him feel he is responsible. You have to let him "breathe" in order to rebuild the confidence in him and in his potential; you must guide him to act by himself in order to highlight his own personality.

You cannot have a bigger impact on people if you do not let flow that influx of trust from you to them. The real process of human transformation always takes place in time, through deeds and actions that you initiate both in their personal benefit and the benefit of you. Furthermore, this process of transformation is like a circle in which they must seek, by turns, all the things needed for their own methods of knowledge and developing their capacities, all those marks that would help them to define better their personality and individuality.

In leadership, things are the same as in medicine. The head purpose of the leadership science it is to strive not to put itself authoritatively across the natural evolution of people, but to renew their arsenal of values underlying on their whole individual existence, strengthening their will to act by their own forces at times of limit.

Leadership is the rich life experience that stands in the way of the tendency of people to consider themselves humble and insignificant, directing your attention only to what is sublime in people who begin to behave exemplary.

The Magic Wand Of Jacques Merey is the attitude that brings a change in people's lives, giving them the pride of being unique and unmatched. The famous Austrian writer Stefan Zweig confessed in one of his novels: "Every human medicine should strive - and this is its head purpose - not to put itself authoritatively across the natural evolution, but only to strengthen the curing will in case of illness."

Each leader has a "magic wand" an incredible resource that he is using over time to strengthen his leadership. It is that source of moral support, the stimulation which he gives to other people, by assigning them a significant role in his own "leadership scenario" that he directs.

Conclusion: The Magic Wand Of Jacques Merey it is that capacity and power of a leader to influence in good the concepts and mentality of the people and their methods of action that must be in accordance with a particular ethical behavior based on justice and humanitarianism.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magic-wand-of-jacques-merey.html

The Magician (II)

On November 16, 2010

Interpret your role in great mystery, so as to transform yourself from a insignificant person into one with great leadership qualities.

Often when I went out with my friends, I liked to get lost in the crowd, to be gone without no one realizing it, to make myself invisible by hiding for a short time in the most solitary places, streets or walking through short streets, unpaved, unnamed, then, suddenly coming back beside them. I did everything with great discretion to avoid any inconvenience.

I had everything planned. I knew what I wanted, and I knew how to manipulate it - I arranged them so well, so that it would be only in my advantage. Sometimes I was losing hours trying to guess the route for the next day, of course planning every step with discretion. Often, to get the right plan, even I was suggesting the route that we had to go through; in this way, providing myself a way to disappear without much difficulty.

It is strange how much I could change a situation, considering how little counted my absence to friends, for a few moments. The very inspiring and original way I acted, the calculated way I planned every detail, no matter how small, from which begin the entire operation until its completion, all this made me feel proud, satisfied from a certain point of view, made me feel creative and skillful.

I felt that I was beyond myself; I felt differently than others, I felt that I was somehow above them. For I discovered the secret of transformation - could become "invisible" for a short time - and that was a big achievement...for a future magician.

Leadership: Can you interpret a role of association with the novelty of an approach based on confidentiality, which is in relation to the role of a "final user" of an unreal authority?

Then silence. There was no movement; there was no noise that would betray the presence of someone on semi-dark stage. On the faces of spectators, especially those in the front rows were littered anxiety and tension. Only the magician sat idly somewhere in a corner of the scene, in shadow, regarding on all that dough from the soul of the audience, which gave rise knowingly, proceeding as a master who knows what to do every time.

The show reached its culmination. The magician had become invisible, turned into an invisible being, a ghost that although nobody could see it somehow does not cease to exist. He could see everything, but nobody could see him, even no one because he directed his "disappearance" with great discretion. He was right there in front of spectators, wrapped in a shadow that does not miss anything. Gone in a totally sensational way, hiding in the most secluded spot, and now he had to recur.

Everything must be done in great secrecy, with great caution to avoid any inconvenience. It was a matter of time, of the readiness of mind, not just the body. However, for a magician, everything is very well calculated, and each stage of performance is meticulously prepared, to the most viewers it seemed a mystery. One eye can see better than many.

Leadership: Before you get to play a big role, start to give life to a character !

And you can be a great man, a magician, or a leader, if you can differentiate yourself from other people around you, and if you find a formula that propels you in front of them. Nevertheless, for this you must arrange things so well that it is only in your advantage, strategically planning every move. That depends on intuition and foresight, properly is related to clear and deliberate understanding of the actions that are needed to entrepreneurs to build your own character to represent you and to develop it to the point at which it could offer more value to the world.

Leadership is like a magic show: directing and presenting by yourself (even if you have a very good team behind you), emphasizing your own creations, your own ideas and scenarios – the show that can impress and excite people at different levels, depending on the "miracles" that you produce.

As a leader, you starred in your own "magic show", a role that can be positive or negative, good or unbearable, creative or less creative. Even so, if you do not impress with a higher interpretative level both in terms of quality and professionalism, and if you do not have the ability to create miracles, you will not be able to give your leadership a higher value and you cannot get up to the height of your role.

Leadership: Can your background skills ensure you a significant advantage in relation to the using of the means of artistic expression considered a variant of a conflict of role?

If you're not ready for a big role, you are wrong ! If most people do not see in you a future leader, show them that your eyes see much better than theirs. Create your own character and your own show – an event that will mark a step upward in your career.

Your background skills and qualities (those which are not displayed in public or integrality, that can only be interpreted subjectively and vaguely understood by others) will ensure you an advantage over others without having their same training. Nevertheless, you have to be inspired and original, creative and skillful and have a desire to overtake yourself. You must learn by yourself to manipulate things – to arrange them so well so that it would be only to your advantage.

A leader puts into practice his skills and competencies, strongly influencing things. And is considered appreciated by "the interpretative level" he comes to.

Leadership has the same ingredients as a magic show – differ only the purpose and the place where they merge. Between leadership and a magic show, there is not too much difference, having in common one thing which definitely unites them: the miracle of a presence full of vigor, originality, optimism and positive energy, inspiration, a captivating presence by the way he plays.

The means of artistic expression can be considered a variant of a conflict of role when the creative process that highlights the nature of the individual in the form of a certain identity, along with a strong subject, does not correspond to a performance that ensures the control of the situation or of the person in question that maintains the atmosphere of the show.

How complex is the magic you produce that it can be controlled without side effects at the depth of your personality traits and destiny?

Conclusion: It is said that in every soldier kitbag is laying a marshal baton. By analogy, can be understood that anyone can turn from an insignificant person into one with great leadership qualities, and we can witness at the miracle of appearance of a presence full of sap, the occurrence of a particular character to set things in motion on the best road to achieve goals.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magician-II.html

The Magician (III)

On January 04, 2011

Once you own the technique of playing a part, you will always be able to profit from your craft.

Magic was the only thing I understood very well from the beginning. It happened more than ten years ago, when I watched the cartoon "Sport Billy". I had never heard of Harry Houdini or David Copperfield. Even so, Sport Billy surpassed both in terms of the art of using their resources as a means of influence and control. His "ammunition" consisted in a magic bag, from which he took out all sorts of things, each more interesting and surprising than the other, which helped him in the most difficult moments.

The man I am today, full of secrets, possessed by enormous aspirations, was born then, the moment that I felt what magic can do, when I felt that I am able to take a special place in people's minds if I have the appropriate "tool".

I would become a slave of my passion: the magic, the inclination towards a sincere recognition of forces claimed by a catalyst generically called: the total moment to question what you believe. Since then I have always used it.

Leadership: Are you congruent with what you transmit through illusion when the relevance of your position towards the absolute is at its maximum?

The matchless director of the show. The magician entered the scene with the bag full of poisonous reptiles, and the show began. He started to twist the snakes, the biggest and the small ones. Any of the five reptiles inspired a terrible fear in the audience, which watched the game with anxiety and fear. Then, with a bell that uttered a sharp and a very annoying sound, the magician provoked the snakes.

At one point, the biggest snake rushed to the smallest one, and bites it, and then he swallowed it. It was like the famous scene from the Bible, when Moses' snake swallowed the snakes of the other magicians. The magician grabbed it by its tail with one hand, and with the other one he gently took it by its neck, in a certain way, that the snake opened its mouth wide. Then, the magician took out from the reptile's mouth a green-blue scarf, forcefully threw it up, and it gently floated down. When it reached the stage floor, it instantly transformed into a dove, which suddenly took flight.

The miracle occurred. The audience applauded with admiration. The Absolute was touched by the ecstasy with which they were conquered by a new temptation. The relevance of my position towards the absolute was at its maximum when I realized that I was dependent on the relationship "high tension – response" that the spectators experienced individually, each, in turn, passing through these moments of suspense and spectacular twists.

Leadership: Do you constantly experience the consequence of separating yourself from "Who you are beyond what you think you really are"?

Do you know your role and your limits of competence? A magician's main merit is that he knows how to interpret his role with an exquisite craftsmanship, with an amazing consistency, and with a remarkable authenticity. The secret of the magic show consists in the depth with which he approaches every performance of magic, directing the attention of the audience with his attitude, his reactions, to something specific.

Just as a magician quickly breaks the ice, making his viewers sit breathless, then get up and applaud his magic number, just like a painter defines objects by color, providing a gradual loss of contours, just like a story helps viewers empathize with the characters - so does the leader, in his "leadership show" stand out both by the depth of his ideas, but also by a perfect mastery in painting his character.

The consequence of separating yourself from "Who you are beyond what you think you really are?" is a return to the identity that has consecrated you as an individual artist – one who created a unique artwork whose value resides in the expression of the creative activity, not an improvisation of great effect that prolongs the psychic-emotional manipulation of all those who are unsuspecting, the state of trance in which the human being is disconnected from the rational.

The leader is the one who builds "the leadership show" he is the director, screenwriter, producer and performer. He must offer a quality show that is acceptable to his creative qualities.

"The leadership show" is important for a leader's performance, for the level of interpreting his role. If he fails to project into reality people's general wishes and to keep their interest alive, if he doesn't perfectly play his role, with a stunning maturity, demonstrating special interpretative qualities, then his performance won't last long, and the viewers will keep themselves from attending his next performances.

What represents you as an artist of the stage is not the performance with which you perform the role of the magician, but rather the magic to create a subject of analysis: "What does this mean to you?" which sparks the curiosity and participative side of people.

Once you own the technique of interpreting a role, you will always be able of taking advantage of your craft. Just as a magician, once he learned the secrets of magic, he uses them again and again in his performances, all over the world - so the leader, once he learns the way of playing his role, he can play it anywhere and anytime. Consider this, if you want to succeed in leadership.

You're an artist, too. You have ideas and skills adequate enough for you to play the role of a "magician". In leadership, the magic with which you play your part can bring you the success you hoped for. For your abilities to be publicly applauded, you must inspire the show sensation to people. Transform yourself into a strong personality, into a director able to polarize the audience interest. Direct a play where you can skillfully play a big role. Prepare a scene where you can shine. And try to profit as much as you can from your craft.

Conclusion: Leadership can sometimes provide a memorable performance. This can be done by a leader, who has adequate skills, abilities and competences, which has the permanent desire to accomplish his art. Once he owns the "technique" of interpreting the role that he imposed himself to play in the "leadership show" he could always benefit from his craft, and he will be publicly applauded.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magician-III.html

The Magician (iv)

On March 23, 2011

Develop those special skills in order to motivate others to see things as you want.

One day, when I was 12, I went in the backyard of my house. I laid on the very fine and soft grass. I dozed off. And suddenly, on my left, a strange noise caught my attention. In only five steps from me, near the fence, I noticed a bag filled with something. I was less concerned about its content, but rather how it got there. I could swear that it was not there ten minutes early. But there was absolutely no one around to be thrown over the fence.

And then I understood. The bag was there before, only I just have not noticed it. The significance of this thing hit me like a thunderbolt. In a moment I discerned a great truth. What has become one of my biggest secret: the idea of illusion is more important than the illusion itself.

The magic was even true. And I have "learned" how to practice it. I have discovered the key. That was merely a subterfuge, a metaphor to which many magicians had appealed. Like that Coleridge's fantasy. A man is dreaming that pervades the heaven and as evidence is given a flower. When he wakes up, the flower is next to him.

The magic is the fantasy or illusion specially created under the impulse of the moment and which becomes apparently reality.

Leadership: Do you succeed in manifesting yourself under the impulse of a false identity in a role play, sometimes at the limit of interpretations that acquire the value of truth?

The twilight falls. The lights had decreased a bit in intensity. The magician had made again his appearance on the stage. He sat before a wooden table that extended on half of the scene's length. Then, he invited a spectator from the audience to join him. Undoubtedly it was the culmination of the performance.

The young spectator at the instigation of the magician had lain on the table. In a moment they hold peace. The magician was approaching him with resolute steps. The boy kept silence felting like a wave of pride, mixed with fear, was embracing him, at the thought that he lies in the center of a total focus.

The magician leaned slightly his head to him as if he had listened carefully to something. Then, slowly, with careful movements of a surgeon removed from a magical box a powder and gave him to smell it. He fastened his eyes with an unnatural glow on a point somewhere above the boy's head and framed some strange words. It was something wizardly in his eyes: something deceptively pushing you to think, to think of magic, to things about you read only in books.

It was a fantasy. The boy felt that he was part of a game. The magician succeeded. He charmed him. Literally. He surrounded him with a hypnotic power until he could no longer move. In an instant, the boy dozed off.

When he woke up from the spell, the magician thanked him for his help and sent him back to his place in the audience. When he reached there the boy stared in awe. On his place was a flower, the same flower which appeared in the dream, while he was asleep.

Truth is the reality that you cannot deny.

Can you tell where leadership begins and ends when reality ends and illusion begins?

The man devoted to his own creation, playing with distinction the repertoire of some less known areas to the general public, is particularly receptive to the attempts of renewing the ranges of emotions that he transmits. In the show that he leads, finds the strength and courage to stimulate the boldest experiences, which if not always lead to the real heights of mastership to shape the reality, have the merit of sincere search for sensational, started from the desire to change a status of things or the mood of the audience.

Leadership starts from there where the artist promotes his "disappearance" and continues there where he determines his "appearance". Leadership ends when things cease to surprise its viewers.

When examining how it works your leadership, have you ever wonder if others see things from your point of view?

To manage to establish a relationship on an emotional level with other people, for networking to be much easier, better and healthier at all the levels, you must convince them that the leadership starts and ends with you. They must feel they are a part of your game, in which, in turn, they have an important role. Literally they have to feel charmed by the image of the game, by its importance, by the thoroughness with which it was done and to wish to attend it, and finally, to be pleasantly surprised of the obtained performances.

Leadership means being willing to use every advantage you have, any stratagem and any way to focus on others. Only then you will they be able to reach them.

Just as a magician realizes in the uttermost his magic numbers and involving the audience in his play and astonishing them with his illusions - so a leader, to win them credibility of people, must throw an absolute bridge with them, involving them carefully in his "show". But for this, the leader needs to cultivate some special personal qualities and use them to persuade people to be influenced by him. He needs to develop those special skills that would lead them to see things as he wants.

Can you create the appearance of a magic with your spell power?

Spell power is related to what you transmit through the illusion called "transfer of personality" when the public strongly watches over you?

The real purpose of a leader is to conclude an unwritten agreement with others regarding the adoption of a common perspective to meet their expectations. Just as a painter sensitizes his viewers through his paintings by creating the impression of natural, so the leader needs to sensitize the people around him by his special qualities and his "spell power" - by creating the appearance of a magic.

You are inventive, innovative, spectacular and especially convincing. That must be people's opinion about you if you want that your "show" of leadership to be considered a complete success. As a leader you must be able to get in people's minds and send them something new to surprise them and that will exceed all their expectations.

Conclusion: The "magic" of a leader lies in his power to convince other people and to get their cooperation in order to achieve that future beneficial to all. In leadership, like a magic show, the effects can be spectacular, but behind these effects stands a colossal working of human resources.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magician-IV.html

The Magician (v)

On March 27, 2011

Performance in leadership is given by what it is beyond you.

We try to see the good side of things, but deep in my heart I was hiding a secret fear. That, I could not succeed to transform myself into an invisible entity.

One of the things that remained in my mind from the beginning of my initiation into magic was that a true artist knows how to direct perfectly his own death, then to "resurrect" and continue his show. This would be and the fundamental test of my completion as a magician - artist, writer and producer in the same time.

I had to disappear, no longer exist, to teleport myself from one place to another, to create a feeling of maximum intensity. Then, to reappear suddenly out of nowhere. For this, I needed to change the perception of reality. I had to create the sensation of an inexplicable phenomenon, of a magical and imponderable universe, of a certain type of energy, which is transforming, which may cross the barriers of time and space. And to continue to exist beyond the boundaries set by humans.

But for this I had to break all the rules of physics and nature. And of life, too.

Leadership: Do you think you can only play a role through what it wants to mean in a context of recognition of one's own value that translates into a mask of the higher self?

The curtain rises. The lights which gave color to the stage color became red as rubies. The show started. The magician had just appeared. He was dressed only in black. He wore a mask to hide his true identity.

When he reached in the middle of the stage, the magician made some strange signs with his hands, then pulled out a bag a handful of pebbles, slightly biggish, and threw it on his left and right. The stones rained with a staccato patter, hypnotic on the wooden floor of the stage, thus weakening the viewer's vigilance. The vibrations and sounds that they emitted were generating of confusion and contradictions: not conveyed a clear message that anyone could catch it, but were distracting public attention from the secret maneuvers.

And everything happened at one time. The magician was not there. He evaporated. Simply. The audiences did not know what to think. They could not distinguish anything. For a second they remained paralyzed. Such an improbable thing it could only be the work of a master of magic.

It was like a game of hide and seek, or more, the hoodmanblind. You turn your head and look in all directions until you lose your own coordinates. Everything gets double and even triple effect. It was a situation hard to follow. The audience did not know what to think. Nobody could see him. The magician could be anywhere on the scene, and nobody knows where.

Recognition of personal value has the main effect of establishing relationships between what is happening within your own "playing field" and what your model to follow supports.

This recognition translates into a mask of the higher self when you approach a performance where "the rules of the game" are clear to everyone, a performance that testifies to the inner power that faces the entire world that could, at any moment, come crashing down upon it.

Can you confer a brighter tint to the leadership by the materialization of your inner world?

I think that's the nature of things as being a leader to be a dominant person, reliable, on which to rely, someone who always should sit at the helm. But that's not enough. A leader must have the ability to manipulate people's emotions and impulses. And more than that, he must have the ability to handle and his own "character" in a constructive and beneficial direction. Also, need to know how to handle his trumps, forces, either higher or lower, in the desired direction, direction that will not cause confusion and contradictions in people's minds, but to arouse their interest.

You will not be able to give a light tint to your leadership if you do not materialize your inner world dominated by thoughts, ideas, feelings, which you create by yourself. Ignore your secret fear from the depths of your heart and do not doubt in your powers. Try to direct perfectly your own "leadership show" Transform yourself in that special person that you want to be with your trumps, your training and the experience that you acquired in time.

The fundamental test of your accomplishment as a leader is to defeat the man behind the magician who makes you leave the show with many questions, that transposes you to another world where everything is possible but unpredictable.

You must challenge this man to take the first step to have the impression that it is his merit to go as far as possible with the talent of bringing the world into the unreal, but then, to interrupt him by tracking the reaching of the state of sensitivity, harmony and illumination that will urge him to step away from the desire to make an impression, the greed to rule the world and feast from the lack of knowledge the others show.

Uunlike the magic show, you should keep in mind that leadership is not a game of hide and seek, or more, the hoodmanblind. For, in the end would be that exactly you to lose your own coordinates and to go in the wrong direction.

On the sea of your fate you should handle the ship with a perfect sense of balance and measure. Do not try to deny what is obvious, and do not try to turn everything into a fiction. But try to present everything in a proper and positive light, without breaking the rules and laws of society and of the leadership.

Performance in leadership is given by what it is beyond you. And beyond you, there are people who follow your performance, and if this does not evoke their emotions and empathy means that you have not played well your role and that the message you sent has not been fully understood. And in this case you need to rethink your strategy of their conviction. Just as a painter enriches the content of his images with new themes - you need to enrich your leadership with new approaches.

It is a real "magic" to reach the peaks of performance together with the people, which means that they have agreed to accompany you, sharing the same values, ideas, principles.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magician-V.html

The Magician (vi)

On March 29, 2011

Look out to penetrate deeper into the minds and hearts of the people, for your leadership to get higher quality valences.

My sister thought of me as a magician. She hoped that one day I will achieve a true miracle or something like that. Only she knew how obsessive I hid my secrets, just how sacredly I kept them only for me, just how seriously I approached them. She knew that I acquired the awareness of a new reality and that I learned to use unexceptionably of those hidden forces of the universe to show to the world unsuspected aspects.

The magic seemed to me challenging, had a particularly effect, an amazing power of persuasion. It was not limited to a certain perspective; I could any time give it a special interpretation, metaphorical, esoteric, more nuanced and richer in meaning. It was like a game of logic, cleverness and hard action, although at first glance seemed simple. It was like a domino game that uses multiple sets of pieces, you arrange them in a certain order and succession, and once an item drops and the other ones collapse one after another.

Magic cause chain reactions, may generate controllable or uncontrollable results. You must be a professional, you need to master well its constituent elements so you can achieve and distribute the best defined illusions and tricks.

Leadership: Does the promoting of your image address a target that distinguishes from the background, with the purpose of causing an impulse or an indirect acceleration of the request for a new "production" of your own?

In the dusk of the hall in the middle of the stage, the show reached its climax. The girl was lying on a table about four feet. He was not scared, but had emotions, and the emotions were influenced by the close presence of the magician who gloated over her trying to bring her in a state of relaxation and confidence. She was troubled by the air of quiet mystery. It seemed that the magician looks at her in some way, as he had wanted to reveal something, a powerful secret, a part of his mystery.

This exchange of glances continued a time. A look with no smile, but hypnotic, one to the other. And, suddenly, everything was bathing in the dark. It was as a separate entity established somehow its residence in her brain and led her to think that she dreams. Her obvious obligation was to accept the dream, just as accepting the fact that she was born. She felt like in the center of a moving circle, which grew on forever, always moving away. All around was like a beautiful song that sounded clear and sweet that you listen again and again until it engulfs your mind and soul.

The girl was under the power of magical forces, of the magician's work, unable to act according to her will. His seemingly supernatural power once again said its word. He was a matchless master of persuasion, of mysteries and ambiguities, of suspense and of the actions dosage in crescendo, of improvisation and metamorphosis.

I think it is unnecessary to add that at the end of that beautiful magic number, the audience was deeply impressed by his performance. The target that distinguished from the background has been the subject of interest that people have sought, the total dose of the theatricality brought about by the growth of suspense and unpredictability, the ability to hide details in the secondary windows of the scene.

The production the magician puts to stage is an artistic work that best defines the concept of "visual representation" of succession of symbols and experiences that produce effects in the consciousness of spectators. While complex transformations, hallucinatory effects or moments of revelation are elements that ensure the interaction between different identities, an interaction in which no one can be certain of the reality of others.

People say "Yes" to your reality?

A true leader is like a magician: manages to create an atmosphere where people will say "Yes", in which they comply with his laws and principles, and to approve unanimously his influence. A competent leader has the environment and the tools in succeeding to carry out the ideas, tasks and plans. His "show" touches the climax only when he manages to control people's emotions and feelings, making them feel at ease.

Can you confer to your leadership an interpretation that strongly shape your identity?

We all think in terms of emotions and feelings. Our mind always relates to what we feel towards a person, compared to one thing or the circumstances in which we are found. What we think and how we react in a given situation depends on what is in our soul, depends on how we perceive the world around. If we feel safe, our mind will create to us a positive image and will signal that everything is okay, will create a state of good feeling, of recreation and amplitude.

Just as flowers need nutrients to grow and to withstand the weather - so people need a good vacant mood to be effective.

Can you pass to them that mental and emotional state of good? Can you transmit to them that state of complete safety and control?

If you want people to say "Yes" to your reality and to accept it fully, you must penetrate into their consciousness, to change their perceptions and behavior, attitudes, expectations, emotions, thoughts, and to open new horizons to them. You can advise them to accept you in their universe, only if you have an amazing power of persuasion. Look out to penetrate deeper into their mind and soul, for your leadership to get higher quality valences.

People are like flowers, if you do not pay attention to them, they will not "flourish" and will never come to "fruition". You must be a professional; you must control well the constitutive elements of your leadership that you can get the best performance.

The best leaders achieve true miracles under the power of a "magical force". The faith in their potential gives them power. They are not limited to a certain perspective, but always confer to their leadership a special interpretation, more nuanced and richer in meaning. In this lies their magic.

Being a skillful magician means to propose to yourself the assumption of hidden meanings to which people have access only by memorizing those unique moments of illusionism that continue to exist even after the show has ended.

All seemingly are related to a miracle, but the miracle often scares. If people feel trapped in a hostile environment that does not agree with them, if they feel that the role you play is null of sincerity, depth and intensity, it means that your leadership is worthless. If you do not manage to enthuse them, to motivate them to participate in your "game", then definitively give up the "show", because you may risk being labeled as a master of disinformation.

Leadership is made up of dominoes, where one wrong move or one unstable "piece" can cause a chain reaction. If the results you get are not favorable to you and other people, or if your vision is not compatible with theirs, or if your attitude is wrong, then everything you've built can collapse piece by piece.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magician-VI.html

The Magician (I)

On April 17, 2010

Manage people's expectations with maximum efficiency, without systematically applying the principles of magic.

A great ambition truly devoured my heart; I wanted to become a magician. Consequently, whenever I went to the movies with my friends, I would disappear. Simply and with no reason. Everything happened very quickly. One moment I was beside them and the next I would disappear.

I used to walk through the movie theater, without being noticed, without awakening suspicions, as if all would be locked into a deep sleep, or as if they were hypnotized, lifeless – they seemed so deepened in trance. Nobody came to look for me, because nobody knew that I disappeared, because everybody believed I was in my seat – always the one at the end. And especially because they were all absorbed by the action of the movie. I learned to hide in the shadow, to use the dark and become an unseen... human being.

Nobody could imagine how many efforts I made to become "invisible". My maneuvers, the steps I made, the measures I took – they matched a burning, young soul. I once even managed to brush off of the movie theater, go home, change my clothes, return at the end of the movie and retake my seat. Nobody noticed the change. These things which are too subtle often go unnoticed.

My friends did not know a lot of things. All sorts of strange things, most of them hard to explain – this made them feel even more unreal. But not for me, because I was their creator.

Leadership: Can your background skills ensure you a significant advantage in relation to a dimension of the variation that has a parallel evolution with the transformation of the concept of "totality"?

There was a moment of silence, during which the spectators watched with eyes filled with uncertainty the stage shrouded in fog. Curls of smoke climbed into the air, gray and perfect, everything was quiet, and yet there was a subtle, mysterious, slippery movement. A small, red ball rolled, banging on the stage floor, thus increasing the mystery and curiosity of the public. It was a sign, a warning. Something was going to happen. But everything had to be different from everything the spectators had imagined.

The magician was there, on stage, right in front of the spectators. But nobody could see him. Because everyone's attention was focused on the ball, because all eyes continued to seek a certain spot of the scene. But also because there was a lot of fog and more shadows were somehow created in all that fog. And only one was the magician's.

It was the exactly same principle that he long ago used in the movie theater, only this time the public attention was focused to a spot he wanted, associated with the scene folded in mist. The magician could move from side to side of the stage, miraculously, without being observed, he could change his clothes, quickly make his montages, freely apply his tricks – While people's attention was distracted.

Totality is what enters my field of action, a chaining of things known, "mounted" according to the rules of a complex show, with the content decorations, sounds, smells, costumes, characters, special effects and gestures spiced with gestures and role playing, incredible arrangements, which enter the unique composition of the image of performance.

Leadership: Have you reached the level of 100% performance so you can consider yourself: "The Master of the show"?

The leader is an amazing person, who succeeds with remarkable ease to break into people's minds. His power is so visible in everybody's eyes that they all perceive him as a magician. But he has this repressed will to impose himself to others. And he is enviable in this matter.

People look with an expression of perfect adoration at the one who, picking up all the feelings raised on their faces, guesses all the wishes and aspirations and manages to meet them. But for that, he, the leader, must act in accordance with his own responsabilities and could not at all be uncertain or confusing, like a magician.

Ideally, a successful organization must have a leader capable to understand people, to simultaneously manage their expectations, to bring them up to the point where the question: "Is this real?" disappears from their minds. But it is hard to imagine someone would get to this level without being a magician, at the same time, because only a magician is able to best distinguish the real from the unreal.

Performance is what you get after the show ends. You can get applause or criticism based on the amount of the effect of amazement you generate.

Leadership: Do you increase the responsiveness of people while taking into account the laws of "appearance and disappearance" that you propose as an absolute model to follow?

People are easy to influence if their attentions is distracted. In every illusionism show, the spectators understand and not really what is happening; they are bewildered by the mysterious atmosphere created by the magician. In fact, what the magician does is to juggle with multiple simultaneous tasks – the stage play, the interpretation of lines with great persuasion and calm, etc, in order to compel people to accept his own reality.

But there is a basic rule in magic, as in leadership: never conflict with people. As a leader, or as a magician, if you break this rule, you will fail. Therefore, you have to do all in your power for the show you perform to turn out well. If you're a magician or an unexperienced leader, the show will go wrong.

Taking positions based on the power of domination has as its fueling source the laws of appearance and disappearance that you propose as an absolute model to follow. Disappearance is what prolongs through what goes on in the background. Appearance – what is seen and experience, or what remains after illusions have dissipated and truths have been found out.

Conclusion: Leadership is a show that you organize alone, on your responsibility and ability. But it is a semblance of magic. Reality resembles leadership: you can't systematically apply "the principles of magic" – to divert people's attention and deceive them.

People's attention and insight can be diminished for a limited time, and when they "discover" your tricks... you can say goodbye to your leadership.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magician.html

The Magician's Dance (II)

On April 13, 2010

Maintain yourself at the height of your own performances, enhancing as much as possible that part of your potential to be superior to others and to your own being.

The steps start to fly on the rhythms of the song. Proving that he is a weak and clumsy character, Diego manages to get out from the sight of the ruthless colonel Huerta, making him to believe that he is the one leading the dance, following his tempo and letting him take the initiative. Then, undeniably proving an exemplary psychological craft, he dresses his character with a sort of magical aura, strengthening his authority by the mystery's suggestion. Becomes: Zorro.

Dressed all in black, like a hero of Alexandre Dumas, and hiding his face behind a mask, he guides his steps towards another type of dance, a dance which magnetizes heaps of people, a passionate, fast and fascinating dance, played with ample and dashing movements, with ups and downs, breaking of rhythm, a dance defined by vigor and agility, which raises tension among spectators and accentuates its strong temper.

What a boom, what a frenetic enthusiasm ! The faith in the magic of his character, in his power to fascinate, becomes some sort of achievement, of blessing, and he is seen like a saint, the long- awaited savior. When he, Zorro, turns up, the grateful people, with pride and respect, cease all their activities just to admire the show he offers. Nobody ever achieved success so quickly and startlingly. Everybody is, with one voice and decidedly, for their savior.

Leadership: Can you give a deeper meaning to your actions by accepting the fact that someone else's image represents more than your abilities?

Only one man contemplates from a distance, with immovable distrust, all this magic tumult: Colonel Huerta. Who is Zorro? Who is this dangerous apparition? Who has the courage to enlighten people's mind? What triggers this savior, whipped from his bed like a winged angel, above all dangers? But – fierce fatality ! Zorro is the governor himself, the sad and lonely buffoon, always consumed of his own inability to manifest his will.

Overwhelmed by anger after learning the truth, eager as people when are led by their own interests, Huerta tries to kill Zorro in order to prove his supremacy once and for all. The scene evolves in front of all the local people. This last dance, in which the forces of good battle against the forces of evil, will decide the winner. The battle heats up. And, in the end, good triumphs.

To give a deeper meaning to your actions, once you went through all the stages of assessing previously attained results, means to introduce a differentiation in terms of emotional experiences between the hypothesis of resorting to a fictitious identity of a famous man and the fraudulent use of the identity of another person, only to build yourself a positive self-image.

Does your leadership negatively oscillate between exploring your potential of being superior and the confrontation with yourself?

Throwing forward a whole arsenal of moves, techniques and positions in an exceptional dance and theater representation, in order to get the best results, reveals both the defect that can ruin you (the addiction of being in the foreground) and the quality that can enrich you (the addiction of feeling valuable).

Leadership is negatively affected by your performance when determinism-like events become uncontrollable, they sneak up on you and you must let yourself be overwhelmed by the fact that what can stop you from your thrill is nothing other than the fear of "what others could say" if they would find out who you truly are.

If you don't want leadership to negatively oscillate between exploring your potential of being superior and the confrontation with yourself, then personalize your inner guide by breaking the link between your superior and your inferior self. The first brings you up, but also brings you down; the second only admits reason and does not ensure you the participation in the show to promote your own value.

It's a certainty. Without having a high-profile supporter, such as the power to resist an authority that refuses to align to your beliefs, the act itself – the dance among the fortresses of attention, among hard to reach goals and objectives, obligations and performances armored by great value, you will become just a facilitator of accession to the loneliness of high altitude.

However, by improvising your own laws of building the scene of the show on the dance steps of appearances and effects of shadow, that you are directly responsible of, you will be able to ensure yourself protection against your own weaknesses.

Leadership: Does the desire to Zoom on your becoming come from the area of guiding representations of restrictive principles, even under conditions of "low visibility"?

Leadership is not a dance for two people being in the same position as enemies. Two leaders cannot dance together the same waltz, in the same show and, at the same time, to come out both of them on the first place. One of them must lose, one of them must be disqualified. Therefore, the more the "dancing" style of one leader is better, the more he gains more supporters and admirers, to the detriment of the other, the weaker one.

Leadership is a competition where every powerful man wants to take the first place. In order to build a strong foundation for your power, you must hide your intentions and guess the next step of your opponent. Try to anticipate the obstacles from a distance, build a successful strategy and wisely make free use of de advantage of time.

Low Visibility, from the multitude of variants that favor unforeseen situations, has as a trigger your own promotion to the world under another identity in order to facilitate greater integration of the impact of your interventions on the lives of others. It is presented as follows: "Be always in sight, without displaying your status of power and authority."

The only way to defeat a wicked enemy is to be more cunning than him. This is the reality you must accept: in leadership, you are either strong or you are weak. And being strong means taking advantage of both force and stratagem, regardless if you are on the side of Good or on the side of Evil.

However, principles are stronger than intrigues, reversals of situation, diversion maneuvers or power plays. Thus, you will need to look at the factors that make it easier for you to respond in the sense of the message you take out into the world, vis-à-vis what you want to do in a context of the type: "Do not let yourself be caught up by the shape and appearance of a challenge."

The real purpose you need to assume is that of searching for the meaning of experiences and events that force you to promote a true and fair image of yourself through situations in which you feel valuable.

Conclusion: As a wise leader, you must foresee the unseen and unknown side of things, respectively of your enemies. Reality is not always what is visibly displayed in everybody's view. There are always well-hidden parts which you must discover, those mostly being the ace from your own sleeve.

In order to increase to the maximum your leadership potential, first you should provide it with immunity. How? By creating a "dance" of leadership as special and successful !

 Note: Zorro (1975)

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magicians-dance-II.html

The Magician's Dance (I)

On April 13, 2010

Develop your leadership towards what you want to become, by entering into relationship with the defining authority that has the power to control the particular.

Finally, after several years, they met again. Miquel had just been named governor in the New Aragon, a new province, in which he had to know how to lead, while Don Diego de la Vega, his steady friend, became an exceptional swordsman, probably the best in the world.

Miquel had big plans, he dreamed of building a new world, based on justice and equity. However, all his dreams were shattered when, in the very night they met again, he was attacked by Colonel Huerta's assassins, a corrupt and unscrupulous man, who wanted to lead the New Aragon at all costs.

Diego did not have the time to save his friend, but before he gave his last breath, Diego swore to him that he would fulfill all the principles and ideals he believed in. So he housed his personality under a pseudonym: Zorro.

Leadership: Do you assume the compromise in determining the personality characteristics that you are handling, showing yourself limited and deficient precisely in what it means from the perspective of a widening of influence?

So said, so done. Just like a fine psychologist, using his friend's name and title, Diego declares himself governor, as soon as he arrives in New Aragon. And in order to remove any suspicion and to avoid any possible conspiracy for murder, he disguises as a very sensible, always stumbly and overly fearful and emotional man, displaying an unwanted clumsiness everywhere he went.

The thrill of the first dance. Just like a beginner dancer in passo doble who picks up his first and truly troublesome steps with a ridiculous clumsiness, and slowly, timidly and inattentively executes all the moves, Diego, wherever he would be, almost constantly, asks for precise directions, always in need of guidance, he moves people to laughter or tears through his uncontrolled and uncertain attitude, thus becoming for everyone at the Court a novice, incapable and uninteresting character.

Just as he well planned, Diego rather looks like a buffoon trying to entertain people, and under no circumstance, an avenger with his sword out. But, indirectly, this entire game was aimed at expanding its area of influence, Zorro first earned his reputation by exploiting the weakness he showed to the world, the by ensuring the condition of originality in imposing his own rules.

Leadership: Do you find yourself trapped within a fairly narrow space for handling your role?

If an action thinking and planning core is bombarded by a lot of difficult, but at the same time interesting constraints and challenges, the only way to cope is by locking yourself outside your safety zone. Or, in other words, by manifesting that high virtue named by the Romanian writer Nicolae Iorga: "the ability to get out of curfew".

Leadership can constitute only with great exceptions a model of solidarity and cooperation in a strongly competitive environment, if you are trapped within a fairly narrow space for handling your role. On the contrary, leadership rather seems reordered and newly refined over a varied context of situations and experiences, expressed through a thinking structure that places man in many instances.

The role you assume must be an extension of the need to not give up in the fight with yourself when there are imposed upon you these risk limits calculated by the rule: "it is easier to accept the wickedness of others, than it is to impose your kindness."

Leadership: How do you manifest your "particular" in the game of personality changes?

One of the leader's facets is that of "dancer-actor", getting into the role of he who leave his mark in a pleasant way, making easily noticed in the process of his own laws of operation.

Such a man uses the probability of "appearance" and the corresponding impact on the objectives, looking for balance in the absence of his limits, risking his life before an enormous power. The power to face an oppressive authority, with a negative connotation, called "predestination", more through the deep exploration of the „particular".

The particular is what remains after crossing an area populated with limits. Is the result of what you do with every step of the construction of new identities and new styles of leadership (based on jumps, turns, pirouettes, combination of skills, change of scenarios, complex schemes of action and hidden agendas). And it will depend to some extent to the special game in front of you: the game of personality changes.

Leadership is a mind and thinking game towards what you want to become, which you can skilfully enter into your book of life and accomplishments, where you are the main player.

The magician's dance expresses what you want to be in accordance with leadership, entering into relationship with a defining authority. This authority, coinciding with the degree of responsibility that you assume, must always give you obedience and, especially, have suspending or limiting power of others' access in your own space for progress on the path of self-transformation.

 Note: Zorro (1975)

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magicians-dance.html

The Magician's Game

On November 07, 2010

Accelerate the progress of your influence, finding that unusual way to awaken the noblest feelings in people.

The Count of Monte Cristo promised his friend, Maximilien, that he will make him the happiest man in the world if the had the strength to wait a month. But Maximilien was firmly convinced that his beloved Valentine had died. Time passed and he had lost all hope to see her again. Nobody could give him back his happiness, not even the count. That's why he wanted to end his life. He only hoped for Monte Cristo to ease his death.

- Listen to me, Count, just like a man who speaks with his finger aiming to the ground and his eyes stretched skyward is listened to: I came here to die in the arms of a friend. You, Count, who gave me your word, will gently and tenderly lead me to the gates of death, isn't that right? I feel like I had reached the end of my road and I won't go further. You told me to wait and hope... You know what you did, you miserable and wise man? I waited for a month, meaning I suffered for a month ! I trusted you. I hoped ! I expected... what for? I don't know. Something unknown, absurd, foolish ! A wonder... Which one? Yes, I waited. But in vain. Only to prolong my agony.

Maximilien uttered these words with a burst of energy that made the Count startle. Monte Cristo got up, removed from a carefully locked closet a small silver case, which contained a greasy and half-solid substance. Then, with a silver spoon, he took a drop of that green substance and gave it to Maximilien.

Leadership: Can you demonstrate the obvious connection between the existence of forms of belief and forms of protest regarding the "inadmissible", offering the opportunity to open a path to everything that manifests itself in other ways of dealing with reality?

Slowly, without reluctance, Maximilien swallowed the mysterious substance that Monte Cristo gave him. An endless pain seized him. He felt as if he was dying. He dropped in the arm chair. A smooth heaviness sneaked into his veins. His languid eyes shut unwillingly: and yet, behind his eyelids, an image that he recognized was getting about, although he believed himself shrouded in darkness.

A sensational and explosive appearance. The Count opened a door. Instantly, a great light spread in the room. Maximilien then saw a very beautiful woman standing in the door. Like an angel, she walked towards him with her hands clasped and a smile on her lips. It was Valentine.

Then, the Count, clearly surprised by their joy, said to them :

- Without me, you would have both died. I render you to each other. From now on, you will no longer have to be separated as long as you both shall live. May God take account of these two lives I have saved.

Leadership: Can you demonstrate an impossible effect by conditioning the very creation of a situation-suggestion?

A situation-suggestion, which makes it easier to respond to requests of fiction, is based on the condition of a change of approach to reality in an experience that becomes unforgettable.

A true magician manages, paradoxically, by his magical power, to move people to the bottom of their beings. He manages to awaken in them, in a very special manner, strong feelings of joy and happiness. He manages to produce some beneficial, unexpected effects on them.

In order to become a consummate leader, you must give the impression that you are a magician, to become a person who has the power to accomplish the impossible, a person who, with a remarkable artistic subtlety, with a spectacular directorial subtlety, worthy of a great psychologist, manages to demonstrate an impossible effect. So that people would feel a sense of relief, a real and uplifting relief.

As a leader, you must be ready to release people of any burden, to enlighten them, to comfort their every pain, to heal all their wounds, if possible. You have to be interested in each of them and convey them a tremendous hope. The more the effect you produced on them is surprisingly and extraordinarily accomplished, the more profound their feeling of happiness will be.

Every time a magician creates an illusion, he brings the show to the climax, so people then become fully impressed. He is able to arouse in people a whirlwind of emotions – a trait characteristic to a magician, to seduce them through causing them to grant him an incredible value, thus making himself a glorious title.

Leadership: Do things begin to take life around you, convinced that life has value only if you serve a higher cause?

A leader always plays a big role. He often plays the role of the magician, who must prove his power and emphasize all his qualities, appealing to stunning, miraculous effects. But he especially must prove that, following him, anything is possible and that his presence is necessary -because he has a positive influence.

Things start to come alive with a leader. You can also be a "Monte Cristo" and render people the state of joy in a very special manner, help them live fully positive, uplifting feelings, and they, as a reward, confident of your abilities, your superiority and feeling the love you share them, may lift their hearts towards you.

Just like a magician, a leader, through his style or manner of solving problems, will manage to arouse people's emotions, to awaken them feelings.

A higher cause that you serve must be regarded as a reservoir of accumulated knowledge, because it allows you to accurately reconstruct the sequences of the past and use them in situations where you're at the limit.

The Magician's Game, which takes place on a higher plane, inspires you, makes you live. In the game the magician creates, you can see his talent and how much heart he puts into his shows.

A leader's "game" is much alike that of a magician's. It's based on trust and emotional strength, but also on strategy. And strategies mustn't be left for chance, for they will cause confusion and bewilderment.

* Note: Alexandre Dumas - The Count of Monte Cristo, Youth Publishing House, 1957.

The Magician's Supremacy

On August 08, 2010

Impose to people your ideas and beliefs, without creating a disharmony between the root-model of your leadership and the model of personality that you want to highlight.

The emotion felt that night can never be erased from my memory. I was scared in that dark chamber; I felt a fear of death inside me. On the stage, through the gray smoke, you could only see the magician's silhouette, dressed in a black robe. When I took a better look at him, I saw he was wearing a mask that only covered half of his face, black as well – a mask of anguish or joy, which was haunted indiscriminately either by smiles, grins of pain, intense joy, either by a wave of melancholy. Faces created by his own emotions, his own free will, his own laws.

I tried to see his eyes through the mask, that mask of appearance. I could argue with anyone who would have said that his face was happy, sad or angry. Everything realistic and rational about him was overshadowed, deliberately hidden. He was the king of the show, the meeting point of all mysteries, and the mask helped him conceal reality. I was convinced that it was something fictional, that he created his own unreal world. I could look at him, but I could not guess his thoughts.

At a certain moment, the magician uttered aloud, on a firm, stern tone, some strange, obscure words. I was listening. He spoke very rarely, but his mysterious words, through the silence, stirred me harder than all the rest. Through the multitude of words he uttered, some sounded louder. Then I felt that the room became even darker. He spoke like a judge of the highest authority who, without justifying his sentence, condemned to death those who have violated the laws of existence. Or like a madman who boldly put into his head to change these laws.

Leadership: Does the understanding of your role in a moment of great tension change definitively along with the succession of possession acts of the real?

His figure constantly kept coming back under various looks. In every show, another mask, another role, another scenario. He sometimes wanted to look happy, sometimes sad, sometimes funny, sometimes tragic, but, most of the times, terrifying. I remember that, at the beginning of that show, in order to cause the feeling of fear, he created a shocking "picture", recalling the frightful way in which Jupiter shot down the titans rebelled against his rule, crushing them under the mountains. Then, he did his relatively scary trick, the one with the knives.

But what was actually hiding under his masks, what seemed to be a fake identity, was nothing but a disguised ambition, heading towards higher interests, known only by him. And for this, he applied a single way of thinking, the same in each show. Where can I win? Where can I lose? What are the best tricks and what are the weakest? What more does the public want? Like any true magician, he had his own testing and control tool, which helped him clearly and measurably improve his results.

Leadership: Do you identify your authenticity in a disguised ambition that reaches towards an understanding extended beyond the meeting point of all enigmas?

Although the support of the practical value resulted from the elements of the science you personally represent is impressive, it's no less easier to prove. A scientific approach is, in fact, not connected, either with the combination of elements it contains, or with the certainty it offers, but with their inspirational equivalent, with that organized assembly of abstractions, unknowns, causative concepts by which the ideal of an ace is achieved in a field.

To be an ace in the magic field means to continue existing, even if nobody sees you, yet to be the center of attention. To be an ace means to be aware you're hiding everything realistic and rational, with the purpose of reaching a plenitude of meaning for the newly created image you want to represent.

The meeting point of all enigmas, bearing in mind a movement that repeats itself differently in an abundance of effects accompanied and rhythmically intersected by an entirely original script, derives from a whole set of rules, patterns, schemes to create seductive realities by conjugation calculated between erudition, intuition and interpretative force, due to the necessity of representing arbitrary relations between different objects, phenomena and manifestations, respectively the interconnections between them.

This too is some kind of esoteric wisdom that still needs to be chiseled in order to strengthen the mysterious bridge between your true identity and the characters you interpret. Decisive, above all else, is the confusing overthrow of the reference points you use to divert the attention of those around.

The people who know to reinvent themselves are guided by the following perception: „Beyond the role, there's you". This connection between more realities, characters, transfigurations, has a deep adherence which would make variations, from an organizational point of view around a fundamental valuable idea, in the value of what you discover when you are no more your true self. Ideas like „man can hide from a lot of things, but not from himself."

You are valuable not as much for knowing how to juggle behaviors and attitudes, but for managing to distinguish what is important from what is secondary, what is inherent from what is alien to yourself.

Authenticity is the value gained by the experiential union of the challenge of reinventing yourself and of the novelty emerging from the desire to continuously produce the reality with which you operate and the events you are experiencing.

The fantastic rise of a leader. In order to increase your power of influence, you must be, in some respects, a magician, to create your own magic show, which you should lead mostly by yourself. You must own that force which influences people; to create a bridge between your soul and theirs, a bridge between fantasy and reality, a bridge through which you can always win them by your side. The ability to masterly project your beliefs and wishes to those around you is crucial in your success as a leader.

Even so, people must see in order to believe. If you appear under several identities in the show you are performing, people will never know what to believe. Always assuming a new expression, a new physiognomy, a new identity in order to appear someone else in the eyes of others and be believed will not bring you success in leadership. At least not for a long time.

The mask you are wearing represents the face that you are showing to the world at any moment. If you show to people an inappropriate face or one that does not meet their wishes, they will no longer be able to distinguish the unreal from the real, yet more the unreal will begin to seem more real to them. Do you have that fantastic ability to shape and continually produce the reality you are facing?

Just as the duty of an arbitrator is to require compliance with the regulation in his letter and spirit, so it is up to your duty to require from people specific ideas and beliefs in your letter and spirit, without creating a disharmony between the root-model of your leadership and the model of personality that you want to highlight.

Before building and spreading magic, try to consider the effect of a state of temporary inhibition due to the altering of reality.

For, as somebody else mentioned on the internet: "Inhibition is often a barrier in the face of the artistic act. Gestures can be uncontrollable, mimic and body language can be ridiculous and uncontrollable."

Conclusion: The supremacy of the leader is similar to the one of a skilled magician, wearing "the appropriate mask" in the appropriate situations. However, this does not mean playing and creating transitory illusions because, in the best case, you will not be credible, and in the worst, you will be considered a shammer, which will be immediately removed from his position as a leader or even from within the collective.

Do you put the appropriate mask in the appropriate circumstances? Are they providing to you a more power of influence? Do you have the power to inspire confidence in people always falsifying the reality? Are you willing to pay the price of the art to lead, always highlighting your true character? Are you a master on all and above all only when you have all the aces in your sleeve?

Are you continuously striving to improve yourself and to you use your full potential of an empathic person who always communicates his feelings? Or you have self-disciplined yourself to influence people through the lack of empathy, hiding your true nature?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magicians-supremacy.html

The Magician's Triumph

On December 31, 2009

Take full advantage of your potential of leadership, without getting away from reality that others perceive.

The show was almost ending. The light that bathed the stage became blood-red, and started to lose more and more of its intensity. I knew something big was about to happen. The drums quieted down their beats. A deathlike silence spread into the bumper. Furthermore, an inscrutable, thick gloom. The audience was struck with a well-pleasing fear.

Suddenly, there were heard steps. Somewhere in the left of the stage, a vague shadow was spotted, slightly changing its position. In the next moment, I thought it could be only him, the creator of illusions. I was right. The magician came out again in a special suit, wearing a mask, emanating a special touch and creating a very mysterious atmosphere. After getting at the centre of the stage, he said some strange words on a pompous tone: "Acta est fabula ! " He actually wanted to say: "The play was staged. I decided to show you who I am."

He quietly got near the spectators. He was staring in the dark, like everything was normal, like he could clearly distinguish everybody. I started to believe that, finally I would have the chance to find out what lies under his mask.

Leadership: Do you always take advantage from your craft in terms of interpreting a role that represents you in an editing type image?

The magician was preparing to take off the mask of his face. Everybody was stunned by his decision to reveal himself, to show us his true face, especially since at his previous performances he promised solemnly that never and no one will ever find out what lies behind the mask, the one who he really is. The magician sheltered a lot of deepness and, behind his lovely Venetian style mask, his real force most certainly nestled. The mystery he shed was creating a strange sensation both on me and on the other viewers.

The truth behind the truth. The long-awaited moment arrived. The magician took off his mask. However, great was our surprise when we noticed that behind that mask, there was another mask. Once more, another game, another challenge, another mystery. Awakened from an illusion, we gave ourselves up to another one. Only then I realized nobody would be able to control reality better than him, the Magician, The Creator of illusions. As the main performer of the show, he is entitled to make us accept his own reality. A reality that, like it or not, even if we do not understand it, we must all, by all means, to accept it.

And then I also realized that by no means, a faultless magician would never take off his masks, which he always wears in his shows, but he will always maintain his mystery in order to maintain and increase everyone's curiosity, because his persuasiveness and dominance would linger in his shows. Mystery is the factor that will always be persistent in his performances. It would have clearly been a recklessness to reveal his true identity.

Here lies the triumph of a magician, in the mystery he hides and leaves behind him. In his symbols, in the illusions he creates, in his unknown identity, and especially his secret, strongly guarded tricks.

An "editing" type image is adjacent to the entrance to a world that does not belong to any of the spectators, it is a great summary of intrigue often fraught with the tension of possible unanswered questions, keeping the audience suspenseful through the scenario conceived at the limit between the real and the fantastic. The magician is a man who knows how to turn into a character that has never existed, mysterious and at the same time feared.

Authenticity means to properly mark the moment of high expressive load through an artistic act called "alternating between the rigorous display of an effect of something unreal and the effect of a completely unknown reality".

What matters in leadership, in terms of size of values and functional parameters, is the relevant aspect of the composition it is "manufactured" from. A composition that would fit as well as possible the basic elements: approach, maintaining attention, removing risks, systematic thinking and depth in the message sent. To these elements, we also add the appeal of those evaluating you as factor of modeling and maintaining the harmonizing effect.

The evaluators, people who test your actions and assess extremely well your qualification and value, especially retain the superficial aspects which do not reflect performance, or the profound aspects, that arouse interest, differentiating yourself from other candidates to leadership. They remember the gestures and attitudes that help increase your ranking and reputation, attributing your leadership a special significance or labeling it as a show of bad taste.

But nothing from the irresistible charm that makes you admired, nothing from the unique experience that comes from the impact with true art can clearly identify you as a master, from the impact with your own creation which can be assigned ideal qualities cannot be obtained on a level with a rudimentary copy made on an industrial scale.

Like magic, leadership imposes a different reality that strongly envelops people, inducing them a certain state of mind, tempting them to fall into a certain dependency. Otherwise, they will come to refer to the art you make through an altered copy when it comes to its content.

Leadership can be seen as a magic that is only waiting for you to discover it. It can be regarded as a single product made in limited series. And if you want your leadership not to appear as degenerate or harmful, you must accept "orders" only for customized products according to people's desires and needs. You must create a unique show, to come closer to an art employed to serve as an unavoidable benchmark than an exact science that has no affinity with people's interests and desired pattern.

Leadership: Do you persuade people to see things in their true extent or as you wish to see them?

A great leader knows he could own absolute power only if he could manage to control the reality around him. And if he fails, he must convince people that he is the one controlling it. Totally. A leader can impose his supremacy only if he is able to cause people to believe he owns the absolute control on every situation. On all the events, desired or not. On every change. At any time. The people he leads must see things not in their true nature, but rather at his choice.

If people believe in him and follow him, then he could call himself, in all reason, a great leader. Because only a great leader can manage his subordinates: through unprecedented ideas and views, a win-win attitude, very clear argumentations, encouraging speeches, personal style, new approaches, his unique and viable vision.

A leader shares common beliefs with a magician, but is different from him because he does not create illusions, but stands upon reality and practical examples. From the perspective of a "viewer", of a man uninvolved in the work of a leader, he can be regarded, in a simplistic manner, as a magician. And "the magician's triumph" hides a lot of work, ability, qualification and professionalism, as well as well kept secrets.

Take full advantage of your potential of leadership, without getting away from reality that others perceive.

Leadership is the magic born of a reality that is sometimes so difficult for us to accept.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magicians-triumph.html

The Magnificent Transfer Of Personality Of The Artists Of Genius

On December 24, 2012

Stage a performance of big-time leadership, without losing of sight who you really are.

It was a kind of manifestation of his will, more and more fertile, an excrescence in his functioning area, a strong pivot that penetrated indistinctly, deep and thoroughly in the deepest fibers of his being. An Alter-Ego, a triggering element, a great appropriation, an absolute detachment of any connection with the known interpretations of reality and acceptability, meant to initiate his magnificent transformation, gave him the impetus to achieve the high and difficult standards of Gattaca.

- I, Jerome Morrow was not destined to be the second on the podium. With everything I had, I was still in second place. I ! How can you imagine that you will succeed, you, Vincent Freeman? exclaimed the cripple from the wheelchair.

These shocking words, still accompanied by a shred of sense, were enough to cause an earthquake, but one that really shook the whole Vincent's fabric of support, the hardly accessible cave where hibernated soundless the most valuable attributes. An acceleration of rhythm, as an amplification of the blood flow in a cerebral vessel.

Through a renewal of the spirit, through a transfer of personality, through a short-term lending of the most subtle qualities - but crucial, Vincent, the man who was destined to fail, takes the place of Jerome.

However, the crust covering his inner lava was hard to crack. In a barely perceptible extent, the beginner proved to be essentially the imitator, not and an original, not a clever innovator that cuts his path through the crowd, continuing to be step by step ahead of other competitors. Fiat voluntas tua, Deus Meus !

Leadership: Do you negotiate your winning posture under the impression of a mirror image as coming from experiencing a unique moment of creating an unexpected authority built under the pressure of a reality that is almost impossible to change?

To live your miracle, to reach your goal by being someone else, calling on the set of qualities that characterize your desire, your sense of superiority, is a true renaissance in the will, faith and harmony. An alter ego opposite to the visible one. However, a false transposition by which you hope to become une autre personne, is nothing else but a travesty, and not at all a metamorphosis.

However, this constraint in the combination with an Alter Ego, in certain circumstances, it may prove to be the huge secret of victory, through a conversion of the personality !

The thundering show of the transvestites. A double play, two main actors, shining one and the same through a grand conquest of something proper, of the whole human universe. Firmly established – in a genius way - in a single role, of exception: "The Magician".

Like some enthusiasts of the new, of discovery, of unconventional, of adrenaline, the two winners rips through spirit and deed, the fragile shell of an imposed identity, which will bestow decisively the content, full of stimulant substance, in a hostile environment.

Vincent Freeman reaches through Jerome Morrow, a first-class navigator, a kind of Robur on board of a Ėpouvante, faced with an impossible mission, overcoming the unknown. Being forced to take advantage of every lucky circumstance, in order to rise up to the upper layers of his own Ego. An artist of the wand - of the spirit, of polishing the personality. And of the effect that colors life.

Leadership: Can you play a double role in the same play without sacrificing the quality of offering the actor what is his, in the sense of a value given to the direct relationship between two characters with the same affinities, but with different life stories?

In turn, Jerome Morrow reach through Vincent Freeman a gold medal winner, reconditioning the essential power of his being, shedding the limits, violating the harsh conditions imposed by the life's fierce court of law. An artist par excellence, a high-class magician whose magnificent trick thunderstruck his toughest fan, but also the most undeserved: relentless destiny.

Does something mechanical pushes you with determination, constraining, beyond the limits accepted by society? Are you trying to divert the harsh laws that govern life? For what purpose? Is it for the purpose of the success to be better than you have been given?

The excellence in leadership involves the willingness to induce beneficial changes in your own "Ego" in the way of thinking and action. And presupposes the exacerbation of your own claims across the proposed "terminus point" but also the ongoing assessment of the effects of these transformations. The difficult access to that world which the leader, the artist within you, it creates, without being disturbed by reality.

To play a dual role in a play, in which the script is written by the hostile hand of fate, means to risk losing yourself on the accords of a choreography that represent you in a typically vulnerable position, with some weaknesses: you become one with the character you only understood at the end.

A beneficial change, a step ahead towards the much desired excellence, concomitantly a heavy and a categorical self-abandonment, cold and hard as a millstone, it is rarely possible. Only you know what and how much you can carry in the back, only you know by what you hit bearing the burden of a decisive transformation. Just as the lyrics from "Concrete Angel" of Martina McBride tell: "It's hard to see the pain behind the mask / Bearing the burden of a secret storm. / Sometimes she wishes she was never born."

Conscience always requires you to remember the limits you hold within yourself, consistent with the prerequisites of obtaining a final that is not always the one you want.

Do you have the courage to change your identity, to renew your spirit through a transfer of personality? But the question that may arise in some hearts is: "How long could you remain someone else than who you really are?"

Like an illusionist who transforms his magic in a unique way, many times the man heading towards success turns his creative energies into a highly effective way, then uniting them into a single point and heading straight to that point, without looking neither to the right nor left.

But an alter ego opposite to the visible one, a false metamorphosis by which he loses himself. Obtaining an appearance of being someone else, means nothing but a travesty of short term, an incredible journey into an adventure where the reality and magic merges, and whose stake is your own Ego.

How will you cope when you will reach the proposed "terminus point", as a ratio of forces between inputs and outputs?

The battle is fought between the two sides, between the two forces of energy, of which result depends the survival of your own "Ego". Your ability to become one with your consciousness, the exclusive opportunity to get access to the essence of your own self, to the truth of your being, to what is sustainable, depends on how you handle it when you reach the proposed "terminus point".

Will its touch be sufficient to produce a spiritual "cleaning" a new dimensioning of the horizons, a clarification of your own needs?

For once you have reached the top of the mountain, by detour ways, there is no other direction than downwards, following exactly the same ways. You cannot do anything but to strive descending. And the descent is always more difficult than the ascent, and it is even more difficult the more you fight against the transformation – to the return to who you really are. The more you oppose resistance to the reality of being who you really are, the more you risk descending even harder, and the more exists the risk of you losing yourself completely.

Input is the lucky number promising success in the implementation of plans, highlighted by two qualities: courage and determination. Output is your reaction to achieving the goal, it is the main purpose of the personal approach to the "particular context of a cause that conscience absolves of any blame".

The true measure of the talent of being an artist is the recognition of a finality that ends an existence marked by an exception, in which man finally sees his dream fulfilled through the eyes of a character played with great devotion.

The magnificent transfer of personality of the artists of genius highlights the constant struggle in order to increase your performance. A mystery of the excellence, an impulse of success, but a necessary right or a sin?

Know your limits, know your potential, and do not soar into an adventure in which you must fight the impossible unless you are made of a hard and a highly elastic material. The magnificent metamorphosis of your personality belongs only to the artists of genius, not to the dilettante ones.

For from the hard won success, labored with so much sacrifice and hope, and from the long-awaited victory, necessary to obtain excellence, may be born not only satisfaction, but also guilt, regret and pain, or desperation of wanting to be someone else than what you are and what you can be.

And, paraphrasing a famous writer, nothing withers quicker the heart of a man, than the loss of his true identity in the battle with the invincible superiority of fate, this supreme power of all time, which sometimes is defeated by an artist and by thousands of times is kneaded by life.

 Note: "Gattaca (1997)"

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-magnificent-transfer-of-personality-of-the-artists-of-ge

The Maintenance Work

On February 15, 2011

The person who is about to make a professional change must choose the option "be in control of yourself" long before he places himself first and foremost in his vision of the future.

When I was little, my rich father gave me a children's book called Stone Soup, written in 1947 by Marcia Brown and still available in major bookstores. He instructed me to read this book so that I could begin my apprenticeship as a business leader.

My rich father used to tell me: *"The quality of being a leader is the ability to bring out the best in people."*Consequently, he passed on to me the skills needed to be successful in business, financial literacy, marketing, sales, accounting, administration, production and negotiation, each time emphasizing the idea of learning how to work with people and how to lead them. My rich father always said: "Practical business knowledge is easy... the hard part is working with people."

As a reminder, I still read *Stone Soup*to this day because I tend to act like a tyrant, not a leader, when things don't go my way. * (Robert T. Kiyosaki - Money Dial)

Leadership: Can you respond to a broader context of change that accelerates the expansion of your consciousness into an area of decision-making power without prioritizing yourself and your business?

The maintenance of leadership can be put into account of the responsiveness against life requirements and responsiveness to the requirements related to the greatness to actively support the development of other people. This work can be consolidated from the elevation of the experience of a perpetual innovator who brings in the middle of the action the tint of an atmosphere that strengthens the other people's pride to belong to a higher world in a legendary movie.

Because, beyond the justice of any judgments that is the constant need of support and assistance, in the string of hierarchical promotion, putting into service the opportunities for affirmation. That's why Robert T. Kiyosaki used to focus on the "spending column" he had to do to get to a higher place in his career, because his main concern was (at first) the image, the option to make himself noticed, instead of making sure he is liked. In short, beyond the image you aspire to, you have to give your loved ones your desire to develop and become, day by day, the best version of yourself.

Solidarity is a question of the expansion of their conscience up to where you can discover more and more things about you, up to where reverse the tendency of isolation thrown by the involvement in a new business project. And reaching unity.

Leadership: Does your concern for higher performance fit in a broader context of focusing on self-satisfaction activities, without taking into account the "payment" of a performance that compensates for your deficiencies or shortcomings in real time?

Human personality is required to be addressed as an unrepeatable unit among intellectual traits that are found in unbreakable bond with the concrete situation of fronts on which she fights, coupled with the ability to make decisions and assess their impact. A front of denying realities manipulated by foreign forces, an opening of frustration of being dependent on a particular context, a front of the desire to put value in their work and opening the freedom to be dependent on someone else.

You undermine your authority yourself if you fail to respond to the broader context of their own conscience of accelerating expansion into a power of decision area. You must not lose any front, but shine on each of them. If you do not want the leadership to gain valence of decoration, then prove the others that they cannot compete with you on any front, you're a winner in any confrontation.

Determinism is manifested as much more complex in those situations of concern, dependent on the will of others to size the level of influence, when you need to expand in one way or another your performance limits, especially the experience in a field – that you instinctively realize it is unique, unpredictable.

The payment that you have to pay to ensure a benefit that is able to compensate in time for the deficiencies or endowments that you lack, is that self-awareness, that seed that is inexpressible in words, but unchanged throughout life, undertaken by your beliefs about generosity and fairness.

The Maintenance Work is about being honest with yourself when you know you've gone overboard, and you owe it to your conscience to get things right. It is a competition with yourself that you win when you know yourself better through your experiences. It is the relationship you establish with yourself before you get involved in working with the people around you.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-maintenance.html

The Major Result Of Eisenstein's Creation

On August 24, 2014

Use your creative experience in as objective a way as possible, so you can solve the compositional problems of leadership.

The major result of Serghei Eisenstein's creation in "Nevski" remains, obviously, the unity of audio-visual image. In this film, the artist solved a difficult compositional problem, then finding, on its basis, theoretical, the key for the calculated tuning of the musical band with the image band. The horizontality of continuity in music or image, is now tuned vertically as well, by the simultaneity of musical-visual coincidences.

*Eisenstein discovers the method of constructing audio-visual correspondences which he will analyze with priority and will describe it in detail, using for this purpose exactly the experience from the film "Alexandr Nevski". In calculations and schematics drawn with mathematical meticulousness, Eisenstein discovers perfect coincidences, frame by frame and measure by measure, between the visual element and the auditory one. **

Leadership: Can you value the unity of an image that perfectly integrates into a directorial imagination framework, taking as a point of reference the idea of the simultaneity of coincidences between the plans of approach to the artistic act?

Analyzing the proportion between the resources of knowledge and experience, very accessible for the production of a transition towards a new model of leadership, which you can use to achieve a good promotion of your personal vision (and taking into consideration the wealth of ways of tackling it), you can estimate the cumulative effect of change on a professional level. Therefore, the major result of integration approaches of creation in an absolute perfection, worthy of envy, under the action of another proportion between ideality and objectivity, represents a win in the field of productivity, but also a raising of the quality level of your evolution.

The creative experience of a director is closely related to the image he associates with the film script, but in such a way as to convey the continuity of the story with which he himself identifies.

In this case, there is a need for a certain ordering of the compositional material (facts, experiences, events, decorations, costumes, roles, incredible dialogues, realistic characters), but especially a certain amount of time and an imagery sequence to produce the ultimate effect, as explosive as possible. The idea of the simultaneity of coincidences between the plans of approach to the artistic act serves to choose the material that the artist has the freedom to use as he thinks fit, with the condition of studying the character of life and pouring it into the skin of a character full of vitality.

And if we think that the plans of approach to the artistic act are about visuality, symbolism, language, decor, story, and musical background, then the director would be delighted to see everything through a single pair of eyes that perceives everything from outside the illusion that the character sees it as being real due to coincidences between the unfolding of events at the external level and the internal psychic evolutions.

Does your leadership show the advantage of an "entry resistance" that can produces continuity in the process of exploiting creation, in order to obtain compositional benefits?

If you want to measure the progress of personal achievements, performing the analysis of all forms of expression through creation, first measure the pulse of your experience of transition towards certain higher quality standards. Leadership is like a quality amplifier, having the advantage of an "entry resistance" that produces continuity in the process of exploiting creation, through a dynamic of concerns for art and its approaches given by the development of science.

"Entry resistance" supports all those operations of addition, processing, blending, transformation of creative elements (and their eventual correction), performed under the competent guidance of a promoter of science, which do not contradict the functioning conventions of leadership. In this case, leadership, materialized by more solidarity towards the act of creation and by the firm rejection of any prejudices, becomes an indicator of continuity in the rhythm and the whole process of crystallization of a language, character, decor, a role, a vision, a storyline, which are the subject of the artist's claim to rise above the everyday "prose", above the worldly hassle.

Just as a filmmaker discovers perfect coincidences, frame by frame and measure by measure, between the visual element and the auditory one, so too does a mediator of science confers significant facets to his own creation through a blending of experience and know-how. But especially through the method of constructing correspondences between the content of ideas and the effect of using them in the framework of research and training activities.

Leadership is the manifestation of the ability to integrate into the role of a character seen in a "stop-frame" image thought through the perception of perfect coincidence between visual and conceptual, in the evolution of the relationship between what you see on screen and your own life.

The Major Result Of Eisenstein's Creation represents the logical consequence of using experience and development of knowledge in the field, serving both as an instrument of assessing progress, and an instrument of promoting your own identity.

Evolution, by the continuous chiseling of the capacities of integrating thought in the field that defines you, depends on the level you experience – beginner, intermediate or advanced – when you upgrade the facilities of science, used for continuing the effect of domination over processing variants of personal creation.

A field that needs development, such as leadership, will benefit from a high level of orientation through the results obtained due to transitioning creation to a new stage of adaptation, superior to the prior, by the simultaneity of coincidences between its elements of content.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-major-result-of-eisenstein-s-creation.html

The Maker Who Rearranges The Inner World Resources

On August 08, 2013

Promote the authentic character of your own discoveries, establishing a tight bond between the elements of value that support the evolution of your knowledge.

I was living with the results of that extreme experience which made me do laudable efforts for my progress. What I used to appreciate the most was the authentic character of unusual discoveries, through which I succeeded in establishing a connection between past, present and future. And, with an exigency specific to a consumer of science, I was accessing it whenever the imperious need to satisfy my lust for knowledge appeared.

Placed at exactly the right place to make a new beginning blossom, the constant which I managed to identify through my own relation with the great world, represented a set of truths that could be grasped and understood only by the physical mind. However, this was found in the core of all human doings and actions.

And this constant was modified at a fundamental level by the preferential setting of a tight bond between valuable elements, with similar traits, optimized for a certain applicability or for a certain type of development and control. It took some time for me to clarify everything, and position myself in relation with the new reality.

Should I have been concerned by the unique factor of material mutations that favored the changing of values and judgements, exerting a variable pressure upon my conscience, deforming in a great deal the truths with which I battled in my imagination and with those that I was indoctrinated with?

Leadership: Can you dedicate yourself to a creation that forces you to revise your whole life to make sense of a notion or concept, without causing a continuous alteration of your defining functional characteristics?

Inevitably, the complexity of my creation brought with itself apparent contradictions, offering me a completely new experience, an exciting and intense one. From a witness of all the ages of the world I transformed into a maker of my inner world's resources relocation. The concept that my life brought to me was: "Push Up Challenge", that is, I had to learn to combine improvisations of all kinds, signs and interpretations, ideas from nowhere, artifacts of expression and logic, so as to meet the profile of an artist of semiotics who knows how to introduce order in chaos, a balance between unbalanced forces.

Prometheus stole fire from heaven to ensoul man he created, same as God, from the clay of the earth. And the fire from the sky, the force that exceeded the limits of understanding, the energy that I myself accessed by transforming the conscience, through a tiring and continuous focalization of the mind towards everything that was uplifting and sublime, was capable of penetrating the unknown. It could give life to matter, impel me and change my potential.

Be it the rising or the falls of the intensity of the force which connected me to a source of unstabilized inspiration, often helped me discover a new territory of the real, causing a continuous alteration of my defining functional characteristics. These characteristics, which were to be seen as challenges to be overcome, were: curiosity, intuition, vision, abundance of information, the ability to do things differently, the ability to think in-depth and productively.

So as not to disappoint myself by my coming closer to that unknowns of the world, I had to find the integration formula in a phase of development that was not at my imaginary power's discretion. One that could stop the act of constructing the new which made to exist that reality mildly perceived in its essence. In this manner I risked going too deep into "memories from the future", losing myself and staying there.

Are you interested in establishing a better connection with the area called "over the line", or do you keep to traditional methods of building the fundamentals of leadership?

Can you rearrange your inner world so that you don't slip into the unreal? Do you lean towards the highest knowledge? Are you able to establish a connection between past, present and future? Are you at risk of going too deep into "memories from the future", losing yourself and staying there? Under which conditions are you required to stop the process of building the new?

Lacking the depth of thought is the individual that seeks with all his will, in a tendency of blazing ascension, to create new "territorial" structures, that could better outline as time goes on, as spaces of alternative formation and development, that place situated beyond the border with what is possible, beyond its real limits.

On the other hand, I'd congratulate him for daring, supported by an excellent training, visibility and intuition, to broaden his territory of understanding, of imagination and inventiveness, offering a particular color to his science. Analyzing his efficient and tenacious way of operating, focusing our attention on his attributions of controlling and directing science towards outlining and defining the fundamentals of his entire creation, my grade for him would be 10+.

The foundation of leadership that honors a modern concept of semiotics is a reflection on the science of thinking through hard work of meanings and interpretations drawn from the memory of "happenings" and "coincidences" that facilitate the expression of ideas linked in a certain order.

He is approaching leadership through his duty as an explorer who seeks deep inside treasures through the very twisted maze of changes and trends in the plan of adapting science to the increasing complexity of thinking that tends to divide things into separate entities. This "user" of science can more easily create his art from that permanence of thinking in action. This stops the alteration of its defining functional characteristics, establishing a better connection with the area called "over the line".

The line is the demarcation point between the new directions of valorizing the discoveries made, materializing the real efforts to integrate them into the evolution of science, and that power of transformation of the consciousness in a parallel reality.

Can you implement new rules in leadership by introducing new entries in an area far too dominated by the new?

In order to establish if the individual is the protagonist of quality leadership we have to take into account the way in which he promotes the authentic character of his discoveries. And we have to establish a tight bond between the valuable elements that support the evolution of his science.

We must also take into account his own version of truths to which he sizes up to in this whole process of becoming, but also to his own vision regarding the reformation of the future through means of science, towards creating a specific design for this world to which he is invited to offer his contribution.

Make sure you can answer "Yes" to everything regarding the act of creation. But make an effort to integrate a formula of control in your leadership that is not at the discretion of your imaginary power. If you want to implement new leadership rules, try to introduce new entries in the area dominated by the new.

The first rule in leadership: Do not halt the activity of constructing "the new" that makes that reality so little perceived by other people. Be careful, though, not to let yourself sink too deep into the unreal, to get lost and stay there.

The Second Rule In Leadership: "The artist is not satisfied with the inferior order of automatisms, but creates with a considerable effort a living order, his own, seeing through his expression and logic some relation between genius and madness." (Liviu Rusu)

A promoter of the new, who creates apparent contradictions by increasing the complexity of his creation, can gain a completely new experience, an exciting and intense one, confirming his readiness to subordinate to a request that is unilaterally orienting his knowledge conduct, to a self-assessment that can be found at the confluence between genuine personality and the personality projected into the background of an intangible asset called Utopia.

This is why it is important and useful for leadership the capacity to distinguish between the truth which you impose on yourself to force, and the fiction that you assume through the act of discovery-creation. The character and particularities of your science must size up to the leadership that shows veracity and safe functioning.

An area too much dominated by novelty is like the process of finding a quite logical order where others see only a heap of information, knowledge, empirical formulas, connections, contradictions or uncertainties.

The Maker Who Rearranges The Inner World Resources is the man who lives with the results of his personal redefining experience, having as impulse in gaining power that leadership based on innovative ideas and practical applicability. In order for it to have an outstanding impact on its supporters, this leadership must be credible. It also has its limits.

Slipping into the impossible and unbelievable will have opposite effects. "The sleep of reason produces monsters", said Spanish painter Francisco Goya. And, like this, the sleep full of phantasmagorical and unreal dreams creates favourable conditions for the beginning of the end in leadership.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-maker-who-rearranges-the-inner-world-resources.html

The Man And His Deed (II)

On July 20, 2015

Put into service the option of leadership of giving a new measure to the expression of existence and vision, stabilizing the borders between authentic and imaginary.

My words, translated through the relationship with the space of a moment prolonged infinitely, seemed to measure the distance between the real man and some imaginary man downed from the height of subjective expression, but treated with an emotional approach.

For this reason, the trajectory of the man described scientifically, confirmed by an experience that honored the projection of a force of lateral knowledge, amidst a crowd of dependencies at the same time considered as being parts of a reality contained in the outline of an eternal future presence, seemed to draw a separating boundary between me and my deeds.

Of this presence, circumscribed to a reason of whose verdict depended its salvation or destruction, to which was added the obedience full of dignity towards my creation, as if ripped from a surrealist scenario, could be said that it was characterized by the same tendency of accepting truths captured by French historian Hippolyte Taine. If those expressed by his judgment were confirmed by my experience, fiction became, in the positive sense of an extension of creative potential, a sort of induction that magnetized the content of what I was transmitting with an unstoppable energy.

Leadership involves seeing beyond imperfections and cherishing the part of justice and happiness that survives the inner storm, celebrating the nobility of your resilient nature in the face of chaos.

Read carefully what Taine wrote: "The truth is that in the world there is a measure of good, which seems high if we compare it with a smaller one. And, small, if we compare it with a bigger one, and that in itself, as any amount, is neither big nor small. Thus, you find that man is miserable and evil because in the bottom of your soul you keep an image of a happy and righteous life, and because, by comparing your life with that image, you see by how many steps it is inferior to it.

But if you consider the chaotic game of imagination and desires, a necessary conflict between will and things, then you will admire the part of justice and happiness that survives this storm and you will praise the nobility of human nature which, amidst so many unleashed and blind forces, maintains and generates reason and virtue."

Leadership: Can you make a comparison between the scientific act and the image of life, based on the observation that you are an answer to what happens between these two?

Directly, what made me understand creation, in its very composition, as a variation of what represented me as a man found between truth and imagination, maintaining and generating reason and virtue, was the measure enhanced by good and evil, felt as a kind of energy storage that could trigger enlightenment.

My deed was based entirely on the complete differentiation of features adopted in one form or another, and not only in the case of the construction of linking forces between the real and imaginary, but rather in favor of adherence to the truth they revealed.

Glimpsing the existence of links between the phenomena that make up the particular and customizes the relationships that shape the general, preached through creativity and the quality of the artistic act, a richness of expressions and conceptions that leadership manages to identify as a material of finishing your version of evolution and evaluation can be obtained.

What you are in regard to the "good" and "bad" parameters, between kitsch and authentic, can be transmitted as information, but subtler to the extent in which they meet the requirements of your inner world.

Leadership: Is any update you do in the name of your authenticity automatically saved in a new version of the dialogue between the created illusion and the reality represented in a wider form of artistic expression?

One of these phenomena, the phenomenon of alternation, the comparison between the scientific act and the image of life, stems from the observation that man is an answer to what is happening between these two. This phenomenon helps you understand leadership in direct collision with the deed of determining a new level of awareness of what you are, of what you're missing or of what blocks you from representing visions.

Through a "pros-cons", "good-bad" approach, finding the measure of the truth of what you reveal in the chaotic game of imagination and desires, amidst so many unleashed and blind forces, you will get to praise the nobility of human nature, you will be able to maintain and generate reason and virtue.

Each creative work becomes an act of ego transcendence, a journey from the concrete world into an infinite space of possibilities, establishing a new connection between art and reality.

But let as add one more interesting thing. The act of creation, the act of openness to the area of art, stabilizing the borders between the authentic and the imaginary, with the role of insulator in the presence of the real, starts the operation the option of leadership of giving a new measure to the expression of existence, change and the sum of your intentions of making your work known to the world, creating the effect of illumination.

As the specialist medic in therapeutics Karyn Maria Taulescu well said: "illumination is the surprising phenomenon that opens the path to greatness for the common man. The phenomenon is accompanied by two profound changes, namely: the annihilation of the Ego and the passing of the being from the finite world to the infinite one".

The infinite world, under the guise of committing the creative act, must be understood as an escape from the rigid rules of reason that fuels itself only from concrete observations and rests solely on experience or on the effective analysis of facts. But without assigning them a connotation that surprises through an imaginary journey or through a scientific perspective.

The fact that precedes the emergence of art has the effect of intensifying the dialogue between different attitudes and visions, which artistic expression captures in a continuous play between illusion and reality, in search of the essence, of the ultimate truth.

The Man And His Deed highlights those human traits taken in the case of a construction of linking forces between the real and the imaginary, in favor of adherence to the truth they reveal.

At the same time, it indicates the attempt of man to propose a new attitude to himself – that of challenge, amidst so many unleashed and blind forces of reason that guide your way of representing reality as an answer integrated in a context of a new direction of creation – through which you reach enlightenment.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-man-and-his-deed-II.html

The Man And His Deed (I)

On July 14, 2015

Improve your ability of designing by perfecting a lesson, a guidance, a spring of values, so as to orient the thinking of others to another level.

Realistically, I wanted to contradict the almost universal practice of all literatures of the world and of all times, to discover greatness and interest exactly where they'd only find the derisory, same as all conquistadors sought new lands that couldn't be found on any map. It was the positive sense of the journey towards the consciousness of a new statute. As if a superior force would have slowly and steadily invaded my intellectuality, enhancing its role as an increasingly primary one in a new science.

And, behold, look upon me as I transform into somebody else, into a whole of a superior level, along the closed outline of imaginings aroused in the mind, under the influence of the contrasting forces of reality and knowledge, including a linear current, equal in an absolute value with the product between reflections, perspectives and meanings.

The ability to transform chaos into order and see opportunities in dissipative structures marks the essence of a true visionary.

The Creation established the value of the intensity of experience contained in the outline of my personality recomposed from its parts hidden or revealed through language, through collisions of cultural codes or through "Divine Hearing". Of course, I had achieved that cold blood that offered me self-control and the strength to dominate others through intense vibration and complexity, in a clever game of the mind that forced the borders of plausibility.

Now you understand the causes of all my vices, the flashes of inspiration, all those fabulous "must-have" treasures attributable to a force of union between the sphere of knowledge and the overlapping of aspects that make up a place of discovery. Electrified by the extent of the imaginary necessary to the scientific world, you remain perplexed by the power of causes and effects that shatter the entire machinery of the soul, of thoughts, of chaos and dissipative structures. You are forced to participate in a work of creation, conquered by logic and the height of expressions through which you glimpse the supreme goal of performance – not the demonstration of brute force of science, but rather the wisdom of grasping its fundamentals in your personal thinking.

But when it is at sea, the captain is subjected to a trial far greater than the rest of the crew. And the writer must rise above what he gives life to, without its viewers bearing any pressure.

Leadership: Can you determine the value of the experience in the outline of your personality, through the forces of that knowledge that sums up a multitude of the skills of the spirit to organize its own content?

The one who knows the source and function of knowledge, in relation with the process of producing information (when the flashes of inspiration make the soul let out a powerful cry from the heart, conveyed in language and the transmitted message, in a transparent manner, through a unique interpretation), is racing towards a new consciousness, towards a new statute, towards leadership's own superiority that dominates the scene of research and endless innovation.

To be elevated, as a writer experimenting with new combinations of styles by including reflections in the body of a new knowledge and through the expressivity of the words often made up randomly, then do your best to reach a state of perfection. As singer Tudor Chirilă very well said: "Perfection is the horizon."

Through perfection (in which your own compositions give a new interpretation to art, with the intention decided to turn art into a realm of the creative force, in which imagination can be characterized as a process of communication between what you assume and what you don't know, in which understanding establishes relationships between what you know and what you are about to assimilate by inclusion) a lesson can be designed, a guidance, a spring of good exhortations. Or a spring of values, able to orient others' entire existence and thinking towards a new plane, towards a new level.

Leadership: Do you find the strength to consecrate yourself to a knowledge that is at the same time a form of demonstrative wisdom, that is, the art of living associated with an essential part of the experience of viewing the lessons of changing mentality?

We add the following from a page on the website suplimentuldecultura.ro: "And who has succeeded, in this perfection, to fully engage to said compositions and feel their interpretation, was able to grow spiritually, to achieve and experience a revelation."

Leadership merges with the style of thinking in the vastness of the force field of creative energy. Who manages to transform into someone else, into an entity independent of any influences, into a whole of a superior level, along the closed outline of fabrications arising in thought under the influence of the contrasting forces of reality and knowledge, including a linear current, equal in absolute value with the product between reflections, perspectives and meanings – can consider himself a pillar of support for thinking.

You can establish the value of the intensity of the experience contained in the outline of your personality, through the forces of knowledge, only when you manage to change the form of what you transmit and what you want to become. This intensity is measured and calculated automatically through the way in which others perceive the significance of your ideas and creations, through the way in which you configure the distributions of content of your science and conscience.

Changing mentality can be a revelation of supreme ideas about life, science and art, only in the sense of a knowledge that does not lead to self-estrangement or the exhaustion of one's own "hidden".

The Man And His Deed highlights the connection between experiment, creation and perfection, under the empire of that clear fascination, personal to writers, of seeing how a fabrication of imagination transforms with the help of science into a plan on paper – then translated into a vision that establishes a guidance.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-man-and-his-deed.html

The Man Behind The Thoughts

On February 24, 2013

Remove the fragile shell of your individuality, so that your level of knowledge can get a new form.

I was crafting with passionate ardor a true masterpiece – a study of the human soul, a difficult combination between durability and easy splintering of elements making up the human being, heavy process of controlling high frequency vibrations and struggles equivalent to a dark wandering into the depths of an ocean I also freely belonged to.

Persevering, I was wandering on many paths, magnetized by this unique and magnificent force that the human soul can exert. I was embittered by hundreds of opposites that interfered one with the other, as electrons running through a portion of the circuit. And, concerned with the objections that could be expressed in a variety of ways, I finally got into a dark corridor, where you come up to half, you stop dead on your tracks and you are put into difficulty. Dark matter. Psychological immobility. The nothing creator. Vacuity.

I was in the same situation as Rashid, Caliph of Baghdad who, subject to overwhelming transformation, searched the redeeming word "Mutador". I became the target of my own incriminations, I lost the sense of relativity of values, I considered myself beaten, until, from behind a collapsed wall, gushed the shimmering light.

And, with it, came the source of inspiration – the engine that helped me give free rein to the springs behind my thoughts, to slowly create, which can be called "transmutation" – a special way to set up the human matter, compression or expansion of consciousness to broader experiences and deeper meanings in life. My level of knowledge took a new form.

Leadership: Does the ultimate goal of your knowledge aim at greater mastery of the reality you represent at the level of "impact of your presence in the delicate area of the essence of a single thinking structure"?

I did not want to get devastating results; I was only seeking to convert energy into matter. I exaggerated to depravity any human inclinations, all states that inflames or, on the contrary, brings him down. I had to make a clear distinction between the two types of switches: power – collapse, energy – passivity.

The essence of a single thinking structure can be found in the fact that the meaning you give to the material from which you build your masterpiece must include the plausibility of a real thing, or of a character trapped in a repeatable event. A likelihood can create a parallel existence, and can be deduced from a similarity relationship between the context in which the narrator's intervention is about to be implemented and that of the causation of strong correlations and associations that validate the respective intervention in a single image.

I was making my way, with some difficulty, more into a fantasy world between present and future, which could fall apart in a unit of time – an implausible space, where the unusual attraction occurred between electrified and neutral particles, between mostly positive and mostly negative feelings. I was to put into action the circuit of analogue switching, which was basically an operated "switch" that would activate the whole assembly.

The fascinating power of alchemy is based on the continuity of the true intervention of the narrator in a world subject to transformation, chance, dynamics, through the representation and compression of certain scenes.

In reality, this study of the human soul, built incomplete and uncertain in one's mind, conditioned by an imagination that did not deny reason, but used it for his own enhancement, progressed on two levels.

The first, scientific and philosophical at the same time, predisposed to a sort of censorship of feelings and thoughts. The second wore a metaphysical and mystical aspect, leading to seeking a deeper symbolism, though it was often hidden and difficult to reveal or, conversely, was decorated with all kinds of artificial combinations, dominated at times by absurd.

The true alchemist is much more than a scientist able to truly transform elements. First of all, he is a philosopher leading his research towards a more subtle goal: a thorough knowledge of self and the world surrounding him. Did I discover the primeval form of alchemy? Or did I begin to practice alchemy?

Leadership: What is the direct particularity of impulses that lead to the creation of your work, through the relationship of similarity between the transmitted message and the images imprinted by a reality that gives hope that what is seen might be otherwise?

Can your level of knowledge take on a new form ? Do you feel you get lost in the depths of an ocean while leading your research to a more subtle goal ? Do you feel you become the target of your own incriminations ? Do you lose the sense of relativity of values ? Are you able to give free rein to the springs behind your thoughts ?

A quote from chinese philosopher Lao Tzu begins like this: "A leader is at his best when people barely know he exists, when his work is done."

Thus, it becomes understandable why the leader is so appreciated, why he puts so many hopes on his strength to size his art, sometimes regarded as a world of trends and interpretation, a variety of well-defined and structured practices in the direct act of creation. A reality that gives hope that what you see could be different as well is a call to acquire the resemblance to another thinking structure that you deserve to apply when you play a new role. It's a fascination that doesn't give you peace.

Driven by a special interest in a specific area of knowledge, "the leader-alchemist" – the purest, most successful and most powerful prototype of leader, but also the least common type – demonstrates a unique vocation to complete a "work" standing under the sign of perfection by the effects it produces and propagates. Competing from the point of view of its construction, of the message it conveys in various ways and forms, with all other types of leaders.

The direct particularity of the creative impulses that lead to the creation of a large-scale work depends on how you refer to the individuality of another person who can only be a part of you by the method of resemblance.

This work can be regarded as a super computer that records everything about the life and personal development of the leader. As he progresses, he fulfills his biggest duty: differentiating of his work, revealing its character and promoting it.

Immediately, such a work cultivates the idea of self-perfection, then of perfecting other people – through an energy-time-action conversion, or through the single formula of transforming coordinates that allow changing their reference system. But most leaders get stuck, being put in great difficulty by the creative "nothing".

Do you complete your ideas, can you embody your science into a work that highlights your individuality? Are you guided by a positive and constructive burst?

The work of a creator of worlds has as a modern side of significance the deepening and expansion of the integration of information in a context of improvisation and language, from which the reader chooses to live in different forms through something that does not exist in the real plane, but only in the ideal, poetic plane, or figuratively.

From such a plan you can extract exactly the inspirational elements that resonate with you.

The Man Behind The Thoughts is you, conditioned by your own individuality to seek and obtain personal and professional fulfillment through an inner revelation, embodied into a personal work: leadership. Right was he who said: "in the real world, too often matters the man who says something but the words themselves."

However, it is forgotten that leadership, by virtue of values and norms, which are recognized as specific, often remains far from true alchemists, as a wreck lying in the waters of a vast ocean.

How many people have access to your leadership? Could it be better understood because of the lights that you cast on it?

What do you do for your leadership to be accessible to all, to get to all? You must do something for that everybody enjoys your work !

Remove the fragile shell of your individuality, so that your level of knowledge can get a new form.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-man-behind-the-thoughts.html

The Man Chained Within The Scope Of Enticing Forces

On November 04, 2013

Activate the energy of the inherent conductor, without stepping too further away from the state that can successfully crown your leadership.

The man that embraces the science to calculate and influence transformations, the man that cashes the "maintenance costs" from the humble carefully selected owners of life, the man taken over by that frenzy of experimental research that allows him to make countless steps in being more thorough with his knowledge; you don't need to spare anything for finding that man. He will find you.

Once out of the house any individual risks to be surprised by the sudden apparition of the inevitable, hit by the lightning of weakness to oppose this delicate and sharp intrusion in his own universe.

Hannibal Lecter doesn't let himself be caught in the illusions of life like any other human. He doesn't leave himself in someone else's hands. He activates the energy of the transformation reaction into the personality of a leader, that interior energy that allows him to manipulate weaknesses and defects. He wants to handle absolute power. The inner power. Because as Victor Hugo said about Balzac: he wants to dig in vice, to dissect passion, to probe the soul, the heart, the mind, the abyss that lays in every man.

Leadership: Does your work have that component of the personality of an artist who assumes reality by a model of thought that inspires solemnity only by the testimony of his experience of pointing consciousness towards a certain direction?

Hannibal is frequently shattered by an earthquake, a powerful eruption of needs. The phenomenon "life" raises the temperature of the most intense satisfaction. And the influence of this temperature on the reaction speed is doubled as the activation energy of the inherent conductor pulsates with even more power in his ambitions. As his desire for knowledge grows in intensity.

Only this electrifies the titan's senses, the lust for life powered exclusively by the flux and reflux of ardent passions, thus enhancing the will to force himself upon other wills. Because the inner substance that triggers intense sensations, new analysis forces, new burning obsessions, has constituents that carry hard charges. They create an energy field in discordance with the other energy fields with which it interacts. Like it would have wanted to take the whole world and make it his. Provocative, isn't it?

His model of thought inspires solemnity through the testimony of his experience of directing consciousness towards a deep philosophy of the value of life that says the world does not appear on its own but is created through laws of the probability theory. For example, a person is more likely to be deceived by a generous attitude than by disguising your conscience and profound conformism.

Limit yourself to one hypostasis, to be human ! With flaws, lacks and sincerity pretensions. But the cry of your conscience is ignored from behind the iron curtain of a sturdy personality. The wish to put to good use persuasion's goblet of fire that has its roots wrapped around exploring a space full of tendencies, one more interesting and more challenging than the other, is all the more tempting.

And an individual caught in the scope of the enticing forces of human existence can't cuff the inclinations that bring him closer to performance. He can't suppress his instincts. Those actions that serve the native cupidity to totally possess intellectual and emotional power. A free spirit prefers to wonder into the unknown, rather than to become a prisoner in the memory cell or a humble servant of a noble cause.

Leadership: Do you risk running into conflict with your own defining authority, because of your inclination to experiment with unstable spiritual states?

In the sense of an important part of leadership, an individual is not forced to justify the limits of their load of wishes, passions and inclinations, one more interesting or better than the others. In comparison with a victory over their own being, making room for that group of inner concerns to extend towards the limits accept by leadership, an individual can depreciate their value.

In this case they can no longer benefit by the advantage of distancing themselves from the steps that have both negative and depreciative accents. By making concurrently or in parallel subtle, but significant leading maneuvers in the consistency and magnitude of their role, in understanding the phenomenon of human profoundness, it is possible that a series of particularities included in the approximate "budget" of positive traits to distort the functions and responsibilities that they really need to take upon themselves.

Man is an unstable spiritual state when he preserves in his consciousness the traces of the impressions he experiences once, so when he maintains his memory with the shadows of the past or the consequences of the relevant events in his life.

To impose yourself in the field of psychology as an instinctive factor in shaping the sense of superior receptivity you must be present in the consciousness of the moment of past experience of people at the same time as that of the present experience.

Just as the aspects that the artist immortalizes in his paintings become in turn a support of some exciting stories, it might be that a much more frequent and prolonged use of the ability of "inner sight" in a way that doesn't really represent the product of a leadership based on integrity and moral values, to degenerate in an assembly of exciting challenges that create an entertaining experience.

But in the end it might come to a war. A huge conflict with the defining authority itself: the id. That will tend to feed its existence even more carefully, with a new way of expressing its individuality: "I will convince all of you of my authenticity."

Do you give certain acceleration to leadership, by applying an internal force that opposes perfection?

Are you a person that wants to know and try everything when it comes to persuasion? Do you want to receive the power of a mobile spirit that can get close to everything, every human being, and every display of leadership?

Giving certain acceleration to leadership, by applying an internal force that opposes perfection, entirely touched by the will of not giving up the vice to act exclusively based on burning passions, means to create an energy field in discordance with the other energy fields you interact with. That is, to distance yourself from the normal leadership unanimously accepted.

The desire to use the goblet of fire of persuasion that has its roots wrapped around exploring a space full of tendencies, one more interesting and more challenging than the other, is all the more tempting. But to prove to yourself at any cost your skills of handling absolute power, embracing the science to calculate and influence the transformations of people around you – as it often happens with the most talented leaders – reduces the quality and durability of your own performance.

In any attempt to connect leadership to performance you will be tempted to "push it forward". You will be tempted to make use of the authority that your position grants you without taking responsibility for the possible discordances or errors that might develop at a certain point between you and the others.

The experimental factor that intervenes in making a conception of human nature can be formulated as follows: The more spiritual states spread through consciousness, the more we are aware of their existence: their feeling is more vivid.

The man chained within the scope of enticing forces marks the possibility of turning leadership in a kind of tyranny that's subtly induced through manipulating people. A kind of psychological war with cankerous consequences for both sides.

 Note: Flawless (2007);

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-man-chained-within-the-scope-of-enticing-forces.html

The Man Of Destiny, Subjected To Eternal Forces

On May 22, 2012

Add value to your leadership, changing the way you perceive your way of being.

The greatest folly of all time: to walk along with the intelligent sniffer of the most subtle, invisible, peculiarities of human nature. The whole passion, the sublime excitement of this strong spirit, highly evolved, is loaded and discharged as a high voltage battery, behind the impenetrable wall of a human being with a face and body, of a mortal, Joe Black.

Furthermore, the big magnate, Bill Parrish was forced to follow Joe everywhere, or rather to accept his presence, tacitly, obediently, as a man deprived of liberty, as a tenant who agreed to sign a contract with rights and obligations agreed only to the owner. Crawled everywhere, hour by hour, by the terrible force, inexorable and irreversible of a superior will, pushed into a muddy void of the intensity of a tornado that circled his entire being, causing chaos in his physical, moral, spiritual, and emotional system.

The situation of Bill Parrish it was never before more threatened, more desperate, more devoid of any perspective. A shadow, a lost phantasm made a place in his life, adjusting with the sharpness of a bundle of energy, with the accuracy of a mechanical clock, fully, unconditionally, his power of orientation. Moving him away of any known truth, of any human knowledge (or making it uncertain, by submitting to error) distorting his profound respect that it wore to himself.

While walking through the crowd, Bill Parrish, curious, concerned like a man seeking for his life denouement, straining to the maximum his will in the attempt to unravel the great mystery of human destiny, he takes courage and asks Joe Black:

- How's your work going elsewhere? (namely, he wanted to say, if you're only around me how can you supervise all the other mortals?)

Joe, or rather the Prince of Darkness, replied:

- While part of you is busy doing one thing, another part of you is doing another. Correct? Now multiply that by infinity, take that to the depths of forever, and you still barely have a glimpse of what is happening.

Leadership: Do you endlessly keep looking at a picture?

The movie "Meet Joe Black (1998)" is a metaphor. And Joe is the living consciousness, lucid - not the mechanical, is the consciousness that repairs and completes the erudite human personality, stimulating the circulation of energy in the body of his judgment and reasoning, in his process of change. Only the most overwhelming consciousness, the force majeure under which pressure the human being is sometimes forced to work and comply with, may have a beneficial effect upon his whole development, until his completion.

Simply said, it is not enough to consider yourself a great person - to be truly virtuous. It is not enough to have an influence on your whole future, because your spirit, soul and intellect, the matter of which your being is formed and which often puts your conscience at stake, will remain an enigma in many respects.

It is like you continue to look at a picture of yours endlessly, ignoring the defects and imperfections of the man in the picture. You refuse to admit that they exist – you consider yourself perfect, invincible and brilliant in every way, namely, you get to idolize yourself. But you will never be perfect if you always look at yourself without criticism, without correcting what is to correct.

Leadership: Are you able to trace the limits of what you think is likely to become reality as you set a final cost along with taxes in a universe you do not know?

Joe Black indirectly revealed to multimillionaire Bill Parrish a great truth - that can be expressed in the following way. What you think you know about yourself, about the world, is actually a tiny part of a universe that you cannot know and conquer with the human specific weapons. This knowledge results from the combination of black and white parts of your existence, based on same laws that govern the material and immaterial world. Compare yourself only with yourself, with what whispers your conscience that you are or not. Can you?

Living consciousness is what you always repeat to yourself with the condition of believing it. And if what you think does not have as a source of inspiration a particular fact raised to the rank of a crucial fact, by narrowing the effects induced by certain actions, then the total volume of values that stimulates you to go forward and see yourself in another light through someone else's eyes, can drop to your reference minimum called: "critical sense."

A universe you do not know is a mind that conquers you through the unknown with whom you often cross paths on your road to success and becomes irresistible by probing what has been forbidden or inaccessible to your knowledge and understanding.

The only way to get out of a illness is to get through it all the way.

The leader has the tendency to make known his personality by an attitude of superiority (sometimes arrogant). He maintains his functionality only through beliefs and high concerns, wearing the robe of the exemplary human personality, with outstanding features and more special than would have the others around him. Can be easily shaken from all the reins, hit in his egocentrism like an unforgiving disease, in its accelerated form, and knocked up to the wall of helplessness - psychologically – of the first wave of crisis.

It is the crisis of the man, who toils unceasingly, trying hard to bring to a highest possible standard his human qualities, not only of the leader, the demanding ones by their weight that are tried only by the colossi - people with the best training and with the highest moral and spiritual value, which make it a point to rise like skyscrapers in every way, above the other fellows, tending to perfection. However, they allow themselves tempted, as a Judas Iscariot, by the glitter of gold, of ambition to succeed in their objectives - betraying eventually their origin, minimizing the true meaning of life.

It is the illness of denying the foundations underpinning perfection, of the correct misunderstanding of human existence, roughing the secret relationship with what it means to be truly virtuous. Failing to optimize your leadership in the light of qualities that are able to correct your imperfections of judgment, and character, to obey that Ego that does not make good house with the cogitation and wisdom - this is the way towards an apparent success, but not to that great success, not taxable, full and remarkable.

Moreover, you can escape of this illness only if you go through it until the end - to get sick, to feel the pain of imperfection in every aspect of your personality, into the depth of the simplest aspects that characterizes you. To cope it with patience, to defeat it by changing your way of thinking and feeling, to soften the pressure of those thoughts and passions of increasing your own pride, to pass it as much as possible, as a form of energy, from the maximum form to a minimum one.

The ultimate form self-abandonment undertakes when faced with situations and responsibilities that are beyond you has the equivalent of accepting that what you think you know about yourself and the world is actually a tiny part of a universe you cannot know and conquer with specific human weapons.

The man of destiny, subjected to eternal forces prioritize the position that the leader takes towards himself, towards his potential to change himself when realizes that he is not so "sophisticated" as he believed he is.

Just as a writer continuously kneads his text in order to give it an artistic form, so you, as to turn towards perfection, you must continuously knead the matter that feeds yourself, to compose it, to fit it into a more comprehensive pattern, and to give it a more harmonious form as possible.

Like a biographer of numerous characters, like a Balzac, a Plutarch or Dostoevsky, you must be able to capture the nature of the character that you interpret, to refine it to your inner existence, so that your personality to acquire a special significance.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-man-of-destiny-subjected-to-eternal-forces.html

The Man Who Bears The Symbol Of The Rose

On July 30, 2019

Try to test the vulnerability of your destiny, managing your evolution as if you were interposing your life purpose between a great power of resignation and the blessing of an eternal presence.

I have tried many times to approach that magnitude of an extra image given by the model of as perfect of an earthly reality as possible, without hearing the voice of the mysteries that await the release of the sacred word, shouting incessantly "take care how you elaborate your creative part ! " It was there, always around me, conceived as actualitas, the identity of a power that unites the earthly force with the superhuman energies in a framework of prayer, love and friendship that builds on the sensitive knowledge of an intelligent spirituality, of a special nobility.

The rose you makes you see things differently.

At one point, I had thought that everything was born from a brief moment of reflection in a mirror that continues to be seen larger than it is in reality. I thought that the artist only lifts his soul with what he looks like and decides his fate through a passage in a parallel universe, feeling at all times, like a sword of Damocles, a command that comes from further away and commands more powerfully than yelled out by the surroundings: "Don't forget that everything is coming back sooner or later ! "

I don't know what my rose in another universe would have looked like, but I will forever keep in memory the image of a lonely, noble, enigmatic and sad warrior. Thus, a personification with the compound noun "good faith" cannot be avoided in a deja-vu context, highlighting a sense of the character of great artistic force, with model value, and of his very intense life, the basis of an easel technique, a self-discovery and a state of transcendence.

Leadership: Are you situating your approach to reality on the coordinates drawn by the "beauty of a masterpiece" in the elaboration of a personalized portrait, with the conviction that this can be the essential starting point in the construction of a high intensity image?

The rose looks at me with a certain insistence, as if was dominating a world in usual appearance, but in miraculous reality. It is the beauty of a superlative look. Causal agent of the limitless time syndrome. I feel its presence full of emotion, but also full of intrigue, as a refuge in the face of a hostile world, as a corner of my creative life where I can say everything that goes through my mind, without complexes, without fears, without prejudices.

The calm of a great nature is seen in the spiritual state that the space of a reality with fragile outlines generates.

It looks at me as if I were a wonder, as if I were the first man to understand its mystical implications, to empathize with it, which gives it all the attention only a hero in "The Never-ending Story" craves for. And that introspective dreamer by the name of Bastian, placed in an alternate reality, which symbolizes (like the rose) the consciousness of a permanent spiritual renewal, often nourishing his soul from the image of an authentic aspiration belonging to the past:

"And even if he were to suspect anything, he still wouldn't have given too much importance to such memories. Forgetting was happening imperceptibly, and when the memory was gone completely, he thought he had always been that way. And so, his desire to be beautiful was appeased, because someone who has always been beautiful does not want such a thing.

When he reached this point, he began to feel some dissatisfaction and a new desire arose. Just being beautiful is not a big deal ! He wanted to be strong, stronger than everyone else. The strongest of the strong ! And being beautiful and powerful is priceless unless you are steel, durable and spartan ! "

Bastian wanted more than the beauty of an image indelible from the passing of time, much more than the expressiveness of a sincere smile. He wanted to be the possessor of a brilliant mind. A new variant of a universal masterpiece. He wanted to experience the value of a divine union. A super power in a new reality.

Leadership: Does your creation ensure a subtle understanding between an existential vision and its realization when building a sense of common denominator attributed to respect for providence: "Is the right measure of man the hard hit of his destiny"?

Knowing that every time I formulate an image of mine based on a resemblance to a rose, a proper meaning is replaced by a figurative one, thus respecting an understood agreement between an existential vision and an appropriate artistic language, I will console myself with the fact that the overlap of events well known over the condition of being that discreetly combines fragility and infinity is a pure coincidence.

This image enhances the effectiveness of expressing oneself in a process of self versus self faced with an omniscient entity.

A long time ago, I read Mika Waltari's novel, "The Dark Angel". The hero for whom time always worked in his favor, Ioannis Anghelos experiences remorse through prayer shortly before the fall of Constantinople in the hands of Sultan Mehmed II. With the drops of water running down his cheeks like tears, he prayed in his heart:

"Have mercy, have mercy on me, You, whose nature cannot be explained ! If there is a meaning in this, allow me to be born again on earth ! Give me back the imprisonment of my body, give me back the chains of the ephemeral time and the bounded place, to feel once more in my hand the hand of a man. My sin was that I despised Your chains and hated them, even though they were the gift You gave me. I am the weakest, the most collapsed, the most despised of men, for I have imagined that I am strong, not only before men, but also before You."

I never forgot these words. The whole world seems a moment frozen in a historical monologue, a reminder of consciousness we experience along a line running from a Perfectionist hand, a line through all the feelings of humanity through a broken light shade. Everything gains absolute independence in this ephemeral life, like free will in a deterministic setting, in a style of "I can choose between two different options", but there is a mysterious force that always changes the most important chapter of each destiny, according to a broader plan.

I have not yet cured myself of forgetting what makes me human, with the assumption of what I had long to admit to myself according to the Bias of Priene provision: "Gather nothing but wisdom. It is the only good that fate cannot take from you."

The integration of all human feelings, perceptions, thoughts into a complex image is a typical phenomenon of recognizing the forms of self-analysis through multiple reflection, which can be described by two complementary features: power and weakness.

The Man Who Bears The Symbol Of The Rose manages its evolution as if it interposes the meaning of the time spent on this earth between a great power of resignation and the blessing of an eternal presence that always reduces existence, so fragile, from the desert attractions to the lasting consolidation of the watchful spirit.

If you see a handsome man in a dream that speaks to you of power, with all the appearance that a star would have if it were observed from a very small distance, and you feel the divine presence that springs from a rare panoramic perspective, remember that all the splendor of the rose lies in discovering it daily, again and again, under another aspect, under another identity, in another decoration and in another form of artistic creation.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-man-who-bears-the-symbol-of-the-rose.html

The Man Who Gave Life Again To Gloaming Lights (II)

On May 29, 2012

Endow your leadership with the ability to capture the finest human reactions, without orienting your creative forces and your power of influence towards your own ambitions.

I deliberately wrapped myself in the sublime obscurity, in the windowless room, in the holy shell of creation. So I measured my ability to understand human nature in such a way that I could build my characters according to a pattern as real as possible, with a well-defined shape to give them weight. I was amazed and so pleased with the things happening according to my will, which manufactured and authenticated the most intense emotions, at the request of the imagination that struggled with reality in order to accept supernatural.

Just as a senator who debates and plenary introduces a new law, I kept deepening myself with nonchalance in the atmosphere of natural and unnatural characters, understandable only by relating them to myself. With the authority of a judge I kept exploring the application without reason of divine and human laws, of written and unwritten laws, of original or counterfeit laws – but without judging the consequences, without passing any sentence. As if I were caught in the mesh of a detective intrigue, being the central predecessor of the most complex actions, forced to participate, as an unseen witness, to the troubles of my characters, to their search, to their questions and their transformations.

Only an artist who puts his art to serve a higher purpose, to the composition of an overgifted work, invaded with mysterious characters, filled with immanent forces. Only a Marion Zimmer Bradley or a Stephen King could have understood me and unraveled my secrets. And even they could have been easily led into error, redirected by the electric beam of confusion very skillfully induced.

Leadership: Before you decide which image you want to project in the world, do you have to acquire that understanding of human personality in the complexity of its natural determinations?

The key objective of leadership is to fully understand the human factor. But you can't align to this understanding, you can't penetrate the inner hidings of human being, to stir their consciences and shape like a sculptor who, with each chiseling of the stone, feels that he completes his work, if you can't restrain your desire, your enthusiasm, your conscious tendency to conquer the highest peaks of persuasion.

If you want to build a house, you cannot simply go on a foreign land and lift its walls. First, you need to decide on the land, to take out a permit, to make a feasibility study and only then, you start to dig the foundation first.

Persuasion, without the deepest understanding of human factor, can lead to collapse or undervaluation – it is like a house without foundation, o doomed attempt to build a strong leadership system, a weak attempt to establish close relationships with others.

The image you project in the world must be consistent with the complexity of the natural determinations of your personality, such as the degree of hating the falsification of reality, the level of venturing in an unknown territory, the need to redistribute indirect or bypassing means of transmitting a message.

Only where naturalism ends, illusion begins

The public was delighted with every scenario, every second that surpassed the boundaries of their understanding. For he was always caught in the gearing of the forms of influence caused by the energy transfer of the magician's will, from negative to positive, from child to adult, from one soul to another. Was struck with the force of a meteorite in the insidious process of creation and dissolution of invisible worlds – temporary available, bound like nucleons by an attractive nuclear force, generated by the most overwhelming illusions, able to amplify, to reform all emotions, all the excitement of human being.

The spectators could see the mask, but not the life pulsating with so much energy behind it. They could see the man, the authentic and so mysterious portrait of a human being coordinated by the dark, entangled in the most intense passions, but without being able to understand him and enter into that transcendent reality foisted itself upon all reason. They were surrounded by symbols, invaded by the extraordinary spikes of magic that made their hearts thrill – the decisive condition to peg in. But they could not scan his nature, perceive his inner emptiness that only the most precious secrets could fill.

They did not know the truth, they were not aware of the most important factor of the equation: that only where naturalism ends, illusion begins.

Here we should remember the advice of Marcus Aurelius:"Have the serenity of accepting what cannot be changed, the courage to change what can be changed, and the wisdom to make the difference between the two."

Leadership: Do you fulfill your experience as an artist under the almost continuous cover of an anonymity as unmerited as it is saving?

My secrets were safe because I felt protected by the pseudonym of anonymity. Somehow, I was completely alien to the other people, led by an accepted and misunderstood silence, because everything that already existed had to disappear. So, I was a man of true deeds who never saw the light of day.

You influence becomes more extensive when your leadership takes more the form of magic. But influence changes like a boomerang with infinite trajectories, with an infinitely greater force than the one you launched it with – that it corrupts you when you dabble with it only for yourself.

Even your inner self can be touched, as if by a bound shot, by the overwhelming power of your own influence on others, and physically and emotionally hurt if the basic leadership antibodies: noble character, empathy, these two protective barriers that maintain the optimal operation of the engine, which guarantees you success in inter-human relationships, - does not fight the virus, the intruders: the burning desire to astound, pride and insistence to impose your (unrecognized) superiority. Two forces that, like in a conflict of interests, are enemies and continually fall over one another. The defender and the enemy. And only one winner. Which will it be?

The distribution of creative forces towards one's own ambitions, at the bidding of an iron will, without taking into consideration the long-term effects, is an unnecessary torture. For if your Ego is subject to constant pressure of art whose aim is to totally influence other people, their subordination to your laws and principles, whose application does not positively contribute to the surfacing of a coherent individuality, then you will share the fate of the man who starts a thing and never finishes it.

It is a work in vain, a pain of the mind, a damage to the character's integrity to try to subdue a soul, instead of rendering its greatness.

The magic that overwhelms you, without asking you if you will receive it, occurs when the degree of abstraction of your inner representations and proposed concepts reflects the need to interact with an Alter-Ego that seems to be completely alien to the existence of others.

The man who gave life again to gloaming lights illustrates the balance, the strict moral and emotional conduct a leader must always respect and follow.

If you want to be a genius of the show, then be a magician. But if you want to be a leader, then be a man, a man of understanding, a magician of empathy, with an instinct of detection and propel senses and reason, one endowed with the ability to capture the finest human reactions.

Just as nothing escapes to a good photographer, he catches a movement, a gesture in a hundredth of a second, - so you, to acquire a new perspective of self-awareness, you must show an exceptional insight to those little aspects of reality, human thinking and manifestation. Do not be concerned with influencing people only for your soul, because it can be so noxious, that it can even corrupt you.

Change cannot be imposed by force. And even if it is apparently impossible, it is only a surface change, not a profound change. Only when a leader manages to induce in every man a change in his model of thought and action, it is only then that the inner desire to change oneself spontaneously occurs.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-man-who-gave-life-again-to-gloaming-lights-II.html

The Man Who Gave Life Again To Gloaming Lights (I)

On May 26, 2012

Rethink the orientation and the opportunities to manifest your own authority in such a way that you find an echo in the psychological and emotional plan of those around you.

I will never forget the man, the collector, the dreamer who toiled so long and eventually managed to build from nothing, by crossing the elements that shape knowledge, by distributing the creative forces on the real and imaginary axis of coordinates, to his own empire. Vast, crafted from the hardest steel of thinking, sainted with the fierce fire of feeling. Relevant by its high content of disclosures, guarded by classifications, structures, descriptions and dissociations.

It was a privileged empire, which perpetuated itself by capturing and analyzing a richer, deeper, more brutal reality. Which throws with a giant force the human nature in the vortex of the most ardent attempts, integrating it into the complicated gear of the destiny liable to its inexorable will.

Leadership: Do you ensure a sufficient representativeness for yourself in conferring a force of superior understanding to the way in which you position yourself between the mysterious part of science and the richness of deep feeling?

Just as a man seduced by the unpredictable and by challenges, I was plunging into darkness, into a reason known only by me – into the room without windows, in which no ray of light penetrated. But in this obscure, in this tempting place of exercising control over senses, the secret laboratory of resurrection of human nature, I managed to create, with the authority of a medium, vague, boundless, restless or evolutionary forms. To heighten to a level of art a superior understanding, an unprecedented concept of the profound reality that shaped with the typical patience of a painter a genuine identity, revealing the most valuable features.

How ennobling can the darkness be ! How blessed can the study of science be ! As if I should have demonstrated the existence of antibodies produced by the organism during a previous infection, thus finding the antidote, the vaccine, the substance that can neutralize the bacteria, rendering it harmless.

The antidote that continually mobilized me, accelerating my blood pressure, under the critical eye of my own self, which was asking itself: "Quo vadis?", greatly contributed to the initiation of the force-giving energies, synthesizing all kinds of understandings, perceptions, attitudes and value systems.

The magic – was transformative, restabilizing, consolidative. I had to have patience if I wanted to reconstruct the harmony of human being in its wholeness.

Leadership: Can you shape your personality in order to achieve perfection, starting from the lowest point of your value?

Seven years before his debut, the famous writer Fyodor Dostoyevsky spoke in a letter addressed to his brother about his aspirations, about his mission: "The man is a mystery. I must bring this mystery to light and, if I dedicate my whole life to this goal, I will not think I lost time in vain: I concentrate on this mystery because I want to be human."

You can shape you personality in order to achieve perfection only if you are ready to start from scratch, from the lowest point of your value. There where the incipient form of your character and the deepness of your own feelings concentrate or from the point you find yourself at right now. Only if you manage to bring to light the mystery of your own inner resources, which condition your existence.

At the same time, the lowest point of your value is given, if I should quote writer Cornel Ailincăi, of the initial expectation of realistic rendering of things in their formal symbol, or, just as well, maybe stem from an instinctive formal exploration, whose features are invested on the path of self-knowledge with a figurative suggestion of the type "imagination".

Just as a writer renders the features of a figure not by a pattern, but by the nature and traits of his character, so do you, before winning your seat at the leaders' table, must know yourself very well, you must plunge deeper into yourself, into the most useful or dangerous depths of your nature - the first proof of genius. In order to discover the most complex truths of your life, your mental and emotional beauty, the truths that can trigger the clarifying – and the healthiest reaction.

Allow your unequaled desire of change to materialize. Be much more than you thought you were, much more than some ordinary man. Rise yourself proudly above all others, synthesizing that understanding that comes from the attitude with which you choose to meet the great unknowns of life.

To find yourself in the shelter of magic is to raise the standard of performance of your own activities so high that it makes it impossible for others to reach.

A richer reality is a life experience through which you go in some way when you are looking for the answer at the visible end of a twisted thread from which you must effortlessly draw to the other end.

The man who gave life again to gloaming lights brings into focus that human capacity for understanding, for measuring his epistemic dimension, the restless search along his entire existence of characteristic and defining elements, which contribute to his formation – that understanding of human personality in the complexity of its natural determinations.

To accumulate that material of spiritual observations and experiences, to use that mental and emotional power as a man who understood the variable existence in the deepest feelings of the human being. Tthose that occur and overwhelm or those who disappeared. To create the necessary conditions to synthesize, to understand people's attitudes and positions. This is the essence that gives a special aura to leadership.

Leadership concentrates in its own operating system the entire existence of the man vested in the light of knowledge and of intense, deep feeling. Of the man endowed with the power to perceive and artistically describe the most deeply rooted feelings into the human nature. Of the man who, above all, devoted his time, like a true wise man, like a writer, like a Balzac or a Zola who gathers all possible information about their characters before reconstructing their personality – discovering hidden talents, essential characteristics and aspects under which they can think, feel and act as efficiently as possible.

How will you manage to have authority before others if you do not stimulate your self-knowledge?

Rethink the orientation and the opportunities to manifest your own authority in such a way that you find easier an echo in the psychological and emotional plan of those around you.

Do not forget the famous words of René Descartes, "Cogito ergo sum" ("I think, therefore I am") – which means you must deepen your self-knowledge, which represents the foundation and the engine to knowing others. Only thus, your leadership will exist and persist.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-man-who-gave-life-again-to-gloaming-lights.html

The Man Who Retreated To The Nameless Place

On February 07, 2017

Approach that value maturity assumed through the determination to rise higher than the condition of your formation, limited by the truths of the surrounding reality.

Edward Prendick is the main character of the novel "The Island of Dr. Moreau". The reader's attention is directed mostly to the attitude and thoughts of this upper-class gentleman, shared at the novel's finale:

"I have retreated from the bustle of cities and crowds and I spend my days surrounded by books full of wisdom, bright windows in this life of ours. I dedicate much of my time to reading and to the experiences of chemistry, and many clear nights I spend studying astronomy. I still struggle with the imagination of picture of movement, but I do not really move.

There exists in countless twinkling stars in the sky a feeling of infinite peace and protection, although I do not know how and why. There, I believe, in the vast and eternal laws of matter, and not in the worries, sins, and daily sorrows of men, must find its solace and hope everything that is above the status of an animal within us. At least, I hope so, because otherwise I would not be able to continue living. And so, with hope and loneliness, my story ends."

Leadership: Do you feel exposed to a context full of life that accelerates the expansion of your consciousness towards an area of your willingness to accept your limits and the condition of a fragile being?

Introspective disposition can be attributed to the responsiveness to life's demands as well as to the responsiveness to the demands of the greatness of shaping yourself on an ever-higher level of your spirit. This disposition represents an analysis over the motivation to overcome the state of uncertainty or indeterminacy, towards everything around you, through a sense of ownership of truths that led to the materialization of a certain reality.

The perception of your own person combines the power of accepting truths discovered through the experience of astounding situations, with the harsh reality of an existence that exposes you to an exclusion from the middle of the world.

The hardest battle you must endure throughout your life, in the face of a reality that often times you do not desire, but most accept as a sacrifice of the superior man in his desire to reach a higher level of understanding of the world, is the one which is given between your heart and your mind, because you never know which one to listen to.

The truth on which a personality of great scientific value is built can be expressed in the following way: everything that is above you is part of the power of loneliness that tends towards the unity of faith in the effort to achieve personal perfection.

To know those truths that contradict personal beliefs is one of the causes of transforming the reason of existence into a deficit of selfness. And to bear these truths, starting from the perception analysis of people who control states of mind, actually means to get close to that value of maturity assumed through the determination to rise higher than the condition of your formation, limited by what happens around you. Keep your serenity amidst the chaos !

Maturity does not mean to choose and adopt what better represents you as a man who takes a lot of feedback from real life, harshly and accurately judging the world in which he lives. It means to accept that you have the ability to be what you want to be despite the truths of a reality that fuel your alienation from everything and everyone.

The deepest need of the scientist is to endure his isolation, to feel his loneliness in a way beyond the ordinary of things, in order to reach the unity of true faith. Therefore, this man's faith in the perspective of his endless perfection is related to the ability to face his Ego, to resist the pressures of being like other people, that is, to take on the challenge of not being the representative of such a divided, disarticulated world facing extinction.

Great scientists, like Edward Prendick, choose to live their loneliness in a world of theirs, of creation, of imagination, of aspiration to the absolute, to perfection, preferring to create a false image, hiding in anonymity, than to be in the forefront of a world that is not yet ready to accept the change, the revelation of divine truths.

The great fact of the destiny of "Creator and Discoverer" is the perfection you reach when you say "NO" to a world that is diagnosed in some places as transient, through a collage of feelings, thoughts and behaviors that inspire you to believe that the impossible is not impossible.

The Man Who Retreated To The Nameless Place is one step away from winning his rightful place on the list of the great discoverers of the meaning of life.

The force of such a man to accept reality and endure difficulty to combat truths must be greater than the sadness of disappointment, at least a bit greater, but never equal, otherwise he will never be able to rise above his social condition and find a purpose.

The difficulty of the test of character is determined when you rise above your own experiences and continue to stay good and gracious, even if you feel exposed to a context of life that accelerates the expansion of your consciousness towards an area of willingness to accept your limits and the condition of a fragile being.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-man-who-retreated-to-the-nameless-place.html

The Man Who Sparks The Light Within You

On June 05, 2014

Find similarities between your desire of self-improvement and the reasoning of those superior to you, in order to be capable of establishing a genuine connection with the primordial.

Eisenstein's sensitivity, driven substantially by massive readings, widely opened the floodgates of fantasy. If his polytechnic education instilled his spirit of scientific analysis, now, in contact with Meyerhold, exactly this bivalence was cultivated. Young Eisenstein had the singular chance of meeting precisely the teacher he needed.

He felt from the beginning that he was facing a golden seam. He wanted to exploit it. After a few lessons, he admits himself bored of constantly drawing squares and circles. At the end of a class he asked Meyerhold to stay, because he had a few questions for him. Eisenstein intended to provoke his teacher in the sense of some confessions regarding the creative process of his shows. And, he succeeded.

*Meyerhold, getting stirred up, then began to recount his past shows and directorial plans during his classes. From these recollections, Eisenstein understood what directing meant for the very first time. **

Leadership: Do you follow the path of a reason that reduces its individualistic dimension in exchange for the privilege of being a part of a whole that tells a history?

The transmitter is a device that contains an electric battery periodically replenished via a special switch. Considernig this thinking and also the fact that we can now approach leadership rightfully, even the exaggerations or errors committed by a certain proportion of evaluation of man's development potential, we have to relate to a whole that can provide support without waiting for anything in return, being modeled on what we can perceive as reference information from a reality that is outside of us.

The assets that you really depend on for a creative perspective are nothing but a form of motivation, with an advantage for both parties, the leader and his supporter. A unique combination between the value generated by a solid explainer of knowledge and the value allowed by a supporter of knowledge that tries to live up to their enthusiastic superiority.

They can be considered an option available in any interval of the fertile period of assuming a new identity, which first of all has a positive intrinsic value, in that you choose not to follow the path of a reasoning that cannot reduce its individualistic size. But also an extrinsic positive value, supported by ideas, visions and philosophies relevant to a comprehensive professional development, restoring contact with the primordial.

To follow the path of a reason that reduces the individualistic dimension in exchange for the privilege of being a part of a whole that tells a story is to ascend to a higher stage of evolution that includes the need to be in close relationship with a Creator who already has an active role in the periodic recreation of the world. This creator represents the unity of the creative principle, the source of life, and the condition of preserving one's own capacities in the form of a higher consciousness.

Leadership: Do you complete the personal affirmation process under an agreement that leaves you with great latitude as to the content that is given to you as a privilege to be needed in a wide range of ways to express "rare" results?

The primordial signifies a rebirth in thinking, that special call to serve certain requirements of performance and competence that you desperately need in order to remove from yourself the "quality defects" that keep you stuck on a lower level of evolution. You must always keep this in mind.

A slowness or termination of processing the defining elements of content and form, of quantitative and qualitative order of personality, due to an unsupported coordination of competent manipulation of the input material for the completion of the foundation of knowledge management, good faith, from both sides, can become a chore rather than an integral part of development.

The content that is given to you as a privilege to be needed in a wide range of ways to express "rare" results is a consequence of the order of events, life lessons, and inspired explanations that make up the dimension of an inspiration about the outer world that offers both social interaction and new experiences. This content responds to the need to know and understand, to master knowledge and to formulate new theories about the meaning of creation and that of the creator.

Leadership is the content of the work you design in the world associated with the particular form of deep consonance with the nature and profile of a creator who has thought up everything in such a way as to be useful in conceiving new trends in the evolution and capitalization of the art of experiencing a story.

The man who sparks the light within you, as the owner of a particular knowledge, has the power to break the wall of your own limitation, removing yourself from the icy areas of abstract thinking that cannot be comfortable if you are focused more on alternative approaches, on the collecting of external resources, such as a single fund of superior knowledge.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-man-who-sparks-the-light-within-you.html

The Map Of Leadership

On October 26, 2010

Stop by more often on the threshold of the leadership's art, carefully struggling to elucidate its meanings.

In the book "Every patient tells a story", the writer Lisa Sanders tells about Doctor Wainapel, whose sight was seriously affected. However, he was still practicing well his job. When she asked him how he could consult patients, although he could hardly see at all, Doctor Wainapel replied:

- My patients find out pretty fast that I can barely see, but there is another strange part. They bring their MRIs, because they want me to look on their radiographs. Why do they do this? Because they know that I can barely see. I have often thought about this paradox – why bring images to a blind man? Well, they do not want me to see them, and do not care about that. They want me to help them see what happens. They want me to help them understand. This is, actually, my job. Like of any other doctor.

Leadership: Can your practice be conventionally understood in terms of the contribution to a victory over suffering, by reinventing the primordial monument of access to the space of an invisible reality?

Leadership is based on an axiom: you put into practice what you know. Within the best relationships with people, in your becoming as a leader, you must unleash your abilities, but also you should concentrate on what you have learned from other professionals, and to put into practice what you have assimilated from them. If you have not understood the art of leadership, then you have not been able to "see" the essence that it creates, meaning that the role that you should fulfill does not work to its true capacity.

The only important factor in building personal and professional relationships is discipline. Without it, it is as if you put your hands on a map, but which does not show you exactly where you are. Discipline in the relationship with great professionals (mentors) is the key that allows your progress, it is the only way, by which you can forward through the contradictions that, in your ambition to perfection, you cannot predict and solve. Discipline means doing everything properly, understanding those real supports you must rely on in order to obtain performance.

The first sense of leadership is to accompany people in finding and connecting with the valuable content within them. The second sense of leadership is to see yourself repeatedly as open to transparency, to satisfy an emotional need, not to get attention. The third sense of leadership is that of existential and spiritual law, through which a special being can extend people's access to a reality that transcends any understanding, because it can solve a problem where apparently no solutions can be found.

In order to decipher your map of leadership, it is absolutely necessary to know the "language" that the professionals use it. In other words, you must have a mentor that would help you really understand "what happens" in leadership.

The space of an invisible reality is that form of contact with a truth which, from a medical point of view, cannot be removed in any way, and which comes to light only when your heart agrees to believe strongly in it (even if it does not understand it).

Just as a doctor's secret lies in the careful observation of details – the more thorough the research is, the more successful the results are – so the secret of an effective leadership lies in the ability to believe in the professionalism of others and to rely on the help of a mentor. You must first believe in the one, who provides you a clearer, fresher understanding of the complexity of the art of leadership, and then to follow him.

The map of leadership and the reality that you perceive are not identical. Most errors of interpretation of these maps appear because you overlook the essential of what you need to know, understand and respect. If there is no direct correlation between what the map shows, and what you really are, it means that you have not reached yet that stage of evolution, in order to explain yourself everything.

Is it needed someone with a "view" better than yours, to guide you towards understanding the map of leadership? Do you need to consult a "doctor" whose responsibility is to interpret the map as accurate as possible? Is it needed someone to calculate your exact destination, for which you have to proceed? What is the essence arising from his inspiration and help?

The reinvention of the primordial monument to access the space of an invisible reality presupposes a transition from an empirical dominance of the profession (precise execution of the profession) to the idealism of faith based on conclusions based on evidence and arguments that can prove the existence of a superior, indirect causality.

The Map Of Leadership is a representation that can be deciphered only with the eye of a specialist, of a mentor who perceives the essence of things differently than you. Your ability to rely on him raises or lowers your level of training.

Stop by more often on the threshold of the leadership's art, carefully struggling to elucidate its meanings.

Conclusion: As well as in other areas and in leadership all can be learned. Only with the help of mentors, through your personal and others' experience, you will gain the necessary abilities to find the correct route on the map of leadership. Starting from the basic notions, acquiring the experience of others, learning from success, but especially from the mistakes of others, developing the necessary skills for analysis and synthesis, you will be able to reach the terminus point, when you will be appreciated for your excellence. On this route, you will encounter especially "human" obstacles, and you will be surely accompanied by the masters who guided and taught you. And you will have to decide if you want to go ahead, or you want to go back from where you have started.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-map-of-leadership.html

The Master Of Tactics And Strategies

On November 05, 2009

A redoubtable leader is guided by a single criterion: strategy, strategy, strategy.

No genius is not a genius throughout the twenty-four hours of a day. No one escapes from unexpected, from the traps that life stretches too often in their way. No one is able to penetrate the greatness of thought and action so well as to avoid mistakes. Who could, perhaps, to intuit exceptionally the events? Is there someone endowed with such a calculated mentality, so tenacious, so detailed in order to be able adapting like a chameleon, to any environment, to be able to duplicate, to interpret different roles, always moving on new well-established coordinates, but not known by anybody?

Everybody has vulnerabilities. No one is God, and all of us are more or less imperfect. Is not it? However, some people have learned to hide their weaknesses. And, even more, to turn them into strengths. The last mentioned had dared to play the terrible game, so dangerous, with themselves, with their limits, by keeping their strengths and weaknesses in the dark depths of their personalities, and many other contrasts that always alternate, consequently relying on their ideas and ideals.

There are people in the world who believe very firmly, or naively, that they could defy with nonchalance, the impossible. They are considered invincible, unbeatable, magnificent, faultless, and even immortal. Such a man with a self-confidence that gives the impression that can move mountains is convinced that he can defeat in the struggle with fate if and only if he uses the most appropriate strategy.

He is the Master of tactics and strategies. The eternal talented player who, by no means should not be caught on the wrong foot, that under no circumstances can afford to neglect that should not be neglected. For him, the world is like a checkerboard, maybe with more pieces and more squares. He against a redoubtable opponent: fate, that plays fair, but very hard according to the universal laws.

Leadership: Can you demonstrate an association between role-playing and mental development at the level of "chessboard" that makes you anticipate every overturning of the situation?

Without any doubt, the Master of tactics and strategies, as a consummate artist of dissimulation, is a real chess player. An avid player. A professional player. An exceptional player, equipped with an impenetrable calm. That takes into account everything, each particular situation, each approach, each risk: the defense, moving and capturing pieces, pawns' transformation, the links, surprise attacks, opening, closing, gambits, field release, maneuvers, etc. He is always capable of realizing when "all this will end badly."

His superiority consists in meticulousness. He notes, with an extraordinary ability, all the moves he makes, but also those of the opponents. He collects new strategies while adapting them to his own. He takes advantage of circumstances, and has a tremendous intuition, which makes him foresee any discomfiture. With his quick mind, calculates in advance all the possible shots of his opponent. Absolutely, every move is combined in advance for performing several further moves.

Even so, he also has a vast experience. He masters all the mysteries of chess technique. He knows by heart all the parties of the most experienced masters, such as: Alechim, Capablanca, Lasker, Tartakower, Bobby Fischer, Kasparov, Nakamura, because he has repeated dozens, perhaps hundreds of times. Nothing should be impossible for an omniscient and an expert in the chess strategies, is not it?

Leadership: Do you always profit from a change of position in the conditions of playing a role that overlaps with your Ego?

However, the Master of tactics and strategies it is so obsessed with this game of intelligence, that anything he makes, wherever he is, even when he dreams, has in his head only one thing: strategy, strategy, strategy. To him all comes down only to the strategy. He firmly believes that life by itself is a strategy, and he, an exceptional strategist, can easily fool it. Everything that moves, all that appears before his eyes, everything he touches, everything that happens around him, absolutely everything comes down only to pawns, bishops, rooks, queens and horses.

Let us never forget that the Master of tactics and strategies is the king. And the king must be protected as well as possible, and in the end he must come out necessarily the winner. Regardless of the field. Regardless of the obstacles encountered. Proof against the used means. It does not matter the price to be paid. For him does not matter the nature of sacrifices. For he must always remain "standing". He is "the head" that must not fall under no circumstances. Otherwise, the whole game that he leads can tumble down.

The position you adopt in the circumstances of a role that overlaps with your Ego is an attitude of acceptance of the authority that becomes venerable by use. To recognize your position as a "king" is similar to accepting your limits in the situation in which you do not possess control over the consequences of a "surprise move" made by the adversary.

Leadership: Do you add value to your experience of completing a round whose stake is the remodeling of the Ego through conscious and guided reflection on the character of the power against which you act?

Leadership is like a game of chess. For me, it is impossible not to recognize that in the world, there are such people who achieve the performance to play an endless game of chess with fate (theirs and of the other people), so hoping to trick it for good. Not just a little, but completely, without half measures. Openly. And without hesitation. Such as are, for example, those who are in charge of companies or countries. In their selfish imagination (and probably unhealthy) they are some masters of tactics and strategies.

The Ego is what remains unchanged in the midst of changing of situations which you can not control after long exercises and trainings.

Of course that they are identifying with the king from the chess game that is the most important piece. In their minds is constantly playing a game, and the only things that arouse their most interest are the words: CHECK ! and MATE ! These extraordinary masters cannot think of anything else than chess, they see everywhere only chess moves and attempts. Check with the pawn. Check with the Queen. Check with the tour. Check with the bishop. Check with the horse. They always keep it in chess, having the infinite hope, the enormous desire to end the game with a MATE !

Leadership: If you cannot grasp the meaning of a move made by your opponent, do you think that there is no sense of being above the limits that make you feel controlled?

Not even by thought, does not pass to these masters of tactics and strategies that they could, some way, and by an absurd chance to make a wrong move that would threaten their leadership position. In the game for power, it never reaches to a drawn game. Therefore, one wrong move means the automatic loss of leadership position. That once lost, can only be regained with great difficulty, because fate is cruel and does not allow to anyone revenge.

A game of chess can win only by making sacrifices of pawns, rooks, crazies, horses or queens. However, a true master, who respects his talent, aspires to win against an opponent within oneself, and if it is possible with all the pieces on the board. It seems impossible. Even so, just the one who will succeed this performance could be called, without doubt, a perfect master of tactics and strategies.

He never forgets that the meaning of a move cannot be found within a safe area, but within an area of "alert" !

If you proceed based on the notion that there is no meaning in your opponent's move, you still have not learned the most important lesson in chess: the fatal weapon is to integrate the opponent's plan into the development phase of your own plan !

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-master-of-tactics-and-strategies.html

Master Of The World

On May 15, 2010

Accept the realistic thinking, so that you could see the consequences of your actions.

For a man who always aims, with perseverance, what really fulfills him, this thing means everything. Nevertheless, when his greatest passion, the one obsessing him, which he day after day, in every moment, maintains by himself through an exuberant enthusiasm and a total dedication, is to be a master over the whole earth and all the people, then nobody and nothing can stand in his way. Besides his unmeasured vanity. Which can even lead him to death.

The phenomena of the Great-Eyry, an inaccessible point of the Blue Mountains range, on which the alpinists had always neglected, caused anxiety within the whole world. Was Great-Eyry the crater of a volcano issued from the entrails of the mountain range? For the earthquakes were intensifying, and sometimes flames could be seen at the top of the mountains. John Strock, the police inspector, who was often given difficult missions, received the mission from his bosses to start an investigation. Rushing all alone in an incredible adventure, he succeeds into finally discover the inscrutable enigma.

Great-Eyry was actually the stone hole of a giant and powerful bird, namely of a flying, eagle shaped machine, Épouvante, built by an extraordinary inventor, named Robur. He found a way of underground communication with the outside, which allowed him to leave Great-Eyry, leaving there his mysterious machine, a machine which could reach an amazing speed both on land and water, therefore, being a plane, a ship and a car at the same time.

Leadership: Does the significance give to you by the world have as a key determinant the importance you give yourself in the absence of exclusion factors from the world?

Even so, Robur, the temerarious inventor, who was for some time in the attention of the whole world, on which extraordinary machine had been offered huge sums of money, instead of raising the profile of his invention like any other inventor, he proclaimed himself "The Master of the World". He was not afraid to fight against all humankind. Himself against everybody. He could use at any time his highly efficient device in order to get rid of any enemies or to harm anyone. There was nobody who could catch, find or touch him. However, he could bear down anyone, anywhere, anytime.

Who can stop such a man? A genius cannot be defeated by a single obstacle. Only one force could finally defeat Robur the Conqueror, the one animated by hostile feelings towards humanity, the one gifted with an amazing creative mind, whose unlimited confidence in his own genius gave him an absolute safety: his great vanity.

He could rise above all people, but could not hold in his impulses and attitude of superiority. Finally, the machine in which was the "fool inventor" was hit by lightning and ripped to pieces, when, driven by vanity, tried to fly during a storm.

Because of his pathological thinking (excessive and unrealistic) he could not see the consequences of his actions.

Leadership: In the reserve of your individual revaluation is recorded a sum of perspectives that eliminates the excesses of power?

The entire value of the leader's depreciation, analyzing all those characteristics actively manifested during time, unrestricted by the virtues that are the ornament of your personality, is basically due to his approach to the access point towards the fight with himself. In which, in particular, his elements of continuity, altered by his boundless ego, competes alongside the reality accepted by other people, process that complements the hypotheses on his unlikely evolution.

The fall of the leader in a bad extreme, in an excess of authority that turns the unusable stock of virtues into a stream of income in the form of incentives that do not exactly correspond to human dignity and solidarity, leads to two changes: moral and credibility. Attracting a life of toil and infirmities more of an inner nature than an outside nature, ending in the slow death of one's own identity.

The identity you undertake in a battle stance is related to the great variety of revolt reactions that you experience in a life that lacks the consciousness of precariousness, the consciousness of fragility or that of your own mediocrity.

Through its implication, the identity is the result of intensive development of your own Ego, which has become too demanding, because you cannot conceive that anyone, no foreign mentality to interpose over the dark shadow of your plans and possibly restrict your access to the great science of management.

If there isn't recorded any sum of perspectives, lined to the virtues of following high ideals, to eliminate any excess of power, in the reserve of your individual revaluation, then the interests of leadership and quantitative accumulation of experiences and knowledge, which prepare the qualitative lead for the emergence of "positive feedback" type of effects will prove to be unprofitable and without prospects of recovery.

Leadership: A ruler is only afraid of one thing: that someone else would take his place !

Nevertheless, what would a Master of the World, a consummate leader be afraid of? Of his unmeasured pride? Of course not. Such a person can be warned many times of the traps which could be laid by his selfish attitude and thinking, he would never or very seldom take into consideration the warnings he receives. Because, beyond all doubt, a master is only afraid of one thing: that someone else would take his place. And only that. This is his greatest fear.

He will always want the first place, to perfection, "the crown", he will always want to rule over everyone and everything, and he will follow his interests with an immovable obstinacy. And the one willing to be in his good grace, will certainly be put to the test, preparing him countless difficulties, and if he does not raise to HIS expectations, or at the first evidence of disobedience, he will be severely punished.

Furthermore, I strongly believe that if there were a Master of the World, he would have, as Robur, a bronze heart. Having only one objective – that of ruling, he would never let himself be persuaded, he would never be frightened by anyone and anything, he would never retire in the fight for the "title", that once won, he would like to keep forever after. With his dual instinct, that of a fighter and that of a leader, being both judge and lawgiver at the same time, he will always try to impose his supremacy, cutting and haltering as he pleases, always weaving intricate machinations against those wanting to rise to his rank, of the master of the World.

But however powerful he would be, a master of the World will always have an unseen, terrible enemy, who will always insistently hunt him, trying to lead him into making a fatal mistake:

his own ego.

Take into account your values and what motivates you to change in the world with the intervention of the power that governs you, when you produce content of the type "access closed for good".

Conclusion: Any success, any praise is nicely tickling your vanity. However, this vanity must carefully be controlled because it can bring you trouble and it can even cause your collapse. A hypertrophied ego can create you a fake image upon your own activities. That is why it is important for you to be honest with yourself, to honestly self-assess your own strengths and under no circumstances you must think you are or may become "The Master of the World", that you own absolute truth or the key to great mysteries.

Accept the realistic thinking, so that you could see the consequences of your actions.

 Note: Master of the world, Editura Corint, 2001.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-master-of-the-world.html

The Masterpiece Of A True Artist

On October 19, 2009

Keep yourself in the leading position, by exercising your influence as an art, not as a science.

Could you interpret well a role if you do not understand very well the character? Can you play a different range of roles if you are not a true artist - skilled enough to imitate very well the pain, fear, misery, delirium, sickness, any feeling at all? Can you conform with the roles from any social status, deceiving the audience being your only goal?

Because, let us be honest and admit it. Dramatics is, somehow, single-eyed to manipulate the audience - by the plot, by behavior, gesture and tone of the actors; by their emphasis; by the soundtrack, the clothing, the background, by the fast moves that captivate you and distort your perception about reality.

The elements that frame the character are, also, of major importance. For instance, the eyes: they look weird, one is pretty pronounced, and the other one is hardly noticeable; the two earrings in the left ear: one golden, pearl-bearing, the other one of silver, in the form of a cross. He hobbles or keeps a raised foot; or he trails one leg. He lacks one hand, or has a shorter and a longer one. He has a big scar on his face; a tattoo on the left shoulder. Or, a huge nose, like that of Cyrano de Bergerac.

An artist finds great pleasure in performing his role, regardless of that it would be, to exhibit his mastery whenever he had to perform a show. From the most insignificant moment: soaking in small and rare sips his coffee, to the topmost point: the brutally killing, with a sword, the hacker or the dagger of another character.

The artist must give a flawless performance, imitating reality, so that his dagger blow should seem to hurt much more heavily than at a first view.

Leadership: Are you polarizing people's interests or are you a Guest Star – in that the performance you achieve in art can act on the level of "feeling that is erased in you"?

A leader must be a very good professional, so good that he should be the one who plays the determinant role in the company. With text. With a lot of presence. With his own scene. Just like an artist, he must have charisma, to penetrate the heart of every employee, to change the perceptions of everyone after his own will. He must seduce them. To find those inspirational elements, to which would all resonate. To demonstrate a very active imagination. To create and to bring beauty around him.

Can you make performance by your own? Have you developed, just like an actor, the artistic and communication skills? Have you created a strong personality for yourself? Do you understand all the connotations of your role?

Or are you some kind of a Guest Star ("an invited star") as actors say – an erased character, sacrificed to the good of another?

Also remember what writer Cella Serghi said in the novel "On the spider thread of memory": I realize that I am not the person who arouses simple feelings and immeasurable certainty. Did you know that a talent can act like a vampire, sucking your blood, absorbing you?

The art of a leader, just like the one of an actor, involves the release of judgment (as power of thinking) of those constraints that do not fit into the optimal size of their domain of competence. And creating a character involves a complex construction. Your value cannot occur by chance. It takes a much deeper knowledge of things, a broader vision. First you need to reach the character's psychology and access it anytime by adjusting the intensity of the feeling you convey to those around, that feeling of the being not made false by the effect of an incredible scenography.

Leadership is the ambition of a quality, even brilliant acting, when the role you play can be taken over by someone else. A role played with that flexibility of the perspective that allows you an empathic understanding of fictional worlds built up by a scenario very close to being concretized.

Your personality must be manifested by an intensity of thought, through a magistral tempering of emotions, combined with a lot of charisma – from which emerges that the "show" that you perform, playing by your own score, is of an exceptional quality, but has a suitable price - which is reflected in loyalty and in their applauds.

If you will perform your role perfectly, and if you will succeed winning all people on your side - through the show that you create around you, then people will say: this is the work of a genuine artist.

Until an exceptional role has emerged that makes you the profile of a leader loved by the crowd, you should learn to understand things from an artist, considered obsolete or not, who knows how to make you vibrate and who can transmit a special emotion.

The artist is, on many occasions, the character that is detached from the universe in which the other characters of the play rotate, allowing a critical and harsh judgment at the address of others. He is, therefore, the "spokesman" of the author of the script, endowed with a superior ability to feel and understand.

Leadership, like the art of theatre, as well as the art of transforming diversity into unity, is the gift of an artist who knows how to ask and ask himself about the correctness of an interpretation, seeking himself in different roles.

The Masterpiece Of A True Artist is the emotional story of an artist who emerges not from him, by the role he plays with love, but from the other artists in full-roles that complete the show trying to make their own triumphant and well-deserved path.

Keep yourself in the leading position, by exercising your influence as an art, not as a science.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-masterpiece-of-a-true-artist.html

The Magic Pit Of The Masters

On October 27, 2010

Validate your assumptions about the effectiveness of your leadership through the influence of others on you.

In his new novel, "Aleph", the writer Paulo Coelho tells the following story:

- A man slipped and fell into a pit. A priest was passing by, and the man asked him to help him get up. The priest blessed him, but walked away. After several hours, a doctor appeared. The man asked for his help, but the doctor contented himself with looking at his bruises for a far distance, writing him a prescription and telling him to buy drugs from the nearest pharmacy. Finally, a strange man appeared. Again, he asked for his help, and the stranger jumped into the pit.

- And what now? We are both prisoners here ! The man said.

To which the stranger replied:

- No, we are not. I am from around and know how to get up.

Leadership: Is there a direct correspondence between your reaction to feeling overwhelmed by a situation (which serves to exceed your own limits of competence) and the reproach that you are not doing enough to get to know yourself better?

Certainly, attracting people to your side is the most profitable segment of leadership that, if you target directly, you will be able to increase your value. However, such an operation requires understanding people's perceptions, knowing their motivations and behavior, the ability to identify those attributes that make your leadership a place worth "visiting".

In order to evaluate your progress, you must segment your leadership as follows: a segment dominated by you – the influence, and a segment dominated by other people – the spirit of solidarity. Then, you must try to position yourself in an area where they are able to manifest their caring attitude and dominate it. And for that, you need to define very good your plan of attack – to turn into a prisoner and wait to be released.

Well, such a plan of attack is exactly the opposite way of thinking that prevails in leadership strategies, and that is why I do not encourage you to consider this strategy unless you are absolutely sure of it success.

Getting to know yourself better means going into more detail in the analysis of a situation that helps you evolve through the prism of what you could lose if you let yourself be defeated by it.

The binding agent that connects you to other people is the "pit" where you slip in difficult times. To manage to get out of there, you must first believe in people, and then expect those who are truly on your side to come and "visit" you – to join you and then help you get up.

Do you question their loyalty? Obtaining a substantial and lasting advantage depends on your ability to attract the (most profitable) segment dominated by people, demonstrating your skills in creating effective and lasting relationships.

Just as a photographic image is centered on a particular element to attract attention – so you must put emphasis on that segment of people who approach your leadership concepts and vision, and then bring to the same common denominator all those who have elected you to lead them. And this is sometimes very difficult to achieve if there isn't that kindness, spiritual availability and goodness on both sides.

To reproach yourself for not knowing yourself better is to judge the role you have to play in a situation where you are not willing to assert yourself as a man of great value.

The Masters' Magic Pit expresses that change in your leadership course. It is one of the decisive ways to optimize your leadership, which can ensure you long-term change in your performance.

Sometimes, people can help you rise higher only if you let them exercise their influence over you, only if you entrust yourself to them, which is risky because it can degenerate into manipulation. Moreover, if you show your preoccupation towards them, but you do not do any progress, then you will experience failure. Do not be afraid if you slipped into the pit, be afraid not to be left there by the people who have chosen you to lead them – but who didn't appreciate your qualities.

Do you focus on those attributes that transform your leadership into a place worthy "visiting"? Validate your assumptions about the effectiveness of your leadership through the influence of others on you.

Conclusion: One of the leader's skills must be to maintain himself on the highest level of the value scale and possibly climb higher, leading his team. This can only be achieved if your team is willing to climb together with the leader and it especially depends on its availability to change its way of thinking. The downside is, of course, descending on the value scale and even falling in the pit of helplessness, out of which you can rarely get out or you can remain there permanently, abandoned by your team. Very rarely will you find someone to help you get out of there.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-masters-magic-pit.html

The Master's Peerless Technique

On February 26, 2010

Make a great creation from your leadership, by adding those "color" effects that would determine the achievement of the desired performance level.

Have you ever wondered which it is the biggest desire of an artist?

The biggest desire of an artist is, probably, to discover the mysteries of art, of painting, and to succeed to conquer the eyes of all people.

In order to create an exceptional picture, so precisely, so clear and as well-defined as a photo, the painter needs a lot of inspiration, and a unique technique, superior, flawless. And only the interesting paintings demonstrate his proficiency. If the people's look does not remain animated of his work, as if they were enchanted, then he is not a great artist, and his working technique it is not unmatched.

Leadership: Do you report the potential of demonstrating your skill in achieving the prospective art performance, facilitating that defining understanding of what you are through a "heave-ho" under reference value?

In the heart of a true artist lies an endless power of creation, each new picture is more expressive, more beautiful and better performed than others. His art has all the crafts and all the elegancies, he likes to stir curiosity through unforeseen, sometimes to deceive the looks, through the games of color and funny illusions. "Heave-ho" is the motto of creating and promoting a concept of art stemming from two peculiarities: work experience in quality assurance and the experience of an emotion that produces a "Wow" state of thankful delight.

It is almost impossible to reach a higher level, to attend only success, if through the work that you display you do not become an exception in the eyes of all people – that would produce an "awakening" in their mind and soul. Your value is determined by your ability to make progress in the area in which you activate, and according to the results that you register.

Just as a painter, in order to achieve the finest effects must have a complex palette that does not stop at a limited number of colors - and so you, in order to make a great creation from your leadership, you must add those "color" effects to determine the achievement of the desired performance level. You must give him some gloss to your leadership, a specific gloss, so to not ever lose its charm. However, for that you must have a complex palette of techniques and tools that would allow you to get best results.

Gloss is a necessity required by relatively absolute forms of new image of your "brand" by a supersensitive knowledge of your creative nature as the unique and genuine cause of all self-assessment and social processes, which are the research object of the science that you cultivate, accessorizing it with that pronounced tone of constructive thinking that calls for originality, advantaging your pattern of self-expression and representing your style.

Leadership: Do you appreciate the true measure of your personal value through a "color" effect that volumes the tendencies and meaning of a stronger self-concept?

The measure your leadership talent is given by the value of your potential influence, that generous dose of magic, the concrete contribution that you bring in order to well exercise your authority. The more you own a better leadership technique, the more you will point higher, and the higher will be your ranking, thus you could maintain yourself at the height of your performance.

The "color" effect that strengthens the tendencies and meaning of a stronger self-concept is given by the experience of aligning yourself to a variety of elements, approaches, styles, and themes of widespread circulation in the collective mentality of others around the refinement of handling subtle situations and the refinement of traversing an artistic destiny with dignity.

The development of a leadership technique that would come to fulfill the needs of the organization and its staff is one of the key characteristics of a manager. The managers are also artists, through the way they carry on their activities, through the way they lead their organizations. Even so, very few of them hold a peerless leadership technique like the one used by Jack Welch, is not it? Few people manage to keep their organizations in the top during the crisis, like Lee Iacocca did, few succeeded to transform their organizations into a financial giant, like Bill Gates did, and hence, few people can be considered masters in the area of leadership.

The good news is that, just like a painter, talent is not necessary for an individual to become exceptional in the leadership position that he holds, but the technique that he developed in time, which he practices and uses all the time. If his leadership technique is effective, he will be exceptional, and then the company will be exceptional, as well.

There is a rule in leadership that it is less learned from the books, but more from the daily exercises, with the little or great successes or failures. Sometimes, it takes more, sometimes it takes less to raise your rank up to an art level. What it matters the most, though, is not self-evaluation as much as the evaluation of others, be they "smaller" or "bigger" than you.

The reference value of a leader stems from the exceptional destiny with which an artist prides himself after exhibiting the most outstanding creations in a single recognizable and unmistakable matrix called the "resizing of the inner reality".

An important thing for those who aspire in holding the art of leadership is the fact that it has a personal and an inimitable character.

The Master's Peerless Technique can be represented by a combination of three orientations: production of value in favor of a refined, suggestive self-evaluation through the very image that is at the center of the overall attention and the evaluation of the performances gained by striving to achieve maximum expressionism from various existentialist themes.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-masters-peerless-technique.html

The Mastery Of The Art Of Being Santa Claus

On December 25, 2018

Interpretation of a fabulous image is in the direction of the endeavor to define the immense fertile of a different existence.

We have taken faith in Santa Claus as a foray into a fiction necessary for artistic expression through a whole development of spiritual symbolism that is found, I believe, only in the existential conception of the intellectual who has dedicated all his curiosity and independence to the thought of deciphering an alternate universe. An area of rethinking and recycling information, under the umbrella of a vast artistic current that I would call "Magical Realism" because it originates from the works of Jorge Luis Borges or Alejo Carpentier.

And this Santa Claus, best known for the gift given to those who have demonstrated merit or kindness, can also be celebrated by someone who is not necessarily religious, but who is able to make combinations of thoughts, ideas, images, deeds, things, sensations, used interactively and truthfully in a collage of images created through comparisons, metaphors, or personifications.

As for the chances of getting a different answer to the question: "Where can you meet Santa Claus?" in a time when everything, almost everything, is treated in terms of the impact that the expression of the primary condition of originality (specific to a person impregnated with a very sharp spirit for adventure) generates, we must first take into account the perceptions of persistent forms or the passing of the dream that the painter experiences every time he is around his paintings.

Art is not to be impregnated with the expression of a passing existence or the mirage of a world that expects to emphasize the hue beyond things and appearances, but with the space of the suspension of a moving story, because there is a pass between two cycles of great suggestive force, between two questions. To which world do I belong: the one left behind or the one that I hope for and want to revisit?

Leadership: Can you define the meaning of the artistic trajectory after the idea of the transition from suggestion to image to outline the existence of a unique model of exposing a theme of reflection on the relationship between subject and space-time?

Santa Claus was not born in Lapland because his story had to belong to an adorable winter landscape, cheerful children and reindeer led sleds, but because the living presence of a universal hero had to be ensured, a promising example of a wide-eyed dreaming, without extinction had to be assured. And so, to reveal the hidden hideout of an essentially spiritual vision of good and happiness attached to different states of mind, coarse or refined.

Still, I embrace a subject that follows evolution in the form of figurative suggestions, usually loaded with increased expressive density, such as "The Creator and the Old Man Beyond the Picture", generating epic transformations. There is a spiritual flow of energies that unites the generations from the beginnings to today, tomorrow and the day after tomorrow, a kind of psychological necessity that establishes direct relationships between things and people, between illusion and reality.

Here the meaning of the experience of receiving the forms of expression produced by the pound of a deep-sea poet does not fall upon a gifted person with unlimited possibilities to meet the most frequent expectations as soon as possible on a rush of looking forward to the tree with lights, equating to the amplification of a form of magnitude stimulating and visionary sensitivity in the brush technique.

It is amazing that the interpretation of a fabulous image, perhaps inspired by a mythological scenario full of symbolic load, is in the direction of striving to define the immense fertile of a different existence. One explored from an artistic perspective, so with a potential for training around a tendency to make aesthetic the description of the type "Feel the unreal of a poetic vision".

Leadership: Can you increase the impact of some fine arts extraction procedures in an attempt to substitute for a mentality that goes through fiction?

Once again, I feel like losing myself in the shaping of a horizon that does not really exist, from the presence of an artist who can transform the word into image (and vice versa), from the desire to possess another being that does not fit into beliefs and limited rules of life. Especially the need to give a new interpretation of a controversial figure.

Usually, the first sensation I have about Santa Claus when I hear about him is that of a strong thrill like a reunion with God, perceived as a reason for the holiness influence of a teaching of faith that was as easy as possible at first. Thus, the process of extracting artistic emotions, such as sensitivity or impressibility, is accomplished by reference to a permanent visual symbol, meant to evoke a spiritual awakening: "Santa Claus crosses the starry sky at night with his flying reindeer."

I'm not stopping here. I try to get closer to Santa Claus, as I approach a God who haunts the dreams of those who think too much of them, reappearing periodically under the spell of an ever more surprising story. In this case, the art that nourishes the feeling of peace and soul fulfillment must convince the validity of an artistic fiction that captivates through my dreams transposed on the canvas, with the idea of becoming the dreams of the viewers.

The painter does not place his most representative hero in the midst of a mysterious view of reality beyond what is palpable, just for the sake of shaping a new theme of wide circulation. But he tries to suggest the emotion of a story illustrated suggestively through a vivid coloring and an astonishing message that puts his own personality in the process of perfecting an unparalleled work in art.

Leadership: Can your art adhere to an imaginative ideal through an illustration of reality interpreted only by the artist's vision that can give a broader sense to his emotions by addressing a theme that is becoming more and more current?

In a letter sent to the goldsmith Gaspare Ballini, later became famous, Italian writer Lodovico Dolce (1508/10-1568) stated: "The paintings must move the feelings and passions of the soul so that the one who looks must either rejoice or be disturbed by the nature of the subject, as do the poets or the orators. Characters must move the viewer's soul either by disturbing it, or by cheering it, or by exhorting it to pity or anger, depending on the subject."

I have always posed the issue of the feeling reflected in a visual, but tentative adaptation after a life lived through the power of fiction to spur in the future elements of artistic expression, such as the bells of the sleigh drawn by reindeer.

Santa Claus adheres to the endearing alternation of a nineteenth-century character through the pendulation between illusion and reality, headed step by step toward the continuous metamorphosis of forms of imaginative imagery to give a broader sense of emotion through a play of endless analogies. Analogies not only with certain saints or different spiritual experiences, but also with the notions of art theory (e.g. overlapping frames) and figurative representations that reproduce the "syntax" of a fictional universe.

The most appreciated features of Santa Claus no longer penetrate the art of the present only by formulating the symbol of wisdom and faith, but by exaggerating an aesthetic form already existing in the field of art. The beauty is not celebrated by the sensibility of the holiday air, but becomes the symbol of a world that ultimately links to another. Thus, the features of Santa Claus are no longer just the image of the soul in the mirror, which is capable of cheering up, giving, giving good, but emphasizing the need to visualize the abstract and transcend the visible.

Santa Claus is a shift from symbolism articulated in a fairly primitive manner, to the imaginary tributary of an everlasting memory.

The Mastery Of The Art Of Being Santa Claus is actually the mastery of the art of distorting the standard version of a known subject, to reach another end, reacting with a visible metaphorical conception of a world that is constantly being rechecked to rebuild its meanings and reinterpret messages.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mastery-of-the-art-of-being-santa-claus.html

The Matter And Truth

On July 07, 2013

Comply with the duties to your science, even if the others aren't willing to accept the unknown truths it uncovers.

While I was trying to understand the basic priorities of the matter which made up the Secret, appropriately distilling a small quantity of the endless elixir of the energy which contributed to creating and maintaining a certain vision, I felt as if a cold draft went through my mind and took hold of it. If any fiction writer had tried to describe me in such a moment, through a horizontal line of free associations, hypnotically expanded in a world-empire, I would probably have been seen as some kind of inventory of symbols, pedantry or presumptuous, close to an unknown ontological stage of the world.

Defensive impulses followed one after the other at very short intervals in my mind, as if induced and triggered by an unseen signal that warned me about repeating certain mistakes. These tension states occur frequently amongst scientists that try to prove, in their laboratories, certain unknown and unexplainable phenomena, twisting every truth and untruth in order to find an explanation where none is known. It was as if I a restrictive thinking was taking hold of me more and more.

As a man in want of sensations, I thought only about the apparently stable combination where its constitutive elements could determine a new configuration of the Secret. In the homogenous catalysis, the catalyst and reagents resulted in different purification phases. Thus, I could extract from the content of the Secret I barely had access to, new properties only if I managed to retain 55% of the pure particles of meanings and senses that it emanated at every step, before they got scattered until elimination. The processing technique for the precious content was amongst the most advanced at that time.

Leadership: What role are you willing to take in a vision that can be experienced based on truths that cannot be unanimously accepted, knowing that what you think is just your interpretation of things around you?

But nonetheless, what was causing the destabilizing of the energy triggering particle system? Why couldn't I stabilize them? I had to start all over again, like that chemist in the movie "Darkman". Constantly. Patiently. Objectively. I didn't care how long it took, I knew that the formula for accomplishing the mystery was there, waiting for me to uncover it. Ah, I could feel it, I could smell it ! Unfortunately I had only one piece of the puzzle. And there were so many great question marks.

In the middle of so many unsuccessful experiences, I remained pretty lucid. I knew that I was on the right way; the others' opinions were indifferent for me. Because I was sure that I would be right eventually, not the people who refuted or laughed at my research. Basically, I was playing the role of an enigma seeker, this time as a being compatible only with the need to control one's purpose and destiny, without taking into account the directions imposed by other people's point of view.

Even if the chilliness with which they had received my ideas, would have presented reasons to be worried, even if the other scientists, while making certain comparisons with their knowledge would have had at least one objection or would have challenged me to a dispute, or would have ridiculed me, I knew nothing could make me bitter.

Because that is the faith of the unknown truth, to be rejected at first, exactly by those visionary spirits that should have accepted it. Moreover because only I came to experience truth, to fully know it and to turn it into other truths, without turning the fundamental principle they're based on into something relative.

Leadership: Does the way in which you understand and manipulate science develop many patterns of a new wave of depreciation or overestimation of personal value, in a context of "deviation from the realism of objectives accepted as sine qua non of the sensitive world"?

Does a restrictive thinking take hold of you more and more? Amidst unsuccessful experiences do you keep your lucidity as much as possible? Ar you sure of the fruit of your science, even if others refute or ridicule your work and ideas?

You will never be able to keep your distance from science as long as your professionalism, knowledge and skills in a field occupy an important place in your daily "diet". Your real leader qualities, most visible through your way of thinking and through the way in which you understand an manipulate science, develop more patterns of a new wave of depreciations or overestimations of your personal value, which can lower or rise your success rate.

The Secret or essence which consists in the substantiality of new knowledge brings a whole variety of "active safety functions" to a common denominator. These and only these grant you the strength to be centered, stable in the relationship with yourself in the process of becoming. In my case, the objectives accepted as sine qua non of the sensitive world, that is, of a world that is not entirely open to the new, were delimited by the effects of a thought that, not recognizing its own limits, takes its operational effectiveness as an absolute rule (from which I was not going to make any deviation).

"The active safety functions" are a group of instructions that you follow in order to fulfill those tasks that lead you to a superior understanding of how leadership works and to a wider access to that science available exclusively to the most eminent, cultivated and talented minds. Instructions such as: "I will do everything I can to support the development of science" or "I cannot move away from the ideal model of the perfect man I aspire to be", leave room for an exaggerated belief in one's own abilities, that is, a vivid digging into what regards one's own person.

These functions also grant you more trust and safety when using your own science with the purpose of developing efficient capacities and identifying alternative sources for obtaining some new truths and exploiting them into practice.

Just like in any game, a player can pick his strategies based on the opponent's actions, you can do the same so that your leadership can be updated into a new stable configuration which separates pure knowledge from empirical knowledge, you must compose and understand well enough the "matter" that you incorporate in your science. So that it contributes to creating and maintaining a certain vision.

Leadership: Are you wasting the chance to take ownership of your science by taking the initiative to manifest your personal power and control over discoveries that can extend the coordinates of a vision, but cannot translate it into something feasible?

If you manage to make yourself truly guilty of "a priori conceptualizations", of abstract generalizations, it is a sign that the basic priorities of the matter that makes up your science are consecutively manifested upon a continuously rising request for too fanciful visualizations and representations. Once you've reached this evolutionary stage, inevitably the other people in the field after making certain comparisons with their knowledge will ridicule you and refute your knowledge.

In this case, your leadership must have at hand all warfare methods that define its three sides: attack, defense and maneuver. In order to see the light and develop itself, science must be installed, must leave the possibility for an exception to the rules, revised when necessary, but never hindering its effective manifestation.

If you want your leadership to reach its highest purposes, comply with the duties to your science, even if the others aren't willing to accept the unknown truths it uncovers.

To transpose a vision into something feasible means to call upon the elements of science to suggest an eloquent and constructive truth that can be understood and accepted by all people, even if it cannot influence too much, even if it cannot be considered THE MAIN CAUSE of evolution.

The Matter and Truth highlights the assembly of analysis and synthesis processes that will dictate the strategy adopted in order to recognize and accept that modus operandi chosen by the leader. To convince means to obtain acknowledgement and to win trustworthy allies in order to reach the common goal.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-matter-and-truth.html

The Maximum Point Of The Human Alienation Of The World (part II)

On February 01, 2013

Contribute with ideas and suggestions to the symbolic representation of the "New Man", passing all creative experiences through personal analysis.

A necessity, an experiment? In the previous article I was telling you that Harold J. Morowitz tried to assess in money the value of a man at the price of the biochemical product catalogs. In my turn, I tried to recreate the world and universe, through the promotion of an alternative vision.

The only thing that separates me from this bio-physician, because a comparison is always made between two uncommon minds, between two mental images that guide cultural contacts and determines their content, is that I have always used my pen and ink to figure out a reality, without reference to the value of a reference constant.

How can you evaluate the share of your progress? Through what is defined your vision? Is it through a complaint of the real present? How can you accurately represent "the local color" of your own work? Are you heading towards an unexpected destination, inaccessible to others that aspire for a leadership status? What are you in the bosom of the great course of transition towards perfection, which flows from one infinity to another?

It is so easy to pull the curtains and limit your horizons, someone said. However, the excellence in leadership occurs when you unleash these three constants of yours, vision, imagination, creativity, the core of your transformation, the key of your progress, the true demonstration of the immense influence magnitude that your "doctrine" has over the modern human society.

Leadership: What goes beyond your preferences for a particular style of thinking and how do you relate to the supreme value that could give meaning to your life, so that to keep the most important constant of your performance?

If I wanted to define my vision, I would redirect my attention to what wrote on her blog, the journalist, Raluca Rebedea Zenga, the wife of the famous Italian football player, Walter Zenga. She said the following: "Nothing is more enjoyable than to mix colors on a palette, to see the pigment migrating in spectacular fusions, perfectly mirroring the image that I had in mind."

The lack of art's performance is partly due to the impossibility of "mixing colors" into a single creation, on a single surface, in order to obtain a uniform composition.

In fact, what characterizes an artistic style of great value is the style of thinking you usually use to explain and express reality: power, reason, interest, quality. And behind the preferences for this style are the creative experiences passed through personal analysis, through the symbolic representation of the "New Man" or by altering the end of some actions through a metaphor or hyperbole.

The supreme value a scientist can give to the meaning of his life lies in the boldness in which he expresses the word "tolerance" in rendering any horizon advancing on the path of progress, without condemning the virtue of making a symbiosis between imagination and innovation.

His creative experiences, embodied in blueprints or patterns of thought used to perceive, understand, and interpret reality, retain the most important constant of his performance: the ability to see farther than others and to verify the truth of the premise upon which his demonstrations of vision are based.

Leadership: Can you define your vision through a breakthrough that would appear unitarily at first glance in terms of its context of interpretation, so that your reason rises above the common perception of the world?

Be like the one of the great innovative spirits: keep yourself in the ruler platoon of the performers. Let your mentality be crossed by that active power, exponentially growing: opening towards new. Do not subordinate yourself to a conventional system of thinking with thin branches, dense et inégale. In leadership, what matters is the vision you make from dreams, not the one that is shaped by the development of scientific theories, just for the sake of proving you have the IQ of a genius.

Adapt your leadership's "menu" to suit those aspirations and preferences much wider, less classical, and closer to the future. Continually add new ingredients to your vision, a little pepper, or to your taste, a little cinnamon, make it spicier or sweeter. Shed a new light over the foundations and principles, with which you sow your leadership through discoveries that would appear at first sight unitary in terms of the context of interpreting the vision.

Such an interpretation of vision can be formulated as follows: "Stay faithful to the image that you have of yourself in a future to which you belong by affinity to the requirements of an autonomous thinking."

Your reason can rise above the common perception of the world if it dares to be a different pattern of awakening to a reality that is taken into account by the sensitive intuition in favor of the imaginary who, in increasing intensity, gradually gets the outline of a successful lesson on the impossible (under the protection of an immortal story).

The maximum point of the human alienation from the world symbolizes the most important step towards future, the symbol of your professional progress, which can resize your own limitations. A small part of an alchemy, of which well-kept secrets emerge after you get used to the "new and unknown". It is the compensation that you need towards the feeling of "abandonment" of a unanimously accepted reality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-maximum-point-of-the-human-alienation-of-the-world

The Maximum Point Of The Human Alienation Of The World (part I)

On February 01, 2013

Start looking for a new dimension of understanding and knowing leadership, without getting subordinated to a conventional reference system.

Do you remember that biochemist, Harold J. Morowitz, who had the curiosity to calculate the cost of a man, translated into the component materials, at the price of the biochemical products' catalogs? A gram of a man costs on average $ 245.54, while the whole body costs around six million dollars.

This doubtful calculation (for some aberrantly, but still plausible, medically speaking or scientifically) of our biochemist, who has narrowed to his specific field, somehow resembled with my scheme of thinking. Based on it I shaped a world of quantity and measure, the fundamentals of a new approach to the relationship between epistemology and ontology in terms of the cost involved in the emergence of a new creation. Just as "adorned" of calculations and predictions I was too.

At me, the calculation embodied in itself much more than that: it embodied all the possible scenarios for the future of my existence organised under the umbrella of a mathematical thinking that tries to prove that a certain equation can be solved by an algebraic formula. But, I did not try to assess in money the value of a man, but I was trying to recreate the world and universe through the promotion of an alternative vision.

A utopia, a naivety or a customization of the reality? A necessity, an experiment, something you can think of without having the feeling that you should ask for approval?

Science requires answers, but first of all it asks questions. Could I accurately represent something that could not exist, the illusion, the local color of my own works, two imagined worlds, passed through the same mixer of analysis and detail, but totally different? Two parallel worlds, well-defined, finalized, and adapted to suit my own expectations and preferences?

Leadership: Are you preoccupied with the experience of understanding the depth of a world created by your own rules, a world of yours that forces you to integrate within it the vision of the reality that you want to move away from?

I was fascinated by the mirage of new worlds of science. Worlds that could come alive, following to be freely explored only by those consciousnesses that were not subordinated to a conventional system of thinking, with thin branches,dense et inégale. Worlds, ready for a progressive development, intertwined with another kind of knowledge, by an universal energy stored in a capacitor, inserted in a continuous circuit of perceptions and perspectives, representations, functions clearly defined between them, having a common denominator: openness towards new.

Worlds, totally inaccessible to ordinary people, tangible only for the big developers, alchemists, those desperados of progress and of the rapid evolution, armored with the power to transform the obscure elements into clear and promising structures. Approved worlds, covered with the mind only by the large innovative spirits that kept themselves in the ruler platoon of the performers.

Often, I got entangled in inevitably compromising combinations, of ideological, spiritual or human nature. The exaggerated tendency, in the search for another dimension of understanding and knowing. The achievement of an intellectual ideal, sharp as a sword, with unexpected consequences, relative - sweet and misleading, but with a destructive potential, in a timeless present.

Science is a part of the magic of knowing and overcoming your limits, with the risk of losing yourself in details, in a multitude of information, in virtual reality, in the waves of interpretations. So you have to maintain a good management of the innovation fund, whose main value is that of being predictable.

And the reality that you want to move away from through the act of creation can never be placed in the edifice of illusion, because it looks at you from the angle of the present, from the angle of beliefs you respect to the end, and has a certain "field of view" regarding the impressions, emotions, sensations, opinions you make, moment after moment, about the world, life, change and dreams.

Can you set yourself up as an authority in the field of leadership by not being worth just what you are or become, but also by discovering what you mean in a process of absolute creation?

In a process of absolute creation, in which only God could have become my partner, I risk falling into a sort of admiration pushed to the extreme of everything that is change, to what is fragile, threatened, unique. My form of expression in scientific language, considering myself the follower of a unique and fictional vision, was also very ambiguous, understood only by a penetrating spirit that can crush any adversity in battle with that shadowy tone that discipline anyone who dares to resist its ideas.

Something wrapped in silence. A glimmer of light appeared in my imagination, haunted me, and urged me with an irresistible energy towards an unexpected and inaccessible destination. I was confused by the shadow of perfection that sometimes contorted the notion of the truth, offering a superficial and incomplete picture of the reality. Science came before my eyes as the highest level of knowledge made up of the laws and principles of an old wisdom that says that everything has two handles it can be carried by: one which makes it difficult to carry, and one which makes it easy (depends on what you want to do with it and what use you give to it).

A discovery that sheds a new light over the foundations and principles, supported by me, a large number of worlds could be comprised by my horizon. Resizing my own limits, a small part of an alchemy, whose secrets, I was wholly striving to master them, helped me find a multitude of development opportunities, and well-developed future scenarios.

I was determined to make from myself a force that orders the universe on the time scale. Was that possible?

Leadership: What do you represent within the great course of transition to perfection, compared to the image of an alternative vision that truly affects the world in a practical and concrete way?

A question, apparently trivial, that I addressed for several times in my webinars, is this: "Where you should develop yourself, and up to what level?"

It is not enough to develop your leadership, for being able to transform a company or the people around you. Just as it is not enough to know the physics and chemistry of the "spatial worlds" in order to reach the moon or to understand the universe. You need the power to put into practice what you know or what you imagine that can become the future.

Otherwise, within the great course of transition to perfection, you will refer to yourself as a God who would favor a reality to the detriment of another, a God who does not interact directly with man – but with the genetic material of man, the brain and the system nervous.

To make possible this leap towards the true performance, towards a "higher", towards a "beyond" to the level of consciousness and knowledge, sufficiently elevated for understanding leadership, you must go through an intensive process of change. One in which to manifest that great side, that quality that meets the highest requirements of present and future: the attempt or rather the spontaneity and strength to create original visions. A customization of reality, but a necessity, an experiment, something to which you always have to think about.

Like a true battle front, the horizon that you daily scrutinize, the basic engine of the individual evolution, this landmark hard to overcome of all the features that differentiates you from the rest of the world, marks the trend of the leadership and of the personal development.

The horizon it is so an important authority, so common regarding the acceptance and implementation of an alternative, of another way of perceiving the "Now's" rallying to a different kind of mentality - "lateral" as it was called by Edward de Bono that is foreign for others, because they even do not want to understand it.

The great accomplishment of science is subsumed into the alternative vision of a great intellectual creation from the field of power, even though this vision resembles a wandering that detracts from the true meaning of our existence.

The vision, imagination, creativity, their welding, this fusion from which results only one strong player, who will benefit of real competitive advantages - un puissant leadership will accompany you constantly in the evolutionary path, ascending, passed from the common state of functioning, when you are not doing anything, but mixing some "colors on the palette" up to that state of "awakening" when you are mixing all the ingredients and spice up to your own taste.

The Maximum Point Of The Human Alienation Of The World is the level of performance reached by people who believe in a much wider vision, bringing in divergent views of closely related areas: science, technology, architecture, and engineering. But we should not exaggerate, moving away from spirituality. For as a great physicist said:

"Science without Spirituality limps, and Spirituality without Science is blind."

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-maximum-point-of-the-human-alienation-of-the-world

The Meaning Of Man In A Dream Called Reality

On May 18, 2021

The dream is a sublimated world whose reality, transposed on a higher plane of existence, can develop uplifting feelings, of an intellectual nature.

My life seems to be the story of a doubling of my being, due in part to a kind of penetration into a dream that impresses me to such an extent that even now I feel like I am drawn to an extraordinary spiritual force. It is also a characteristic of the refined artist who, excelling in the richness of fantasy, acquires doubling through the force and discursive charm of an experience of transforming objective reality into a unique inner universe.

It is not in vain that my creation is given to such a lofty dream that very few can comprehend with the mind, with the soul, with that instinct of art which accepts the understanding of symbolism only through a strenuous endeavor.

Leadership: Is the image with which you can transform your reality a reconnection to that part of you that has the courage to accept that what you have become is really what you lack?

After all, the dream is just a dream, but inside it there is life, there are wonderful works of art, there is everything that is not seen in the reality of the ordinary world, being perceived through a magnifying glass of a reinterpreted version of truths hidden under the shadow of changing appearances. If this is the case, then an artist can only be the dreamer who dreams and then lives in a dream.

And if the dream makes me feel that I rise above all ambiguous, ambivalent, too complex situations, constituted from the perspective of a world that has decided to keep only material things during its lifetime, this is due to the humility with which the spiritual man immerses himself in the sensitive physical man, looking forward to something that God has promised, which has not yet been created, but has been dreamed in order to become an immortal creation.

Somehow, I lack the power to accept that what I represent in this world is not an act of knowledge by which, in ordering meanings, a specific meaning is introduced. Rather, what I am is closely linked to the possibility of involuntary reflection in a perpetual, but anonymous and immaterial existence, from which the practical aspects of life seem to have disappeared altogether.

And if I am part of a dream shaped by the artist's soul,superiori potentia spiritualis submissionem, it is because in the dream I am always more open with myself. Discursive strength and charm acquire such a doubling of mine, as a second person included in the dialogue-monologue between reflection and imagination, between perception and illusion. After all, art is the dream of all creation that repeats itself endlessly through the same dreamers.

Leadership: Can you induce through self-suggestion another image of your being, so that what you project in the dimensions of creation and reality opens a window between time and space?

Such considerations led me to a differentiated aesthetic of the permanence of my transformation. I became someone else, visibly distinguished by nuances other than that of storing personal vitality in a multilayered cosmopolitanism, in any of the ways of contact with my gaze from another world, from another reality.

I understood that the extent of my mind is wider than heaven and earth, immortale et aeternae, similar to that of sublime spirits attached to the multiplicity of states of existence reflexively manifested through a Vidhysonsum(unity of multiplicity, o unitas multiplex).

Long ago, I realized that every human being is part of a creation that was first a dream, then a reality. The other art forms: musical, visual, linguistic, conventional or unconventional, adopt a dynamic point of view, as required by the nature of things. But in order to reach the level of "work of art", that is, to have the quality of being an expressive and original autotelic embodiment, they must pass through the filter of subjectivity, through the intransigent filter of a third eye that has a spiritual connection with an evolutionary state of consciousness.

I wonder if I'm not part of some dream, which does not leave a visible impression. Or maybe they are the very projection of my creation from reality. Is another metamorphosis of my being waiting to take place? Because the only work of art that reflects my reality is a distinct form of thinking, a form of manifestation of the subconscious that consists of a succession of images that make me live a transformative experience, a step towards self-knowledge.

Leadership: Can you filter through your individuality all the material of direct experience, as well as the suggestions from the images seen in a new context that offers a lot of information about a "sublimated" world?

The dream is like a library that recovers books lost or degraded over time. And if I have ever been wise, and because the great wisdom comes from the study of arts and aesthetics, it is because I recognized in my dream another image of my syncretic being. And also in a dream a rose appeared to me, a symbol of the divine mystery, whose seal is DISTINCTION and SINCERITY, puritati et nobilitatis. And this very library is exactly what Umberto Eco talks about in his majestic novel: "In the Name of the Rose":

"None but two people enter the last level of the Edifice. Nobody has to. Nobody can. No one, even if they wanted to, would succeed. The library defends itself, it is as impenetrable as the truth it hosts, as deceptive as the lies it preserves. Labyrinth of the mind, it is also an earthly labyrinth. You can come in, but you can't go out. And with that being said, I would like you to obey the rules of the abbey."

Another image of my being is born from these considerations, understood and confessed by a librarian whose determination has become the story of my life. And it must not seem absurd to me that the ignorant of the art and philosophy behind the symbols reject this image.

One thing is for sure: if one day you meet me in a dream with deep meanings, without knowing what I look like or how my voice sounds, it is because your horizon has opened in front of a creation that you can only understand by believing. Step into my library, into the endless space of my thoughts, and if they enjoy any passage, time will never erase them from your memory.

The creation to which the dream transformed into reality corresponds is, first of all, an understanding of what happens inside the psychic structure of an artist whose universe is defined by "the oscillation between figurative and abstract".

The Meaning Of Man In A Dream Called Reality is to discover the other side of his nature, the artistic one, which never had a chance to shine. Remember that the highest creation of an artist is to capture reality in a dream that does not fail to amaze by an optical illusion, by an inexhaustible imaginative capacity.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-meaning-of-man-in-a-dream-called-reality.html

The Mechanic's Guide

On October 12, 2010

Direct your steps to a better path, reassessing the way you clarify your leadership principles.

In the exciting detective novel "Ten Little Indians" of the famous writer Agatha Christie, the killer, after managing to implement his meticulous diabolical plan, to kill all his guests on the Indian's Island, revealed by an anonymous letter how things happened: how he managed to kill every one of them, with how much skill, trickery and artfulness he acted throughout those few days, the way he concealed, with great care and attention, his true identity – the way he played his role, with how much skill and artistry he fooled everyone, absolutely each and every one of them.

His confession, which was to be closed in a sealed bottle and tossed in the waves of the sea, before he took his own life in a particularly original way, ends like this:

„It was my ambition to invent a murder mystery that no one could solve. But no artist, I now realize, can be satisfied with art alone. There is a natural craving for recognition which cannot be gainsaid. I have, let me confess it in all humility, a pitiful human wish that someone should know just how cleaver I have been…"

Leadership: Are you able to find your true inner authority in a permanent outer determination that can help identify the cause of a vision capable of becoming a vocation?

This story, splendid by the plot it develops, by the exceptional game played by the killer, whose identity is revealed at the very end, reminds us a simple thing. That the most influential people can obtain in the daily reality an extraordinary performance, and that's just to show how skilled they are at using their minds. In fact, this challenge to use your mind in the most skillful way possible is the strength of an inner authority that constantly tells you to be as functional, as authentic, as influential as possible in relation to other people.

But every influential man plays his role in accordance with his nature, shaping his character in a manner ideal to his vision. This murderer, by the professionalism with which he has designed and carried out his plan, this "leader" by his power to make rules, by his strong (but destructive) character, by his power to induce a certain state to others, had, with no doubt, that confidence in his personal power, which he knew to handle with clockwork precision.

He is a good example, firstly of the power of thought – because thought masters your facts, then of the power of imagination – because imagination creates your vision. But can the mechanic within such a man discover the place where lies hidden the wheel that, once set in motion, brings about total, lasting success? No. He can't. Or he can, but only to a certain point.

But be careful ! The outward determination that can help identify the cause of a vision capable of becoming a vocation is the challenge of proving to other people that you are far above them, which can lead to overcoming the limits of any normal imagination. In fact, the cause of a vision capable of becoming a vocation can be an opportunity to test your intelligence in an original way, but it can also be an opportunity to expand your thinking by re-evaluating your self-beliefs.

Leadership: Can you be the arbiter of your own character by identifying the cause of a self-image that automatically corrects your thinking mistakes by focusing on the feelings that fuel your vanity?

Someone said: "The true magnitude and nobleness of a man is measured by his power to subject his feelings, and not by the power of his feelings to subject him."

Just as an arbiter is forced – by his behavior – to continuously remind the players the limits permitted by regulation and sport ethics, so you, in order to raise your nobleness level – which makes you a truly valuable man, must remind yourself the limits imposed by human ethics, and never breach the rules absolutely necessary for a proper functioning – in accordance with the leadership model imposed by others. To ask more from others, firstly, you must ask more from yourself – by your strength to submit your feelings. As arbiter of your own destiny, you must be able to stop the game between good and evil when your negative side is overwhelming in the detriment of others.

Are you an example for others? As a leader, are you firstly an advocate of great principles governing and controlling conduct in human relationships? Do you cultivate your potential in the light of other people's feelings? Which one do you consider to be the negative aspect of your potential?

The self-image that automatically corrects your thinking errors has as a substrate your reflection in a consciousness that has discovered the sadness that is (often) given by the momentum of the desire to validate and affirm intelligence.

Remember that the feelings that fuel your vanity, such as enmity, arrogance or grandiosity, are in fact needs stemming from frustration, and they do nothing but cling to you and bring you down in a state of tension and stress. Self-guilt will eventually destroy you, grind you down until nothing is left of you.

The Mechanic's Guide is, actually, the way to yourself, which helps you rebuild and fortify the foundation of your leadership. But, for this, you must identify exactly that "problem wheel", which shows a wrong level of your character, and fix it before the whole mechanism breaks down.

Conclusion: As a leader, you just make the difference between good and bad, so you must build your principles on ethics and a deontology established by the "normal" of human society. Your ideas and vision, as well as your behavior, must be oriented towards the upper limit of the "normal" established by the human society through different legal provisions, but also by that common sense learnt from our predecessors, which should be true guidelines directing our steps on the appropriate path, towards achieving a purpose beneficial to us all.

Direct your steps to a better path, reassessing the way you clarify your leadership principles.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mechanic-guide.html

The Meeting Place For The Masterpieces Of Human Work

On April 13, 2013

Be a prominent figure in the profession you practice along your journey to the land of perfection, by acting with high effects on that individualized part of your own formation base.

What follows are some of those memories, plus assorted snapshots from the somewhat more coherent days of my adolescence and young manhood. This is not an autobiography. It is, rather, a kind of curriculum vitae—my attempt to show how one writer was formed. Not how one writer was made; I don't believe writers can be made, either by circumstances or by self-will (although I did believe those things once). The equipment comes with the original package. Yet it is by no means unusual equipment.

I believe large numbers of people have at least some talent as writers and storytellers, and that those talents can be strengthened and sharpened. If I didn't believe that, writing a book like this would be a waste of time.

This is how it was for me, that's all—a disjointed growth process in which ambition, desire, luck, and a little talent all played a part. *****

Leadership: Can you achieve greatness of a true creator of possible universes, without gathering a variety of personalized options of your thinking and developing pattern?

Who is a more prominent figure in the profession they practice along their journey to the land of perfection: a man that bring to light the meanings of the freedom of speech, especially in the meaning given by the interpretation of the relation "will-circumstances", or a man that discovers the true stake of life and acts with greater effects on that individualized side of their formation base?

This is a dilemma more than useful, that has repercussions on leadership, and that we exclude out of the equation of our necessity to creatively adapt to our optimum life cycle, whose unknown that we want to find out is the ampleness that the human intellectual capital reaches. You don't have to be a writer to relate to "the source of all things that could be imagined in yourself". But leaders who don't want to gather, correctly, out of their own initiative, a variety of options for personalizing their thinking and developing pattern, won't be able to achieve great things.

Leadership is a continuous development process where ambition, desire, luck and a little talent are essential. These are the "equipments" of the original package of those who want to break themselves off from the leading platoon at the marathon of life. But the greatness that honors leadership is that spark of talent that arouses the inner thirst for pursuing to the end the perspectives of approaching and relating the epic events required by the feeling of control over your destiny.

Leadership: Are you able to recreate the true battlefield of human perfection in order to achieve the performance required by the force of a destiny between "writer and story"?

The director's specific thinking and development model is found in "the way he uses space, building each story in a different "room" – which allows him to place his characters in the most appropriate place to grow in (scenic) truth, so that, at the last moment, he turns his almost perverse weapons against everything he had built before." (https://yorick.ro).

Where does our continuous thirst of knowledge or our inhibition when it comes to asking so many questions come from? Where does this passion for education/science that gives the addiction promoted by leaders for anyone around them, old and young on one side, and for spectacular ways of professing on the other, come from?

Where does the love of leaders to manifest themselves like a mechanism of making the most of their own work, like a natural strategy to fix their own existence come from? Where are the springs of this gigantic river of attributes that invade the inner world by fertilizing this whole art of leading? Their meaning is that of identifying, of describing and evaluating its potentially significant effects on ascension, as a result of intensifying the daily activities. The famous writer, Victor Hugo said this with simpler words: "The true face of the battle, here it is. It's this meeting place of all masterpieces of human work."

The things that support and develop the leadership based on a solid consolidation of the capacity to "produce" science, resonate with the indispensable foundation of any knowledge of one's self and of that's why it's greeted with certain resistance. The only valid point of view in taking a golden mean towards understanding yourself, towards forming your own identity that allows you to integrate and to adapt to every trial of your becoming, is that of some learning, working and creation experiences that stimulate intellectual activity.

The feeling of control over destiny can be addressed by telling an epic event when you are in the position of a writer who creates his own story.

The Meeting Place Of All Masterpieces Of Human Work is all about those professional aspects that become heavier with every step you take towards the best option to use your evolutionary resources. It also regards the capacity to communicate and to share your own experience that give a creative force to those that want to step out of the shadows and evolve on an ascendant path, as sole purpose of their lives.

 Note: Stephen King - On writing. Editura Nemira, 2007.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-meeting-place-for-the-masterpieces-of-human-work.htm

The Memories Of A Life That Repeats Itself

On July 23, 2019

Leadership is the distinction you make between a reality that struggles in the middle of a "I'm repeating myself again" and a reality that is "already happening".

I was always interesting to see a true story, strictly related to a double of mine, as an example of an artistic experience where one can reach the maximum freedom of expression and one can imagine the infinite possibility of an existence built on the idea of formally defining an objective content and presenting it as a continuation variant of reality.

The premise of a rational compromise between the emotional nature of the work and precise logic of compositional construction, which is reminiscent of early Renaissance art in Florence, make their way into a picture that delight any lover of beauty. Here arises the problem of consciousness, which I often imagine to be the quality of a human being set to seek the truth behind the image, in an immortal destiny.

Art is a victory of fertile soil, of flowers that cover it and of fresh air. I do not know how much time I invested, with patience and scrutiny, just to choose correctly between the crystallization variants of a nearby view, a form of special sensitivity, to raise that conceptual and experimental framework aimed at placing the human subject in coherence with the expression of a reality decorated with fragile contours.

The rose is still there, blooming with many peonies warmed by the sun's rays, expressing the greatness of the artist who exposes his feelings in such a way that the one who sees his creation feels it as a part of himself. The story of the rose, as well as its main task, is to embody, in an appropriate artistic form, an idea of total realism under a certain dose of expressivity and superiority.

And from here, my life began to take on a special significance, constituting so many specific qualities for the style of an art that means both continuity and evolution.

Leadership: Can you externalize your personality by expressing the creative activity done with the help of the concrete from the plane of nature, so that you can capture the essential of an overview of life?

On the line of the image I reproduce below, dedicated to a topical theme, the material from which my life is made is reconditioned, the beginning of a new page of memory that will awaken nostalgia over the years. I try not to look more like who I am, just as the rose does not change its place in a magnificent garden which the artist incorporates into a signed painting: "Admiration for the beauty of nature".

Everything that a rose feels and makes it human in a painting that starts from a simple game of varied colors and lines, can be shown with the artist's hand in a confession that the Romanian writer Alexandru Vlahuță makes about the painter Nicolae Grigorescu, with that charm of hidden power that gives the elegance of a conquering expressive sincerity:

"Eternally dissatisfied with his work, scratching a canvas ten times, leaving and returning ten times to the same corner of nature, which always said something else to him from the great mystery, and he always asked, feeling that, beyond the lines and the colors that are seen, there is something that cannot be seen, and which must still be seen. Must. For this is the calling of an artist in the world – to make you see for eternity what nature only shows once, at the flashing of a moment, only once, in the all-encompassing and frightening eternity of time."

The rose still exists as the attribute of the soul to conceive a new reality, to go further, to evolve even more, to find oneself in the centuries-old experience of the human being.

An overview image of life can be obtained from the astonishment you have in front of a painting whose theme captures the horizon of defining its nature and beauty, during a memorable moment.

This is what makes a rose happy, eager to be immortalized in a picture full of color and nostalgia. I imagine it as being sublime and fascinating, as the author of an artistic creation that willfully mixes the register of the miraculous with that of the supernatural, in a magical game of composition effects:

To be a beautiful color, shining in the realization of a great dream that is more interesting from the perspective of an art testimony. To be a story of self-reflection that the artist uses to transmit a great teaching to the world, so that it exists only as an embodiment of a perfect spirit who, throughout his life, prefers to experience the particular of an isolated personality viewed in the mirror of an invariable universal reason.

To discover the qualities of a special brush that will print to my portrait, in time, elegance and softness, ensuring a perfect outline. To build my own world, as an alternative to communication with God in which will differ only color brightness and mystery. Not to disappear after death.

The rose is the spirit of a complex being, accepted by the arrangement of mysteries that are easily clothed in the coat of the word, as a replica of the imagination of an artist who describes a vision of nature to deepen the subject of a fabulous world, perfectly formed, but sometimes difficult to understand.

Leadership: Can your creation give that impression of reality in which the sensation of mystery and fabulousness prevail, to gain access to a different perception of the complexity of a "something that's missing from your life"?

What is missing from my life is the very message that the rose conveys in the form of nostalgia, melancholy, attraction, consolation, the proof of love, because every time I look at it in the splashes of summer rain I feel that I am introduced in the marked episodes of a spiritual story.

"Hope itself is sometimes a form of pain."

I'm just a rose. Please, cease to understand me through a multitude of glances, in all my colors, but possibly place me under a glass bell and contemplate me from the deep depths of a troubling destiny, written with the ink of the blood stream from the wounds of common mortals. Try to explore me with one eye, without losing the variety and complexity of a "something that's missing from your life."

I experience moments of confusion, often repeated, as a stereotype game, always the same way. A kind of feeling of abandonment in the face of transcendent power, the inability to fully control what is happening in worldly affairs. I lack that confidence to allow myself to overcome moments of high emotional intensity, but nevertheless they bloom more naturally than in the case of other flowers, even if the thorns themselves block me in a harsher reality, above that which falls below senses. Sono fuori su una nuova strada alla ricerca di una terra senza nome.

The rose denotes confidence in the experiences of another being with whom you reason in harmony with EVERYTHING, having access to a world exposed to interpretation and understood through an artistic referral, a metaphor: "The theme of life, as in a dream."

Often, I imagine that I am the spirit of a being that traverses immortality in other roles, other rules, with other reasons for captivity, with other artistic activities, but always charged with the same mission: "È tempo di girare la pagina e iniziare un nuovo capitolo."

Leadership, as a tendency to understand the artistic personality, aims at experiencing the moment, unrepeatable and invaluable, which you approach in a context of "visual similarity" when you are about to assume an identity from which you can no longer detach, precisely because you are complacent in the posture of a character found in the center of attention.

The Memories Of A Life That Repeats Itself take into account that source of exposition of ideas, emotions, imprint, perception and personal experience, in a creation whose main feature is the power to fulfill a destiny devoted to art. A destiny that defies the inherent ephemeral through an interpretive vision of a being similar to you, perceived as a symbol of a larger spiritual reality.

It is important how you refer to this being through a revealing comparison of truths, beauty, divine, durability, emotions, artistic potential, to make it accessible to the general public under different meanings, in a surprising story whose content is repeated at other times. and other places.

P.S. The expression "I repeat myself" resembles pleonasm. In the case of this article, I used "again" to reinforce a rule that applies over a longer period of time. If you say "I repeat myself" it may have the meaning of "it happened only once". I have strengthened an idea, a belief, a fact, the meaning of "it happens numerous times" as a kind of deja-vu.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-memories-of-a-life-that-repeats-itself.html

The Memory Of A Dusty Thought

On February 02, 2024

What you see in a man becomes a way of exploring visibility beyond appearances, if you are aware of the depths that define his being.

About a week ago, completely by chance, I saw one of my professors from college again. Gray hair, brushed, about 20 kg more than the average of common sense, walking with heavy steps, with cheerful eyes, but which betrayed a certain doubt, as if the man was aware of his own injustices, but tried to he hides with a carefree smile. I look at him, examine him with my eyes, and notice that he has many medical problems, especially knowing that he suffered two strokes. So the head is definitely not good.

Good, but what does his restless look say, well hidden behind a delicate, amiable smile, a smile that often arises from savory humor and ends in a lamentable apotheosis? Read on!

I told him that the time of university professors is over. Artificial intelligence like ChatGPT or BARD are absolutely necessary tools to learn by yourself, about anything, without going to college. High school students already prefer to learn by themselves with the help of the CK-12 Flexi plugin from the ChatGPT4 version, than to pay for exorbitant, intense and not enlightening meditations. Students don't even go to classes anymore, they learn everything by themselves with ChatGPT. Quite simply, the explanations and way of organizing learning offered by Artificial Intelligence are far superior to any traditional school or university system.

Shaken, stunned, almost with tears in his eyes, the professor knows very well that his generation, the last of teachers, is in decline. However, he answers me, with his head slightly bowed, as if he wanted to hide the reality: "AI doesn't really help you, you still have to think." And you know how he said it? With a tone of that pride, worthy of the war hero's cry, which lets us understand that, in one sense, he is a great thinker and great connoisseur.

Leadership: Have you ever had an experience where an image, seemingly without content, became clear evidence of the existence of a work from which no response is expected?

I was particularly struck by the words "you must think", as if they were said by a genius, something closely related to the accomplishment of a great deed, culminating in some achievement beyond all expectations. Just for this reason, out of curiosity, I googled the professor's name, maybe I'll find something interesting. And what did I find? Well, the first 3 results show the professor's CV. So, it would be said that the CV is the most important thing that stands out about the professor. Then, the next few results show the titles of some outdated books, but, mind you, not their contents.

Here, then, is a thinker without content.

Reading the great CV of the professor, on the Google webcache, where nothing is deleted, we learn that he holds a doctorate. But, Hocus Pocus, where's the doctorate? The Internet knows nothing about the work of the great thinker, work that nevertheless elevated him to office, offering him so many benefits over time. Practically, the existence of this work is put under the sign of doubt.

And do you know what the lack of proof of the existence of this doctoral thesis looks like?

It's like passing the baccalaureate exam, without appearing for the exam. In other words, the great dottore should account for at least one colossal fraud, a plagiarism or a worthless thesis, perhaps even a non-existent one, of which other professors are also guilty, who have not published their works anywhere.

Leadership: Does the image you have built become clear evidence of a creation that evokes deep feeling but does not stimulate awareness of your virtues?

Attention: this is the model teacher who says words like "you have to think", but who has absolutely nothing to show for it! But in order to become a great thinker, you must follow the advice of Goethe , who declared to a friend of his: "To become a composer, you must have studied harmony and counterpoint for 11 years, and you end up subjecting the inventive spirit to the rules, when imagination and feeling are needed . "

I would give you a grade of 1, professor, with indulgence, if you had published the "miracle" of your mind on the Internet, so I would score you just for your presence. But because you are ashamed of your deed, and you have been hiding it for so long, then you are a repeat student. Yes, you're just a worthless repeater in the world, as insipid and unknown as your work, just like almost all other university professors who haven't published their doctorates. There are too many swindlers and profane in Romanian universities.

Leadership: Can you capture in a single image, through the visual aspect, the emotions of the man caught in the vulnerability that accompanies an overestimated Ego?

Now, continuing his words and trying to argue something, he seemed to feel the need for a justification for this resumption of opinion, as if making an effort to remember something, at least a little, of his achievements. His memory had not betrayed him, how many events did he experience during this time, what facts, what experiences, what realities were superimposed on the deep images, hiding them in his soul?

Everything suddenly became more alive again, clear and hazy, like a distant memory, among which the sun appears, miraculously like a hope. I myself, trying to live what the teacher was reliving in his mind, among memories and life stories, I was gripped by the strange fever of the inability to know, to equate, to understand everything, because this is how the foray into a world begins enigmatic. With the question: "Who am I really?"

People often speak from memory, debugging experiences and reflections, so that they don't repeat the mistakes, or maybe to absolve themselves, to justify themselves, to find an excuse, to mask their mistakes along the line of a strategic retreat. By repeating it together, they learn to believe in the saving words, which somehow excuse them, do not betray their lack of understanding. And when their memory fails them, and it often does at an age, in moments of uncertainty, then they compose comforting images of the victors.

Leadership: Have you ever experienced a deep feeling in front of an image that highlights the cause-effect relationships of actions that are not in favor of developing personal qualities?

Most university professors have no idea what science actually is, or why it could become an act of thinking. Because the first step to understanding knowledge is to save it. The second step is to make it known. Then use it wisely, in accordance with what you have learned from others, equally with what you have learned from your experiences.

And expressions like "you have to think" are a bit hasty, because for those who are really knowledgeable, they represent long roads, marches made in the rain or on trojan paths and haunted by blizzards. Only brains tamed in the direction of an overestimated Ego do not know how to distinguish between truth and doubt.

While he spoke to me, with such fervor, something in me registered a kind of enigma. And yet, I had no idea about all these things, I recorded them, I was impressed for a few seconds, but...oh! it's impossible, I can't stay permanently impressed.

A part of the memory had betrayed the professor, a part of his thinking shrugged, unhindered and as if he wanted to bypass a wall difficult to cross. For this reason, there is no point in looking for any survivor of the battle between knowledge and ignorance, between truth and illusion.

The world has as many thinkers as it has flies that attract everything that means misery. Unknown heroes among the thousands of martyrs who are now dust. Heroes who did not understand the struggle, who had no idea what that war was, because all they undertook were only fragments of insincere interest, an appearance, lacking any genuine content or a deep understanding of what a war really involves. Everything I have written here is a criticism of the shallowness or falseness of their commitment.

Leadership: Can the creation you bring to life live in the shadows without revealing its true essence?

From the desire to be as authentic as possible, the professor, the great philosopher, ended up becoming his own director, performer and unique spectator. He spoke like a know-it-all, offering no evidence of his own expertise. After all, knowledge is an adventure turned pious duty, a kind of sacred journey that reveals the hidden secrets of deep understanding. And then, that strange, painful sensation of reconstructing a piece of truth, even if it is fragile. In order to understand something, you have to have participated in a war, to really hear the booming of cannons, the hiss of bullets, all the inferno of noise, smoke, fire, horror and death.

This is what the professor lacked all his life: the courage to truly go through fire and sword. However, when I saw him again, he seemed haunted by Napoleonic obsessions, mentally crippled by the tendency to greatness, dominated by the desire to appear more than he really is. Deceitful, deceptive, intriguing, his thinking did not allow him to realize that in the grand equation of the world he is as small and insignificant, totally unknown as his own doctoral thesis, a creation of which no one knows anything.

For so many years, the survivor of a hallucinatory consciousness carries with him, day by day, the shadow of an obsession: the memory of a high self-esteem, which I tried too hard to shake. Yes, I remembered here the encounter with Cervantes' hero in the fight with the windmills, and I am not sorry that the windmills remained only simple illusions. And knowing some is still a big illusion, just like their existence.

At this very moment I am trying to draw a conclusion, a kind of philosophy supported by good knowledge, which I am making known to the world:

"I knock on the door of a house and no one answers . I call, I press the doorbell , the door is not locked , does that mean someone is home ? Or is it just an empty house , abandoned , abandoned in her world I am small and passing ? What does she have so interesting to tell me ? I didn't think it was worth telling me anything specific , so I moved on..."

A creation that does not reveal itself hides the false essence of its creator, often hiding due to plagiarism or fraud. Rather, a creator who hides his creation is the saboteur of an image that might reveal the truth of his own uselessness and worthlessness.

The memory of a dusty thought leaves behind forgotten, ignored memories that never return. It belongs to the man who is empty inside, devoid of content, but with pretensions of a great connoisseur and thinker, who failed to animate his own achievements with "a life without death".

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-memory-of-a-dusty-thought.html

The Memory Of A Rose Is Seen In Another Appearance

On August 06, 2019

Be able to recognize your own thoughts and emotions in an identity that you can always "borrow" from nature's wardrobe.

When I planted the first rose in the garden, it was late autumn, I knew nothing about the life of flowers, much less about the nature so surprising and giving. It was more of an urgent need for order, a kind of reserve for the beauty that everyone longs to feel, a determinant of a state of mind that, by virtue of a visual finding, had to stimulate the activation of the resources required for the act of creation.

The change of perspective is not the same as the call to serve a creed about art. I am the same man as I was back then, the same imaginative force, a conscience shaped by spiritual nobility, but I feel as if I have been changed by the circumstances of a reality that does not belong to this world. As with Cervantes' memory of what was really inspiring had to have the outlines of a chimera, from here starts all the unexpected greatness of imagination.

Leadership: Can you discover absolute independence through free will, transcending the course of an ever-rewriting destiny, balancing proportion and stability in an artistic expression of the creative spirit?

Everything gains absolute independence in this life, like free will, but there is a mysterious force that changes the course of each destiny at a given time, according to a more ample plan. Here, my rose has grown, as the painter's mind grows, the artistic tendency, which is miraculous, called "Meta-aesthetics", characterized by the sense of proportion, the taste of balanced and stable compositions.

When you are in possession of a flower, only yours, the most delicate of all, but also the most resistant, you feel that you slip into a mystical delirium, as if a higher force of divine origin, an angelic entity, would have you put in touch with the inner beauty of the authentic revolutionary, of the esthetician who creates the harmony and beauty of a painting according to the profound characteristic of the surrounding nature.

I will always be a part of the rose, a frame of mind on a tall, thorny stalk that grows inside a compositional frame that signifies the human path from clearing the heart of passions... to illuminating his mind.

Leadership: Do the beliefs you have about yourself contribute to the development of sensitivity in order to complete a revealed creation of nature in characterizing the structure of a unitary visual identity?

Since then, I have planted many roses in the garden. Over 40 species. Different colors, fragrances full of emotions that capture and reflect light in a dream spark. I was seeing myself more and more in a picture full of wonder and mystery in which pure nature, the most beautiful painting made by God, made known its splendor by approaching an artistic ideal wrapped in the notion of "Movement in stillness".

The convictions about the object of my addiction the beautiful, the rose, this good image consultant, were included in the high and pure thinking of a painter of great finesse: "Erase everything you do if you feel that your soul is not there."

The meaning of the rose is given to us in the form of an intensity of sensitive life caught in the universe of a painting that discreetly illuminates the gesture of a purely spontaneous feeling, which you can only see in the artist of a fragile world who knows how to discover the beautiful even in a pronounced yellowing of leaves, even in their drying state.

The art of existence consists in harmonizing inner beauty with the natural proportions of a delicate universe, creating a balanced and stable composition of emotions and meanings.

See, then, how important it is for me to capture from the first weighing of everyday thoughts a character's life story, from a few lines and shadings, to highlight the idea of communion with the splendors of nature, or even the idea of imitation of nature.

The sensation of each line can be understood only in the creation of the artist who knows how to transpose, on a vertical plane, the effort to articulate his own experience of communication with a rose, as a confession granted to the consciences modeled by the experience of the journey in the world of nature. In vain did I choose as a motto for conversations with myself, on the subject of contemporary painting, il per sempre adesso, the underlined repetition of an exclamation made by an old heart: "In a painter exist an endless series of visual similarities of nature."

The structure of a unitary visual identity is made up of the appreciation and assurance of the permanence of a vision about art in a wider framework of promoting the image regarding the plausibility of the imitation of nature in an emotional plane.

Of course, a visual identity also implies the intervention of the creative man in the course of nature from the point of view of the plausibility of a connection between the image of a lasting beauty and the consequence of an emotional state, of an aspiration, of a dream, of a living in revelation. Only Renaissance artists emphasized the similarity between the manifestation of nature and that of the Creator, so that the painting contained a note of specificity meant to reflect at the same time an artistic conception that eclipses other genre creations, but also a conceptual approach of the form "The Image of the Other".

Writer Alexandru Vlahuță highlights the substrate of an infinite potentiality of manifestations of the soul that the rose possesses, captured in the master's hypothesis of creation, in the psychological study of the personality of the great painter Nicolae Grigorescu.

"All the things of this man have a discreet, profound life, which you do not understand, do not feel at first, but which palpitates there, and who knows when, under what ray of light, from outside, or from your soul, will make you startle, wake up and say: "Strange, it's as if I am seeing this for the first time"... And for how many times are you still to see it as if for the first time ! For this is the secret, this is the greatest gift of life – to be eternally new."

The harmonization of inner simplicity with the complexity of free artistic expression is possible when you confess your perspective of translating into fiction the evolution of a being that alone fills the entire world.

So and too. Try to imitate nature through a creation transformed by personification into a wild rose, domesticated by the power of expressiveness with which you confess your thoughts about art, seeing yourself barefoot in a dream that confesses the prospect of translating into fiction the evolution of a being that alone fills the entire world.

In the transformation you find everything that nourishes your soul, experiencing in a pure, authentic and powerful way the opening towards a completely different dimension of personality, an artistic one and very free in spirit, towards a new sense of life, towards a new way of expression. So that the simplicity of the comfort of your mind will prevail in any circumstance, especially in the face of the "obligation" to put yourself in the position of a creator of a quiet, balanced painting.

Leadership is the situation in which the greatest gift of life (to be eternally new) manifests itself in one direction: from the world of creation to the creation of a world in which the first place is occupied by a fulfilling experience of an ideal transferable from a self-contained entity to a variety of entities with distinct evolutions.

The rose is more than a mere format of reality when it comes to the clairvoyant contemplation of the outside world, it is a long process of purification and sacralization of a vast artistic heritage that impresses us with new meanings of interpretation of the Great Work, urging us to live according to the rules of the surrounding environment.

When I'll get a better understanding of the origin of the rose, I will see that it is a reflection of myself in another form of existence, which can be expressed in a matrix word of the pure universal language: "Metamorphosis".

The Memory Of A Rose That Is Seen In Another Appearance is born only in the mind of an exceptional storyteller who lives another life within himself, a life that is not his and will never end, a life that is not satisfied only with the visible, palpable. But one that is cleverly designed by a Creator who puts his creation on account of the interweaving of the springs of an autonomous being with the springs of a thought that invites respect for nature.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-memory-of-a-rose-is-seen-in-another-appearance.html

The Mental Creation Of An Infinite Spirit

On December 04, 2020

Try to cultivate your artistic virtues in the simplicity of the soul of great purity and lyricism, referring to the form of exteriorization of a deep spiritual content.

I had time to assimilate the most chosen knowledge, accepting on the fly the surplus of almost unreal intensity of the feeling of spatiality of the dialogue with God, a universe of light, pastel colors, absolute geometries. And I sensed that this knowledge was determined not to feel indebted to me for learning the art of transforming any creation into unique and exclusive works of art.

Once again, I felt caught between the ultra-sensitive soul structure of the empirical self and the truth that dominates the intellect of another level of reality, affiliated with another origin of time. Maybe I was the prisoner of a world too small to fulfill all my ideals, the prisoner of a world upside down. For the whole world, I began to believe that it existed only as a kind of overlooking what was happening every day, about what was to come, and about what was happening in the inner mystery of each creature.

Great knowledge abundantly claims the merit of the artist to perpetuate, in a sui generis way, what is ephemeral.

With wonder, with a kind of hidden pride, with a kind of respect for the noble curiosity of the artist who raises matter to the height of the spirit, I felt that I experienced through excellence in another time the same inexplicable iconic story, the same image defect "repaired" again and again, as if someone had allowed me to add a drop of dew under the clear sky of a memory of another world. I am still looking for an explanation for this phenomenon.

Leadership: Can you find a powerful way to express your feelings for everything you experience in the field of Creation, longing for a simultaneity of experiencing the world by accumulating other hypostases?

I think that the most expressive art is a possibility to recognize myself in the images on the canvas, and the knowledge that follows is the mixture of colors that come to life in a Google Color Picker experiment, hence the exposure of a form of expression in a sure point of perception of external reality. Or the rose to my right, which I have so often felt as a divine presence, and having no better term to symbolize a deep mystery, is a witness to me that I have tried to change the shade of colors that the narrator sprays over words, to feel that what I experience is a normality, and nothing more.

Predominant here is the idea that the living soul of the rose transmits its lyrical virtues to the painter's dreamy moments, to contemplate his works, and transmits them with the help of the brush in every interpretation of the relationship between science and religion, of course with the possibility of transcending the sensitive world and in the habit of abstract thinking. Without caring about composition, touch, light, as in classical painting, without using in any way the unity of the ego as a possibility to decipher the unity of the world, I resorted to the act of creation as an illusion of the natural superimposed on any manifestation of mystical order.

Therefore, I feel compelled to return spectacularly to a reality in which there is no boundary between figurative and symbolic. In this regard, two hypostases lead me to believe in the need to evaluate the impact of knowledge in the field of art: the hypostasis of creator and muse, at the same time, in a surreal universe. I myself am a meditation on the creative vocation, on fulfillment through painting and literature, but at the same time I am a divine breath of art in the diversity of a lyric with wide openings to the new.

Leadership: Can you intervene on the content of a work of art, finding its sensitive equivalent in the stage of developing the idea of "Totality of the Self"?

He who knows how to use the virtue of the rose, to create and recreate the universe through imagination, enchanting the movement of the brush on a picture created by the divine logos, making possible the expression of a life mirrored in other lives, and if the same man utters an invocation of higher planes using the mysterious word "Adherteress" (the unity of the creative self), then he will facilitate the understanding between two distinct worlds.

From this point of view, as a symbol of a smooth transition from one stage of creation to another, I managed to understand that what is "seen" is just a drop in an infinity of the universe.

Another virtue of the rose, that of always being in tune with the reality of the present, must protect the moral right of the artist to disclose any details of his work with images beyond the soul, with images beyond images, with images beyond words, so that the process of reproducing a message of great metaphysical depth to prove as sensitive as possible, as of perspective as possible and to expand in other contexts of culture.

The idea of the totality of the self is attributed to the artist who knows how to create and recreate the universe through imagination, so that the part of consciousness that allows him to meet the Creator reaches the infinite dimension of his being.

And here comes the "Renaissance", or the form of externalization of a deep spiritual content, which can be achieved through an exponent of the sensitive world (the rose) meant to connect with the Creator through a work of art destined to serve as a model of perfection, or as a basis for human renewal.

The Mental Creation Of An Infinite Spirit conforms to the renewal of the connection between man and nature, between emotions, imagination and genius. Only through an exemplary work of art, conceived with power and made with great talent, does the Creator express his emotions, feelings, experiences, knowing himself in all that is good or bad, beautiful, ugly, valuable or non-valuable.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mental-creation-of-an-infinite-spirit.html

The Meridians Of All Secret Worlds

On January 19, 2014

Give your science an architecture full of originality, in order to be able to manipulate the basic elements of a deeper reality.

I was walking in a straight line on the winding road of the incognoscible, where all kinds of assumptions and interpretations were quickly unwinding. My mind worked like a torch that didn't blow out, glowing even in the most impenetrable darkness, even in the world coming from beyond those majestically maneuvered acceptions which connected me to other knowledge zones.

In order to satisfy my great passion for research and crystallization in the area of experiments, keeping the same ingredients and alchemical syntagmata available sometimes only in Paracelsus' teachings, I was forced to resort to profound and detailed approaches. I resorted to innovative uses for concepts and fundamental ideas which lazily supported the mysteries of science, the least noticeable landmarks of the renaissance of sublime. To this extent, I was forced to alter the dispersion code of elements: water, fire, earth and air, incorporating them into something called materia prima.

If I had wanted to offer a rich material for clarifying the secret connections between the four elements, purifying as only I knew how the catalyst that ensured the attraction between them, I shouldn't have gotten lost in the succession of necessary procedures for manufacturing the Great Creation.

Leadership: Can you express your direction and intentions as a person who tends towards generalization, looking for the common denominator of a subjective science that formulates "by derivation" the meanings given to the idea of "the Matter of the Great Work"?

The Matter of the Great Work is required by means of comparisons between controversial ideas and the compositional elements of an enigmatic subject, always having particular conceptual determinations. Sometimes matter tends towards generality, like when you talk about cosmic space that encompasses billions of stars, having the role of getting an overview of a creature of remarkable originality.

Success, in relation to the purification of matter, depended on the intensity of chemical reactions that could be applied to the four elements. And, depending on their constant energy discharges, I could determine, irrespective of any conditions and relation, the time composition of the incomprehensible. I felt like I had striken a Pledge with the universe, being invested with the power to command the elements themselves to thoroughly harmonize in a unique assembly of significations and meanings. Equipped with the attribute of majestically crossing all the meridians of those secret worlds, sealed by magic.

This gradual process of grasping, under pressure, the amazingly precise secrets of the formulae for balances and imbalances, values of past signs with an ignorant view, but which everyone, in the intimacy of their souls knows, made me unable to manipulate, with an alchemist's touch, the Passive and Active elements in the structure of living matter. And in order to bring this matter to life and present it professionally in an unusual, anecdotal, but at the same time inspirational formula had become a pattern for producing new epistemological combinations and interrogations.

Alchemy is the most accessible tool for maneuvering the incommensurable, in the great labyrinth of time proportions which are undefined by any law. Only the person who manages to discover Ariadna's thread in its most basic way can acquire the Great Teaching.

Leadership: Can you create a "high-standard" in understanding the springs of new openings of art "to not lose what you falsely think you can possess" so you can reach the maximum potential of living in a particular universe?

A person who tends to generalize the contents of certain notions and principles can easily adopt a "spatial" vision that automatically allows him to bypass the normal rules of life, of time, of causality, he may seize and plan himself a lot of routes, but also of alternative variants, to ensure the connection between what is seen and what is not seen in the present and past reality.

By evaluating the tendencies and perspectives of adhering to a new way of thinking, which serves leadership, you could obtain the contrast between the appearance and essence of what you are, of what you know, of what you serve, of what you define and of what you create. By that I mean that it's not hard to find a new refuge near a new source of content, which would ensure a bigger connection to everything that exists in the mysterious universe enveloping you.

This new source of content, combining assumptions and interpretations of a deeper reality, distributing the "dividends" obtained from your research activity, could create that is known as a high-standard of understanding those sources which activate new openings and possibilities. Compared to using knowledge and information in support of innovation and experimenting.

Underestimating the possibility to rationally know a new world full of perspectives, ignoring the requirements regarding experience and development level, seems to suggest some kind of minus-value which accentuates as you go forward towards a "further" limited by rules and routine. In this case, there is no room for discussing an intersection of more ways to connect yourself to coded server of unexplored science, necessary for developing some deep and coherent approaches of the imaginary which sets apart mediocre thinking from profitable thinking.

Leadership: Can you highlight the dynamic component of a meaningful science that rather emphasizes its decisive contribution to the progress of an idea capable of decisively changing the vision of the world?

The dynamic component of meaningful science, which could lead to forming some new availabilities towards the challenges of evolution, satisfying the great passion of searches and crystallizations in the area of knowledge is activated by a gradual process of penetrating the wonderful, but complicated world of scientific research. Science is carried out through a direct cooperation with the basic elements of a deeper reality.

The images that follow a forward-looking technique of transforming reality, the game of perspectives (from near to far away, from terrestrial to cosmic), or the permanent effort of transfiguring the ordinary man into a superior man are some of the dynamic components of a meaning-bearing science that rather emphasizes their decisive contribution to the progress of an idea capable of decisively changing the vision of the world.

The idea that exalted me was that of demonstrating that there was another reality that kept absolutely everything in a universal memory, in which everything that was, what it is and what will be possible to acquire the significance of the attribute of Being, a sort of instrument of Creation, Happiness, Evolution, and Godhead.

Obtained through an experiment, this reality, undistorted by a culture of suspicion, has the characters of a donation of new particularities and constructions gradually renovated through a process of penetration in the secrets of formulae adjusted by a multitude of randomly modified variables. The purpose is to create a new foundation for the existence of an ascending reality. Useful for creating new leadership perspectives.

This gradual process of penetration, under pressure, in the amazingly precise secrets of past formulae with an ignorant view, make you capable to manipulate with the talent of an alchemist, the elements Active and Passive in the structure of matter which, by its own nature, never "stands still". But requires in an even greater extent, developed and unified.

The intrinsic purpose of art is the need to unite all fields of science into a single conception of the world that the universe that you create corresponds exactly to your original ideas about the value of personality that urges you to realism.

The Meridians of all Secret Worlds highlights the secret aspects of leadership, subject to a transformation that involves working with one's self. Your deep knowledge and the way in which you function when you're in contact with the deep knowledge areas, is essential to neutralize any exit from the perimeter of the great fortress called: reality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-meridians-of-all-secret-worlds.html

The Metamorphosis Of The Work In Continuous Reconsiderations Of Principles

On July 18, 2010

Creative leadership means combining rigorous calculation with spontaneity, turning theoretical plans into visionary action.

Was this all pre-determined, coldly calculated and a priori? Once, Eisenstein confesses the way he works on the preparation of a film. "I work very professionally. Raising waves of erudition. Debating principles and programs with myself. Accumulating calculations, equations, conclusions. I like to match the melody to the motion of the film. Sometimes surpassing it. Then, suddenly, the melody doesn't fit anymore. dives into the drawers of doctrinal considerations. The script remains in place. In its place, the files swell with pages of theoretical researches... This metamorphosis a the work in constant reconsideration of principles is often my misfortune. Often, clarifying the principle, I lose interest in its application."

But sometimes he succeeds. As in the case of the film Alexander Nevsky. But then the calculations, the equations, the conclusions are only the premises of the creation. The director's script is only the first stage in the creative process. During creation, Eisenstein no longer thinks about these "why" and "how". In the period of work, the basic solution is transformed not into logical evaluations, but into direct action. Thoughts are no longer expressed by deductions, but projected directly into images, they are not described in formulas, but in forms. Of course, spontaneous creation traverses the realms of consciousness, but this does not stop it for analysis, but lets it rush on. "The act of creation takes place in fever."

Genuine creativity is born when thoughts are no longer expressed through formulas, but through images that bring a vision to life.

The technical operations are the same as in the case of the preparation of a film, but they must be carried out firmly, quickly and with special attention and professionalism, constantly taking care to manage the theoretical calculations and conclusions and the neighboring principles of film criticism. If the script is more or less intact, appropriate scenes will be used, detached from the narrative as if the director himself should extract the essence of the message. Metamorphosis is not absolutely necessary, and it is even advisable to avoid it, so as not to damage the basic ideas and not allow the details to insinuate themselves too deeply into the narrative.

When the scenario is destroyed by various theoretical reconsiderations of the critics and it is not possible to apply the conclusions, creative improvisations will be used, crossing the areas of the viewers' consciousness.

The essence of leadership in creative fields lies in the ability to move from analytical thinking to direct projection into images and forms.

The camera operator, the one filming the scenes, will very carefully limit the active portion of the improvisation, so that the peak moment of intensity does not penetrate the depth and damage the integrity of the principles on which the structure of the montage is based. The improvisation will act especially by pushing the story from the bottom of the concept of "experimentation", in a creative sense, and will not try to insinuate it between the narrative construction and the theme, the structure having little resistance and being able to fracture easily. In multi-thematic films, the peak of improvisation will insinuate itself between themes, "why?" by "how?" in the sense of the axis of development of the story, so that the scenario does not remain "in the wedge" of inspiration.

Any small fragments of ideas will be extracted with a delicate approach, without stopping the creation for analysis, but letting it rush on. If the film presented chronic creative blocks, that is, when the director's thoughts are no longer expressed by deductions, but directly projected into nonsensical images, the concepts of grain in the narrative will be removed by gentle means of re-evaluating and adapting the script to the current context . In order not to discover and damage the main ideas, it is advisable to avoid insistent re-evaluation of the narrative, turning the analysis not into logical evaluations, but into direct action.

A visionary leader must balance theoretical analysis with direct action, avoiding the trap of losing interest in applying the principles developed.

The metamorphosis of the work in continuous reconsiderations of principles has the role of refining the artistic direction, because in this way the correctness and relevance of each decision is constantly re-evaluated, in the case of a complex vision that requires frequent adaptations. I say this knowing that every idea, in contact with practical reality, becomes a challenge that tests both creativity and the ability to stay true to the original vision.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein , Tineretului Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-metamorphosis-of-the-work-in-continuous-reconsidera

The Metaphysics Of A Look Full Of Temptation

On April 23, 2012

We need the temptation of time stopped in place to sail further and further, with the spirit, to the glory of divine greatness.

The day their eyes met and suddenly said the first vague and unspeakable things the eyes mimic, Cosette did not understand at first. She thoughtfully returned home to Ouest Street, where Jean Valjean had come, as usual, to spend six weeks. The next day, when he awoke, he thought of that unknown and icy young man who had been so careless for a long time, who seemed to be paying attention to her now, and it did not seem to him that this attention would have pleased him. Rather, she was a little angry with this contemptuous and handsome man. She was rebelling against him. It seemed to him that he would take revenge once, and he enjoyed himself as a child. She knew she was beautiful and felt confused that she had a gun. Women sometimes play with their beauty, just as children play with knives. And they hurt themselves with it.

The reader remembers Marius' hesitations, his turmoil, his fears. He remained on the bench and did not approach. That annoyed Cosette. One day she said to Jean Valjean:

- Dad, let's walk over there.

Seeing that Marius was not coming to her, she went to him. In such circumstances, all women resemble Muhammad. Strangely, the first sign of true love in a young man is shyness and in a girl is boldness. It's amazing, and yet nothing is more natural. The two sexes try to get closer and clothe each other with one another's traits.

*That day Cosette's gaze drove Marius mad, Marius' gaze disturbed Cosette. Marius walked away confidently, while Cosette walked away uneasily. From that day they fell in love.

Leadership: Is your way of expressing your feelings a gaze cast far away, towards learning a life lesson (always present through remembrance) that produces a match between what is inside you and what is outside of you?

A gaze cast in the direction of love, thus seeking the meaning of life, can be a proof of human endeavor to know another part of human nature, aimed at dreaming, at story, at sharing laborious but satisfying life experiences. We must go even further, and I will say that the meaning of life, like the beauty to which we relate through the experiences had in dream moments, lies within the relationship between the feeling of inner peace and the feeling of a duty to spiritual values, such as patience, faithfulness, truth, compassion, and virtue.

Love is, at the same time, the deed of a Deity who arranges together everything that happens according to a reason full of mystery and wisdom. Whether or not we are able to realize love as an opening of life to divine greatness and goodness, full of mercy, depending on our spiritual availability to transform ourselves inwardly, to give ourselves fully, divinely, to the passing moment, what comes, from yesterday to today and further into tomorrow.

Nice and reasonable, isn't it? Perhaps God himself is in the details of the moment that never seems to pass, in the decision of the moment to be a seed for some fruitful, much greater plans.

But especially depending on the determination to lean with a greater openness on things or people that fit into our universe, we can relate to God, integrating the feelings and aspects that surround our lives in a light of meaning on which we give to the events in which we are involved. From these events emerges the essential content of a spirituality based on the development of personality at the level of "significant role" that we occupy in a world of plurality, of unexpected changes.

Nothing accidentally passes before change. As someone rightly said, probably from the point of view of the supply of beauty no one is born under an unfortunate star; we just need to know how to read the sky.

A life lesson (always present through remembrance) that produces a match between what is inside you and what is outside of you can be formulated as follows: "Never try to make yourself understood before asking someone to listen to you as one would listen to God."

What is love, first of all, than the gaze cast in the direction of a God who cares for mankind, who continues to offer forgiveness until the end of time. Love is the reward of forgiving and saving the soul from the threat, action, or possession of evil.

Divine greatness in this consists: in the forgiveness of sins, and the attainment of happiness, to those who fulfill God's plans.

The Metaphysics Of A Gaze Full Of Temptation refers to the feeling of closeness to God by winning perfect love. Here, I think it is good to remember the message of Alexandre Dumas, the last sentence at the end of the novel, "The Count of Monte Cristo":

"Remember that until the day when God is willing to reveal the future to man, all human wisdom will be summed up in these two words: wait and hope."

 Note: Victor Hugo - The Miserables, State Literature Publishing House for Literature and Art, 1960.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-metaphysics-of-a-look-full-of-temptation.html

The Microbe

On November 01, 2023

What is not seen must be brought to light, but in such a way as to illuminate the darkness, not deepen the shadow.

The last article I read on the Internet refers to a university professor, another "criminal" registered in the long series of corrupt people in Romania. Anyone who will search the Internet, without too much haste, will find about 15 cases of bribery among Romanian university professors, this year alone, equivalent to outbreaks of infection in a weak organism. And the acts of corruption, the ones that don't come to light, well, there are thousands of them in our country. As for the "podium", after the extensive branch of politics, the level of corruption in the faculties ranks in second place at a very short distance. The university professor has the same DNA and the same vulnerability to germs, disease and ailments as the average politician. If disease is theft, disease is corruption.

Regarding the article on the Internet, I will try to intuit a "microbial" profile that follows the ups and downs of that university professor until he decays. The individual to whom I refer did not plunge straight into great iniquity as soon as he stepped into the academic sphere. Certainly, he had a series of more discreet "ethical preludes", which strengthened his audacity to engage in a feat of such proportions. These antecedents functioned as the opening notes of a tragic symphony, the crescendo of which culminates in an unforgettable act of corruption.

The microbe, like an obscure artist in search of a coveted podium, meticulously searched for the ideal stage to show off his mastery, where no one else can. He didn't settle for just any host, he didn't want to live anonymously in a lifeless landscape, but aspired to a lean, warm-blooded organism where he could unfetteredly direct his spectacle of invasion and proliferation.

In this theater of vulnerability, um labirinto de uncertainty , the microbe made its appearance as a main actor, taking control and manipulating the vital functions of the host. In this sanctuary of fragility, he has settled comfortably, like a director who knows that his play will run without opposition, in an audience devoid of critics. Here, in this pathological comfort zone, the microbe reached its peak, turning weakness into a stage, and vulnerability into triumph.

Leadership: Do you risk using a means of subterfuge that is not subordinated to an ethical end, so as to gain more than you are entitled to possess?

Being young, this jovial professor found a wife, that "Sleeping Beauty" type, who is more of a sleeper, by no means beautiful, but with the allure of "Mademoiselle Chanel", especially resembling the celebrities fit into the "People who do nothing" pattern.

And since they both live in a dilapidated house with rent, a kind of forced symbiosis, and it's hard to get by on one salary, you have to find a way to make a good living, right? A host must be found for the paired parasite. The ideal place: the university. In this sanctuary of precarity, the pathogenic microbe, like a master of survival, orchestrates a plan to ensure its prosperity. One dark night, he introduces another microbe, a nearly identical genetic accomplice, into the host's bloodstream through a single drop of blood.

This newcomer, like an unscrupulous writer, quickly appropriates the genetic material from neighboring cells. He composes a new "work", carefully adding bibliographic references to avoid accusations of "biological plagiarism". In this way, he transforms overnight into an entity of status and prestige, a "teacher" microbe, if you will. The metabolic wage increases, the status in the cellular microcosm improves, and thus the new microbe secures a future for itself in an organism already weakened by disease and disease. It is a rapid but calculated evolutionary leap in a biological theater where the stakes are survival and prosperity.

Now husband and wife, the microbe and its symbiont, have merged under a protective shell. In this cellular cocoon, Espaco Sagrado , they live out their existence in symbiosis, a partnership of survival in an organism weakened but providing them with everything they need to thrive. It is a dark but effective alliance in a biological universe where the only law is that of survival.

Leadership: Can you assume the attitude of the performer towards the "character with the mask", rethinking your identity according to the expressiveness of the mask and the "new" relationship between the young performers?

Freed from poverty and torment, we now see him in the corridors of the faculty smiling, optimistic, open to communication, sociable, round-faced. Former award winner, good high school kid, obedient, home early. And suddenly, look what happened! Someone has arrived! Dreams have come true. "The world looks at me like a mountain, God, I'm so stupid!"

But the success does not stop there. A false doctoral thesis, well hidden from the world, functioning as a kind of occult talisman, ensured him a passage to a higher level, becoming a Dottore , a title taken from "Commedia dell'arte". This document, like a latent virus in the genome of a cell, must remain inactive until the conditions become favorable for its activation. In fact, no one knows anything about the great philosopher's doctorate, and no one will find any trace of this thesis, because plagiarism would expose his complete lack of knowledge. It will cleverly hide its thief until the end of its life, in the same way that a microbe masks its presence in the host organism.

Leadership: Can the experience you share with others help ennoble them, especially through what you give and take, without giving an account to anyone?

But let's go back to the beginning. In this dilapidated house, where the moldy walls are like a breeding ground for pathogens, our teacher is not the only tenant. Another neighbor shares with him this unhealthy world, the same gloomy situation, both of them trying year after year to repair the sick walls of this house with hand paint. In this ecosystem of possible and impossible compromises, full of half-truths, the neighbor also deserves a chance at prosperity, doesn't he?

So the teacher initiates him into the same obscure art of survival. Like a virus passing its genetic information to another cell, the professor offers his neighbor the secret recipe for rapid ascent, uma nobre toxina , a substance that, although it appears to be beneficial, only serves to multiply and spread the infection. One night, under the power of darkness, the neighbor copies from various sources, merges the information and unhindered produces a textbook. In an instant, he also becomes part of the teaching staff, another microorganism in this weakened organism that is the educational system.

Of course, the neighbor also has a wife, another entity that deserves to be integrated into this vicious cycle. By the same method, she too is turned into a teacher, another pathogen in this epidemic of corruption that spreads through the blood of the system, infecting every cell it encounters. Pathogenic strains, experts in the art of mimicry.

Leadership: Can you maintain the interpretation of a role and the support of the conception of the role realized in conditions of non-conformism, so as to justify a moral expansion at the level of the organic system?

And from here begins the invasion, an unprecedented microbial expansion, uma explosao cosmogonica , a Big Bang of possibilities, which transforms the known space into an infinite universe of opportunities. Each of them, like experienced pathogens, invites its own related strains into the host body. In an almost poetic yet tragic way, the university becomes a breeding ground for a culture of harmful microorganisms. The microbe disrupts the body's vital functions through a kind of parasitism, surrounding itself only with host cells, newly lodged in living tissues.

All relatives, all friends, all acquaintances are welcome, invited like stars, proposed to become honorary members in this sick organism. Instead of being a sanctuary of knowledge and innovation, the university is turning into a biotope of corruption, an anaerobic environment where values and ethics are replaced by a pervasive toxicity. The teachers don't have websites, they have no idea what to write on a blog, but they are authors of some (outdated) books in which the biographical references occupy almost as many pages as the text of the book.

Here is the worst disease. No symbiotic microorganisms were brought into the system to contribute to overall health and balance, only other mediocre strains capable of perpetuating the cycle of infection and resisting any attempt at eradication.

Leadership: Can you adopt a perspective that values personal responsibility and ethical freedom, through an openness to all that means innovation and adaptability in approaching the future?

It all started with a microbe. One, virulent, invasive, but imperceptible due to its microscopic size. At least at the level of direct perception. This "father of piles and relationships", master of adverse selection, a manipulator of the environment, learned better than anyone how to cultivate and nurture the strains most resistant to ethics and morality. In the absence of any spiritual values, he and his neighboring accomplice periodically orchestrate a macabre dance of "small increases", a ritual of multiplying corruption that stretches like a spider's web throughout the academic body.

This is how corruption is born, dear readers, this is how the microbe spreads, and this is how a vicious cycle is perpetuated that further weakens the body's resistance to infection.

Unfortunately, it no longer holds the shape. Soon, there will be a sacred darkness, a kind of divine eclipse that will put an end to this grotesque drama . The curtain will be drawn over this theater of abjection, leaving behind only the symptoms of a systematic disease, metastasized in every fiber of the social fabric. Every structure built on corruption will crumble, not like an ordinary ruin, but like an organism that has succumbed to a fatal infection.

And then, a divine therapeutic agent, a kind of soul antibiotic, will shine light into this dark environment. In fact, everything in the world will change. The light will act as a spiritual antiseptic, sterilizing the rotten corridors of power and disinfecting the deep wounds of society. Where there will be light, darkness will have no place to hide.

Leadership must not favor the perpetuation of an "inflammatory process" capable of mobilizing people's efforts in a conflicting direction with the principles of common sense, but promote the eradication of any tensions between what is desired and what is ethically acceptable.

The Microbe called "university professor" has spread so much in the world, but especially in our country, that a change, a crisis in the educational system has become significant.

You've probably heard the expression: "What to do with college these days? It's no use!"

This is the result obtained during the last 30 years by the "enlightened minds" of the faculties. Plagiarists, swindlers, incompetents, impostors, cheats and relationships. The world no longer needs "screenwriters" greedy for money and sick of power.

Since last year, all the world's attention is turning especially towards AI (Artificial Intelligence), where models like , or are able to provide much easier, much more effective learning methods. Simply put, there is no need for teachers anymore. And master's degrees and doctorates will no longer be recognized starting next year. Everything that is rotten, microbial, everything that is called a teacher, will disappear very soon, once and for all.

The world is moving towards an unprecedented spirituality, where falsehood will be replaced by authenticity, thanks to advances in Artificial Intelligence.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-microbe.html

The Miracle Of The Birth Of A Miracle

On October 01, 2014

Perform a diagnosis of your own level of development, expressing your vision in the conditions of using the models of creation in the highest sense.

Serghei Eisenstein's vision over his film will take shape over the course of a year and a half before shooting begins. Thoroughly developed, with hundreds of frames now looked for beforehand, in a succession of sketches – the precise vision of the film materializes. Throughout its making, the artist constantly sought uses and new solutions in striving for perfection.

It is not the chronology we're interested in the first place, but rather, as always, exactly the pursuing of certain elements of this creative gesture, of this mechanism. That is, the miracle of the birth of a miracle. Starting from disparate external signs, the biographer has the role of the palm reader here, who reads into the arabesque of the palmistry of the past: a genesis.

*The great director said it well: "The most important thing is to have the vision, the concept. And then to master it and stay true to it. From this point of view, there is no difference whether you write a script or meditate over the plan of filming in general, or if you elaborate a solution for any particular detail."

Leadership: To what extent does the formation of a rational-scientific vision contribute to facilitating the transition from normality to exigency, if a synchronizing condition exists between the exaggeration of distinct elements and the temptation to arrange them in new promotional material?

It is however important to know why, in my acceptance, only the creators play the role of artistic guidance indicators to promote new concepts of "trust information" type. But fFrom where does vision come from, shaped throughout the process of creation with ramifications in a thinking that wishes to demonstrate its superiority, as a product of the continuity between experimentation and achievement? Who are – to use the increasingly rare terminology – the new art shapers? Because, leadership among the culture of humility and quality, in a broader sense, constantly changes its orientation and content.

Vision is the result of a creative act attesting the presence of freedom in thinking with the possibility of expression in real life, starting from the signs of a profound transformation of style and composition. It focuses on the transition from normality to exigency, if a synchronization condition is fulfilled between exaggerating distinct elements and the temptation to arrange them into new promotional material.

The distinct elements can be represented by the expansion of experiences that lead to higher quality results in the process of forming a new concept, or the narrowing of the details that can distinguish between a well-done thing and a work that is not in accordance with social requirements and needs.

The promotion of these elements in a new reference material that testifies to the quality of a vision depends on the director's ability to reject or accept modernity, the beauty and simplicity with which he succeeds to capture an incredible visual mobility, an unknown facet of the world.

Leadership: Are you able to benefit from a favorable context for expressing creativity, focusing on the image of the reality you present to the world to improve the viewing experience within yourself?

In the context of specific cultures and backgrounds of development, vision can acquire an extra dimension, hitherto unknown, one which is increasingly harder to perceive, which values the modern man, but as if taken from a "back to the future" type of scenario. It is a rational-scientific vision, which can be considered in a conventional way as an essential instrument for the understanding of other points of view and values, which however does not prove valid unless it is a source of compensation of the "personal power" factor.

To any form of mobility, in leadership, vision can be an element of negative or positive influence over self-image and personality, a reason to limit or control what you become through the science of putting your creation to value. In the artist's vision, creation gains a unique color, able to highlight it only if it is enriched with strong shades of expression – from the perspective of systematic unity of science.

You can be a leader-creator only if vision becomes an ideological concept, dominated in the mobiles of a higher self-understanding.

A rational-scientific vision, built on the ashes of a continuous determination, through the force of the creative blow, contributes to facilitating the transition from normality to exigency in the measure in which you succeed in making the leap from quantity to quality, from slow to excellent, from one level of understanding to another. Or rather, when, as if spellbound by the immensity of a distant horizon, made worthy by the great wonder of creation, you get to master it and stay true to it in striving towards perfection.

Leadership focuses on the experience of looking within yourself in the context of a creativity that overcomes the frameworks of preexisting reality, enriching it by attaching the possible worlds configured to the plot of representing a story that succeeds in becoming history.

The Miracle Of The Birth Of A Miracle is the extension of the mechanism of creation, by cultivating and processing a vision, specific and achievable, which has the power to change the way you look at art and the way in which art shapes your personality. If you want to assess your personality, conduct a diagnosis of your own level of development, expressing your vision in the conditions of using the models of creation in the highest sense.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-miracle-of-the-birth-of-a-miracle.html

The Miracle Of The Collective Victory

On April 11, 2009

Transform your leadership in an unbreakable unity by uniting your score in a perfect harmony with the scores of the others around you.

On 18 April 1938, the super hero "Superman" made a lucky hit. And this because his creators, two childhood friends, one who had talent for storytelling, the other one to transpose anything in the drawing, have joined their forces with the intention of creating a new comic book character.

Jerry Siegel and Joe Shuster accepted to cooperate wholeheartedly in their attempt to grow in the eyes of the world by realizing a particular character of those created until then. They have created a very effective and powerful unit by merging their special qualities, without competing at all. Each of them has fulfilled the role admirably, adapting, with their own means, using their skills and experience to finish and complete this unequaled "construction" that circled the world.

However, Jerry Siegel and Joe Shuster lived in poverty until the end of their lives because they sold their copyright to Superman for basically nothing to a skilled businessman. Their biggest mistake was that they hurried to make a small profit quickly, getting hired at said business man's company, without intuiting how well-known their creation will one day become.

Leadership: Can your science strengthen the contours between reality and fiction in a vision of Oneness, by relating to a life lesson to be learned?

Can be encountered at you such an unbreakable unit, which promotes ideas and values in such an obvious form? The elements underlying your "construction" are both physical and spiritual. Everything starts from the essence of who you are and what you want to become, from the "raw material" of the highest quality that both you and the other staff members of yours are using it to produce "masterpieces". Leadership is a perfect agreement not only emotionally, but also of vision that each one with their capability to follow the same path.

The thing that maintains the connection between you and the others around you it is this type of closeness, who captivates, by the way of being of everyone involved in the collaboration, through the fluency of original ideas expressed by each of us, through the personal and professional values that you share, through the expressive solutions that you find, through the unique style to approach all sides of that "construction" to which you would like to give life.

Leadership teaches us an important life lesson: don't give anyone power over your personal creation that you haven't had the opportunity to turn into a startup, but try to turn yourself into a fulminating result of creation that everyone needs to be aware of.

Just as a song, in order to reach the top positions must be conceived in such a way as to surprise pleasantly the listener - even so, your collaboration with others, in order to give very good results must be conceived in such a way as to transform into a high ideal that would meet the expectations of others.

Leadership is not a game where you can get outstanding performance only by orders and commands. Nevertheless, it is rather a symphony of collaboration involving the "scores" of both sides - of yours and your employees - in which everyone is invited to bring their personal note, and where everything it is put in place to the last detail.

To be the story of a great creation means to establish a relationship based on synergy between composition, design and interpretation, so that your representation on the world stage is perceived as part of a collective vision that outlines a unitary perspective in the world.

The Miracle Of The Collective Victory it is the fruit of an efficient leadership. A partnership must be fertilized by a joint effort and solidarity in order to achieve a common goal.

Conclusion: The collective victory is determined by an efficient leadership through which it was achieved that perfect collaboration resulting from the union of qualities and the adoption of a common vision.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-miracle-of-the-collective-victory.html

The Miracle

On March 29, 2015

Relate to what changes you, subordinating yourself to the model of an authority found under the dome of a miraculous becoming.

- You have only lost your freedom, shouted Maximilien, interrupting the count. My father only lost his fortune. But I, I lost Valentine !

- Look at me, Maximilien, said Monte Cristo with the solemnity that at times made him appear so great and compelling. Look at me: I have neither tears in my eyes, nor fever, nor death heartbeats in my heart. And yet, I see you suffer Maximilien, you, who are as dear to me as a son. Does this not tell you that pain is like life and that beyond it will always be something unknown? If I ask you, if I command you to live, I do it only with the conviction that one day, you will thank me for keeping your life.

- Count, I have loved her for almost two years now, for almost two years I could read the virtues of the girl and that women written by the very hand of God in her heart opened to me like a book. With Valentine, I could've had boundless happiness, gigantic, unknown, a happiness too great, too full, too holy for this world. And because this world has not given it to me, count, I have to tell you that without Valentine, for me only despair and desolation exist upon this earth.

*- You weak-heart, so you don't have the power to give a friend some time for the challenge he's trying to overcome ! Have you any idea how many earthly powers he commands? Do you have any idea that he has so much faith in God that he can get miracles from the one who said man can move mountains with his faith? Well, the miracle I hope for, wait for, or... **

Leadership: Does the best summary of your life lie in the predilection to judge yourself in a constructive way, depending on how you can make yourself useful in the lives of those who know the despair of an endless expectation?

Leadership is formed as a result of understanding the "Quo Vadis" game by measuring emotional intensity and inclination to solve problematic situations where the will and intent of redeploying your personal power make up the parts of the plan to respond to the demands of others' lives. That does not entail placing yourself in their place and going through their "hell" before asking yourself: How did this plan come to be in the mind of the Lord?

Leadership sets the playing style of the superior man in a combination of codes and hidden meanings. A game continuously subjected to the trial of rational and spiritual approach, through a close proximity to the most precious goods of man (inner peace and the joy of living) as a model of an authority found under the dome of an identity becoming that establishes an alliance between faith and good deeds.

Applying a protective power or an organism of knowledge appointed in accordance with the definition of wellbeing, whether it is a rational one, intuitive, represents a predisposition of man for affection, warmth, appreciation and finishing of character. This power is the moral capacity to distinguish between good and evil, pursuing to fulfill good, not evil.

Regardless of the reasons for this power to engage in various causes, you must always be reconciled to the idea that you will be dependent for the rest of your life on what your suffering has caused in the past, which may very well be the very suffering of others.

To live and judge your own life is to arm yourself with the desire to escape yourself, the suffering of being what you feel you are in a defining moment of someone else's life.

Through consciousness, through the virtue of having an appropriate intent and of not avoiding the criticisms that seem to have a core, as a leader you being to live a weakness of character, a certain distance from what you proposed yourself to be due to a superior determination and the science of the game of life. The game of life involves the character of involuntary spontaneity in the combinatorial work of imagination to add or edit the image of the characters or action, shattering any misleading thought about what you mean in the vision of a supreme authority.

And leadership meets the demands of the ideal man through the sedative influence transferred at a consciousness level, manifested at times by an intention of rejecting what he is urged to agree with. This explains the power that is transferred to a friend for the test he has to pass: to obtain the miracle, to move mountains.

The leader becomes a reflection of the man who cannot break free from the past, but who, at the same time, doesn't show the particularity of a finished player, but rather helps recreate the future through the experience of signs, through a sort of thinking of the transformative miracle, based on the conviction: "I can move mountains."

It is possible that the reality that follows this plan does not correspond to the combinations of solemnity, aspirations to high, and altruistic impulses, but to aim at preventing the degradation of a certain concept of world and life.

Leadership: Is the connotation you give to the test of life the further significance of a word that can mean "POWER" according to its purpose to keep in balance the momentary experiences of a lost soul in the darkness of the world?

Romanian philosopher Constantin Rădulescu Motru said it well: "With one word, the whole series of phenomena occurring in a system of bodies can be considered as a manifestation of powers, which have the property of compensating one another, after accurate reports and to be able to always be disposed in a circuit of partial transformations of a singular whole."

The word encompasses Everything within it – meaning, power and deed. This word transposed through a miracle, mystery of the energies of God, in which all faith in success is built, in which the possibility of manifesting a great truth and walking the force line of destiny reigns, must be a presence of spiritual height, a force, a person with unattainable qualities. A leader who, in turn, heals his own emotional wound that he perceives from those close to him.

In leadership, the word that can indicate "POWER", having a great value in terms of emotional impact, is not synthesized through a "God, forgive him" (conceived as a sort of regret in terms of the choices made in life), but is synthesized through a "Wonder to the end in a miracle".

The Miracle is a surprising, extraordinary phenomenon attributed to a high spiritual force. What changes in man is the way in which he is reflected in the eyes of his superiors. Leadership requires the possibility of you yourself experiencing power of a new life with the soul of another.

* Note: Alexandre Dumas - The Count of Monte Cristo, Publishing Youth 1957.

The Mirage Of Discovering The Unimaginable

On February 05, 2010

You cannot reach the "unimaginable" without correcting your imperfections.

I was only eight years old back then, but I remember very well that sunny summer day, when I was sitting in the living room watching my mother paint. I am aware that memory can sometimes play tricks on somebody, but not on me, the memory of that day will always be alive.

My mother's hobby has always been painting, she has always manifested a special interest towards art and painting, towards everything that is beautiful and nice. She still has a special aesthetic sense. Having a rich imagination, she always adds something new to her paintings: a light, a shadow, a glow, a brightness or a fascinating background, or a mysterious aspect, but always keeping the proportions. She knew how to put her feelings into the paintings. She knew how to make the difference between the essential and the unimportant, but she had measure in everything.

In any case, that entire after-noon she painted continuously, until it was almost dark. I watched her painting, at which she worked the entire week, as if it belonged to a great personality. It was just like a picture from a magazine, that's how good it was. The rose petals, red like the fire, the rays of the sun that were slipping through the petals, the bright green porcelain vase which had some small Chinese characters engraved on it, under which there was the white triangular macramé, the dark brown oak wood table, they all created a living, very clear, splendid, quality image.

Leadership: Is the measure of the masterpiece you leave behind determined by how you represent the outer form of things or their essence?

I realized, looking closely at the painting, that few people could have painted something that beautiful. The painting surpassed anything imaginable. It was extraordinary from all points of view. I stared at it in amazement, wondering how could it have been made so well, with such excellence and delicacy.

Seeing the reaction on my face, my mother told me:

- The painting is beautiful, but you should know that it has a lot of imperfections. It is not as good as you think it is and as I hoped it would be. I still have a lot to practice. Look at the rose shanks. Didn't I make them a little bit too long...? Look at the vase. Isn't it a little too small for these roses...? Look at the petals I painted. Are they identical to those in the vase? Aren't they too wide and too fleshy...? And so on.

She made a short pause and then she continued:

- There are plenty of other painters a lot more skillful than I am. It will be long before I get to be a real artist, before I reach the unimaginable.

Leadership: How much do you get involved in "The game of who you are"?

Yes ! I can say that we witness o revolution of tendency for sensationalism, wrapped in a package of distinction and simplicity, then placed in a game that never gained such promotion since its invention. It is about "the game of who you are", representing the real essence of your value, aligned with your own talents, applied into concrete actions, made with a purpose.

Why is it so exciting to find the truth of who you really are? Why does this game allure all people around the world? Why is it more exciting than poker or money? Because you cannot win effortless, because the stake is given by the way you interpret reality. Here everything depends on how you perceive yourself when you meet a soul that resonates with yours and then, the way you perceive yourself when you interact with your own content.

Leadership is the experience of experiencing that composition of art represented authentically in the intense tones of superior lucidity on the world that you look at with other eyes than those of the ordinary man.

When you explore to the maximum your own space for expression of individuality, focusing on those points of view and ways of approaching the assessment of activities and their effectiveness, you form certain beliefs that may later turn into virtues. And these virtues, which generally reflect the degree of maturity at which you got, configure a much closer connection between who you were, who you are and who you will become.

Virtues highlight all that is best in us, being particularly important for the sustainable development of personality, while preventing the spread of that strong infection called "over-assessment". This over-assessment is reflected in a distorted way in the perceptions that the current realities of our own being claims abundantly.

Leadership: Do you live with the illusion that you are great in the subordination of art that you represent at an advanced level of integration of the contexts of producing and receiving new meanings of depth of living?

On that day, I learned a precious lesson: that not everything what seems extraordinary is also very well made. What seemed to me formidable, for the eye of a real artist, it was merely an attempt and just that. There are few who can succeed in accomplishing something really special, something that would exceed any imagination. However, many fall for the trap I fell into because they completely ignore the details and because they are not fine connoisseurs of art. Everyone can "read" a painting from their knowledge point of view, but not everyone is an expert in the field who could really understand and asses a work of art.

Leadership, just like a painting, is an art. My question is: how many of those who have high positions really have the talent to be leaders? How many of them really know how to work with people? How many of them succeed in positively influencing those they have under their command, how many of them have charisma, how many of them have advanced competences, how many of them assume responsibility for their actions?

Lucidity is the consequence of the contemplation of the work of art born from the dependence on correcting your imperfections.

Because what some think they are, namely good professionals, can, in fact, be only dilettantism, since, unfortunately, many are wrong when they imagine that they are excellent professionals and talented leaders. For this reason, I think that it is necessary that some people open their eyes better towards reality, before it's too late.

One of the mistakes made by people at high levels is that they want to reach the "unimaginable" very quickly, without correcting their imperfections. They don't know their weaknesses and limitations, they don't know how they are seen by those around them, they don't accept criticism (although, they apparently do) and, overwhelmed by a terrible interior desire to be more and more admired, they asses their performances in a wrong way. Instead of trying to change their mentality and make efforts to really improve themselves, they always live with the illusion that they are great.

The mirage of discovering the unimaginable can be interpreted as follows:: there is always a way for improvement, which means a lot of work. Letting yourself tricked by a mirage is a big mistake, which could have lethal consequences.

P.S. Form a realistic picture about yourself.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mirage-of-discovering-the-unimaginable.html

The Mirror Of Leadership

On September 22, 2010

Master the meaning of a man's life and you will be the master of his heart.

At the end of the movie "Tears of the Sun (2003)", Arthur Azuka, son of President Samuel Azuka, approached doctor Kendricks and said to her with a boundless sincerity and admiration:

- I'll never forget it. I'll never forget the sacrifices you made for me, for my people.

Doctor Kendricks was weeping moving tears. She was carefullylistening the boy, keeping the most stoical attitude, while embracing tenderly one of the rescued children. She didn't know exactly what she felt: she seemed independent, free and strong. She would have liked to start a new life. She didn't have any conflict of conscience, because she did what she had to, everything she could to save those of St. Michael mission. Otherwise they would have been killed by the dictatorial regime of general Mustafa Yakubu.

Everything conveyed full satisfaction in her, an amazing silence for those Nigerians that had gathered around her, saved from death, which reminded her the deep love and special affection she bear them. The meaning of their lives was freedom itself.

Leadership: Is your soul mirrored in the good works that the investigation of a decision variable in which your peak value is returned by the depths of life and death?

She was only with herself at that moment of high spiritual feeling. How much her victory impressed her. She had never proved before such a perfect confidence in her own actions. What would had happened, she was probably asking herself, if she hadn't intervened to support those people? What would have happened if through her will, her tremendous desire, she hadn't had saved the local Nigerians from the hell they were struggling in?

At that moment of lucidity, she truly realized who she really is. She recognized herself, recognized the goodness of her soul. Her saving intervention, the actions she undertook to support those locals all the way through, were like a mirror that reflected her kindness, or rather, I would say that they were a reflection of her great, divine soul. She was seized by a deep moral peace and a boundless gratitude.

Leadership is a mirror where you see yourself, where you can see your own soul. Is a mirror you look your past in, you assess your facts and see how much or how little the world had changed because of you.

Leadership is a mirror that reflects best your personality, your inner state, your attitude and your leadership skills. Is a mirror that reflects all your qualities and defects, and reveals your hidden sides - your bright or dark, happy or sad, positive or negative side. Is a mirror which reflects all your spiritual states, is the mirror which reflects your activity as a leader, after you strained all your powers to fulfill a mission.

To look in the depth of the retrospective mirror of your evolution means to continually understand that what you are experiencing inside is a kind of continuation of what you represent in the lives of others.

Doctor Kendricks'cleverness, kindness, openness and beauty were like a powerful shield created for locals saved from death. They saw in her the nicest and kindest being in the world. After all, there was no doubt for them that she was an angel of God, the help from Heaven who fell in moments of need, to meet their prayers. When they looked at her, they felt they were facing themselves, their past, their deepest roots deeply placed in the unconscient, the source of their entire being.

Leadership is a mirror which reflects both the outer world and the inner world. Is a mirror which reflects people around you, your deeds, your success or failure. Is a mirror in which people find their true human quality. Is a mirror in which, if you know how to look in, you can see everything.

People will always perceive you as a mirror of their souls only when what you are now at the decisional level corresponds to what is happening to you in the reality they deliver in the version of an authentic experience.

The mirror of leadership is the reflection of a leader's entire activity. Crossing the long way to achieve your goal, without absolving yourself of human qualities and emotions is, of course, admirable and gives birth to a great content and special satisfaction inside the leader's soul, and proves that the job well done wasn't in vain.

Do you broaden your perspective of recognizing personal value in a mirror that always reflects the best parts of you?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mirror-of-leadership.html

The Mirror Of Nature

On April 03, 2018

Expand your options for understanding life as a first-rate teaching on how you manifest yourself as a part of nature in the midst of society.

Perhaps nothing is more tiring than waking up every summer morning at six o'clock to sprinkle the flowers and trees in the garden. Perhaps nothing is more tiring than staying up late in the evening, tending the soil and weeding it. And last but not least, maybe nothing is more tiring than the thought that tomorrow you have to start all over again.

The idea that work is tiring never occurs in the mind of the gardener, who loves this occupation so much that he would sometimes be willing to work for free. The passion he puts into everything he does ensures his perfection in work. He takes so much care of his garden that he gets to know each flower and no corner of the earth is unknown to him. Yes, that's right, a gardener must know very well the perimeter of the land he has to take care of.

However, being a gardener is not an easy task. Because the care of a garden requires first of all attention, you must be animated by a certain feeling, by a certain attitude, you must feel that plants are part of your life. You have to know how to plant them, how to water them, how to change their soil.

Each plant requires special care, some need more water, others need more light, some should be sprayed on the leaves daily if the atmosphere is not humid and others should be sprayed with certain insecticides to control pests - to protect and grow them. Moreover, you need to know when and how to cut and graft them if you want to get new, more aesthetic and resistant varieties.

Leadership: Can your appreciation of a small part of nature subsequently determine the degree of adherence to an ideal living environment extended to a transformation of the level of consciousness?

You can contribute to expanding people's horizons and finding the inner flame that gives energy, leading to their transformation as efficiently as possible, only if you are animated by a certain feeling, a certain attitude, only if you feel that they are part of your life and if you strive to intervene in their development. As a leader you must serve as a change of consciousness, by manifesting your own values, ideals, feelings and activities, by increasing your contribution to the functioning of their whole being.

Do you see in people that part of nature which manifests its autonomy through you in the very bosom of nature? Are you and they part of nature, which is made up of vectors of different forces cooperating with each other, including your feelings and thoughts? Can you perceive yourself as a part of nature that emerged only because of the balance in a stable environment that sustains life?

Reaching a higher level of consciousness from a new philosophy of nature that illustrates your interdependence with the biological matrix of life, with everything around you, actually means expanding your awareness of the area called "oasis of relaxation" that helps you calibrate your feelings as a result of favorable occupations on your mood.

Consciousness comes from the soul of nature that gives you life, being called by the ancient sages as "esoteric work on the self". Can your consciousness expand into a spiritual reality by accepting the teachings drawn from the management of nature?

Great truth spoke the one who said: "Consciousness is undoubtedly one of the best parts of being human. We do not exist only as living organisms: we know that we exist, we think about it, and we enjoy life."

That small part of nature that can later determine the degree of adherence to an ideal framework of extended life, as a kind of oasis of peace and inspiration, represented by a recreational activity, must be a necessary lesson for your soul. It must be a first-rate teaching on how you manifest yourself and how others see you in line with the fundamental attitude of the one who practices the discipline of mind, knowledge, work, wisdom.

Leadership: Can you envisage a philosophy of nature that will paint your entire activity as an extraordinary manifestation of the inner reality, for the reasons of the manifestation of a spiritual principle?

The relationship with yourself is very well mirrored by the way you relate to the philosophical study of nature. You can imprint an educational discipline of the profession behind which is guessed the concern for value, authenticity and, above all, an exemplary consistency, when you come to adopt a philosophy such as: "the first requirement in leadership is not intellect or vigor, but the patience with which you take care of nature."

Let us remember that for Hegel nature was the other side of the spirit, for Goethe nature was an instance of correcting self-confident thinking. And the Kantian identification of nature and art imposes, however, the preeminence of the beauty of nature over the artistic beauty. (Voia Vasile – The temptation of the limit and the limit of temptation).

With the same passion with which a gardener takes care of plants, and sometimes with the same effort and patience, a manager must take care of the staff in his company. He must select people according to well-established criteria, guide and instruct them in order to develop and improve them. A series of measures, investments, care and special attention – meant to ensure an abundant "harvest", a renewal of relations, the establishment of a clear, safe, reference direction, leading to the affirmation of a unitary conception in the end.

This conception must be based on the definition of a spiritual principle, such as: *"if you want to have peace of mind, then you must learn to be one with nature"*or "the patience you have with other people is an extension of time spent in the midst of nature".

Is the bright part of your nature conditioned by the fruitful fulfillment of the effort made in the process of caring for your personal garden throughout time?

The Mirror Of Nature is what we call a witness or the conscious presence of an inner comfort springing from the serenity with which man accepts his life, good or bad, just as the garden accepts all the tools of the gardener as benchmarks in assessing the quality with which it was endowed natively with God and which he knows how to value.

Expand your options for understanding life, rediscovering the pleasure of being in the bosom of nature.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mirror-of-nature.html

The Mirror Of The Soul

On June 05, 2021

Turn your gaze towards the inside of your being, to the point where you are trying to face a world you have to conquer.

Thanks to the science of writing, from which I extracted the essence of a new spirituality, since all that differentiates science from religion is that science seeks answers to all the mysteries of the world, I understood how feelings live and how they act in the presence of a Creator who made all that can be seen and all that cannot be seen. This is also a quality of the writer, to decide on a thing, based on a deep knowledge of the issue in question, especially when feelings are involved in "textual engineering", intertwine with matter and form a unitary whole.

This point of view can also be embraced by a chess player who imagines a game of chess, first as a spectator, then as a player. Like the writer, a chess player can pass as a "compliment receiver", but his mind is focused only on achieving results and self-improvement, which can give him the value of being unique or different, even after the "queens" were exchanged.

Well, in a moment of lucidity I came to the following finding: you need to introduce more avant-garde science into your work so that you can think differently. To arm oneself with that science of life, without which writing or chess could not be transposed into a Creation, into a self-analysis, into a new self-consciousness, and at the same time to see yourself accompanied by a sacred feeling, born from the area of growth and education of your intelligence. This is what it means to be a writer !

And if in the game of chess, the king can only move one square after leaving the initial position, well, in the great puzzle of writing, the writer never leaves his initial position, remaining flanked by mental stimulation from the space of fantasy (which can only be saved through culture).

Leadership: Is there a debate regarding your creation about the meanings of reality that the concept of "content dimensions" serves, in the sense of a precondition in the process of individuation?

This was followed by the second part of the foray into another, truly "explosive" universe, which once discovered gave me additional satisfactions, surprises, and intellectual favors. Over time, I learned the science of writing as well as when I played a game of chess: I learned to express my views through the extremely varied ways of moving the pieces, specific to a technical process of orientation in space.

From the perspective of the science of writing, this presupposes above all a total reconsideration of the possibilities of receiving a mental self-image that could engage each sense and all the senses together, especially the visual one, in order to perceive the inner, invisible springs of this masterpiece called: "brief foray into a universe doubled in black and white."

Chess, like music or painting, is unique in the facets of multiple intelligence that I consider a condition of intelligence, a final cause in how to draw attention to the ambivalence of writing and produce the connection with the universe. Even better, moving the focus to the essence of a deeply figurative work is considered passive, but full of pitfalls: it does not put any pressure on the color of a harmonious emotion, but on your spirit, so that your thoughts travel wide and long.

Indeed, writing is the destination of my creation. It can be transformed into a truly memorable experience, into an instrument of probing the ego, into the field of confrontation between the most varied feelings, being an initiatory test of knowledge in a moment of "enlightenment". As you take on the experience of a reality outside the self, but similar to the self, you are like a pawn which, as it progresses, creates a weakness: you become more sincere, but more and more critical of yourself.

Leadership: Does the importance you attach to your creation result from a comparison of the concept of Self with the evolution of the concept of "remind yourself in the case of an out-of-region move"?

And so, carefully, with small steps and measured in number, I entered the space of my reflection, in her intimacy, in her philosophy, in her majesty, only to finally find, with one last rebellion against the reality that directs my soul, that in fact I do not exist as an isolated individual, but belong to an experience of the same type, although in completely different mental frames.

Therefore, I require a different number of perspectives on my whole being in order to opt for a unity of a static nature, inherent in an idealistic image. Is it not so? After all, I think like an artist whose art consists precisely in hiding information that would hurt others' feelings, thus presenting everything in the light of an image that gives him security and fulfillment.

The promotion of the pawn comes with a lethal chess. So, be careful how you display your own feelings in words !

After all, I felt the first trap of chess right in the opening of the game: I can win an important central pawn, but that means letting the king be discovered. Basically, multiple threats. What a serious mistake ! And I still have the courage to write about it. Why? Because writing says a lot about my mistakes, how to admit my guilt. To not blame anyone else !

Exactly. In writing, you have to behave like a chess player: think about your movements in advance, be able to control someone's feelings, but at the same time be as cold as a machine – especially when it comes to positioning feelings at different points in the protection zone. Therefore, the evolution of the concept of "remind yourself in the case of an out-of-region move" is based on that look turned to the inside of the being, at the point where you try to face a world you have to conquer.

The concept of "content dimensions" is a flexible solution to locate content on several dimensions.

For example, the content of your creation could be located not only in a single version of reality captured by a writer, but it could have a content element that changes depending on the position of your being in the guise of "an intellect that fights itself".

Chess is always the result of a confrontation with yourself. So is writing.

Writing Is The Mirror Of The Soul because every word you put on paper is usually the expression of what is going on inside you at a time when you feel the need for a change perceived through discreet subjectivity and objective lyricism.

The Mobilizing Language Of Leadership

On March 07, 2009

Orient your efforts towards "a key resistance area" which could motivate you and highlight your potential.

Napoleon Bonaparte (1769-1821) was one of the greatest military leaders in all history. He overcame his military condition and became the emperor of France, at the same time he became the most powerful leader in Europe. But he could never have reached a high level of leadership, he would never have succeeded in climbing the hierarchical steps had he not decided to be a leader with a well/determined role in the given circumstances.

He proved he was skillful enough to be a leader by his tactical intelligence and his charismatic way of interacting with people ever since he was a mere corporal. The nickname "The Little Corporal" (Napoleon only had a height of 1.65 m) had become an appellative of sympathy and admiration of his soldiers in respect to his military genius. He had a lucid and penetrating mind, he had an immense power of concentration and extraordinary energy, it was very easy for him to dictate his point of view. And his temperance, moderation and social liberalism have grown his chances for a promotion.

Leadership: Is the deep meaning you attribute to the hero in you related to what you capture while everything passes, thinking and making plans in terms of the effects your message has on other people?

In order to have success, you must earn people's respect. You can exert a powerful effect on them depending on the position you will stand on in the category of people with a high degree of influence, with a great ability of conviction. Your power of influence is a part of the most intimate structure of your leadership, evidencing the personal color of your inner self, especially the treats professionally "sculpted" in your own self.

Just like a painter doses color with high intensity, without even nicking the perspective in which the components are situated – so and you, must dose your personality with much intuition, diplomacy and tact, with much ambition, a sense of conviction, with a lot of balance, without setting yourself apart from the concise reality that you share with others and without nicking the impression of continuity in the way that you view yourself in relation to them, their expectations, to what you can do in order to unite them around a common goal to ensure your acknowledgment of superiority.

Everything passes, but it leaves traces. Everything passes, but not everything is forgotten. The message that Napoleon gave us after he came to power could be formulated as follows: "Do not let yourself be led by others, but let yourself be led only by reason." What you will become depends on the opportunities that complicated situations offer you, so that you can overcome what holds you in place and seek help from that special feeling of being untouched by the effects of modern civilization. That feeling of standing before the Lord must also be taken into account.

The deep meaning you attribute to the hero in you is related to what you catch as everything goes on, thinking and making plans in terms of the effects your message has on other people. So try to observe things in their integrity, uniqueness and dynamics. This is worth more than the image your mind builds of itself and reality.

Leadership: Should you rely on an approach that puts you in front of your own perceptions of your limits, what you think you can achieve, and what not in a situation where you have to choose between the stimulus that drives you to act and the vulnerabilities to which you will be exposed?

Napoleon knew how to find a just measure, on the incorruptible and well-determined axis of his personality, in order to create a form of representative leadership – ever since he was a mere corporal. You, as well, must fully and definitively adopt a total change, a total replenishment of your personality in order to differentiate yourself from others – through a healthy mentality and a well-expressed perspective, which could present validity and acceptance.

Your attempt to relate to others is like taking a road just recently explored by yourself, but which you must go on until the end, walking on it with the utmost certainty. The road that Napoleon undertook at the beginning of his career was almost unknown, but, by establishing his priorities and way of action towards "a key resistance area" which could motivate him and show the value of his potential, an area in which efficiency and the great results of his leadership to prevail, he became what history always remembers: a great leader.

So, first of all, it's all about a difference in the "content" of the personality, a difference in the message that you convey through your leadership, then it's about that availability to cultivate those certain abilities, points of view and attitudes that are sought for by others.

To be a leader means to be appreciated for the turn of things, it means to have a direct awareness of the unseen, of the past and of the future, before you anchor yourself to the reality of the world that God has prepared for you.

The Mobilizing Language Of Leadership emphasizes your ability to make yourself known through the intensity of your actions, in advance, in order to ensure success. The decisive role in your choice, as a leader, is played by the way you best use your potential, the way you develop your imagination and personal value – so that you can respond to people's expectations. Play the role that you have accepted freely and unconstrained, in order to shine like an actor thanks to whom the show gets the excellent review and impress the public in a special and memorable way.

Conclusion: In leadership, if you intend on obtaining the long awaited success, prepare yourself in advance, self-discipline yourself and never astray from your path and purpose. Using an inner language", but established "in a key resistance area" and tuned into the emotional oscillations, especially by a permanent discipline, you shall win respect and hearty applause.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mobilizing-language-of-leadership.html

The Modern Alchemist

On August 17, 2014

Borrow a little something from your own experiences and views to determine that form of personal experience of being in control over what you are.

You are often akin to a modern alchemist, who with scientific accuracy, rigorously dosing the materials from tubes and stills, measuring and weighing, tries to discover the philosopher's stone of art. It is born, however, in a burst of stills and tubes and outside the scholarly , rigorous calculations of the former engineer. The film "The Strike", same as Serghei Eisenstein's entire body of work, is a spontaneous artistic creation, independent from the pedantic calculations done by its creator.

*The contradiction is only apparent. An older example of a certain Leonardo da Vinci proves it. The scientific, analytical spirit of Eisenstein merely captures with lucidity the ideas in their total nudity. In its purest form, apparently "in vitro", to discover the genesis of these ideas, their intimate mechanism. It would probably be hazardous, the assertion that the whole alchemy practiced by Eisenstein was nothing but a form of coquetry of an artist of creative temperament, volcanic, who couldn't be dosed in the labeled bottles of a laboratory. But is, for now, the only possible explanation, completed by that of a being, practically very timid, maybe inhibited, which masks its incandescence by asserting the low temperature of lucidity. **

Leadership: Does the form of scientific knowledge you develop incorporate an abstract obligation to yourself and to those to which you impose yourself as a model?

Leadership is for the creative agents a change in itself, guaranteeing success in terms of impact on professional performance, but at the same time, also a creation conditioned by the contradiction between the tendency of certitude over scientific discoveries and the tendency of sharing them with others. The true art that moves you towards scientific discoveries results from bringing to light those details that could be effective in the sphere of professional activity.

Always, creation, in an effort to adapt discoveries to professional activity, will be subject to the norms based on reason, and the value of these norms will be conditioned by the principles of confidentiality and the variability of communication and content preferences.

Didn't philosopher Giovanni Papini say that mastering something implies the possibility of shaping it, transforming it? This transformation, beneficial to evolution, emphasizing the personal reflections related to the strength of creation, unchallenged by susceptibility, may constitute a form of coquetry with oscillation between the temporary and permanent value of leadership.

It is here that "alchemy" intervenes, in the sense of developing a form of scientific knowledge through creation, which incorporates an abstract obligation, autonomous and unconditional in relation to yourself and to those you impose yourself as a model for. Such an obligation highlights a practical requirement but also a real aesthetic necessity that you impose upon yourself as a creative process that combines technology with art to convey certain ideas and experiences immortalized in a visual form of great effect.

What part of leadership is designed to ensure a high yield for your performance through acceptable investment costs?

The power to understand things that are above the limits of others' understanding and to constantly renew them by unleashing ideas, sometimes through a tacit expression, is a part of leadership meant to ensure high performance through acceptable costs of investment. The costs are represented by the time consumed through the act of creation, full of rationality, which borrows a little something from its own experiences, ideals and views, establishing that form of personal experience of being in control of what you are, what you think, what you transmit and what you leave behind in your wake.

If you don't trust your potential of understanding the mechanisms of creation, or if you don't bring modifications to the perception of the continuous intensity of creation, seeking in self-perfection the art of crafting a science of the future, you will probably not even try to discover the genesis of ideas of redefining your own identity.

These ideas, subordinate to knowledge and its unlimited effects of transforming thinking and what is inaccessible to the experience of using creation, determines the consistency of leadership.

To capture ideas with complete lucidity in their total nudity, in pure form, "in vitro", to discover the genesis of these ideas, their intimate mechanism, is the first step towards establishing and strengthening the scientific spirit, as is required to perform and obtain high yields from processing the area of influence you have.

Artistic alchemy encompasses all the creative processes crystallized in a profound and persevering practice, accepted as a kind of unconventional modeling, ready to be transposed into definitive material, which can illustrate both the elegance of simplicity and the luxury of an unusual product.

The Modern Alchemist is the leader that constantly borrows something from his own experiences and views, in order to establish that form of personal experience of being in control of himself, of what he knows, what he thinks and what he transmits. And alchemy practiced by such a leader is merely a form of coquetry with the power of creation that flows from himself, which guarantees success in terms of the effects of change on performance.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-modern-alchemist.html

The Moment That Decides Your Faith (II)

On July 17, 2010

Show your trust in the science of taking action, without allowing your convictions to align to a false reality.

A lamp hanging by the ceiling was burning slowly in the room where the body was laying. The stranger pointed to the bed, he asked the doctor to quickly make his work and went out the door in order not to attend the surgery. Zaleukos took his knives out, and watched the girl, whose face was extremely beautiful. Then, in order to finish faster this tough task, he cut off her neck at once, using his sharpest knife.

But what a terror ! The dead girl opened her eyes and then immediately closed them with a deep sigh. It was then that Zaleukos realized his diabolial act, he was her murderer. There was no doubt that the girl had died just then, because of the wound he caused her.

If you read "The Severed Hand", written by Wilhelm Hauff, you surely remember the rest of the story. Zelaukos was found guilty, was cut off his left hand and was relegated forever. He lived the rest of his life full of bitterness, with the memory of the atrocious act committed engraved on his soul.

Leadership: Are you calibrating your attitude and convictions with an alarm that can only be heard in the case of an urgent task?

Here's an action unworthy of a doctor. If Zaleukos had been a real doctor and hadn't left himself lured by huge rewards, things would have been different. He ought to carefully examine the girl's symptoms, but he didn't show the slightest concern about them. The girl, although she was asleep, wasn't breathing at all? Wasn't her heart beating? Wasn't she warm when touched? Yes, definitely, but, not making any thorough examinations, as it was normal for him to proceed, he passed indifferently over these vital clues. It was just when the girl, torn with pain, gave her last breath, that his bell rang, but it was already too late.

Rapid rewards are consistent with the value man gives himself in the situation of an eventual urgent task he has to accomplish in a context of the type: "it does not seem relevant to me". Things and phenomena that usually attract man's attention vary according to innate predispositions, professional skills, and how quickly he opens his mind in a new direction.

The difference between a good doctor and a bad one is that the first does never confide in appearances, and he always carefully examines everything, while the second, convinced he knows everything, is superficial. Both professionally and by instinct, the doctor must be the most curious man in the world and must be capable to penetrate with his mind and soul into the physical and mental condition of the patient.

The alarm that can only be heard in the situation of accomplishing an urgent task is given by the possibility of learning of a mystery that is becoming more and more complicated as you accept the challenges of a deeper reality.

Leadership: Can you connect to those vibration frequencies that can shape the real image of what you are?

The outer reality reflects your inner reality. A huge similarity between two distinct worlds or between two facets of the same reality, each with its own moments of doubt, concerns the pattern of thinking, feeling, and living in a constant denial of the abilities to differentiate yourself from others.

All the experiences that you live come as a follow up of the resonation of your being with those vibration frequencies that shape your convictions in a positive or negative manner. Understanding these frequencies, rediscovered through the magical lens of objectivity, taking into account hypotheses of a current reality error, create the premises of a confrontation between what you are and the illusion of what you can become, limiting or extending the moral responsibility configuration.

Someone said well enough: "When someone reaches a more complex moral appreciation of a situation, he doesn't do anything else but to react guided by these affective impulses of their conscience."

The reason that you manifest in withdrawal or expansion can be an effect of the lack of your own identity – that tends towards stiffness, deforming itself over a certain limit. By ignoring the depth perspective that can't guarantee "the integrity of differential protection" (any bad thing that happens is your fault, reducing itself to suffering), you step away from the decision making pose, enhancing the possibility of making bigger and more severe compromises.

Being a man of sin means to experience the overwhelming feeling of looking at life through the eyes of a victim of your own choices !

The incapacity of the conscience to perceive as it should the uncontested reality disqualifies you as a person with a high responsibility sense.

We can talk about leadership when someone analyses himself more extensively, investigates reality and thinks about his limited condition exposed to existential or moral uncertainties. Setting the level of his intransigent lucidity, he can sense the opposition between how it reacts to external stimuli and the way it reacts to finding the truth – "who am I truly?" Here, his essential values can be useful in creating a positive transformation perspective.

In short, you can create an stable inner fundament after you shape the mental and real image of what you are. This can reduce or amplify the ambiguity of your identity.

Leadership: Do you risk making an attempt to decipher the mystery that can open new perspectives, without interpreting the signs of the relationship that is established between "UNKNOWN" and "UNEXPECTED"?

Instead of coming into play, assuming his quality of doctor, so that of a man who ought to be as curious as it gets, who thinks twice before drawing a conclusion, who doesn't limit to what he knows or what he finds out, Zaleukos acted as if he were on autopilot, as if someone else had taken the decision for him. Which, as we saw, was a big mistake.

f he had disconnected himself in time, if he had released himself from the enchainment of that material impulse and of the preconceived ideas by clicking the "stop" button, things would have been completely different.

Leadership: Are you prepared to turn into a person who finds a secret meaning in living in a constant accusation?

As a leader, your actions always have consequences. Just like a single moment of carelessness decided the fate of doctor Zaleukos, destroying his entire future, it could happen to you, too, a single moment that darkens your mind and your judgment can seriously endanger your career.

The higher you are in the hierarchy, the more people depend on you. And if you're not always able to connect yourself to the real reality, but you let yourself carried away or you don't constantly realize your limits, and especially if you don't ward yourself of any temptation, you will pay a high price.

Conclusion: We must take decisions during our entire life. Consequences show us if those decisions were good or not. It's important, especially for a leader, not to take hasty decisions without a prior thorough research, because consequences can be so damaging that they can reverberate throughout his life.

Show your trust in the science of taking action without allowing your convictions to align to a false reality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-moment-that-decides-your-faith-II.html

The Moment That Decides Your Faith (I)

On July 17, 2010

Win a better understanding of what you don't know, in order to be much more selective in what you have to decide.

After more than three years of study in Paris, during which he learned everything a skilled doctor must know, young Zaleukos decided to find his way in the world. Every city he arrived in, he used to send word to everybody through a written paper that he is a doctor and he cured many diseases – and indeed, his balms and remedies were effective and brought him lots of money. But he didn't make money only from medicine, but from trade, as well.

Eventually, he arrived in the city of Florence, Italy. Being tired of so much walking, he decided to stay there longer. He opened a shop in the part of the city called Santa Croce and soon announced people about the naturopath services ne provided. Even from the first days, he gained his fame as a doctor and a good medicines' seller.

Leadership: Is your intervention at the blows of destiny dependent on the dimensioning of the task that makes you think about the real possibilities of the person "anonymously" designated to offer these answers?

Destined to play an important role in a bizarre business. One night, before closing the shop, he found a note which announced him to come at midnight on the bridge called Ponte Vecchio. Believing that someone wants to call him in secret to some sick man's home, which often happened to him before, Zaleukos went without suspecting anything doubtful. There, he met a mysterious gentleman, who really needed his help as a doctor, but not for a man who was alive, but for one who was dead.

In return for four hundred sequins (a lot of gold at that time), Zaleukos accepted the totally strange proposal of the mysterious gentleman with a red robe. According to him, his sister suddenly died because of an incurable disease and, according to the custom in his country, he had to leave her body to her relatives, but he had to send her head to her daughter, so she could see her one more time.

Although this custom of cutting the heads of the loved ones who died seemed awful to him, Zaleukos accepted his proposal, particularly because he was good at embalming the dead. *

Leadership: Can you satisfy an impossible search of truth that you wrongly think it must be fully accepted?

Truth represents a neutral space for objectively allocating the meanings of past experiences, wavering between two extremes – now and later – that don't automatically exclude themselves, but instead they potentiate each other, producing a formidable continuity in the act of personal training. It's highly likely that what you are really living will become a facilitator of the high quality of future projections. But looking beyond the context in which you are confronted with ambiguous situations, it's all the more likely that what you are now changes in the following instant.

The truth of what you are in every instant of your existence has an interesting construction, subscribing under the implicit tendency of bringing a small contribution to certain causes that you believe in, but which the battery of your conscience overloaded with tension – in the guise of mood changes – is able to dissipate them. After this indication, your personality is reflected in what you accept as being true when you reject the null hypothesis: „the two environments are similar". Which means, what you are waiting to happen and what's really happening behind everything that you know.

One of the biggest evidence of your value is the ability to recognize the negative side of a situation before it becomes an uncertain criteria of the truth that represents you. You can reach a more complex moral appreciation of a situation only if you reason it guided by the command impulses of your own conscience. And this is actually a tool of leadership oriented towards a certain stage of your Ego, or better said towards a new clarification direction of the judgment and discernment that helps you sieve the real values, even if you're constrained from the outside by an absolute novelty.

The value that characterizes a person depends on the extent of the acts he is willing to do under the tutelage of the consciousness that tries to control his leap towards the mystery of an unknown world.

Only an awakening in the company of a self-acceptance in profoundly meaningful missions can emanate that profound understanding of an authentic experience. Because the ambiguity of a situation that makes you feel unsatisfied by what you have in order to understand its implications, given the fact that the inconvenient truth doesn't start to occupy a large space of influence, it marks an inclination towards that introspection that allows you to signal the foreseen errors and mistakes.

The moment that decides your fate targets the inner approach of a real situation that asserts itself with an indisputable "authority" and that you can't fully understand.

Satisfying an impossible search for truth, that you wrongly think it must be fully accepted is relevant for the perception of a certain message-feedback interdependence from the approach of an inadequate relationship to reason that stands at the base of your identity. The only voice that resounds redemptory above the unpleasant state created by indecision or confusion is the conscience that can be extended to certain past actions and thoughts, reminding you to be sure of what you believe you are, what you feels, what happens around you, what you decide.

 Note: Wilhelm Hauff - The Severed Hand.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-moment-that-decides-your-faith.html

The Monologue Of A Man Who Drags His Old Age

On October 15, 2012

Mobilize your leadership potential to another way of being, without letting yourself dragged before by the roller of an uncontrolled evolution that promotes mediocrity.

I was sheriff of this district since I was 25. It is hard to believe. My grandfather was a man of the law. And my dad, too. I and him were sheriffs at the same time, he was in Plano, and I was here in Desert Aire. I think he's pretty proud of it. I was proud.

Some of the old-time sheriffs were not carrying guns. Many people find it hard to believe this. Jim Scarborough never carried a gun. That's the young Jim. Gaston Boykins would not carry one in Comanche County. I always liked to hear about those of the old times. I never missed a chance to do that.

You cannot compare yourself with the elders. I cannot help wondering how they do their job during those times.

Some time ago, in Huntsville, I sent a boy to the electric chair. It was my arrest and my testimony. He killed a girl of 14 years. The newspapers said it was a passionate crime, but he told me that there was no passion. He told me that he always wanted to kill someone. He said if he would be released, he would do it again. He said he knows he will go to hell. He would get there in 15 minutes.

I do not know what to think. I really do not know. I always knew you must be willing to die in order to do your duty. I think it's more about what you are willing to become. But, I do not want to risk anymore, and to meet something that I do not understand.

Also, I think a man should put his soul at stake. And I'm not in the condition to do this. Now I think maybe I was not ever.

I should say, "Well, I'll be a part of this world."

Leadership: Are you suffering an existential crisis marked by questions like "Why me?"

Towards where are heading, we, the elders, if not towards a fiercer inner poverty? It was wondering a hero of a short novel of spiritual formation.

The price to keep alive our energy is directly proportional with the area in which we operate and with our level of responsibility. The leadership can become in terms of these two considerations, a disappointment, an obstacle, an invitation to failure, a burdening ballast, a large area of items that begin to lose their meaning.

Like a star that fades before our eyes, leadership may lose its luster, turning itself from an advantage into a fault until its value reaches zero. A severe and decisive field, becoming increasingly harder to assimilate, under a very affordable form of "predestination and rejection" of illness and aging. The victim of a rupture between sustainability and development, unable to make a move of 90 degrees in the opposite direction on its axis, in order to get out of the "chess" given by time.

Are the new lights of the truth completing or clouding your judgment? The reason for which we decide to abandon the race towards excellence, consists in recognizing this impossibility of fulfilling the obligations incumbent on us, to know and fully understand the opponent of our own future: being part of a world that disappears little by little. It's about an existential crisis, with many questions about our purpose on earth.

The truth consists in recognizing who we are and who we are not at the point when we feel that we are losing control, when we become the prisoners of our own mediocrity.

Leadership: Being a part of this world means to give up a whole world for you?

The sheriff Ed Tom Bell from the movie "No Country for Old Men (2007)" told his monologue, contemplating with his soul and mind directed towards all those hidden things, half-locked in the obscure of a life that was running simultaneously on two fronts: of a destiny that must be fulfilled, and then of a farewell. He chose more the total abandonment in the mists of a sunset bathed by the prospect of death.

Like a hymn of despair, like an indictment, the sheriff's words reveal mercilessly the presses and the oppression of the society in which he lived, but also the symptoms of a job that he was no longer able to deal. Simply, his nature was no longer intersecting with the requirements, restrictions, with its trends. The old age, with all its additions, clenched him altogether. He was resigned for the imperceptible part that he rightfully belonged - the preparation for a future that will not ever live.

His help had to come "from above" from a higher consciousness, more lucid, from a healthier attitude, more attentive, more responsible, and more protective; from an active and meaningful existence. But, he was not in the position to recognize the remedies, and to manage them by alone, because he was no longer receptive to the social transformations.

What will happen with the foliage of an old tree cut from the root? The old age is a complicated realm that catches more and more ground, comprises your consciousness as a cold shroud, emphasizing your despair and fatigue.

Leadership: Is the whole expression of your personality accomplished through the subtle play of the conditions established by an implacable predestination, without resorting to incompatibilities with the limit of personal responsibility?

Is your nature intersecting with the requirements, restrictions, and the leadership's trends?

As regards our beliefs and aspirations emanating from our ideal of tomorrow, from everything that means evolution and development (ideal, which can be perceived directly before the meaning and the rigors of existence) they represent the main factor in determining the level of self-confidence. A kind of cornerstones of predestination that do not break at the first storm, and to draw with it the entire structure of our life until then.

Both in terms of attitude and thinking, of the way in which we understand and build our life, as well as in terms of gradual and sustainable development, these beliefs and aspirations represent at the same time the reference frame of our entire transformation, provided by the contribution of all physical factors, psychological and social that are participating actively in achieving excellence.

Something so important since some of the prospective hypotheses - reproduced for the realism of the transformation process – are starting from the analysis of that reality with which we identify ourselves. That is why some of our fears and inconveniences, caused by the feeling of helplessness and the manifestation of unforeseeable, limit their validity depending on how we analyze and how we perceive the past and the future in relation to an implacable predestination.

The conditions established by an implacable predestination in the dark depths of a mind consumed are associated with the variable of relating to your own kind on the path towards the supreme ideal: that of crossing impassable barriers within the sphere of the experienced ordinary.

After a certain age there is a tendency of stagnation and decay, of abdication from the ideals that we have built in our youth. The future belongs to those leaders, who will keep permanently their spiritual youth, to those that continuously adapt to the constantly changing requirements of the society, to the technological changes, but especially the ones of mentality, adjusting their mode of action without abdicating from achieving the proposed goals.

This is the essence of youth without old age and life without death, a close and a lasting reference on what we actually are, like a flame that should be maintained as much as possible, most often powered by the positive trend of our activity. To participate with as much enthusiasm for everything we commit in life through leadership, because everything we will create, good or bad, will forever remain to our descendants.

The monologue of a man who drags his old age highlights that feature of the leaders who abandon their established leadership role and responsibility in relation with the life.

Just as in the old age, the man does not have the capacity of action that he had some years ago, so the leadership that we practice diminishes its meaning once with our involution in the big evolution of society and life.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-monologue-of-a-man-who-drags-his-old-age.html

The Moral Dimension Of Leadership

On January 08, 2020

Find the half-spirit that complements you in the turbulent landscape of events, through the experience of "there is nothing and yet there is" that educates you and makes you human.

Goldstone (2016). Why did I review this movie? Not for the action, not for the simplicity of the editing, not for some well-defined retorts, not for the story of a poor little town at the end of the world. Not for the appearance of an Indian who leaves behind his courageous, adventurous spirit, full of holy spirit, having some of the fine but cold expression of the desert wind. But, for the peaceful end, slipped between the intertwined meanders of the meanings of life projected into the fascinating backdrop of the massive rocks, full of history, rituals and superstitions.

The spectator's eyes tire looking through the desert for a supporting point beyond the vicious spectacle of bizarre events. But to be able to say that you yourself live in the last five minutes of the film, on that quiet musical background that inspires a great deal of peace, the hero's own soul-state caught between the new world and its old roots, so that you can rest in silence, in the echo of warrior, glorious, and finally free spirits, you must first survive the decisive truths of life. If you do this, then you will understand everything. And you will live in peace with yourself.

It is not a happy or unhappy ending, but it is the symbol of a mystical call to earth. Highlight that piece of you that complements you, just as the intersection of colors helps you better understand the art of the landscape modeled by an artist.

To be the most powerful link that links the mysterious depths of human destinies, fragile in the face of transient things, to the fulfillment of an incomprehensible calling. To remain with the pure conscience, full of gratitude to those who devoutly serve the road full of life's meanings, as a drop from the universe, an initiatory road by stages of age and spiritual ascension, with a call to return to the origins.

Here's what it means to be honest with yourself in the echo of a world that never disappears in the ages to come...

Leadership: Does your spiritual and identity construction open in the face of a sublime, purifying being that confirms the true character of "Who I am" in the midst of a present that denies its past?

How disturbing are sometimes the wandering truths of living one's life through the soul of an Indian, beyond any constraints, beyond any intimidation, defying any authority other than God. It is the only spirit that endures through the ages. All the others follow the material content of the wealth, with their eyes on hidden interests, more like a curse, as a prisoner, without looking back at what was lost in themselves.

That's the idea of the movie. Respect for the one who wrote the script.

Hold any wrongdoing in the beating of bullets whistling silently beside your ears. It's a tragic fact, not a consolation. You think you escaped, but the memory remains, pierced by deep and restrained feelings, like a wound that hurts enormously, even if it does not bleed. And even when you think you have moved away from the beating of consumed facts, a red flame still burns in you, calls you back to the lessons of life, cries with all its might for you to repair your mistake of living as an insignificant passerby in this world.

Instinctively, liberatingly, with moral force, some return to what really matters. Others continue to flee from themselves.

We will never go beyond the path of discovering "Who am I?" if we fail to see inside the things we experience with dignity, which we receive from the heights of ancient beliefs and patterns of thinking, and from the perspective of the facts that they we will regret when we're old.

The good man recognizes in time the opportunity to become aware of his own nature, finding the true meaning of life in recovering the wasted lives in the candles of the defeated, not necessarily in the knowledge that results from the transition from "now" to "then".

Leadership: Does your nature mirror the face of the eternal present in an experience of the essences that take away things from the condition of being humiliated through wear and tear and pragmatically consumed in the slow rhythm of non-sensory facts?

I saw a very smart, intelligent woman, with that glamor spark, uttering carefully chosen words, which under the image of "embodied kindness" make their way to lawlessness. No remorse, no worries, no fear. She does not realize that this is how she torments her soul, growing older, increasingly bleeding from the cruelty that exists within her. Such toxic blood warms only for a moment's pleasure. Her cold nature can be felt from the very first conversation. The past has swallowed her up too, but in the coordinates of living without moral standards.

Was her true motivation really a desire to get rich, at any cost, by any means? Maybe, in the end, she wanted that great love of stories, but a love chosen wrong, because it had to be maintained, comforted. And in the end, her great love leaves with her money, but without her. A dashed line manifested by sweetness and cunning, continued snaking in the depths of tragedy.

People in this tragedy always make a habit of giving an apple pie to those who have to keep their mouths shut...

Then I met an old Indian of color, using as an opportunity to discharge his old feelings in the midst of a world that no longer believes in ideals, human rights, God. His words are simple, pleasant to hear, but endured by the changes that are required to be implemented. The only thing that will take him out of the fundamental anguish, from that feeling of abandonment in the face of inevitable change, is death. He arrived next to his ancestors faster than he should have.

In his kindness, he probably had no regrets about it.

Leadership: Do you think there is a non-separability between the reality of "eternal return" and the things that have lost their value, considering that the world is a coherent entity in which each side is connected to all the others?

I understood why people accept their end by seeking to see, or without being seen, a reality of "eternal return." Because I look at the truth of things from the point of view of a past that transmits nothing to the epochs after it. As if you were giving a book full of truth to a blind man who wants to see with all his heart, but does not see.

Therefore, any pain is due to the effort to recreate a lost, hard to see world, the effort to see the truth and the beautiful in some things that have lost their value, balance, meaning, consistency or form, without having the capacity to rationalize them, differentiate them when you encounter them at random.

I was left thinking about a scene without any décor, except for a bed and a chair. Someone said that many dogs wander through that barren desert, I didn't see any. A howl was rotating at one point in the sky. Only a wedge caught in the sprinklers on the windshield of an old jeep reminds us of it, close to the end...

Two cops. A cowboy and an Indian. A little vain in their simplicity, a little too firm in their sincerity, they are only one step away from rivalry, so that at the end of the film they form a redoubtable team, an unbeatable duo in the face of corruption. The first is waiting for the rising of a hot sun, the other is waiting for the rising of a dead soul sometime. In their hearts the flame of the vigilant faith still flickers. The harsh reality has not yet destroyed what they have best in them, more beautiful, cleaner, more liberating. Probably, the magic of the eternal present is verified by shining in them through the motive force of a secret thought: "The struggle establishes existence".

I would say that the heroes of this movie are discovered by the force of a bell that rings three times, then stops. It is enough for any of them to take a small step toward death, for the entire chain of spiritual states to unfold nella coscienza as a gong that divides the worlds, restricts them to a moral mission, just as love is restricted to spiritual forces.

Each of them reveals a truth that he was not aware that he assumes in the landscape of events: "Every river hits rocks with full force. And even if it continues to run farther, duller or more alert, no one can hear it screaming in pain."

Leadership based on teaching and morals highlights the idea of a spatial horizon that is very special to our Ego and beyond us, in a present that does not forget its past, but is condemned to repeat it and endure it as an indispensable purity for exchange from soul to soul.

The Moral Dimension Of Leadership is centered on a "normative rationality" on the basis of which we find what we consider to be good in fulfilling a desire that is related by the energy field of "space-time" to itself: its pure inner event.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-moral-dimension-of-leadership.html

The Most Advantageous Way

On September 08, 2009

Enhance your personal assertion potential by enriching your perspectives and your understanding towards the tangible part of your presence in the world.

A few days ago I was visiting one of my best friends. It was the first visit I have made him this year, and I think I hit a pretty inappropriate moment. Some distant relatives of him also came in visit shortly before me, and already started to talk in the kitchen, where I have been also invited.

It was a little girl with them, after stature and look, after her playful voice she could not be more than six years. Together with my friend's nephew were playing the hide and seek through the house, freely, without disturbing anyone, without making too much noise. Even so, whenever her turn came to hide, the girl, very cheerful, very happy, and with a lot of appetite for playing, quickly ran, and hid under the kitchen table. She was waiting crouched like in a cage, behind the table cloth, which hang to bottom, right time to rush to the wall in order to win the game. Nevertheless, what a bad luck, the boy discovered her every time.

I asked myself: if she still has total freedom, why she does not try to hide somewhere else - in the living room, in one of the bedrooms, after a closet, after any desk, or under the bed – just as would have made many children, after the door, after the refrigerator, behind the hanger, in any other place?

Leadership: How do you define yourself by relating to a situation in which you feel obliged to play the role of an observer, without being receptive and solicitous to the requirements of a life experience that can only be accumulated by direct involvement?

Nobody told her anything; nobody intervened in their intense game, though definitely all together were watching their romp. The girl came back under the table, each time firmly convinced that she will trick her game partner, which did not happen at all. Certainly, the place inspired a total confidence to her, although I do not really know from where this confidence came. Maybe she was used to that place, maybe it seemed to her the safest hiding in the house. Regardless of the way she was thinking, one thing it was certain: all the time she came back under the table, and each time she was found. She never won the game.

Now I am asking you: if tomorrow the girl will play the hide and seek somewhere else, in another house, what you think will be safe and reliable place where she will hide? You guessed it: probably under the kitchen table.

At that moment, I felt an alienation from the world around me, I experienced an alienation from myself, but only after many years I understood it to the end, with all the subtleties that can make a difference between an image of exceptional quality and a weaker one. I had to redefine myself at the central point of a mirror that does not reflect any importance. I was the image of a nobody who embraces the triviality of life while others live in a free spirit through a continuous appeal to action.

Leadership: Do you understand your reaction to a situation that, unfortunately, does not depend on you, so you can overcome your tendency to always play the role of being defeated?

It is certainly really hard to be in the skin of those who beat the pace in place and not moving forward with anything in all that they undertake. The role of the girl, of the defeated, it is played by many of us, without realizing it. We used to follow, since we were small, one-way, as if the other did not exist.

We used to organize our actions only in one direction, not understanding that it exist and will always exist other ways, other possibilities, some of them more favorable than we might think. Most often we feel attracted by a safe place. Moreover, we do the same safe things, but ridiculous, for a long time, and then ask with stupefaction: how nothing has changed?

To continue doing the same things and to expect different results is absurd, but some people, unfortunately, will always indulge in this nonsense.

Leadership: Can the primordial essence of what characterizes you in a "I observe, but I cannot get involved" situation fulfill its functions of ordering a wider reality only through the contribution of some particularities to the leadership factors of the conception of free will?

The three leading factors of the concept of free will are: the proposed purpose, the voluntary specific effort and the attitude of overcoming obstacles.

Did it ever happen to you to find a map, but to do not know what it indicates? The interpretation of a map should be based on a fixed idea. For often the interpretation it is also based on negative information. Sometimes, what it does not appear on the map is just as important as that it is represented there.

As a leader, you are called to give the start of a road, not to look at how others find their way. The conception underlying the creation of this road, the action steps that will help you traverse more efficient the route, the constituent or auxiliary elements, all these steps are somehow combined on a map – an inner map, based on a more deductive reasoning. If this map stores a too larger amount of negative information, caused by others or created by you, then the road that it is represented on it will be obviously wrong.

However, just like the girl, of whom I was telling you in the beginning, you may get stuck when it comes to the correct reading and interpreting of your inner map. You may follow an unprofitable path, and your progresses may not be rewarded.

And one of the most important lessons is this: the essence that characterizes a leader is what constitutes and determines a thing, a reaction, or a direction in accessing a new reality, it should not be the constant expression of a deep and careful look that permanently loses itself in the light of others' destiny.

The essence of a new consciousness that must blossom in you can be given by the difference between the deep gaze that is permanently lost in the light of the destiny of others and the sight of an openness to what is really happening in your life.

Only in this way will you be able to understand the direction of a new perspective of reception of the phenomenon called "estrangement from yourself".

The Most Advantageous Way you can get under the effect of a memorable existential moment is given by the lesson you have to learn, no matter how painful, one that you will use to always remember the importance of having a certain circumstance in creating a much deeper reality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-most-advantageous-way.html

The Most Important Lesson

On May 24, 2009

Reveal your potential of relating to other people, sensing the deepest and the most comprehensive meanings of their attitude and personality.

Yesterday morning, while I was browsing out of simple curiosity an old medical book written by a famous professor-doctor, I found a piece of paper, carefully folded by my mother in her youth, during college, on which were written these words, verses from the professor's unpublished "lyric" that he wrote on the blackboard in his first cardiology class for the fourth year students. Parenthetically, I must confess that the teacher, during his career, has proved to be far superior to others, and as a person, and as a doctor, and as an intellectual. I would have liked a lot to meet him, because, probably, I could have learned a lot more about Human Resources, about the subtleties of people's lives, than if I would read all the books in this field, or if I interviewed all the managers in the world.

The novelty value of your potential to connect to the motivation of others is given by the reflection content of an experience of navigating the corridors of memory as a form of life observation.

For, without a doubt, no one can know better, closer, more profoundly, clearer a man than the doctor, who comes in contact with the patients every day, he cares for them, he consults them, he tries to find a cure for their illness, and prescribing them recipes. Only him, the doctor, has to fully deal with the depths and concealments of people, with everything that is fathomless and mysterious in him; knows his most intimate secrets, the problems that affect him and preoccupy him the most, being the only one capable of deciding what it is the best for him. How much happiness, confidence and optimism can be read on a patient's face when the doctor consults him, examines him with great care, and then prescribes a treatment meant to make him better.

Nevertheless, in order to be a very good doctor, able to treat the ill patients, you must practice medicine for many years in order to develop specific senses, and in no case you should not limit yourself just to read medical books. A doctor's senses: seeing, hearing, smelling, touching, are far more developed than at ordinary people or than in those not practicing medicine. The doctor put his hand on the patient, senses his skin: is it warm? Is it cold? Is it wet? Is it dry? Is it rough? Is it soft? All these can be manifestations of certain illnesses, but, as well, they can be normal situations.

With the help of a stethoscope, he listens to the lung, liver, heart, but he must know what to listen to, because if he does not know how the heart beats normally for a healthy person, then how could he possibly distinguish a normal heart from a heart with mitral insufficiency or mitral stenosis? Nobody can learn medicine by reading books, but only practicing it day by day, by entering in contact as often as possible with the patients.

The science preceding leadership is an extension of the reflection of the feeling expressed by the suggesting of a potential rarity of knowledge referring to the composition of man's inner world.

Why? Why does the patient suffer? This is the mysterious question that a doctor must respond. Since the first contact, the doctor observes the patient: how he enters, how he pushes down the latch, how he walks, after his posture; how he presents himself: how he speaks, whether he speaks nasally, or croaky, all these can be signs of illness that the doctor must perceive with his sight, with his ear, and that is why it is important to develop his sense of observation.

Even so, how it is developed this sense of observation, because the doctor might not always have the same type of patients? Well, he can closely look to any child, to a flower, to a clear sky or at the sea in storm – which are the changes of these elements, and to find explanations for these changes; a husband, a butterfly, a mother, a color, and to often ask himself, why?

As a doctor, when you see a patient walking in a certain way, you wonder: why? But thanks to the knowledge and experience gathered through time, you know that a certain type of walking is encountered only in the case of certain illnesses, and you try looking for other elements that can support your diagnosis. This sense of observation at doctors which, as I said, must be very developed, must also be trained, not only on the patient, not only by apprehensiveness tests, but also for fun, through practice, by looking around, for anything and anyone.

You must get to feel the illness and to offer a proper cure, this is the most important thing that a doctor must do, and that is why a lot of practice and exercise are needed.

A talented manager meets the efficiency demands of integral communication by means of a mode of expression that highlights the power of his feelings, polished within the workshop of experiences of projecting a new judgment of observation.

Managers, just like doctors, must develop their sense of observation. They must firstly observe the particularities, the nature of every employee, his own structure, his characteristic language, the habits that they have, and to be able to determine everyone's state of spirit. They must know their employees so well, that they must identify the factors that motivate or demotivate them, which are their strong points and their weak points, as well, whether they are talented or not, and, at the same time, to be able to put them on the right positions. If you do not know what exactly "hurts" the employee, how can you determine him to do a good job, to be serious and perseverant, punctual, responsible and full of energy?

A very good manager spends a lot of time together with the people of every segment of activity, in order to be able to observe the problems or complaints they have. The visual element helps the manager to quickly and efficiently see certain qualities or defects of the employees, ever since they arrive at work and until they finish their schedule, during lunch breaks, during talks, but also in their spare time - how they have fun, how they get along with their families and friends and how they act in society, in general. All these are signs that a manager must bear in mind, for his skill in working with people to develop.

If a manager observes that an employee has suddenly started not to do his work properly and no longer has a regular presence in his workplace, he must ask himself: why? Is it because of the job, because of stress and hard work, is he unsatisfied with his payment, is he ill, is he suffering of something? How can I help him, what must I do in order to change this situation?

Leadership is an overview of the meaning of life from the point of view of a concrete investigation of the value you are meant to give to the aspects that resonate with the level of your experience.

Conclusion: As managers, you must direct your efforts towards fulfilling your significant goals, but, at the same time, you must be careful to what happens around you. Open your eyes wide, and when something goes wrong, when the situation becomes pressing, when the employees are no longer productive, ask yourself, why? Then, try to find the safest, the most adequate, and the advantageous solutions.

Reveal your potential of relating to other people, sensing the deepest and the most comprehensive meanings of their attitude and personality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-most-important-lesson.html

The Most Profitable Investment

On January 22, 2009

Let yourself led by a higher self-conscience, relentlessly pursuing the pulse of your own integrity.

A friend recently told me the story of a great businessman, let's tell him Marius, that embezzled from the company where he was assistant manager a huge amount of money, which he then invested in his personal business. In other words, Marius became owner with the money of the company where he worked. And, because he was very clever, he managed not to be discovered for a long period. But the investment he made in his own interest didn't bring the expected results and, finally, he woke up full of debts.

The company's manager finally noticed the lack of large amounts of money, which were stolen from the company funds and, by a mere accident, arrived in the assistant manager's accounts. Not long after, Marius was fired and charged with aggravated theft.

It is very important what the company's manager said after firing the assistant manager:

"- Marius was in a difficult financial situation, he was full of debt and that is why he used my company's money. He never came to consult with me or ask for my help. So I finally lost my confidence in him and I had no choice than immediately fire him and lay information against him with the police."

Leadership: Do you use external reality only as a pretext to achieve your own deformities?

Somebody noticed: "If the mirror of conscience is twisted in its structure, the world appears in it as a deformed, disfigured reality, just like in poor quality mirrors or in those especially build twisted, like in some views. There are also mirrors that cannot reflect and use external reality only as a pretext to make their own deformities."

Too many of those who own important positions forget about their own conscience, committing antisocial acts. They do not keep their heart free of the temptation of their own desires and egos – but continue to perceive themselves in a good and positive light, being under the impression that they represent much more and that they can afford just about anything.

Their conscience is twisted, distorted, determined by uncontrollable lust. They cannot guide themselves by rules or guidelines complying with a well-defined ethics, based on respect and integrity and focused on professionalism. Their conscience uses external reality only as an excuse to make their own deformities.

The deformations that result from an erroneous reception of the image of a man devoted to "ethics and equity" so that it does not seem to be broken by a suspicion at the address of everything that means "abuse", have as a point of reference forms of despair, extreme arrogance, failure or lack of perspective.

When you try to be more than what you think you are, you risk not thinking reactively to what is happening around you and you create a false consciousness in line with your own interests, meaning, maintaining power under the wing of a twisted and dark destiny.

Letting yourself led by a self conscience and respecting the moral duties you must fulfill to society is like being in charge of a pursuit mission: you must follow the pulse of your own integrity and watch yourself and everything you do as long as necessary. If you take the twisted path, the pulse of your integrity will diminish – and the negative effects will appear by default.

In leadership, are worth only those values and beliefs whose "perfect crystal" reflects your inner world as it is, and not distorted by the defects and deficiencies of your own conscience.

Leadership: Do you follow your most daring goals, while always keeping your consciousness identified with a double self?

The avalanche of gods comes and goes. Some people create for themselves an embarrassing impression that they are much more than they actually are, meaning small gods on Earth that will never fail and therefore they never moderate their desire to do whatever they want without regard for anyone and anything, completely forgetting their responsibilities. But this impression is severely shaken when things take an unfavorable turn. Finally, their ambition to rise above their condition and achieve increasing benefits (often illegally) – abusing their position can turn into tears and regrets.

Just as the owl cannot see during daytime and the raven cannot see during nighttime, nor we won't be able to accomplish more than it is given to us. We cannot fool divine laws and forces. We are not gods and we do not have the right to avoid the ethics of fair measure – manipulating everyone for our own benefit, abusing the position that we hold.

Failure in the mirror of consciousness has as an end an isolation into an empty self, losing interest in life, or in a self-exhausted body of so many values and landmarks that seem utterly overturned. Trusting a double self is tied to immanence, related to happiness, completeness and perfection, and another tied to sensitivity, vulnerable and fragile.

Being responsible for a captive self in the face of multiplicity means accepting the present situation irrespective of the obstacle you face and at the same time rejecting what you think you cannot go through under the conditions of life restrictions.

A leader's most profitable investment. Certainly, honesty is the safest way to keep the relationship with others intact, either bosses, work fellows or friends. If you are always honest, serious and balanced, things will move in a positive direction and you will come off a winner. And if you hold a leadership position, you cannot betray the trust of those who have invested in you. Instead, prove them all that you are trustworthy, that you give more than you receive – that, by your cooperation, you contribute to a great extent to mutual success.

You will never be able to build secure relationships if you betray the trust of other people, if you do not treat them with respect and if you do not prove to them, first and foremost, that you are honest and serious. Let yourself led by a higher self-conscience, relentlessly pursuing the pulse of your own integrity.

Self-isolation occurs when you assume a success that imprints a lasting character of failure.

The Most Valuable Resource Of Leaders

On January 13, 2009

Ensure your potential to be a brilliant leader, by manifesting your gratitude to your time in an authentic way.

When the common man returns home in the evening from work, wants peace and quiet. He warms up his meal, sits comfortably in front of the TV for watching the news and drinks his hard-earned beer during the 10 hours of work. Time is running, the news from all the TV channels, are already over. Before bedtime, the common man relaxes half an hour reading the newspaper. Slowly, slowly, his eyes are closing. He turns off the lamp, pulls the blanket on him and lies down, but not before indulging himself: "Tomorrow will be an awesome day".

And the next day, the history repeats, his performance area remains the same, unchanged, mediocre or even bad.

Do you turn leadership into a permanent form of coherence of existence that puts you face to face with the responsibility of pushing things beyond the limits imposed by what is routine?

If you are an admirer of art, then you probably know that when a sculptor represents the movement in his creations, it does not appear unbridled, but as a permanent form of existence.

In order to be a leader of first-class, you must be able to perform a leadership work of high-class. You can do this by changing your thinking and actions, by effectively representing your own way of being on the axis of your life. Your collaboration with time, with practice with your power of work, and with your leadership potential, must acquire a permanent form of existence.

Leaders are not like common people. They always make changes in order to get out of routine. Time is the most important resource they have at their disposal, and which they must use it effectively in favor of their training, for strengthening their professional status.

Napoleon Bonaparte, considered to be one of the greatest military commanders in history, had the habit to sit first at the table, which was served, of course in a fast tempo, and he rarely stayed more than 20 minutes. Once, he even stated: "Time is not waiting, and days are like years."

Be sure that to Napoleon, time was not enough for how much he could do. He knew very well that he could build a bright, glorious and prosperous future only if he can gain time on his side. Since he was little, has fostered the productive habit of reading books in the school library. And he read, read eagerly, sometimes out loud, but always very carefully, learning a little from every book. Many times he did not sleep - meditated on the lessons of the day, and it was said that he was working with so much zeal that he felt this thing on himself.

Leadership: Can you plant a tree for the future in the circumstances of a cause determined by the impact of life's assets that include you in another social category?

During his stay in Gothaab, on the western coast of Greenland, the great explorer and scientist Fridtjof Nansen has studied the Eskimos living and nature, and wrote a book about them.

One of the most important things he wrote was: "The good things of life are very unequally divided in this world. To some existence is so easy that they need only plant a bread-fruit tree in their youth, and their whole life is provided for. Others, again, seem to be denied everything except the strength to battle for life; they must laboriously wring from hostile Nature every mouthful of their sustenance."

The "bread-fruit tree" is a metaphor that expresses very well the essential features of the development process. You must plant something of quality that would feed you a whole life, not to pick up scraps to keep your days.

The social category in which a leader is self-involved is that of a gardener of miracles, of constructive decisions and constructive accomplishments, no matter how small they are. Landscapists are the ones who drain themselves by only admiring what is past, without integrating themselves with the right to appeal in any large-scale initiative.

Leadership: Are you able to think BIG in terms of a value obtained from nothing?

He who thinks BIG from the point of view of a value obtained from nothing is a magician of great ambition, or a drone of excellence.

You can only get something out of nothing if it becomes a life lesson. As someone said, nothingness is a production that contains everything you need, but from which you can miss everything. At the same time, it is an illusion from which you can only escape by observing, analyzing critically and thinking.

The time used effectively could open you the doors towards success and performance. A wise choice is to use the time reading the latest books and journals of the field in which you carry out your activity. An uninspired choice is to waste time watching TV, moving from one channel to another, or reading the local newspapers.

I do not know what choices you will make in life, but I know one thing: if you do not make the right choices, you will never become more productive. Moreover, if you want to become a good professional, and if you really want to have a better future, more generous and full of opportunities, you must gain time on your side, to appreciate it, and to use it as efficiently as possible.

Ensure your potential to be a brilliant leader, by manifesting your gratitude to your time in an authentic way.

Are you planting something of quality, or you pick up scraps that would keep your days?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-most-valuable-resource.html

The Motivational Dimension Of Leadership

On June 26, 2016

Strive to gain a dominant position towards life and things around, synchronizing yourself with a progressive evolution that leads to the protection of the unity between idea and matter.

I was only present in my research activity to see everything from a different perspective, to show everything and say everything, even if everything was explained through the direction given by the most hidden of thoughts, by deep reflections, magnificent, which I generated in moments of maximum lucidity. To rebuild reality by inventing principles with which I would try to explain everything would have been the equivalent of trying to turn myself into a magician who combines illusionism and comedy into a show designed to astonish even the most untrusting of guests. Something motivates me, however, to take on this challenge.

An important part of me, in which imagination had no limits and for which the tendency towards a unity between all-encompassing and bordered would become a sort of congruence of views, a rhythmicity of feelings, masks, and roles overlapped in different directions, insistently asked me to pass on everything I gathered in meanings. And to share with everyone the most spectacular journeys of my mind through difficult paths of science.

But leadership is always double-edged, it is promoted only through evidence of force, through the precious fruits of individuals endowed with special graces. And to keep everything you've gathered with toil and the sweat of voluntary labor, entering the vein of a feverish thinking, synchronizing with a progressive evolution, irreversible, continuous, which eventually leads to protecting the unity between idea and matter, is a general attribute of the art of knowing and preventing the phenomenon of "falling."

Leadership: Do you continue to contribute, more rigorously and more victoriously, to achieving the unity between the essence of denying and accepting the all-encompassing, alluding to a phenomenon that has not happened before?

Try to remember at the end of H.G. Wells' "The Invisible Man", who is it that becomes the most complex hero the story gives us? It is the very man who discovers the great treasure, the core of a secret knowledge.

This man leans back in his chair and starts reading the manuscript full of strange formulas. His eyes suddenly move to lands unable to be seen by other eyes. These scraps are full of mysteries ! If I could catch their thread, if I could understand them ! And slowly, he allows himself to be entangled in a dream – the eternal, beautiful dream of reality. No human being, except him, knows that the manuscripts capture within their files the subtle secret of the transparency of the human body and a myriad of other strange secrets. And no one will know this, as long as he is alive.

Leadership was for me the expression of trying to answer a question of the soul: when will I heal myself from the need to know everything about what no one sees or understands? But the man who finds himself at the border between saying everything bluntly and keeping to himself only the fruits of his intellectual efforts, risks to completely take refuge in a parallel world, falling prey to a fairytale land called "love for everything that can be mastered."

Leadership: Is the pride that seems to dominate you all the time related to the need to belong to a totality of all that exists, to a coincidence of opposites, through the power to be omnipresent in every detail of the surrounding reality?

His affection turns to permanently moving forces, to those complicated scientific formulas, secret information, in an activity of constant transfiguration for conquering a single ideal: the ideal of living for a great cause, or together with it. For this reason, the motivational dimension of the leadership in which I believed, recognizing the primordial role of deducting various conclusions from the premise of the interpretation of some unpredictable phenomena constituted as a determinant of correlation between what surrounded me and what made me feel untouchable, incomprehensible, impenetrable and uncontrollable.

The pride that seemed to dominate me at all times was connected with the need to belong to a totality of everything that exists, of a coincidence of contradictions, of placing all my actions on the back of a mysterious, out-of-the-ordinary being supposedly aware of everything mainly because of the superiority demonstrated by the psychology of creation, by mastering an orchestration of events through the power of being omnipresent.

Leadership: Can you explore the inner side of your personality through the prism of everything that happens in your life and around you, to finally be the measure of your own creation that is approaching what is called "perfection"?

A dominant position towards life and surrounding things is achieved by developing the relationship between observing reality, facts, and the world in contact with an alchemy of ideas categorized as a response to the practice of logical, concrete and creative thinking. That is why it is good to judge such a man through the lens of a leadership that creates characters outlined precisely, with art, with fine lines, with heights lifted high enough towards other levels, with a well-articulated identity, in the continual dynamic of the struggle for originality, because in this way, man discovers that he is different.

And this difference falls within a discipline of dominating through value, worthy of envy, always devised through a grand purpose: through an amazing development of a teaching that has never been heard before, aiming at the development of the unity between idea and matter. The perfection of an accomplished personality from the point of view of the act of creation lies in the ability to establish correspondences between things, elements and facts, in order to engage in prospective thinking.

Let us try and express the inner state of this man, of this soul chose by science for the great makings of the world, in a single light of leadership, calling him a "defender of true knowledge, of the intelligence behind great scientific discoveries". We will meet a universe in which the main certainty is not death, but the transformation of matter, a universe in which many gestures take places, reactions, discrete actions that cannot be noticed by just anyone, in which you are miraculously connected to all the elements of an unthinkable reality.

The sense of belonging to a totality of existence derives from the ability to harmonize opposites and master events.

Thus, we are permitted to owe this man not only a profound respect for his attempt to carry out the full force of his intelligence in order to reach a destination that many cannot see, but especially an invaluable admiration for his attempt at fighting for a different rigor, the reason where science and progress will lead to the manifestation of the "divine" man.

If we view leadership through a positive promotion of the archetypal supreme image of the divine man, if we allow the scientist to rise far above all of his other peers through his very casting into the turmoil of the all-encompassing, then we will be able to adhere to all the adventures of the characters of the books we live in, in the undying essence of an existence of a supreme complexity and richness. And, therefore, we will be able to capture the characteristic figure of a new world.

The all-encompassing is a storage medium for information and access to a newly created being subjected to a reality fully revealed in the description of a world whose fundamental dominance is self-transcendence.

Can you overcome the limits of your own being by going beyond the limit of experimental, perceptible knowledge?

The Motivational Dimension Of Leadership, from the perspective of the scientist, includes features such as culture, curiosity, subtlety (the wise routing of information), power, affirmation, all of these working for the benefit of a achieving a complex and dominating identity.

The highest leadership is a version of the researcher who has as an ideal of existence a cultivation and capitalization of the essence of his own forces, through a vision of accepting the all-encompassing, through a better awareness of the necessity of accepting a special identity, through a conscious assumption of the supreme role of a "divine man". Such a man maximized and maintains his exceptional traits through a myriad of strange secrets.

And no one will know these secrets, as long as he is alive. Or, rather, as long as his existence will be challenged.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-motivational-dimension-of-leadership.html

The Moving Depths Of The Immense Ocean Of Matter

On December 23, 2013

Direct your evolution towards a high development stage, so that the premises of obtaining some ambitious results be ensured.

Driven by the feeling of containing the matter which invaded my whole being following the continuous interaction process between the elements of artistic language and the elements of the actual creation of the universe, I set new extremely performant research directions. And thanks to the judicious observations over the properties of bodies, I managed to perfect certain analysis and interpretation techniques which solely focus on producing viable results which guaranteed progress.

Altogether, through the experiments performed on a reference system I managed to identify the point to which invisible matter is attracted, to which the reaction forces are evened out. Thus, I improved my mechanism for the identification and creation of hybrids, patterns, balances and imbalances between the stages of a multi-component system, defined by a multitude of parameters. When you prioritize the essential aspects of science, not just the captivating ones, only then do you manage to understand more about life, about the person you are, what you really want or what you are capable of achieving.

This initiation in the designated space of science, allowed the development of a piercing power which is impossible to equal, like a diffusion of laser radiation doubled by an energy absorption. The implicit premises and conclusions which derived of this assumption process for a mobilizing horizon in itself, a stimulator of new thinking structures, should have a broader applicability.

Leadership: Can you demonstrate your qualities and true understanding of the philosophy of science behind the concept of "the illusion of life", turning reality into a new form of virtual perception?

Whoever does not discover through his own power the concealed road to the great science will never surpass one's self. I was under the feeling I was subdued by one of those women gifted with clarity and a piercing force, not so much through her beauty, but through those wonderful attributes: dedication, compassion, delicacy, combined like a spell under a mosaique of surprising impressions and experiences.

I do not consider myself all-knowing, but I had to descend into the imaginary's abysses, given to distortions and strict physical law constraints, to experience the "sweet" pain of my own rebirth in a new world. Alchemy, the sum of all elements subject to transformation, releases that inexplicable something that you should circle around, but which requires a lot of months of study to understand its heart. It can twist the mind of someone who doesn't understand its double value, or who dares to accede to the superior stages of achieving the Great Creation without crossing time and space.

When a titan makes a step forward, mankind needs ten thousand steps just to keep up. This is one of the truths accompanying the alchemical journey. The mere passion pales quickly if it's not followed by an inciting superior intellect. But, in turn, the obsession to seek depth in any combinations and mutations of elements, by accelerating the reactions which derive of the great transformation, it could end in an explosion of negative energy, in a disappointing evolution.

The illusion of life is not death, the transition to another dimension, but the hope of finding a magic elixir that turns lead into gold and makes people immortal. Reaching this unique truth through my research on clay, the matter from which household objects are made (plates, vases, pots, cups), I have managed to transform reality into a new form of visual perception. The form of the object is not just a cover of the earth, a graceful protection of imagination, but it is the inner light of the poetic Ego described in a universal language.

Leadership: Do you have the ability to reflect on the phenomena of symbolizing and transmitting the content of a message, from the perspective of understanding the world by reinterpreting the acquired knowledge?

To float firmly in the waters of the immense ocean of knowledge, where the waves with their strong arguments, with their torrential eloquence reach favorable heights for developing personal training activities, is an alternative to not accepting the limiting thinking which individualizes you. But at the same time, the waves come back to the shore sometimes, which could mean a decrease of interest for performance and for setting some new research directions dedicated to the competent field.

Out of an infinity of models, an innovative spirit chooses, without denying the free exam of facts and dates, a certain analysis sample, for a personal iluminatio campaign's sake, with a tinge of glory. And grounds him without anyone knowing how. Then, he sets in the middle of his new discoveries a small concentration of substance, well defined for a new scientific product. Optionally, he applies a certain selection to the elements. And finally, he sets a certain logic in order to provide a random functionality or a set of functionalities which are often related.

What does leadership gain from this alchemy full of meanings, from this control over matter? Various acceptances of varied notions and bordering of meanings, visions and stakes in the nature of fundamental changes will help you think of everything in a profound and structured manner, based upon which, in your decision-making process, you can calculate the heights of a new perspective of understanding the world, life, universal, in relation to the acquired skills and knowledge.

Thus you become the main character of a whole complex of matter transformation processes which involve a better operation and coordination between the resources of understanding that you have at your disposal and around which the practical functions are placed more or less symmetrically.

Leadership: Can you expand your knowledge to an advanced level of study of subtle phenomena of material transformation, using as a lever to support creation every angle of natural scenery?

I recently found in a culture magazine a quote belonging to the Romanian esthete, Victor Ernest Masek, who stated the following: "As a matter of fact, the great and vigorous creations are indestructible and not only do they survive all analytic procedures, but their prestige is even enhanced when the formal analysis is judiciously made."

If we want to appreciate the essence of these words for their true value we should understand, before anything else, the phenomenon of overextending knowledge, the necessary conscience of what must be included in the thinking plan so we can put into ideas what experiments and observations irrefutably reveal.

The contactor and switch are those two extremely useful tools which comprise your educational circuit. The first entails searching for some niche-creations that bring the "different" and "depth", the innovative ways to express thinking. The second serves for switching off or reconnecting the circuit when there's a breach in the implementation mechanism of own elaborations.

The most priceless tool in measuring the "distance" between the two devices is given by your desire to evolve and dwell on the useful knowledge in the field of leadership and personal training.

Leadership, like alchemy, is based on the extensive use of information and its processes, but also on the distribution of information content in a new perspective of thinking for the world of today and tomorrow. And the expansion of knowledge to an advanced level of study of the subtle phenomena of transformation of "matter" is made using as a lever of support of creation every angle of natural scenery.

Look around you: what can be changed, first of all, through mere observation?

Alchemy is revealed as follows: Have patience until it is time to become more than you are. Man's entire struggle consists of having the strength to reach the point where the Great Work of the Universe is revealed to him through the meaning of life.

The Moving Depths of the Immense Ocean of Matter marks that balance between will and ability, between the own Ego and the multitude of continuously changing individualities which must be permanently maintained in leadership. Leadership can be considered an art only if it survives in time to its own creations.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-moving-depths-of-the-immense-ocean-of-matter.html

The Music Of A Completely Virtuous Life

On March 09, 2021

Form a clear vision of what you want to convey through your creation, before you decide to change something in the feelings that your soul hides.

Music was the first part of my foray into a world dominated by color that seemed to herald that explosion of vivid shades of an aesthetic deeply penetrated by the ferment of symbolist thinking. It gave me a panorama of audiovisual creation reflexively transformed into a torrent of positive energy, including virtual reality to listen to and change the sounds of a stellar music that all human knowledge attributes to the approach of absolute perfection.

I say this even from some of the words attributed to Beethoven: "Music is a spiritual way of entering a higher universe of knowledge that encompasses Mankind, but one that Mankind can NOT comprehend."

Thus, music became a revelation higher than all the wisdom and philosophy I thought I would never get rid of. It has become a test of sensitivity of language, of expression, a kind of process of sensitization of matter from which art draws its vibrant substance, possible to manifest itself as a natural representation in the physical plane of an emotion, of a thought, of a message accompanied by the sublime, contemplative, enveloping lyricism of the imagination from which randomness is never missing.

As for what cancels out any anxiety for me, through what happens to me every day, well, music can give me the vibration of a unique moment, other times it transmits the vibration of an ephemeral emotion. Here, it is indisputable that a creator will never be more concerned with himself than when the purest inspiration is more abundant in a state of pulsating, prolonged tension.

Leadership: Can you produce a reflection of your vibrational essence through a composition of elements with a surplus of significance – rarely encountered in a world of creation that wants to be a mirror of the Universe?

What I want to show is that music is not just a criterion for separating the self from the non-self, a call to awakening to a higher understanding of the metaphysical meaning of existence. But it represents, first of all, a wide foray into an eternal present whose echo penetrates as far as the spirit reaches to defeat the laws of nature, blurring the reality-dream relationship, and calls you further to a self-awareness as a spirit, not as form or as a body.

Music is that creation of an artist who excites to the end, reminding us of the intimate feeling of well-being that the moment of connection with the spiritual realm of the universe can bring us, with the itinerary of the heavenly places that surround us. It is the testimony of a life lived through the art of expressing feelings with the help of sounds combined in a specific way.

And what really catches the listener's attention is the proof of the existence of a synergy between the waveforms of a self-revelation that is fulfilled in the incarnation of the Logos, contributing to the creation of a symbolic image, and what is accentuated by capturing the beauty of a life experienced in the light of lyrics that warm the heart of any person, inspiring, arousing emotions, enabling the deep meanings of the dimensions of fine art.

The vibrational essence of an artist lies in that quality of music that can bring together all the emotions of the perfection of a work of creation.

What can I say, maybe I have a specific pull towards music, or towards certain kinds of songs that inspire a special state, each piece composed by me having a beautiful life story behind it. Yes, I am a musician, but not just any kind of musician, because my sublime notes, those notes of sensitivity, elegance and intimacy, those bass notes deeply raised on "Imagine", have the effect of calming the thoughts and a certain warmth of heart.

Leadership: Can the image meant to suggest the setting in which your soul trembles with emotion be seen as a manifestation of your imagination in a world that exists outside the perception of reality?

As for what cancels out any anxiety for me in the peak moment of inspiration, to which the inherent dynamism of the images shaped by the expression of emotions tends, in an inner space, where all the journeys come together in one, I would like to refer to a passage from the novel "Papillon", written by Henri Charrière:

"My soul, my spirit, will never belong to this degrading road of decay. I only live to escape. My duty as a man to myself is not to do myself justice, but first of all, above all, to live, to live to escape. Even crushed, an escape is a victory. To live, to live, to live. To repeat this whenever I am ready to give in to despair, three times these words of hope: "As long as there is life, there is hope."

Rereading this passage, I offer you the conclusion that my soul draws concerning the journey of an artist in this world: there must always be something that sustains the rhythm of my life, that transmits and increases the vibration of another reality that I myself look for in a sensitivity of expression that is emotional, subtle, hidden, indispensable to the act of creation.

I think they all contribute equally to the impression that the image of a single being leaves.

That's how it is. Sometimes I feel that I am experiencing this moment full of sensitivity as a victory of escape from a world that, by experiencing it directly, seems to me to be slowly dying. And, no, I'm not saddened by what's happening outside of me, but I'm glad that what's happening outside of me is testing the thrill of being connected to a pair of headphones in which can be heard this chorus: "I'm a world that's waiting to be discovered."

What is reflected in leadership is the synergistic connection that transfers feelings into vision and charges the experience of life with a meaning that can become reality.

The Music Of A Completely Virtuous Life is addressed to the man who knew how to escape immortality with the help of artistic sense (acting more according to feelings and less according to logic), including the faculty to perceive the phenomena of the external world as a reflection of the inner world.

Here are the elements of the image from which you can extract your artistic content related to an interesting creative project: Sounds. Color. Form. Aspect. Emotions. Words. Gestures. Costumes. Dance steps. Language. Image. Vibrations. Spirit. Vision. Analytical perspective. Numbers. Design.

How can you render what is inside you through the prism of what is happening outside of you, taking into account these elements?

Use the richness of your imagination !

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-music-of-a-completely-virtuous-life.html

The Mutual Knowledge Principle

On January 24, 2010

Know the people around you and those around you will know you.

A man can distinguish himself only when facing critical situations. He can overcome the will of the people around him and can rise above them at the appropriate moment, like a burning flame giving hope, if in the most difficult moments he displays courage, ability and resolution. Only if he proves to be an ace in leading people, if he's unyielding in his decisions and capable to throw himself first, with no fear, in front of any danger, will gain the confidence of others and will enjoy their support.

But nobody can become a leader easily. And that's because, first of all, people want proof of the person's ability to lead them. In other words, people want to test the person, taking into consideration its qualities and faults, abilities and competences, before approving its lead.

Leadership: Is your reaction to the suggestion that provide exposure mode personal example part of your way to motivate yourself when you measure all the benefits?

After reaching Kos Island, under the pale light of the stars above the ship deck, the sea-dogs from Focea gathered around Dionysius moaning and groaning. They were all exhausted; they were out of breath because of the efforts they made during the past days. They were rushed to row without cessation and they were feeling bloodless.

Noticing his men's distorted faces, neurotic gestures and tiredness and, after hearing many of their weeping, Dionysius, the commander of the galleons, told them:

- Let's give thanks to the immortal gods for keeping you wise and having chosen a determined commander. I, Dionysius, son of Focea, shall not abandon you. I'm not telling you these words for you to keep following me only because I'm the most skilful seafarer, because I'm stronger and more astute than any of you, and let's no longer talk of my other virtues. But think well ! Is there among you a man better than I am? If there is, then dare he also say it. So we can decide what to do from now on.

Everybody hushed. Nobody claimed the right to be commander. Nobody considered himself more cunning than Dionysus, nobody was interested in replacing him at the command of the galleons. Why?

For only one reason. Nobody doubted that Dionysus was the most skilful of them all. Nobody dared to do what he could do. Everybody knew his qualities and recognized him as the only one capable to lead them to sea, the only one capable to lead them to victory in the sea battles against the Persians. Having spent to so much time on the sea with him, his men go to know him very well, and they knew that he was a person that they could really rely on and that there was no commander better than him. In his turn, Dionysus knew his men very well. Being certain that there wasn't any captain better than him, he could exercise his authority, which was recognized, and he couldn't be replaced by anyone else.

The prestige you deserve is a manifestation of pride arising from how you motivate yourself when you present all the advantages in a context of sharing and praise of uniqueness.

Dionysus will always by a complete example: he knew how to lead people to victory, even though he was brutal and severe with them. He never eluded anything, by simply raising his shoulders saying "I don't know", but he responsibly pondered upon everything pro and against, everything that was good and everything that was bad for his crew, and, with his knowledge of navigation, he lead them in the best direction, especially when they had to go through hard times. His men were convinced that luck would be on their side as long as Dionysus lead them, and should they ever dispense with him, luck will completely abandon them.

Mutual understanding between the leader and the people, after which we could flawlessly operate the distinction between a reality of appearances and one of depth, plus the benefit of a partisan vision on issues with major impact on the cost and duration of an action, stems from the way of clearly and concisely explaining the cause for which you fight against a background of potential victories.

Your only enemy is the way you affirm yourself within the terms of compliance with a limit that must not overcome, such as the justification for the unfair usage of an image of force that you do not have. And to form a belief about your superiority and take action in accordance with it, can be felt in how you see life as a wound that you will not allow to heal.

One of the most important things that a leader must do is to spend enough time around people until he will get to know them very well. If he won't know them very well and, respectively, people won't know him very well, then nothing will be certain.

Of course, thus, the leader becomes known. But I pity the leader who has various weaknesses, which will be recognized by those lead by him. That is why it is important for him to know himself well first, and if knows he still has some weaknesses, hide them well, because once known by others, he will be manipulated by them.

Leadership is a matter of honor that is achieved by a process involving two parts during which are established the multitude of values you guide your steps on: the first relates to your concern for the side effects of loss and focusing on role changes, and the other refers to your concern for the good of those who follow you.

Being at the forefront of people, in addition to aiming forward, towards a distance which at times you cannot clearly judge, is an application of the truth expressed by Russian philosopher Nikolai Chernyshevsky: "the more realistic and positive your aspirations are, the more energetically you will fight with the circumstances that oppose their manifestation."

P.S. In order to have a great influence on people, you must stay a lot around them, to prove your cunningness, your abilities, professionalism and devotion to them. To dominate them by an unyielding will, vivid and inexhaustible spirit, by a continuous and powerful will to win the victory. And if you give them back their hope in the future, they won't disappoint you and will never look for other leaders.

 Note: Mika Waltari - Etruscul, editura Polirom, 2002.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mutual-knowledge-principle.html

The Mysteries Of Sight Hold No Secrets From Me

On January 28, 2023

What you see in others is what you feel when you meet yourself again in their minds.

Last week I participated in the half marathon in the city of Cluj Napoca. I remember everything as if it were happening right now. Just a few minutes before the start, the organizer of the contest presented the situation on the ground: the mud formed overnight due to the torrential rains, many dry branches fallen from the trees, countless traps that nature had scattered along the route and which increased the risk for the possibility of injury. The fog had settled down a bit, the temperature was 2 degrees, the wind was blowing lightly, the rain and sleet seemed to persist throughout the day.

All this time I was looking at the faces of the runners in the front line, more determined than ever to win a place on the podium, more tempted than ever to overload their legs, back, nerves. They did not seem to avoid stressful situations that create states of irritability and nervousness, no, not at all, as if they wanted to dominate the chaos resulting from a world that disappears and another that is created, resorting to uma travessia sobre qualquer dor through the power of the soul to exercise its will.

You could almost read on their faces the chorus from a confession brought to the experience of affirmation through superior performances: "your mind will be freed from all pain and all fear".

That's how things were. My eyes, whose vision embraced only areas full of contradictions, perceived elemental vitality in all its sincerity. The runners seemed oblivious to the fury of nature they were about to experience, a nature determined to impose its laws at all costs. Led as if by the flame of Yahweh, sniffing in the air the danger from which the blind do not know how to avoid, dragged towards the dangerous unknown by the power of the Ego to control any resistance, they were clinging as if to another feeling that is worth living, because it makes history !

Leadership: Can you build a reality that does not get bogged down in the limits of an immemorial temporality, visually organizing your emotions in a symbol that generates the ability to gather energies in a single ideal?

The gloomy landscape acquires the appearance of an objective reality only because of the eye that looks at it, judges it and follows its meanings devotedly. As a simple soul can freely express its inner peace, so a visionary eye can give a vivid spark to the picture of nature only if it is invested with the natural instinct to raise the surrounding elements to the rank of symbols of hope, desire or the dream. Only an alchemist accepts the power of nature, extracts the energy from the soil and captures the cosmic one, while an artist focuses on achieving perfection, but often forgets to connect with his soul.

This is exactly how things were shortly before the start. The runners, gathered at the starting line as if in a fortified fortress, signed up under the sign of all the senses and passions – disciplined like wild horses harnessed to a chariot of fire that knows no limits, that knows no retreat, that knows neither balance nor imbalance. At the same time, you could feel by looking closely into their eyes, in the "pure retina", the fact that they were engaged in a neo-impressionist, conceptual art, where the artist focuses more on the ideas and concepts behind his art, than focusing on the final product.

In the end, I think that every competitor was guided at that moment by a single ideal for which it was worth fighting with all they had: "I will conquer a whole world with the performance I will achieve."

Leadership: Are you trying to reconstruct the portrait of a world that is not enough for itself, keeping the figurative character of an image that ends up being the landmark of a personal biography?

As Plato wrote at the entrance of the academic gardens: "Only geometers enter here", I could have read the following on the faces of the runners: "On such a route, only adventurers dare to enter." Eyes burning with maximum adrenaline, eyes for which sight itself turns into vision, were the unique expression of a dogged stubbornness to persist in a struggle that had become an ordeal, but no less desirable for it.

It wasn't for nothing that I looked carefully at their face, looking for the atmosphere glimpsed by a dreamer who never gives up on his dream, because that's the only way I could build a reality that doesn't get bogged down in the limits of an immemorial temporality. As the writer Ion Frunzetti observed a long time ago: "Didn't the same force control the heroic individual of antiquity, as well as the miserable individual of the late Middle Ages?"

Leadership: Does projecting the outside world into your inner space offer the ability to transform any static image into an interactive one, beyond what a neutral observer might say?

Runners think about their own art, but they also think about it for others who are watching them. And it is not about an art of prudence, but an art of self-giving in the spirit of maintaining stability adapted to the intimate specifics of the test they have trained for so long.

In fact, the aesthetics that their attitude gives off is in the spirit of mobilization values, taking into account the tensioned force at the level of muscle fibers. Each of them, just like Don Quixote, taking the real appearance of the fighter with the windmills, changed his existence in an intention of symbolization, respectively of transcending the empirical reality, impressing then as a "fugue" by Bach.

Their symbol preserves the figurative character of an image that ends up being the landmark of a personal biography, the landmark of an entire generation, coagulating in the decisive moments the energies and influences of an entire oeuvre d'altíssima excellència. The runner himself is the relief image of a whole historical page carved in a fine manner, in a Holy Grail, on the frequency of vibration of an intense, unquenchable emotion, for which it is worth sacrificing everything, for which you have to go through countless challenges and you do everything you can to make sure you move forward well.

Truly. The projection of the outside world into my inner space shows the fulminant intention to capture a moment of maximum suspense, in a waiting that seems to never end, through a directness of the experience of the spectators who wait full of emotion for an unexpected evolution or completion.

I didn't attribute everything I saw to a story told in a monotonous tone, with vacillating characters, the objective reality being reduced to a simple game of sensations and perceptions that continued to flow without changing the measure of hard-to-shake identities. Rather, I put everything down to an expressive particularity that becomes a habit of thinking: "What I see in others is what I feel when I meet myself again in their minds."

Leadership is distinguished by the representation of an image obtained through a sum of experiences that will remind you many times to repeat a certain experience. It is characterized by an internalization that can be observed through results that are as unexpected as they are credible.

The Mysteries Of Sight Hold No Secrets From Me when my eyes capture a reality that forms me as a human being, giving me the opportunity to experience the deepest emotions. It is a reality that I sometimes find difficult to process, because it keeps me in a continuous deja-vu, bringing my experiences to a point in my life where I try to recover many moments, which, for various reasons, I have lost in the past.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mysteries-of-sight-hold-no-secrets-from-me.html

The Mystery Behind The Lines

On January 31, 2018

Start collecting the fruits of your life's endeavors, as you manage to draw lessons from the truncated information set in front of you.

- I have slurped revenge thoroughly, in the darkness of the cell and in the despair of captivity, said Abbot Faria. But now, when I have forgiven the world due to my love for you, now when I see you young and with your future ahead of you, now when I think of the happiness such a revelation can bring you, I am terrified by the delay and I tremble at the thought of not giving a master as worthy as you, the riches hidden within the earth.

Edmond Dantes turned his head, sighing.

- I see well that you still do not believe me, Edmond, continued the Abbot. Did my voice not convince you at all? I see that I must offer you proof. Behold, read this paper, which I have never shown to anyone.

And taking the paper, of which half was missing, unmistakably destroyed in an accident, Edmond read the following lines:

Leadership: Do you allow the neglect of a certain part of the source information, in order to obtain a more compact representation of reality that you cannot discard?

- Now, what do you have to say? Asked Faria as the young man finished reading.

- But I see only truncated lines and words without end. The writing is interrupted due to some fire and remains unclear.

- To you, my friend, who are reading it for the first time, it might appear that way. But to me, who I've kept looking over it for nights on end, to me who I've reconstructed each phrase and filled every idea, I was given to find the missing meaning. Especially as I know the story of this paper.

As a conclusion. The one who has a curiosity about the unknown, taking into account that characteristic of knowledge centered on the dictum*"I am the thing through which I know how to listen to my reason"*, aims to interpret everything from the point of view of the certainties he can discover through his inclusion in a wider context of reality.

Leadership: Are you ready to experience an intense story that comes packaged with the actions of a discovery that defends its certainties?

The destination you are aiming for, bearing in mind the memory full of particularities of information models detached from the fragments of different writings, from real events, from fragments of a certain but forgotten reality, has a certain force related to the limitlessness of a personal transcendence that reveals an entire story.

This story is overlooked when you forget to dig at the root of things and take away the crust of ignorance that covers their importance, when you are sensitive to external stimuli or when you let yourself get carried away by the wave of momentary needs.

The story invites us inside a closed but diverse space, a cutout from a continuum that extends to the level of understanding of each person, much deeper than the infinite totality expressed by the symbolic path of a pathless journey that highlights the flexibility to visit places where you find out more when you are in their immediate vicinity than when you are at a great distance from them.

It is the story of a forgotten history from which we cut out past bits and bits that are fixated through the personal filter of subjective understanding, modeled by its own values and a constant meditation on the self and relationships with others. The story of some heard or read happenings, from which both the experiences and the individual differences transcend, with the multiple possibilities of approaching two mentalities that are excluded by the peculiarities of the reproduction of reality.

Before you go through such a story, you need some certainty regarding the unknown territory that you want to penetrate, from where certain landmarks will somehow guarantee you that there is a great chance that you will have a breakthrough at the end of the journey.

The lack of curiosity to find new and interesting things is like a piece of paper that marks the place of discovering a reality you are absent from because you have forgotten that you can be part of its plan.

The Mystery Behind The Lines is a truth that you do not manage to see due to a lack of desire to go through the interstices that allow you to find out what you do not know about yourself.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mystery-behind-the-lines.html

The Mystery Of Gazing Into Red

On July 22, 2020

Paint your life in the colors of the soul, as a way of expressing your own feelings in the set of teachings that transcend time and responsibly manage your destiny.

I had never felt anything like it before, nothing harder to bear. The faint whisper of my emotions seemed to be compared to a small golden cage. I didn't recognize myself as being free, I didn't recognize myself at all. I was rich without recognizing myself free from the world of the imaginary, like a spirit enclosed in its own bottle. With a single well-crafted, inspirational, flexible word, I could have freed myself completely from my own helplessness, from this ice isolation that had generated a strong sense of loneliness, as from a meaningful story that precedes us all and which, thanks to the sapiential books, is always updated with each generation.

Hope was still far away. The chance of being myself was even further away. My words remained behind the conscience that silently shouted "mercy". Even the arguments invoked by the aesthetics of art did not help me much. The whisper of a "Double Delight" rose around me delighted my soul saddened by so much commotion, giving itself to the fruit of a new form of interiorization passed through the workshop creation of a painter who could not expose his painted canvases in time, losing the chance to be a laureate.

Thoughts through the filter of emotions were more enlightenment than painting. Looking at me with holy eyes, with a loving look, the rose shared with me part of the spiritual experience encountered over time with other people who were close to it, as a kind of crossing of the spirit of love from a servant of God to a householder in search of the soul. And it spoke to me enchantingly, attentively, in a gentle voice, through the voice of Young Johannes, who had long ago set out in search of God:

"I did not see any value in what I had at hand. Who knows, maybe this was my destiny, my curse. Love, science, God, were all equally inaccessible to me, because something in me kept me from being content with what others were gaining. I was neither happy nor saddened by this discovery. The inexpressible melancholy of the inaccessible gave me such strange shivers that no pleasure in the senses seemed to me to equal this subtle and burning voluptuousness."

Leadership: Does the mediating character of your feelings, repeatable in the free flow of consciousness, emphasize the concept of sovereign providence that brings out the most appropriate moments and contexts for you to shine spiritually?

I am not ashamed to admit how much these words touched my heart, highlighting my very reason for being, the sublime thrill of the ideal of justifying myself as a hero of events from other life situations, especially in the situation of a lack of possibility to perceive a story from a book of immortality. The rose has this gift of exploring man's soul, of exploring his mind, just as well as the painter does when paving the way to the ideal of making art out of nature.

My soul, full of memories from another life, seems to be the result of my rediscovery in a body of nature. The rose is my loneliness, my impulse, my transition from human to divine. When I am looked at with the spirit of nature, also when the spirit of nature gives me the pleasure of being in the midst of people, I understand how small and insignificant I am in front of a parallel life that seems to have its secrets, intersecting with in the crucible of a unique experience.

What I have in mind here is precisely the awakening of the eye of the artist who seeks his gaze as a contemplator of nature, being able to make a retrospective of his complex life, full of events, strangely intertwined along a vast intermediate space, realizing that he must fully enjoy each of his unique moments, no matter what the times.

If knowledge closed its eyes, just as flowers close their petals at night, then their eyes would no longer widen their gaze to a realm beyond the mysterious, such as the painting of a story or a dream. The rose witnesses every second of my life lived by the freedom to believe, by the constraint of an external miracle, of a new beginning, of a drop of eternal youth,in necessariis unitas, in dubiis libertas. The same knowledge causes the eyes to awaken what is asleep in a gaze which time calls Asphiroderto, and to which I have attributed the meaning of "triumph of the sacred half".

Leadership: Does your creation inspire the sublime thrill of the ideal of justifying yourself as a hero of events from other life situations, especially those that require certain concessions from you?

Finally, I understood why the essence of Young Johannes's destiny is, in some places, the very fabric of my destiny, like a little-traveled road to distant realms, in a world that does not force art to be part of the metamorphoses of Earth's evolution. Because everything I experience in the present awakens the memories of a life full of passions and doubts, so many fears, un estado deprimente profundo, from the diary of an artist who never understood that the art of being yourself is the reflection of a mirror that increases the chance of a kaleidoscopically colorful, varied life, full of expectations.

Just as the rose compensates with its perfume the state of mind of the personalities at the confluence of times and mentalities, so too had Young Johannes compensated his imprint left on the world with the blows of a destiny that seemed more and more hostile, and this because God did not bind the spirit of his teachings to the spirit of live. He believed that science could dominate everything in the world, giving the whole world its spirit of consolation and gentleness, of justice and fairness. But what drove him to disappointment, even to vanity, was his inability to calm his immeasurable pride.

Do not let anyone play with your soul, for no one knows how much a great soul has endured.

Young Johannes allowed pride, this steep height of his spirituality, to take control of his life, when it was better to let the omnipotent sensibility lead his thoughts and feelings to human happiness. Perhaps he also held between his fingers a very beautiful rose of the color of fresh blood, like all those sages who understood that life lived only before the holiness of God is a life whose flame was kindled before they realized how holy they are.

I do not want to be a saint, so proud and wise, because my heart knows only the meaning of the rose that I give to those who are able to give meaning and happiness to my life. I am confident that my holiness is a form of happiness achieved through dedication and ambition.

I was left with art, nothing more than creation, and the message of an exceptional artist: "Be the art that your creation keeps secret." It is better to let art guide my soul, because through painting I exercise my sensitivity and also through painting I put my soul in color, on canvas. Thus, I learn to feel the immaterial emotion, that thrill that a rose feels when reaching a subtle surrealism, with strong accents of invigorating the soul, the mind and the creative spirit.

To shine spiritually means to extract from the wisdom of your nature, your deeds and your emotions, that force that can give meaning to your life, that state of soul satisfaction, intense and full, which never limits you, but changes you.

The Mystery Of Gazing Into Red can be solved by the artist's inclination to capture the essence of the human soul in a painting designed to delight only the eyes that stir you to the depths of your being, those that stop time in place and make you experience endless moments.

 Note: In necessariis unitas, in dubiis libertas. - "In the necessary things, unity; in questionable things, freedom";

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mystery-of-gazing-into-red.html

The Mystery Of The Art That Seeks Its Meaning

On January 07, 2018

Reinvent your way of making art, working in the real through the power of imagination that calls for the appearances of a direct accessibility.

I was welcomed by the world of living or inert things, as constitutive elements of a unitary organism, which we perceived directly as finite results, but extensively as an autonomous space with a certain energy which, according to general relativity, led to the expansion of the universe.

It is the universe of fantasies and contrasts, dominated only by genius creators, loaded with meanings that suggest tense expressions with the deep energies of authentic life, transfigured portraits of feelings and thoughts made with the sweat of consciousness, through which the taste of the eternity of meanings unravels the forms of content behind words born out of primordial matter. They are aligned within the perimeter of expressive association allowed only by the enigmatic hieroglyphs of the Great Work, giving to the laws of reality an answer based on riddles: "The white field, the black sheep / He who sees them does not believe them / He who takes care of them knows them."

The great revelation of art is to see what everyone else loses track of, to give the inert its own space of existence, with an emanation area of the spiritual uranium, and to turn it into a meeting place with God, to change the vision of the world with the same spell with which a seducer puts his gift into play.

Leadership: Can you accept your creative side without departing from the responsibility to overcome the condition of a "prisoner of creation"?

No wonder that I was aggressively confronted with the pulsations of a devouring noise, the doubt of gathering in an organic whole the force of attraction of subjective elements that reserved the privilege of breathing that unbeatable spell of living beyond the limits of classical perception, within the perimeter of random thoughts. Everything was in relation to a tonifying feeling of tranquility, comfort, reverie, as a seal of eternal connections with the essence of a fine jewelry called "symbolizing technique", which transcends space and time.

This mysterious occupation was eventually associated with a small bridge suspended over the distance that separated me from the scientist's faith, as when you are looking for a thing that is impossible to predict, because I no longer believed in the intelligibility of the world subjected to research, based on direct observation and empirical formulae.

I was also trying to dispense myself of the colors of the modern and safe façade of art seen through the eyes of a photographer, thoughts slipping only towards that sense of the unmistakable of cosmic enmities, urging the pen to capture moments of dreaming, so that I learn to live from fragments of inspiration just as a seducer can live his whole life through seduction.

Before gaining access to the symbolic universe of a work whose consciousness is ready to uncover the imprint of the absolute, working in the real through charismatic power, you must taste the madness of Don Quixote. Then you must access the alchemy of Paracelsus' laboratory research, from which to extract the "free radical" placed at the center of the composition of a formula expressed by abstract reasoning.

The leap towards the highest knowledge, the science of relating to the abstruse, double thinking, reaching the definitive phase of coincidentia oppositorum, the infinite reflection implied by the "anamorphic magic" produced by the mirror of another world, all of these cannot make a giant leap forward if there isn't always another continuator of the Great Work !

Leadership: Do you need the unaltered "Something Else" that exists within the depths of your being, incorporated to the image you bear through creation, to ensure an optimal visibility of the message your art transmits?

And if are wondering how in my mind was produced this plan of an architect who builds the work of art of his own life by splitting the homogeneity of a figuratively seen universe, proving in full a fine and penetrating spirit of observation, then you must bear in mind the portrait of the great politician Talleyrand, as Jean Orieux built it:

"His gaze is all that is most impenetrable in the world, he looks right in front of him, but the one he looks at cannot tell if he sees him. Our power of penetration is too small, our experience too lacking, our imagination too limited for us to make a sufficient idea of such a being. This is the effect he will produce one day on the historian, who will be able to find a precious help in this portrait. He possesses the superior qualities and the modesty of genius in front of a genius of a different caliber."

Who is the one who does everything within reason? Who can create such a mystery that arouses such a seduction and captures a certain interest, by resorting to mind games to the extent of the meaning assigned to the marriage between the sublime and the ephemeral, between the unknowable and symbolization?

This can only be an emblematic artist of the realistic-figurative art, ventured in a relationship with that dose of semantic uncertainty that characterizes the sacred text, a sort of Pigafetta that sooner reconciles with the silence of enclosed spaces and silent books, than with the sword drawn in the midst of struggles between feelings and indiscretions provided by the revelations of the real world.

To look at things from the perspective of art, learn to penetrate the mystery of a portrait by delving deeper into the details of an imaginary being.

The formula of mystery, created in the midst of an apparently verisimilar event, such as the history of a portrait in a mirror that tempts us into an imaginary universe beyond the represented one, is the result of an act of communication in which God Himself, the supreme infinite, reveals to man the secret which is at the same time a revelation of His essence hidden everything.

"The something else" is the projection of the Ego that says "Yes" to the changing of seeing "divine" forms that are at the basis of the visible world and give it life. It represents that sense of the victory to express the abstruse, the contradictory, the obscure metaphor, symbolizing the penetration in opposite of shadow, labyrinthic, of man.

The Mystery Of The Art That Seeks Its Meaning is found in the forefront of the curiosity of finding new things, doubting imagined ones, culminating in the attempt to express through their antithesis a new reality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mystery-of-the-art-that-seeks-its-meaning.html

The Mystery Part, That Which Is Hidden From The Curiosity Of Mortals

On October 19, 2019

Without the vastness of incomprehensible space, reality would remain compressed into an insignificant point.

- Kuk and Kauket mean the infinite space immersed in darkness, before the creation of light.

- Isn't it in this limitless space that the creation of the sensible world will take place?

- Of course.

- Because, without this space, nothing can have extension and everything is reduced to a tiny point. You do not believe?

Leadership: What symbol has the power to reflect a deep connection between you and universal forces, marking a point of personal transformation through inner visualization?

Cheops agreed with a movement of his head. Then he asked:

- But I don't know what to say about Amon and Amaunet. Why is this divine couple hidden? If it is hidden, it cannot appear to our sight, and why, if it is, does it not manifest itself?

- This is precisely the part of the mystery, that which is hidden from the curiosity of mortals. He learns that all these aspects of the universe, which lie at the basis of its totality, are in Thoth, they constitute the secret nature of Thoth. But go ahead and tell me what you know about creation as described by the priests of Hermopolis.

- I think I understood that in the formless Thoth - which was the primordial Thoth, what we call Tatenen - there was an egg, an enormous egg, which arose from the chaos to open like a lotus flower. And from this flower that opened in the first morning of the world, the sun sprang forth, Ra was born, like a new-born child, coming out of his mother's womb.

Leadership: Do you think that the revelation of a dynamic between "hidden" and "manifest" can give you a new frame of reference within which you can evaluate and value the more subtle aspects of your human and spiritual experience?

- It is a symbol and this is the way it is presented. But in reality, isn't it rather the light that has pierced the darkness? Or the light that will spread through the void of the universe, to fill it with its presence, to give it its substance?

- What you call the void of the universe, isn't it the space in which the divine creation will be able to manifest itself? Cheops then asked.

- Cheops, through these considerations you have proven your strength of thought, because you are already starting to approach the mystery, said Ibebi. I will leave you alone again, so that you can penetrate even deeper, by your own means, into the realm of the hidden god.

For a seeker of enlightenment, the limitless expanses of the unknown provide the framework for the expansion of existence. From the depths of darkness is born the light of knowledge and creation.

The mystery part, what is hidden from mortal curiosity, is addressed to the few who explore the idea that the occultation of divine aspects can serve as a visual benchmark to measure progress in understanding the complex and often enigmatic nature of reality.

In light of this information, how do you imagine the impact on spiritual perception might guide your understanding of the "unmanifested" and their intrinsic values?

* Note: Rachet, Guy - Cheops and the Ibis conjuration , Lucman Publishing House, 2003.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-mystery-part-that-which-is-hidden-from-the-curiosity-

The Northernmost Point Of Solidarity

On March 13, 2009

Win the devotion of the people, by aligning your values to their expectations.

I often thought of this story that one of the teachers from University has told it at one of his courses:

A great business man dies and arrives at the gates of heaven. An unexpected hope has invaded him. He yearned for the good and the beautiful.

He is met by St. Peter, who asks him:

- How you made your fortune?

Suddenly, all his hopes were crushed, unexpectedly passing from calm to anger. For, he must tell the truth, and to have the courage to face with dignity the final decision on which depended his happiness or his unhappiness.

- Well, said the man then, with a voice that would have softened even the hardened hearts, I took a small part from other people, then I invested in real estate...

- How did you get them? asked St. Peter.

- Well, you see, I "borrowed" from them ... for a longer period of time.

- And you gave your money back with interest? was the final question of St. Peter.

Leadership: Can you rely on the resemblance between what you model by your intentions and the story you imagine to hide your intentions so that you do not burden yourself with assumptions that violate the presumption of innocence?

We base our success on our own assumptions, we trust in our beliefs, even if they do not meet the values and expectations of others. Is it acceptable that the road that we cross in order to achieve our chosen goals, to bypass (or to detach) of all those who contributed directly or indirectly to our success? Finally, all sins are punished in one form or another.

The world is not infinite, and it does not end to you, but to others, to all those that have provided all their means to help you succeed. This is the message for the story above. In our becoming as leaders, we should focus our thinking and actions around a common core to which converge with the beliefs and values of the others: solidarity, freedom and justice.

We need to adopt that thinking, that attitude and those decisions based on the desire for revenge against others because in our subconscious will always remain the seed of truth that we cannot ever hide: we could not manage by oneself.

Leadership: Can you express an inner clarification that strengthens the ego in opposition to the outside world, without suffering because of the premonitory feeling of detecting an unassuming guilt and being challenged by an inability to introspect?

A character from a famous work of the writer Boleslaw Prus made the following remark: "Witless would be the one who would consider that I do not know all the weights placed on the balance scales." It is true enough ! In order to calm your ego, you must experience the fact that yes, you can bear the consequences, without suffering because of a desire you haven't taken responsibility of. You do not have to suffer because of the premonitory feeling of detecting a guilt you've not taken upon yourself and being challenged by an inability to introspect.

Our success in leadership is like a balance. The rewards that we get are counterbalanced by those that we offer to others. We ought to give the interest to those that are entitled who have paved the way for our performance.

Just like at the Canon digital cameras, the "Zoom Framing Assist " function helps users to follow distant or moving subjects when using the extended zoom – in the same way, a leadership based on solidarity helps you follow your moral behavior that you have it when you use your skills and abilities in order to achieve recognition and respect of others around you.

The principles that guide your leadership are just as an unexplored territory. First, you need to investigate the path that you run towards people's hearts, and then try to launch your career. Moreover, in your attempt to reach a higher position, always think at the "interest" that you will have to reimburse it. You will manage to win people's devotion only if you align your values to their expectations.

To express an inner clarification that consolidates the ego in opposition to the outer world, in fact, means to make a confession: "everything I manage to achieve must not be removed by the obligation to give explanations."

The Northernmost Point Of Solidarity is the reference point by which it is measured your ability to relate to others. Take time, and try to look critically at the activities that you take, proving that you have character and a mentality based on solidarity, otherwise you will not mean anything to those around you.

Conclusion: Only one was Atlas, who could carry by oneself the Earth on his shoulders. In reality, we need to know to make us collaborators, followers and supporters, not to start by ourselves on the hard road towards performance. And, once we found them, and they accompanied us helping us achieve our goal, we should not forget to be grateful to them, and to know also to repay the obligation to them.

When choosing the right path and reliable companions, the probability to achieve our goal is very high. Furthermore, if we know to reward trust and loyalty to those who helped us, it means that we won and true friends to whom we can rely on anytime.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-northernmost-point-of-solidarity.html

The Novel Of A Destiny That Assumes A History

On June 17, 2019

Submit your existence in a model of granting appreciation and treasuring art to a creator who has educated his habit of always being "someone else".

The experience of my life is so close to the significance of the color of blood, that of thinking in images and in perfection, perhaps also in terms of luck, indicating that any change has its cause, just as any transformation of the state has its roots in eternity. In the creation of which he dedicates an entire a priori knowledge, without necessarily having a proof of the versions of truth derived by deduction, on different spiritual meridians, there is established a vast symbolic repertoire of colors, sizes, spaces, in series of images of images perceived only with the eyes of the soul.

Everything is surprised at a time that has already passed through an exaggerated screwdriving of an ideal of life that finds the basis in the experiential manner of some descriptions and key concepts specific to visual language. The labyrinth of glances cast into the vast perceptions of oneself, in a projection of experiences summarized in the complexity of an implacable destiny, always changes its center for those uninitiated in the art of messages, clues, riddles and puzzles that art splashes out of place instead of in every area of life.

For me, the symbolic charge of great spiritual art is associated with a rose. An exceptional director through the meanings of life, the rose gives me the opportunity to mysteriously open, as a window to the depths of a stratification of significance, a new chapter of my soul life. A cycle of images and symbols that look as suggestive or even as prophetic as possible, an alternative to perceived reality as a kind of correspondence between the narrator and the narrative, between the carefully chosen words and their meaning which is entirely different from the usual one.

Leadership: Does your creation impose the highlighting of what is seen by remembering a long-forgotten world, in relation to the need to give meaning to a life discovered differently each time?

What amazing property of a rose can be brought to the forefront of a charming fluency narrative, if we draw a curve of interference between life and art, between nostalgia and attachment to the experiences of another person?

In a novel written by Cella Serghi, we are revealed an information full of essence expressing the hidden depths of an experience meant to constantly contemplate its meaning, its own direction:

"On this earth, when I could not speak, I learned to hear the pains of the sea; when I could not read, I found out stories of Dacians and Getae from fragments. In the language understood only by scholars and children, I was talking to grandfather's shards, to my shells. Ovidius walked this place, here he said his woes and carved his "sadness" in stone. Here I learned to see and love what surrounds me, here I learned the ABC's and all that cannot be written and told in words, from here I took everything I kept and wanted to keep."

This short piece is just an introduction to the way in which a statement has its own correspondence in defining an atmosphere and an intimate environment, referring to a new conception of man in the space-time dimension, one of the type: "Seek to remind yourself in a variety of ways that your life has meaning."

The rose in the symbolic form of an attitude, of a belief, of an inferior being aspiring to perfection, must suffer, that is, to endure that spiritual struggle to be left to the will of the world under the guidance of a God who hides his work behind a chain of imperceptible events, both in the field of grace and nature.

So, the amazing property of the rose is to highlight the reality between two instances of interpreting the role assigned to man in a creation that addresses the soul. It seems to suggest the assumption of a destiny that has been repeated for thousands of years in two forms: "the realism of what is seen through memory" and "the consciousness of what you experience through a confession that removes the pains of existence."

Leadership: Can you give a completely new meaning to the term "isolation" on the basis of the desire to positively recover an overlooked experience in favor of a creature claiming the term "impact"?

Any art has its own touches. I am referring to portraits that tell the story of an unusual idea, a careful observation of the attempt of the mind to catalog everything as good or bad, passable or eternal, which only a comparison with a splendid "Red Delight" rose can move some of the world which I am capturing in an endless narrative alterity. Thus began my journey towards approaching the interpretation of a creation that nature identifies with a kind of gate of penetration into the depths of things and beyond, under the sign of the knowledge of the surrounding reality.

Isolation from any community is the most difficult proof of creative maturity. All the time spent in the middle of nature, in my rose garden, I learned that the magic of clairvoyance and the art of feeding a much larger and more expansive reality lies in contemplating a mysterious thing that flows to man from the motherland who nourishes it.

Hence, the attempt to enrich the perception of an alterity too overlooked by both sides of a fantastic subject, haunted by white clouds, framed in a painting with the prospect of symbolizing a sacred genesis, starting from the idea of chaos before creation.

Through the composition of my subject, built on a dynamism of living images meant to excite a whole world, of non-separation from the perspective of life beyond death, I exaggerated a bit my powers of observer and creator of ideas, forms, innovation, maybe even prophecy. But that's also part of the novel of my life.

And as any image of a rose can convey delicacy, tenacity because it resisted the times, while maintaining the nostalgia of a world beyond the ordinary, I often have to integrate myself into the model-work of other writers as a way of varying the dimensions of spiritual, cultural and social impact.

The impact of a creator on art first reflects the expression of an intense experience that you must convey by referring to the idea of transforming one's own existence into a plane of spiritual fruits (patience, perseverance, tolerance, forgiveness, wisdom) and in a plane of eternity.

Every time I talk to my rose, as between two friends who have shared their knowledge for so many years, I feel that I'm experiencing a repeat of history that I no longer thought possible. And all the time, what dreadfully challenge my soul are the words of Sinuhe, the Egyptian in the work of Mika Waltari, as if made to bring the idea of "suffering" close to the idea of exalting man above his mortal condition:

"In an instant, something opened my eyes and I awoke as if from a wonderful dream, something that ravaged my mind. I was asking myself: "Why?" Because in the face of any true knowledge there is the key that ignorance is afraid of. This question is more vigorous than the god Thot's cane, stronger than writing carved in stone... But perhaps nothing of all that man does is of any importance. Perhaps important is what he feels when he does what he does."

There exists a certain rigor in understanding the details of a painting depicting the stages of a man's life pushing his consciousness into a parallel of the time that the rose, through its mere presence, imposes in a place in which you never expected to find it.

That is why, in the most chosen art, in the art of acquiring a skill with the virtue of being "the other in the first" as well as "the first in the latter", you have to place yourself in a time frame in which images disappear, slowly, then you have to start over with another possible continuation.

The resilience of an image of life depends on the presence your own creation confirms in a dialogue with a true wonder of nature, a dialogue whose end is the habit of always being "someone else".

The Novel Of A Destiny That Assumes A History reveals the retrospective of a life that involves the story of other lives as equally overwhelming in time, in a continuous rebirth. At the same time, it emphasizes that steady reach to the presence of a wide variety of realities at all levels of being (spiritual, intellectual, cultural, artistic, causal, etc.).

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-novel-of-a-destiny-that-assumes-a-history.html

The Novels Of Closed Worlds

On April 10, 2014

Express your self-identity by living the experience of self, realizing the communion between a closed and onerous world, and the world of unlimited knowledge.

I am but an unanswered question in this world, without which I could not exist. I am the actor in the middle of a play, without assimilated experiences, fitted with a mind of no return, for which only a master of hyperrealism could have an answer: "I think even if the world does not exist."

Why am I how I am? This complicated question asks to be carried by many other questions, just as blood circulates in the body providing nurture to all organs and cells, shoving into the account of my existence concerns and contradictions from which I cannot turn my mind away from. Admittedly, my world is more and more like the novel of an illustrious exile on the page of a destiny that assumes a less ordinary history, the novel of a case of conscience that lives through a destiny of no one, but which has the idea of a fragment from Umberto Eco's book (From the Tree to the Labyrinth):

"Not only does Borges' character forget nothing, but within the obsessive memorial flow he manages to make us miss the only thing that matters in finding the solution. The Borgesian text, telling us about a character who remembers everything, actually speaks to us in a metanarrative way about a reader who remembers nothing and a text that does everything to make him forget."

Leadership: Does your experience of an atypical destiny empire favor the impulse of your awakening from the apparent wake of a surreal world?

Why am I how I am? But the doubt that this question sparks, more and more intense and full of experience, to which the most convenient answers would take me by surprise and to which the universe itself, embodied in an infinite number of meanings would encounter great difficulty in finding its place in its continuous expansion, somehow favors the impulse of revival from the apparent watch of a surreal world.

The idea that this question triggers about myself is not the one the common man gets, one whose thinking registers in the phenomenon called "normal-mode". But the one lived by an independent spirit, freed from the void of a closed world, as if forced to keep hidden deep inside the true secret of universal creation. While others are experiencing science without seeing the layer of radical reform of knowledge, I remake it after my own laws.

I feel overwhelmed with thoughts, confused by the small internal revolutions that time and space trigger, with their power of conceiving the world. As if I were attracted by the gravitation of an unknown matter, found outside of the universe. Like any writer bent to the frontiers of fiction and the Unknown, in the creative process of an unparalleled art, I build my world marked by a surrealistic imagination, which is in fact the result of an inner anxiety, a torrent of feelings from which multiple and varied images emerge about myself, false images in the eyes of other people.

I am the secret history of a world that you can understand only by shutting yourself in an internal solitude, of which madness and reason, like two boxers in love, disguised in a surveillance unit, are unaware that they are manufactured by the same man.

Leadership: Do you know how to turn the experience of the self into a path of unparalleled knowledge through the position assumed by the requirements of an art that refuses to lend itself to repeatability and inertia?

Do you know that chess player who for years never knew any other opponent than himself? He had been imprisoned during World War II, locked in an empty room. He learned to play chess by producing his own chess pieces from the buttons on his tunic, the board being the checkered sheet. For years he played alone, only against his imaginary opponent. And when he finally met the world chess champion, Mirko Czentovic, in his first and only match against a real opponent, he won without an issue.

This is the fruit of the unbeatable experience of the self, behind the great science, making the amazingly mature and precise x-ray of leadership that reaches that level of mastery incomprehensible and unimaginable for the limited spirits or even of those superior. An enigma for the small ones, a meeting point with the infinite for the great ones.

Because the personal way of development, without decomposing your knowledge into factors of vulnerability, representing one of the first "productions" of existence based on using inner resources, reconstructs on a small scale the closed worlds in terms of a specific way of being. The self sets the tone.

An art that refuses to lend itself to repeatability and inertia reveals itself as a meeting with yourself in a reality that does not necessarily have to be believable, but to draw as much attention to the echo that the mixture (in varying amounts) has between "truth" and "the projections of a new and expanded consciousness."

Grand Alchemist, Father of pottery, Bernard Palissy, said regarding what constitutes the safety of full knowledge, which cannot stagnate indefinitely, but occupies a large expanse in the depth of the times: "I have no other book but the heaven and the earth that are given for all to read."

The heaven and the earth symbolize the landmarks of an ongoing investigation, the result of an initiative of changing the perception of reality and the development of an imaginary representation of the world and of life. That constitutes the premise of implementing a way of thinking in leadership without which man could not compete at the peaks of thought, that means everything. And the boundlessness that maintains the great science.

Listen to yourself, and thus you will learn everything. Why are you what you are? Why do you know what others do not? Are you the secret history of a world that you can understand only if you shut yourself in an inner solitude?

The basic subject of authentic writing is the experience of self in the backdrop of an uncertain and unknown reality, which few anticipate, but which has the role of highlighting the huge force of reinventing a story that treats life from the point of view of an expanded consciousness.

The novels of closed worlds highlight those latencies of the self that no one has access to, those superior capacities of man, developed over time. Of those people whose consciousness is not enough for them to learn to interact with all levels of reality, but who must be given the temptation of knowing another dimension of the world, even an imaginary one, aimed at the better management of renewing and progressive personality types.

The leader is a gripping novel, appreciated, modern and complex, with a strong symbolism, built first and foremost around a single powerful character: himself.

Leadership is an addition to what science and practice, which support each other, should provide as an alternative to the consumption of intellectual matter. You can rise to a higher degree of understanding for the doctrine of a wider identity only if you learn to make the experience a path of self-knowledge unparalleled in the face of others. In the face of the crowd who is ready to understand the existential questions or your revelations, that can become the tool for promoting new intellectual "products".

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-novels-of-closed-worlds.html

The Number One Tool Of Leadership

On August 22, 2019

Learn to take upon yourself the moments when the other is not aligned with one's self, and to metamorphose them into life experiences that begin with the intensity of the emotion you transmit to someone in a circumstance beyond their will.

I found a story yesterday on the website www.alinastoicovici.ro. It's about a scientist from Phoenix, Arizona, who wanted to test a theory. He needed a volunteer who had nothing to lose. He eventually found him, a death row convict in St. John's Penitentiary from Louis, Missouri.

The scientist proposed to the convict the following: to participate in a scientific experiment that consisted of performing a small sting, in order for his blood to flow slowly to the last drop. He explained to the volunteer that he had minimal chances of survival, but his death would be without suffering or pain anyway; he wouldn't even notice.

The convicted man agreed, because dying this way was better than dying in the electric chair. They put him on a stretcher and tied his body so that he could not move. Then they made a small cut on his wrist and put a small aluminum jar under his hand.

The cut was superficial, only to the first layers of skin, but it was enough for him to believe that his veins had actually been cut. Under the bed, a bottle of serum was placed with a small valve that regulated the passage of the liquid, in the form of drops in the jar under his hand. The convict could hear the drip and count every drop of what he thought was his blood.

The scientist, without the convict seeing him, closed the valve so that the drip gradually decreased, with the intention that he would believe that his blood ran out.

As the minutes passed, his face lost more and more of its color. His heart rate increased and made him lose air in his lungs. When despair reached its peak, the scientist closed the valve completely and then the convict suffered a heart attack and died.

The scientist has managed to show that the human mind strictly observes everything it perceives and what the individual accepts, either positively or negatively, acting on our entire mental and physical part. At the same time, this story leaves us with a very interesting lesson. The scientist gave man a chance at life, but apparently condemned, the man lost it.

Leadership: Does the intensity of the feelings that your authority generates have a strong impact on all forms of manifestation of people who are not afraid to experience a new thrill in order to get rid of any pain?

The number one tool of leadership is your transposition into the feelings of others, as a means of exposing an image that opens the horizons, but without creating an unreal world. This does not mean limiting your scientific activity to the unbearable feelings of others, denying them the small "reliefs" of the moment. But in order to find yourself in people's feelings, to feel their feelings in your soul, to guide their feelings in the direction you want, you have to present them with an image that does not abolish reality, but widens and deepens it beyond its imaginary incarnations.

In fact, leadership aims at human interaction with an image induced in consciousness and soul, having a special importance in intellectual stimulation and in broadening one's horizon. The greatest impact is achieved by the leader, or the scientist who manages to capture all the details of a sensational life story to give the man a complete picture of an exceptional character. And the most sensational life story is the confrontation of man with the self.

It must go to the point of maximum tension where it is hardly possible for man to live his life, where the pure reflection of the free spirit is found, free to illuminate the beginning, and to give back to man all the feelings he can experience when in the presence of an exceptional man.

What should reassure people (and guide them in their feelings) is to expand the possibility of life on an emotional level, improvising a metamorphosis between the human body and the environment. Be a director, learn to improvise a metamorphosis between the social events that take place over time and the potential for maximum action of people, so as to help harmonize their feelings with what happens in the environment.

What I am saying now with such confidence, you yourself will be able to turn into reality with the authority of your own experience. There are others who seek in a life experience precisely the things that seem impossible to them in their feelings by saying "it is done, I have unmasked you", while others seek the challenge before the expiry of life duration.

Leadership is the test you are subjected to when you yourself subject other people to the same intermediate test that betrays your weakness: "the need to believe in something to the end."

The Number One Tool Of Leadership is the experience of trying to speed up manifestation at a time when someone considers themselves lost, but which should not have a boomerang effect on the conscience that tells you that you have not done well. It is better to give man an opportunity to reflect on the past than to subject him to a scientific experiment that puts his nerves and emotions to the test.

Be able to transpose yourself into the feelings of those around you before you yourself are the sinking ship.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-number-one-tool-of-leadership.html

The Old And The New From The Extended Area Of The Scientific Region

On July 13, 2014

Ensure the perfect, harmonious continuity of creation and thought so that the results of your science qualify you as a "high performer" in the field of leadership.

Things seem more complicated at first glance, effort is required to follow them through if we are ever going to understand the mind of Eisenstein. The more so as the importance of this film is significant in the artist's creation. It is a turning point. For the first time, research in the field of color appears within his creative concerns. The harmonic montage also contains color as a "harmonic resonator". Secondly, with all his inherent failures of an experiment, "the Old and the New" is the culmination of a suite of works and theoretical reductions, it is the climax of the film that's been practiced and researched thoroughly by Eisenstein on an aesthetic approach.

*The perfect, harmonious continuity of his creation and thinking reaches, through this film, sonic cinematography, the next step being his famous vertical montage, audio-visual, whose premise exists ever since "Potemkin". Besides, during his work on "the Old and the New", in the summer of 1928, Eisenstein writes his famous manifesto that to this day lays as the basis of the aesthetic of film with sound, in which he outlines the idea of the orchestral counterpoint between visual and auditory image. And still working on "the Old and the New", he projects sound for this film, which was never done ever afterwards. In this era, Eisenstein sees the future of cinematography only in the film with sound.***

Leadership: Can you penetrate the space of advanced knowledge, realistically setting the limits of exposure to the improvement of scientific performance?

Leadership enters the space of advanced knowledge, supporting an extremely exciting combinatorial power of creation and reception of new discoveries – in which interest, imagination, experience, the theoretical preferences of the researched, competed for the achievement of an innovative approach, and of content, facilitating the coordination of new systems and thought processes.

In the narrow meaning of the concept of leadership, the crowning of a suite of creations, theoretical and practical alternatives, does not only have an effect of valorization and promotion of a thinking generating of new principles and accents. But rather also implies a certain dose of exaggeration of the patterns of thought, through which man awards himself with a high quota of profitability by changing the laws of constructivism in science. Therefore, that perfect, harmonious continuity of creation and thought becomes an experience of dominating science, which offers a superior quality to practical training.

Penetrating into the space of advanced knowledge, realistically setting your exposure limits to improving scientific performance, first means to re-evaluate the importance with which you encounter and approach creation from the perspective of its spheres of transfiguration of the world and reality in the artistic plane. It also means to assign to your ideas that excitement of your own creative experience, imagining that others feel the same emotion.

Leadership: Can you assume the "inaccessible" for yourself by good management of your quality of an author of scientific innovations, without changing the continuity that the functioning of creation gives in a new form?

Inaccessible is but a wealth of science that is yours and yours alone and you keep it without sharing it with others. Not for nothing is said that the inaccessible is invariably seductive because he expose only the image of creation, not its act or its rationality. Authorship of scientific innovations can offer the right to highlighting and promoting within professional ranks, beyond high skill in the field, if the inaccessible creates the premises for an ample extension of access privileges to a superior level.

And authorship of scientific innovations never bows to an authority of a restrictive order that doesn't promote an orientation in practice and a certain direction of expression. And in order to ensure perfect, harmonious continuity of creation and thought, so the results of your science can qualify you as a "high performer" within the field of leadership, you must attach yourself to this quality and frequently introduce it in any context of professional mobility.

This quality oscillates between two constants. The first is given by the scientific benefit obtained following the realization of a process of distillation of structural elements that continuously open new possibilities of creation, to obtain a leadership-product with superior qualities. The second depends on the needs the individual feels in terms of approaching a subject of research falling under the promoted thematic area, but that is insufficiently studied in all its aspects because of its vastness.

The continuity given by the creation's functioning in a new form is given by the curiosity with which you penetrate in a world, you change the coordinates of reality and assure a solid structure to directly characterize your perspective over a captivating show called "life" – regarded as an alternative approach to the promotion of art centered on the visual image.

The Old And The New From The Extended Area Of The Scientific Region are two opposite poles that attract or repel depending on the quality of the "material" utilized for the construction of new systems of thought that science can accept as alternatives of reinventing leadership style.

Science is a product where directorial creativity and originality combines with innovation and technology to create a work with a decisive impact on the development of art to re-create reality.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-old-and-the-new-from-the-extended-area-of-the-scien

The Old Man’s Eyes Full Of Infinite Meanings

On September 12, 2022

The consummate artist transforms his message into a visual masterpiece manifested in conjunction with the subtle sphere of force of reflection: "who I am looking at myself through someone else's eyes".

I have always imagined the sea, furrowed by waves and ships, as the creation of an old man waiting for a moment projected into eternity, in whose eyes there is a sweet melancholy, an aesthetic delirium, quiet enough, a kind of calm sadness, like a soft music, which causes a subject to live passively, without taking initiatives regarding the act of controlling the escape from reality.

Through the eyes of a traveler in eternity, this proud old man watches over the vast and distant, but with eyes that think more than see.

Indeed, I am only a young artist, but I can see the sea through the eyes of an old man who imagines things to be outside of time, as if they belong more to the sky than to the earth. And only by looking at each break of the waves on the shore, in the middle of different shades of cobalt blue or green, will I be able to understand, as necessary, the concept of "reflection force" – who I am looking at myself through someone else's eyes.

Leadership: Can you represent an image in a synthetic perspective, from the height of a gaze that allows itself the demand to be mirrored in a picture painted by a single author through duality?

The old man speaks to the young man, but he speaks in a sweet, enticing, divine voice, like a chord on the strings of a violin, like a sweet melody left fresh over time, and this voice seems to cry out a transcendental remark "I have seen you and I have liked you ! ". Therefore, whoever wants to find his reflection in the image of the waves, knowing how to unite in a euphonic whole several voices, with several octaves, each of which has its own melody, will know how to recognize himself as a confidant of the sea. How else to hear the murmur of the sea dying on the shore and in your heart?

Against a background of dreamy fragility, in the same plane of the figurative, listening is a way to form connections with other creatures, with other marine resources, with other islands, with other landscapes, with other memories. Leaving aside the premises of abstractionism, so without removing from the representation of the work of art any reference to external realities, I highlighted the needs of the artistic sensibility to which I am connected at the moment when my mind oscillates between reality and dream.

Two needs of artistic sensibility are: the intensity of living expressed through continuity (through the remarkable ability to metamorphose, to pass from one state to another) and that depth of spirit in which a macrocosm is mirrored unaltered, a rare landscape on the convex surface of a special lens, similar to a telescope.

And if the old man reflects his visual acuity by associating with the narrative matter, fulfilling in the unconscious plane the function of the mirror that reflects the acquisition of the young man to feel the aesthetic emotion in front of the phenomena and objects of nature, then there is no doubt that the image that includes the sea, the waves, the amazing landscapes of the coast, is like a unique painting, painted by a single author.

Leadership: Are you aware of the fact that an image can be considered edifying even for a trivial fact, in relation to the reception of an artistic path in constant expansion?

Along with a mi pequeño sentimiento , an image can be considered edifying even for a trivial fact in relation to the reception of an artistic path in constant expansion. I say this being aware of the influence of book 165 of "One Thousand and One Nights". Here, the old caliph Harun Al-Rașid asked the young, beautiful and wise Sympatia: "How did Creation begin?", and she answered:

"Allah created Adam from a ball of clay. The clay was made with foam. The foam was removed from the sea. The sea was brought out of the clouds. The blacks – from the light. Light – from a pool of water. Water jasmine – from a ruby. Ruby - from a rock. The rock out of the water. And the water was made by the almighty word: Let it be ! "

All these are fragments of my existence that the present moment swallows, to emerge later in all their depth and brilliance under the appearance of lumps of matter, elements and fields known to my perceptions. In fact, everything I told you about the sea and the waves, in a visual and auditory demonstration, is a variation on "The Old Man and the Sea", crystallized as a personal vision in a standard of dual creation: the creation of beauty from a knowledge a priori and the beautiful splash from the echo of a voice from the future.

In leadership, as in art, a trivial fact highlights the benefit of a single fleeting glance towards a distant point, a glance that retains its expressiveness, the compositions rich in narrative, only if the viewer constitutes both a physical entity and an intangible entity.

The Old Man's Eyes Full Of Infinite Meanings, can maintain their focus on an object, while that object moves closer or further away. Here we can also include the artist's message through the duality of the real and ideal ways of being. Two ways of belonging to the existent do not mean two independent worlds, but one broken in two: in which the old dream of past times, and the young secretly open their souls hoping to form another image of what the future could have in store for them.

Art itself is a re-actualization of the past in the present, but also a transformation of the present into the future. The sea, the waves, the unforgettable landscapes, will never be absent from the eyes of the old man who will always create new horizons of beauty, only to become young again.

P.S. To represent an image in a synthetic perspective means to imagine a reality that cannot exist without the awareness of the similarity between what is near and what is far. And the message of a perfect artist is this: "If you cannot identify with the image of your own creation, you will not be able to open yourself to a new world of endless possibilities."

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-old-man-eyes-full-of-infinite-meanings.html

The „One In Many" Principle

On August 28, 2022

The fact of individuals being in large numbers is the result of researching the actions of a small number of individuals.

At the last marathon in which I participated, everything was different, especially through the prism of the appearance of a torrential rain that seemed to never end, but also through the realistic assessment of the situation imposed by the manner of manifestation and action of the collective mind. Everything that resembled an unyielding will, um desejo enorme , a passion or a bold idea, did not tire anyone. No regret was visible on the faces of the runners, on the contrary, it was as if the nasty weather brought with it, in addition, that dose of challenge absolutely necessary to strengthen the general tone.

Being in solidarity with the ideas of sportsmanship on which the ideal of peace and friendship is based, I could by no means affirm that there was in me any bitter regret which could have irritated me, any feeling of pain, to wish to do something different or to cancel an action, for me, for which sport is a part of my life. By the way, recognizing that a healthy body is dominated by a healthy mind, existing in me, unfortunately perhaps, too much passion – even overflowing at times, here is that running succeeds in such contests in the performance of strengthening the friendship between the runners precisely through each one's refusal of ever giving up, under any circumstances.

In many years, perhaps in old age, I will no longer be in the power to do anything outwardly voluntarily, so as to show again and again my valiant, impetuous, initiative character. Perhaps I will no longer be capable of spontaneous reactions, because for now everyone has this power through voluntary impulse. When my excitement wanes, I will have fewer aspirations, but more memories, like a reversible journey of the soul, accepting the form of accommodation with those emotional situations that the constraint of time, place and manner gives me, understanding that I never walked the wrong road.

Leadership: Is it difficult for you to combine experiencing an exceptional moment – with the immortalization of some images from which you can capture the pattern of a dual world transformed into a semi-abstract painting?

Creating my own reality based on understanding the atmosphere before the contest, focusing all my thoughts on a fixed, obsessive idea, which in the hands of others could have become dangerous, that Serestassifa-Mystica (the connection between things that no one would think), I turned my attention to the presence of the substitution effect of the added value of performance – with a unique and primordial sense of communion. Basically, I was struck by the solemn impression that people live together, belong to each other, and are not isolated.

In marathon competitions, everything is achieved through the mind-soul connection. Fiery, raised in the sphere of an ineluctable determinism, the emotional expression of each runner, combined with a game of spontaneous reactions and intentional facial expressions, make up a veritable language. Everyone offers everything from his soul, but no one wants anything from the soul of others, nothing except that ardent admiration that makes you choose a role model, a deep and intuitive insight into the sublime character of an entity that has the very cause and principle of its own existence based on unity and solidarity.

And I run, and I run, and I run, just as a painter exceeds his level of mastery at the most important results, where an unusual psychological endowment is required. And even if sometimes, during all this time, I feel that I am wandering in a surreal dream, sometimes touched by a more pressing outline around the idea of abandoning the "daemon", that extraordinary something that goes beyond the ordinary and leaves him way back, I still search for my identity in the spatiality inherent in an image that is always glimpsed on the horizon and is stored, with a resolution of a second, in a mirror of the soul.

As the writer Hannah Arendt rightly remarked: "Each artist's unique signature, their unprecedented sensitivity to style, proves a preoccupation with those traits by which the artist exceeds their skill and mastery in a way similar to the way each person's uniqueness exceeds the sum total of his qualities."

Leadership: Can you determine the accentuation of "One" in the plan of the evolution of the forms of visual and emotional communication, in a natural sequence of consequences that does not burden you with the effects of an analogical perspective, from the past?

At one point I saw a 17-year-old young man in sports clothes handing his own raincoat to another. In another moment, one of the winners on the podium offered to donate the prize of 350 RON to an athlete in a wheelchair. I couldn't help noticing how some runners intervened on the mountain trail, when others didn't know where to go. A truly friendly, unforgettable, accessible, and therefore totally non-competitive environment was created, with everyone being as if tense, active in search of a dual world in which one belongs to the others, and the others belong to only one.

"One" is best expressed in the form of an "acceptance of multiplicity". Being in large numbers is the result of researching the actions of a smaller number of individuals. So, I should first specify the idea that no human is an isolated, singular occurrence. Leadership is an element of emphasizing "One" in the plan of the evolution of forms of visual and emotional communication, in a natural sequence of consequences that never burdens you with the effects of an analog perspective, from the past.

A long-distance runner is an example of this thinking: I realized that I am responsible for the emotions of others in a world where there is only "one in many". I repeat. The moment when I am the happiest is when I want to know the glorification of the Self within me, to fulfill the expectations of my own individuality. Only in this way can I perfect a character of liveliness, spontaneity and freedom from any limitation.

The fate of the major transformations that occur in leadership depends on the realization of a dual confrontation: fighting a battle with yourself for a world in which you exist only as the equivalent of a multiple of 1,1.

The "One In Many" Principle applies to the situation where a single human depends on other humans to reaffirm his determination to be unique, respecting the minimum requirements set by the voice of authority that says: "you are more than you have become in a world in which everyone goes his own way".

And, to conclude, I will say only this. There are only two consequences that do not burden you with the effects of an analogical perspective, from the past: there is no reward for deeds, but for the intention that generated the deed. And, then, it doesn't matter what you get at the end of the race, but what matters is how much you give to achieve a change on a motivational level.

What was left in my mind and soul? The fact that these people do not wander through the world like blind people, nor stumble like drunkards in a continuous dialogue with themselves, on a tortuous, steep, zigzag climb, which many pretend not to notice. Sometimes they stop in one place, look around with joy, with longing. Sometimes they look to the ground to see how a flower grows, admire even the smallest blade of grass, listen to even the smallest "noise" of nature. After all, I think every runner has something of an artist in them...

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-one-in-many-principle.html

The Oneiric Work Of The Light

On December 25, 2010

A man of high quality makes of his very life of a masterpiece, the most sublime one that he has ever created.

Great talent? An excess of intelligence? I didn't know too well what it was. But it was a certain fact that I loved being around him, in his studio, the threshold of which was crossed only by those who understood that being a painter was a special craft.

Until then, I hadn't met anyone with such an optimistic vision of the future and who devotes himself with such intensity to his passion. The master had the soul of an artist; he was in love with colors, shapes, symmetry, lines, points, shadows, but especially with light. He created an ideal from the aesthetic of forms.

The thing he appreciated the most was beauty. That outer, pure, never-aging beauty, which does not know death, which arises intense passions and takes your breath away; that beauty which is never forgotten, which keeps you locked in its spell like in a prison you can't escape from. He often told me that beauty is what impresses in his paintings.

Leadership: Is the essential meaning of your art the reproduction of what is an example of an ideal that requires an extreme amount of "height"?

A work is not perfect if it doesn't pass over a beauty ideal. And this example of an ideal requires an extreme amount of "height" when the form of art that the artist outlines generates a unique, hypnotic vibration, through which he manages to catch you in the story and keep you there until the end of the stage of training.

"Height" means the degree of involvement of the artist in creating an image that determines the way in which his art reaches the viewer and one he considers to be a classification of the aesthetic links created between beauty and ugliness, between appearance and essence, purpose and means, perfection and kitsch.

As the two great painters, Hieronymus Bosch or Salvador Dali, the master had devoted much space to his fantasies – fantastic lights, visual games, bright and empathic faces captured with the utmost acuteness of the senses. He knew everything only through his work, colors, effects and the significance he gave to each of his painting. I'll never forget what he said to me: beauty is the ray of perfection that is in every great artist.

The craft of painting is only given to the accomplished ones, with unsuspected powers in their souls. When the master used to lift up the brush and drew it near to the canvas with that great finesse and precision, it was like he lived on his own bonhomie and good humor. It was something, I don't know what, that urged you to look at him and admire him. Those movements full of grace with which he rendered his painting revealed his state of mind, the way he perceived the world, his tastes. In one word, the facet of his personality. The passion and dedication he put into his work made you discover in him a happy artist. And the master was a happy artist, because his paintings brought forward his beauty ideal.

Leadership: Are you blocked in a series of reforming conceptions of visions about yourself?

If you are blocked in a series of reforming conceptions of visions about yourself, if you have a limited understanding of the number of alternative ways of producing performance and spiritual life, then you display less flexibility in your answer to change, but you also ensure yourself that advantageous feeding option of your inner potential, that additional source of enlivening – catalyst type – capital, which contributes to personal transformation, resulting in the acceleration of the need for capitalization of your willingness to accept yourself and be yourself.

If the painting suggests new combinations, not only of form and color, but also existential experiences, then leadership somehow widens the individual's sphere of responses and existential clarifications, making possible new ways of continuous moral improvement, caused by varied attitudes that come to characterize him as a man who loves his identity, who sees his ideal of perfection in the triumph over his own being, over his own training, reason, perspectives, behaviors and tendencies, especially over his own emotional and intellectual maturation. Painting, like leadership, sensitizes man.

The passion and dedication that you put into your work makes you discover a happy artist within yourself, while giving you an idea of your current level of self-awareness, the deepening of your emotional, affective and spiritual experiences, which can greatly contribute to leadership development, to explain the fact that there is a huge surge of interest in the art of self-retrieval before becoming what you're meant to be, even if, sometimes, this interest is not named as such.

It's something pressing you to look at and admire the man who explores and evaluates all his personality facets and manages to express that well-integrated facet on the support called "life". Before experiencing leadership, consider what someone once said on a website page: "The important thing is for everyone to discover their tendencies and facets of those experiments to which his own soul is going."

Leadership: Do you opt for the creative reproduction of reality in an art of confirmation of your own concept of self as a different possibility for obtaining a new perspective on life?

Are you a man of high quality? Do you make from your life a work of art? Just like a skillful painter inspires later artists by the world he creates in his works, so does a leader inspire to his supporters that state of harmony, of supreme communion with his own spirit, a state of free access on the realm of imagination, where everything is possible through improvisation and fantasy.

And, just like a painter, a leader turns his own life into a masterpiece, the most sublime of those he had ever created. Dedicating himself wholeheartedly to create an aesthetic, unique and firm ideal, he gives meaning to his life, maintaining his well-being both mentally and emotionally. The evolution toward his well-being is personally and it starts from his heart. A man with a full and fiery who manages to materialize his ideals, is a satisfied and happy man.

The way in which the leader perceives life certainly reflects on his "work". It's something personal that affects his activity, his efficiency and good relationships with others. If the life he lives and which he devotes to with great passion is one full of light, vision, color, then he will be able to attract the sympathy of others.

He will be all the more happy as his "creation" will emphasize more his ideal life. And the expression he gives to his ideal is the ray of perfection which propels him higher (or lower) in the hierarchy and helps him play his role better.

The concept of the self is the core attitude arising from the process of transition from the phase of creation to the perfection of life.

It connects the living conditions and modes of expression. It indicates a certain state of mind that can contribute to an effective account of "stories" about art. It is a unity of thought, an idea or mental image formed by combining aspects which make you complete and form the satisfaction of fulfillment, used to organize knowledge and perception of the world around you.

The oneiric work of light is your evolution, as a leader, to well-being and happiness, and also to a higher level of performance. It's something personal, which starts from your heart, which can be a goal – the desire to achieve an extremely high professional ideal. It is that one thing which radiates in your being, which contains all the colors of that personal "painting" that defines your leadership style and gives meaning and intensity to your life. It is that thing which radiates admiration around you and brightens up your soul. Is the dream that makes you enthusiastic you and gives shape to your ideas.

« The oneiric work of light » is the materialization of a leader's dream of perfection, who has set out to achieve his ideals. Are you a man of high quality?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-oneiric-work-of-the-light.html

The Only One Defeated In The Battle Of Minds (II)

On November 18, 2013

Put yourself in the place of others at the level of consequences you have to endure, before you rise above them at a level of competence and superiority.

I spoke in the previous article about Dr. Frederick Chilton, who, in the desire to show himself a connoisseur of the highest human realms, with the intention to expatiate in the field of psychiatry, dares the "shame" of showing himself above the phenomenal character of in psychiatry, the exceptional talent called Hannibal Lecter. He seeks a break in the intimidation of reality, by having more authority in the sanitarium near Baltimore, where the fiercest cannibal, the serial killer, this envoy of darkness, Hannibal, is held captive.

But the prisoner escapes through a very fine psychiatric trick, leaving Frederick Chilton speechless. Moreover, Hannibal is in the mood to invite his friend to "dinner", thus seeking to induce the idea of true superiority to his favorite victim. Frederick Chilton's enlightened theory of consciousness is no longer able to capture the new psychic elements that could tame his soul and moral attitude. The worst fear, the worst nightmare begins to haunt him harshly.

Leadership: Can you avoid becoming a prisoner of your own mental projections without being overwhelmed by an external threat that tests your own weaknesses?

The doctor is completely lost, his spiritual condition being conditioned by future provisions, without the support of the will power to see further from the present moment. It is known how hard the psychiatrists change their views, but in the case of Frederick Chilton, every whiff of a sparrow is transformed into the sound of the wing-beating of a black, fierce, hungry eagle approaching him at full speed, ready to tear his heart out from his chest.

Here's what we need to keep in mind: You can't captivate someone's attention unless you differ from him by courage or cowardice.

A pigeon that believes itself to be an eagle begins to fly chaotically to exhaustion when the true eagle hovers over it. Frederick Chilton is no longer attentive to things that relate to ideas in his spirit, hardly focusing his attention on things capable of being accomplished, completely oblivious of the predisposition for science. All he has to do is run desperately for help, knowing that no help can stop the bloody bullet of a maniacal psychology, which only Hannibal Lecter is able to pull close, without fail. In silence.

Is your efficiency in matters of performance when using leadership as a research instrument entailing a deep understanding of man conditioned by a series of inner loss? Do you want to give up on yourself and on the values proper to you only to embrace a new particular status – of authority? Do you listen to yourself before starting a conflict with yourself, because of the contradiction between the requirement for prudence and the requirement for expanding your potential?

To remain within the sphere of a wide range of side effects means to oppose any inner impulse for superiority, while expressing the desire to do things you normally do not want.

Before you expand your leader skills, before you dedicate yourself fully to the science of understanding man, be first an interior designer who knows how to build a lasting personality. Prepare yourself for a new way of being, without consuming yourself in vain for things that are not related to you, which will allow you to install in your life, without errors, new achievement and assertion particularities.

The term design, used in this sense, regards the unique creation of a character structure, as well as the production of positive values, which, by conditioning the moral and attitude profile, would help improve the general result in using leadership and practicing the science of persuasion.

Leadership: Do you perfect your evolution through the strange perspective of an abstract and ambiguous EXILE, in contrast to increasing the desire for control and possession of a victorious power?

When the runner has reached the end of his strength and feels he has to stop running, he can walk. But he continues to put even more effort than his body allows him to, he will jeopardize his life.

In the context of the science to successfully deal with high ambitions, by checking that power to transform with respect to the efficiency conditioned by substantially using leadership, the strong tendency to expand science or a personal intention manifested in a research study would justify only up to a point the efforts to develop and improve.

The effort that takes hold and overwhelms man, hard to control especially in the first stages of his development cycle, is consumed in the inner disputes towards the outside. Alone, he isolates in the attempt to renew himself professionally. In other words, the intensity of those activities to use and exploit "foreign" resources with the purpose of widening knowledge, which appear as a result of manipulating human subjects in a study of their reactions in front of decisional alternatives, is as bigger as the leader-researcher wants to collect more information and knowledge necessary in his scientific progress.

But in this way, leadership will be placed below the floating line. And by building a more and more fragile credibility and an inefficient authority, the resonance between the leader and other people doesn't occur anymore, even if the informational transfer radiant surface is expanded. Consequently, he doesn't have any other option that to complete his evolution through the strange perspective of an ambiguous and abstract exile. Away from everything that means a good path, away from any association with the people around, away from any occasion to socialize.

The possession of a victorious power is a penetration into the complex nature of the facts that are above the threshold of the emotions of experiencing the reality of others at the expense of your own puppet status in society. Put yourself in the place of others before placing yourself in the lead.

Before practicing leadership it's important to be aware of what you are in relationship with yourself while interacting with others around. Are you a defeated who received his punishment because he dared to transform into an "extremist"?

To complete your evolution through the strange perspective of an abstract and ambiguous EXILE means to decide on your competence to judge a cause that hinders the application of the control action on other people, emphasizing the exploration of values (morality, honesty, non-aggression, professional honorability) that helps you give up the exacerbated manifestation of power.

The abstract and ambiguous exile is in fact a retreat into your own freedom, independent of the mind, analyzing the depth of your thoughts and your psychic from the perspective of a therapist who observes his patterns and motivations alone, analyzing what was the set of circumstances that gave birth the situation you are in.

Leadership is the art of becoming someone else in the field of a philosophy of science that says that no one can be above the world, but only the equal of those not separated from perfection.

The Only Defeated In The Battle Of Minds is the man who manages to be more than what his condition, ideals and status ask of him, so that he is aligned to his condition of a performer in a field that conscience considers "integral", but one which vanity finds far too flexible, soft and loose.

 Note: The Silence of the Lambs (1991)

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-only-defeated-in-the-battle-of-minds-II.html

The Only One Defeated In The Battle Of Minds (I)

On November 18, 2013

Prepare for a new way of being, without consuming yourself in vain for things that are not related to you.

The habit of being informed about everything instinctively follows Dr. Frederick Chilton, leaving him to be tempted by the unexplored field of science. He enters the hard trial of a self-imposed, but thrilling exile because of the key character he has chosen for the study, in the person of Hannibal Lecter.

And this expression of the inner exile, funny, almost stable in itself, resounds against a huge intuitive-progressive increase of scientific dosage. Because the resultants of his relentless attention over Hannibal Lecter's stages, projected through the strange perspective of a harsh reasoning filter, have always had other meanings. It's hard to break away from a heavy thought when you know you're of a more fragile nature than your analytical model.

Whether it is complimentary lit through new human description parameters. Whether it benefits from the acceleration of the knowledge process by absorbing new aspects that come to complete the undertaken study, Chilton faces the same problem. He simply doesn't manage to define the man hiding behind a reality as complex as it is rebel against some intangible restrictions.

If we were to take this scientificus full of dilemmas and abstract research hypotheses, by comparison to his opposite, to Hannibal Lecter, with this intellect hidden behind glittering masks, we will detect an extraordinary incongruence. A difference in temperature between to lucid states, between two moods, between an energy mobilizing state and an energy saving state.

Chilton tries to find out all truths, until the supreme truth, if that could be even possible. While Hannibal, having acquired all knowledge about the human factor, remains passive in the game of withholding information.

Leadership: Do you find yourself in the image of a being ready to bow to a superiority that you cannot recognize as essential in You, in correspondence with the idea of a knowledge that cannot be separated from the complex nature of studying moral facts and intelligence?

The loss at the level of understanding the "Hannibal" phenomenon are the more intense, the more this light source goes further away from the exposure area. Namely, the smaller the emitted resonance frequency, the smaller the informational transfer resonance surface is.

Because Hannibal's capacity to reject any attempt to penetrate his functional territory depends on the number of insulation layers, on the permeability towards the unconventional tendencies used by doctor Chilton to extract the thought material, the life-giving substance.

Restless, Dr. Frederick Chilton practices, like a sport, something forbidden to him as profession – espionage, especially when he doesn't have access to the man's mind. As a spirit trapped between dilemmas, as prisoner of a substance he is unable to transcend, he tried to use someone else's eyes in order to look through the keyhole, to participate with someone else's ears to everything that Hannibal verbally creates in his little cell.

Chilton takes full advantage of the break necessary to peacefully and wholly think, in his attempt to build a new road on the fertile land of knowledge, where everyone plays "rough". But the periodic processes to "illicitly" obtain information and knowledge don't facilitate Hannibal's measurement and defining the superior precision standard corresponding to the advanced level of science and excellence in terms of research.

Because he who always tries to compare himself to another man, will eventually consume himself in the end.

Leadership: Can you deepen the complex nature of man as a moral being, without conditioning your psychological response to the sound of the "alarm" that your Ego gives in the act of "manifesting a false reality" in the immediate vicinity of the multiple hypostasis experience?

The politician, Harriet Woods said something that deserves to be engraved on a plaque and displayed on the Parliament frontispiece: "You can be proud of yourself even without stepping over someone. You can be victorious even without victims." Through these words she stated her discontent towards the harsh methods of exploiting leadership, which don't anchor in the limit point of the evolution towards performance. But she omitted the negative consequences, a much too meticulous incursion in the functionality perimeter, as well as a much too forced exploitation of his power resources could have over the leader.

As a leader, you can deteriorate your "inner power" of existence by an unjustified rise in authority over other individuals. If you don't have the possibility to stop in time the wave of scientific temptation, if you don't want to extinguish the fascination for understanding man and the infinity of his facets, then there's the risk of directing yourself towards a transformation field that doesn't stand in the face of excellence. Keeping you from playing fair and becoming your own master.

Dr. Frederick Chilton experiences two hypostases around Hannibal, which assaults his Ego and places him in a false reality, without realizing his moral and emotional particularities.

On the one hand, he posits a "vulnerable rule" hypostasis, which presents certain weaknesses at an intuitive level, because everything he comes to believe about himself and the outside world is only devoted to the importance he attaches to his own person. On the other hand, he tries to assume Hannibal's equal position in the field of psychiatry, without having the power to overload himself with the accusations he imputes to his model, so without having the power to overcome himself.

Leadership is every moment you experience in trying to be present in the lives of other people, with the risk of remaining a prisoner in a world that is constantly trying to make you someone else.

The Only One Defeated In The Battle Of Minds is the one who thinks of himself as a great judge of the human mind, soul and behavior. A mixture of good and evil – two forces of the same coin.

But who is the deciding party who determines the dominant side in the name of which a man acts? It's his own free will !

A leader can't substitute himself for this free will. And in this battle of the minds he will be defeated.

 Note: The Silence of the Lambs (1991)

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-only-defeated-in-the-battle-of-minds.html

The Only Indicator For The Value Of A Leader

On April 17, 2020

Rise to the level of superiority required by the complete leadership model, without descending to the level of inferiority required by the subtlety of a choice that transcends you as a possibility of achievement.

Writer Mika Waltari once wrote about Sultan Mehmed II, the conqueror of Constantinople:

I took from the history books the passages that described the most important battles of Hannibal and Caesar. I listened intently to every story of a siege, every description of a war machine tearing down walls. I studied their plans and drawings and compared them with the siege cars used by Alexander the Great. I had read all that had been written about it in Greek and Arabic on my own. I was not a pleasant student, because I used every opportunity to make fun of people's credulity and good intentions.

"The more I study history", said Sultan Mehmed, "the more I am surprised at the folly of the people." There is no lie that they are not ready to believe, as long as they are given enough assurances. Victory crowns the most infamous betrayal, and success is the only indicator of a leader's worth. The victorious leader is above the gods. Alexander called himself Zeus-Amon, and the stories also give him the name Bicorn. The first condition of power is a solid army, but a sovereign must also know how to organize his empire and be right as long as it fits with his objectives. He must build sustainable structures, protect scholars, historians and poets so that they can pass on the names of those who will come, and make sure that they mention only his victories, omitting the evil deeds that are prerequisites for the former. *

Leadership: Does everything under your influence operate in a context that allows you to set goals and achieve them, forming a perfect harmony between exterior and interior?

Believing in your own abilities to act effectively, trying to bring the significance of your events into history, is always learned from a relationship with something: the value between what you know you are in reality and what you foresee sees a whole world in you. What does that mean? It means that the privilege of being a leader can give meaning to life lived at a time when you must link the image of a vertical-spiritual aspiration with the image of a brilliant personality.

What you propose as an event of a personal history, leaving the imprint of your own vision over the centuries, is learned from a whole personal struggle, not only as a method of promoting the image of a winner. Your involvement in history must foster a supreme power that "rules" and not "leads", one that does not shape "an end", but grinds a new beginning.

And in relation to the reality of a higher power, I believe that the value of the quality of knowing how to get what you want, must be in accordance with the way you act in terms of significance to your membership as "immortales hominem" and "homo religious". What a triumph, isn't it?

To bring closer to your image of leader that ability to manage events in time and space, to start the construction of an image of the past made with the soul of a believer who knows that he has a precise duty to the great deed, this is tied to how one sees the world, life and those around, to reconnect with your inner being, to rediscover the immense potential you have: to give meaning to a continuously reinvented existence.

The leader is not an ordinary man, he is a man who makes a difference between people.

The leader is not only an example of victorious deeds for the present full of the unforeseen, but also represents the motivation to pass on what is beautiful in itself, that is to appreciate and favor the subtlety of such a choice that exceeds the possibilities of other people.

At the same time, the leader risks descending to the level of inferiority required by the subtlety of a choice that transcends him as a possibility of realization, when what he is able to accomplish does not respect the essential conviction of a good Christian: namely, that everything from him can be safely fulfilled or that everything he leaves behind will never collapse.

The goals you pursue can form a perfect harmony between the outside and the inside, when everything your personality can offer despite its (seductive) appearances is kept in the sphere of a positive approach to the Self from the perspective of divinity. Or, according to the writer Mihaela Malic, to remain situated in the Divine means not to give way to those who want to destabilize you. It also means, as the Lord Jesus said, to live on earth as in heaven, that is, to attain spiritual perfection, immortality, through power, wisdom, understanding, and knowledge.

Can you maintain yourself in the sphere of a positive approach to the Self from the perspective of the world that belongs to the being, and through the prism of the being that belongs to the world?

Your mission is to make sure that every event you organize as a "tribute to history" is a success, so that you get rid of any imperfections and enjoy every path you take in life. The ideal is to realize that that single event can be overcome only by facing what you feel and accepting the situation. If you change the event, so that it is linked to another project of your evolution, you must first know that, even if you do not trust people, you will always need them.

An entire personal promotion strategy is a construction of the image of the present made by an artist of the future.

The Only Indicator For The Value Of A Leader is the superiority with which he presents himself in the middle of the world, as if the whole world were the representation of a supreme deity from some times that always return in another version of reality, in another life story.

P.S. The only choice that surpasses a leader as a possibility of achievement is to become an ordinary person again. Or, as Sultan Mehmed said, success is the only indicator of a leader's worth. The victorious leader is above the gods.

* Note: Mika Waltari - Young Ioannis, Polirom Publishing House, 2020

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-only-indicator-for-the-value-of-a-leader.html

The Only One In Fault In His Fatal Incident

On October 30, 2012

Plead for your moral value before the "Honorable Court" of the Leadership without making yourself a partaker in the lawsuit sued against the man and life.

He could not define too well what was happening to him. He fell like a leaf at the feet of the assassin that was wandering the unknown, searching for a goal which would give a meaning to his life. Just a bad dream? Or the blackest nightmare?

He was just simple man, did not have enemies, only one loyal friend who was following him everywhere: oldness. And suddenly, this soul so great, so fearful of God, and so delicate by nature, crashed into the deepest abyss of misery. Lost beyond the edges of the understanding, in a place where it could not be seen anything, but that revealed clearly and threatening the irony of fate.

The assassin, sitting at the wheel of a stolen police car, gave him a notice to pull over. Then, he asked him politely to get off the car.

Poor man ! Could he raise once again the ball of youth in the net of the spectacular, of the dynamic and suspense, to direct an escape like in the movies, and disappear from under the stakeout of the false police officer? Such a risky move was necessary at that time. However, to such a disadvantaged of fate, he remained on the place.

Leadership: Do you bear the sign of a uniform and consistent personality in its essential tendencies, manifested in one demand: to be anti-choice on someone else's right to live?

The old man looked fearfully at the strange guy who nailed him with the look at only one step away, seeming more like a ghost just waiting to feast on his kindness, and then to disappear, à volatiliser sans laisser des traces.

Everything was so sinister, as if sinking into a vicious circle. Instantly turned by a hostile fate in the central protagonist of a chaotic cumulation of laws and his own preconceptions, whose contours he could not define, of the huge pyramid of life and reality.

He felt like someone, a force of the evil, oppressed him on the crown the whole burden of the feared world of the human society. A society justified to condemn its eldest members, in pain.

And suddenly the ghost, with the face of a Joker, from a wild impulse, the form of an obscure desire, continuous and brutal to harm anyone who got into his way, arms his weapon, the fatal instrument - an oxygen tube. Slowly approached the piston to the old man's head. And "Bang ! " triggers the jet of compressed air, by making a big hole in his skull. Leaving him without life.

All in this happening was reduced to a cold and sad convention. In which was set a kind of strict report between the contracting parties: between Christianity and totalitarianism, between the old age and eternity, between kindness and cruelty, between good and evil, between life and death, between Yes and No. *

Leadership: Do you continue to amaze by enhancing contrast between the essence of your own life experiences and the appearance of your meaning to establish causal relations between actions and events?

You do not have to be an expert to understand what is essential in leadership, and you do not have to be the president of a company to implement these things, these teachings definitive for your own personality.

The first step in the development of the leadership's science consists in learning to bypass the traps of some risky moves that are required at one time. Finding a refuge before a possible definitive decay, an assurance against some unforeseeable consequences is mandatory.

Define exactly what is happening to you, in relation to the world, events, and the surrounding reality. Without hiding in the shadow of an irreparable wandering, beyond the edges of understanding the reality and the human nature. In a place, where it cannot longer be seen anything, where it cannot longer be corrected anything, where you cannot fortify your immunity, in the place, where you cannot live than with the price of killing the freedom of to be good.

Can you give your leadership the status of a "judge" who pushes you to forgive your foolish acts and decisions, to release yourself from any connection with the requirements of an experimental motivation that can make your ascension difficult?

The leadership is maintained and renewed by a continuous return to your Ego, by the tendency of a bending towards virtue, by finding a way to retrieve yourself in relationship to the responsibility to free yourself from any moral constraint, hidden under the precious cover of a total renewal of personality.

Leadership envisages the contrast between essence and appearance of the man out of you, between of "to be" and "not to be" a review of your good and bad parts, in favor of the consciousness (your inner forum of judgment) to which you cannot hide anything. You can however be impeded by the only request of an experimental motivation that can make your ascension difficult: the desire to push your limits to the extremes of life, as if you are curious to know if you can commit an injustice without bearing the consequences.

The concept of leadership reflects the human quality that takes the cloak of renewal, of the man as a harmonious and balanced unity. Just as the doctor does not treat the patient's pain until he does not find its source of origin, so your actions cannot be successfully completed, until the knowledge, understanding and the mature thinking does not direct their "votes" towards a deep investigation of the human being's aspects.

If you do not become by yourself: first, a defendant, then a lawyer, then your own judge that would pronounce the cruel and irreversible sentence "Coupable ou non coupable" you will fall in the deep abyss of human decay.

Resignation is a manifestation of deep emotion that arises as a result of man's tendency to accept his fate determined by his moralizing side.

As a request for the revision of a preliminary decision submitted by a subtle and very powerful court, the leadership (targeted by your conscience, by the strength of your character, by your responsibility towards society and man) can take over the statute of a "judge" through a thorough examination of those vulnerabilities or irregularities which make you improper with the quality of a human model. Nevertheless, he must not be decided before the new configuration of your personality is fixed.

Moreover, this attempt to raise your leadership to the rank of a judge that is known how difficult it is, does not need to tilt in the opposite direction of your Ego.

The joy of victory without humiliating, without stopping the condition of man to build his own destiny, is a struggle on behalf of the right to life that demands a solid spiritual strengthening, carried on the plan of a reality which can save little by little, its most sensitive side: the concept of non-duality.

Have you become the central protagonist of a chaotic cumulation of laws, preconceptions, whose contours you cannot define? Is your leadership reduced to a cold and sad convention, which provides reducing the "man" into a slave, a passive member of the society? How long can maintain your leadership the statute of a "judge"?

Plead for your moral value before the "Honorable Court" of the Leadership without making yourself a partaker in the lawsuit sued against the man and life.

The Only One In Fault In His Fatal Incident brings to the fore that paralysis of the will, the inability to react in front of some situations of the moment. A leap into the unknown, into a new state, into another kind of "to be" that if you do not make it according to a positive or constructive nature impulse, you risk losing the carriage reserved exclusively for those who have completed their leadership, and assumed their mission of leaders.

 Note: "No Country for Old Men (2007)"

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-only-one-in-fault-in-his-fatal-incident.html

The Organic Unity Between Form And Content

On June 18, 2014

Free your constructive abilities from the limitations empire imposed by the conventional stylistic landmarks, by designing a new science based on the interpretation of its content.

The novelty of the movie "Strike" is both in theme novelty, but also in its form of expression. At the same time, and then often, an arbitrary separation is practiced between the content innovation and the form "Strike" represented.

It is often separately mentioned that this movie was the first bringing up to the screen the class struggle, and presented for the first time the people as hero of the event, on the one hand, and that "Strike" brought new solutions for cinematic expression, on the other hand. Even the controversy of that time, revolving around the movie and actually continued to this day, is based on this arbitrary segmentation of an organic unity between form and content.

*In his intervention to the discussion, the great director Eisenstein signaled the anomaly and added, despite his critics, that in fact, "the form proved to be more revolutionary than the content". For Eisenstein, the new form was expression, materialization of a new concept, a new approach to phenomena, so a new ideology, while formal innovation was born from the novelty of content. Because, as he said, the locomotive was not created by revolutionizing carriage forms, but by a technical understanding of the new discovery, that of the manifestation form of the energy contained in the steam." **

Leadership: Can you perform an upgrade or a reset of science without compromising the stability of its manifestation form?

The gradual passing from research problems outlined theoretically and solved practically, by implementing new concepts, to the reconstruction of a scientific work by choice and improving good ideas, makes the whole approach of assuming personal development efforts to shape a direction of professional achievement to be materialize in an imposing building.

Research is a tool with which one can "circulate" on the road of knowledge and art. It fulfils a specific task in the experience construction and organization, by excellence one of substance: release of constructive abilities from the limitations empire imposed by the conventional stylistic landmarks.

The question "When will you be able to realize what you can no longer realize?" is, actually, the result of observing a reality that has not yet been overcome, a continuation of attempts to articulate formulas impossible to realize, and to place under control the fundamentals of science. If you compromise the stability of the manifestation form of science by poor associations of fundamentals and new creative elements, then you will be able to realize only a modest update, which does not change the value of the final product.

Seeking to discover the treasures of science, but above all, to understand the complications and difficulties of integrating a new ideology into a cinematic expression, without changing the paradigm of cinema thinking or the way you perceive and interpret the answer to its questions, is a work of conception that requires creativity.

Leadership: Do you adjust your value of thinking in the "advanced" direction, towards designing a science that meets all requirements of an inspired vision?

Maintaining the performance area, where science and art form a coherent, clear and unitary system, adjusting the value of thinking in the "advanced" direction through creative and innovative activities, complements the discovery fund necessary for supporting leadership. Always, the "dialogue" between research, practice and production of new scientific perspectives, applying theoretical results at the level of principles and archetypes, can become effective through form-content ratio.

While "content" maintains high quality science parameters by integrating innovation into leadership, "form" is an expression of the need for content consumption, which creates the convenient solution for a powerful statement: uniqueness. Or, as the great director Eisenstein said, the new form is expression, the materialization of a new concept, of a new way to approach phenomena, so a new ideology, while formal innovation is born from content novelty.

Leadership occurs when "form" is proving more revolutionary than the content.

Science is manifested primarily as a production factor of discoveries. Rather than analyzing deeper something that you obviously could not properly analyze from the first time, you should better change your vision to shape science by introducing new forms of expression that highlight and amplify the essence of the content.

Do not forget that the locomotive was not created by revolutionizing carriage forms, but by a technical understanding of the new discovery, that of the manifestation form of the energy contained in the steam.

The organic unity between form and content designates that unity of thought and ways of action, based on generally accepted laws, but at the same time based on a novel interpretation of their content. The ascent on the scale of values and separating oneself from non-constructive diversity existing simultaneously requires a modern and special vision, like a unique and inimitable maneuver of approach.

 Note: Ion Barna -Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-organic-unity-between-form-and-content.html

The Original Signature Of The Artist

On August 17, 2018

Whatever the value given to you by time and the school of life, the one who has to lose is one who cannot afford to connect to you.

I would sometimes like to be able to remain there forever, in that fascinating world of art guided by the lively spirit of incendiary prose, as resounding as the echo of a whisper of a clam that is heard in the soul over time. A world in which I can just be myself, floating in a great sea of ideas related to the efforts to increase the probability of connecting to something above myself in the conditions of an experience from which I have a lot to learn.

The expressiveness of words is not free if I do not complete a science, a style, a theory, because it addresses less to the abandoned soul in favor of unleashed fantasies. That is why I regret to understand that art retains a "miss" variant, that which is marked by "it couldn't be" because of the meanings resulting from the comparisons with the states of things of a world in an eternal composition and disillusionment.

The faithful representation and impartial, almost mechanical, monitoring of reality, with a certain openness to the most varied aspects of the human spirit, can only be undertaken by the literature on every page written admirably with the natural elegance of the artist who gains his uniqueness through the act of creation dominated by elements of the language characteristic of fiction.

Perhaps this detail would not go beyond the meaning of a coincidence unless I had to insert into a personal note the new record of a world that disappears in some sort of crying in the chests of those who can keep a living memory of me. The sincerity of the artist is an adornment of expression through different forms and methods, a particular case of using the term "similar" in a chromatic universe obtained by overlapping and combining inspirational matter.

Leadership: Can you express the expressiveness of a knowledge experience through the ability to forcefully convey the ideas and feelings of a literary who interprets everything through the infusion of artistic culture?

In a sense, feeling touched by that inspiration characteristic of artists who intensely interpret the most striking aspects of reality, attracted by both the "decorative" treatment of a less explored creation area, I can easily integrate myself in the world I experience in my particular form of seeing beyond what is "seen". That is why we landed in the 3D of a mysterious and imaginative space.

I have not yet decided what role to give to the character in this space.

The effect of fullness and the effect of emptiness, the beautiful and the ugly, the vital movements of the phenomena and the emotional states of the brain, shortly a small distance between the edges of a sphere of contrasts, can immortalize a moment of significance given to the novelty of an expression felt by readers in a sentimental background that does not seem to be real unless we take into account everything that can be seen in the perspective of a creative space of art and culture.

The sensible basis of literary construction, supported by a play of interactions and radiant neighborhoods of totality – a matrix generating mystery, suggestion and symbolic matrix, in a seemingly temporary art, can be attributed to the craft of painting that requires the full mastery of composition. I feel as if I'm gripping a bright circle whose center is everywhere, and the circumference nowhere. This aspect is part of the compositional laws.

The expressiveness of a knowledge experience impresses by the ability to forcefully transmit the ideas and feelings of a literary who interprets everything through the infusion of artistic culture that brings it to the point where everything is of an effervescent naturalness.

Leadership: Do you contribute to fulfilling the potential of latent expressiveness in constructing the limits of interpretation of an art that addresses only those who are not "a very rare content entity"?

Someone asked me an interesting question the other day, being inspired by the belief of the existence of a superior power of reasoning found in my works:

"Mr. Fântânaru, do you not fear that there will be someone else who will surpass you in what regards the intrinsic aspects of knowledge in correlation to the meanings that the philosophy of art attributes to its fundamental words: "literary aesthetics and hermeneutics"?

I responded with the enlightenment the painter experiences when he touches the white canvas with the most beautiful of colors in order to render a perfect, unrepeatable moment:

"First of all, I will never fear former students / A+ students, well-dressed individuals or those in different leadership positions. They are surpassed by the limits of interpretation of art, they are defeated as Goliath in a single small and insignificant blow by David. Great knowledge in the art world does not tolerate at all the height or conformism.

But I would be afraid of that faded guy that no one sees, the one you sometimes see talking to himself, but who jogs every night, during any type of weather."

This is where the novelty will come from in the future, from the knowledge that no one imagines that it will ever be possible, and from that experience of life that passes as a banality, a fact that does not interest anyone.

In leadership, one vision stands forever: Whatever the value given to you by time and the school of life, one who has to lose is one who cannot afford to connect with you.

Leadership, as a component part of the art that carries the possibility of treating less explored areas of creativity, must have the possibility of developing a learned knowledge from a life experience that is read from the angle of a recipe that does not deny your visibility and beliefs.

The Original Signature Of The Artist is seen in the mood with which he approaches the world of cohesion in the relationship between expressiveness and visibility, impressing with the liveliness of his description, with the skill of building his narrative, bringing it gradually to a majestic climax.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-original-signature-of-the-artist.html

The Original Version Of A Bizarre Creation

On July 08, 2014

Continue to leave your mark upon the evolution of leadership, by introducing a constructive development rhythm in everything that seconds the course of the possibilities to stimulate creation.

Eisenstein's vision is hallucinating and overwhelming. Just like thinking. In his movies, he often uses visual images. Shapeless. With sound. Synchronized or not synchronized. Either sound images, objectively pictured sounds... A passionate discontinuous speech. Nothing else than nouns. Or only verbs. Then interjections. With zigzags, meaningless forms spinning in synch with them. Visual images in a hurry, over a complete silence. Then chained with polyphonic sounds. Then polyphonic images. Then both together. Then interlaced in the exterior development of action, then the interlaced elements of the exterior action introduced in the inner monologue.

The great director Eisenstein admits that James Joyce's literature seems bizarre for the "ordinary reader", because the writer breaks the fundamental patterns of literature. That is the reason why he thought he should do the same thing with respect to films. Of course, Joyce understood him. Although almost completely blind, he wishes to see the fragments from the movies "Potemkin" and "October".

Discussions with Eisenstein impress Joyce so much; he will confess to a friend that if ever "Ulysses" should be turned into a movie, he sees only two people able to do it: W. Ruttman or Eisenstein. *

Leadership: Is the performance and the power of your creation given by a reorganizing thinking that aims to reflect as accurately as possible the presence of a uniqueness in terms of topics addressed and means of expression?

The performance and impact of creation are given by what I understand through the notion of "reorganizing thinking". A way to grow personal value by using some specific methods to stimulate creativity. Respectively, a restructuring process of scientific knowledge and existent methodologies, necessary for a better understanding and quantification of functional relations between the percentage of combining some multiple creation variables and their possibility to arrange themselves in a certain independent way, in relation with an authority outside your own thinking.

Their impact and effects over your own material of building a perspective and a visual story, either through what they represent, either by the technical means used, are the main cards of the valuable growing results of personal creation.

But here leadership can suffer a certain deformity, a development "anomaly" because creation manifests itself from the outside in, but only while differentiating the identity acquired in advance. In this case, your professional achievement doesn't follow that clear, precise line, set in advance. But an irregular, sinuous line with peaks and valleys, with different density levels.

A reorganizing thinking that aims to reflect as accurately as possible the presence of a uniqueness in the subject matter and means of expression is a relationship between man and his surroundings, a succession of operations that lead to the revelation of some important aspects of reality, the possibility of seeing the truth and objectively tackling certain things. But sometimes, these involve a distraction, a turbulence in the remarkable force of suggestion of the expression placed between reality and story.

Can your leadership extend towards something more value, using the proportions of resources in relation with resources from the relation with an exterior authority?

This line that extends parallel with your main way of thinking, introducing a constructive development rhythm in everything that seconds the course of the possibilities to stimulate creation, is situated at the border between uniqueness and similitude, between uniformity and diversity.

This means to tend towards an imperfect perfection, to get stuck in a fake conflict that has an impact over the evolution to obtain, if we consider the valor dimension of results as a way, only superficially hiding the innovation area.

The artist-leader is more decided to leave his mark on the entire register of his creation experience, only if the journey of his line is the result of an understanding coordinated by a complexity of factors that break the patterns of a doctrine, which accentuates only positive changes in the structure of his science.

Leadership can't expand towards a plus of value, by using the proportions of resources offered by the relationship with an exterior authority, if the creation is accomplished by an excessive deformation of the essential you included in the coordinates of your science. Be careful from whom you draw inspiration, be careful what elements you take over from a superior authority, so that your creation doesn't transform in a product of variables that can't be kept under control.

Regarding technical direction, editing and the thematic of the script, a higher authority is a plenary display of a well-articulated thinking in the use of practical information, in ways permitted a certain set of circumstances that subsequently become true story frames.

The Original Version Of A Bizarre Creation highlights the particular way to constructively approach and develop leadership, a true creation of a reorganizing thinking with a particular impact over those that support and sustain originality in a creation, both in style and ideas.

* Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-original-version-of-a-bizarre-creation.html

The Outline Of An Eye Full Of Its Own Gaze

On June 16, 2020

Look at yourself as you are, as in a mirror in which you see someone else that no one can copy.

I look at myself incessantly in a magical, invigorating mirror, full of gratitude for the aesthetics reflected by the modesty of a bright, gentle, inviting face, so natural that anyone who sees my reflection would say that I have something of the appearance of a noble rose that rises above all worldly things, especially in the art of feeling and mediating human nature. The syncretism of a single being engages everything in the surrounding world, even when it is considered the "measure of all things" contained in the immediate beauty of a single rose.

And I look at myself with the eyes of an artist, gallant, emblematic, always different, so that sometimes I catch another face of the same rose through the aesthetics of a philosopher who leans on his life as a foreign destiny, looking for the contour that could fix his image in immortality. And yet when he looks at his true face, he remembers that he experienced the same identity crisis in other lives. It is easy for an artist to experience a divine world in a dimension of all the beauties of nature.

More and more insistent voices ring in my mind, endless treasures fill my imagination, a discharge of the feeling of admiration for beauty occurs in vivid colors on the soft canvas of an ancient easel. Again, I feel the comfort of a dream that creates its reality in the mirror of the destinies crossed at the crossroads between death and salvation, between immortality and enlightenment, being crossed by the desire to have the best of both worlds, artistic and scientific, private and public.

In this way I ensure my reflection in the mirror, by association with a fruit of nature. Sometimes it is better to enter the imaginary world full of secrets of a rose, with the generosity of a host who manages to exceed his own expectations, so that the dream that brings you closer to an uplifting destiny becomes reality in terms of reflecting a special connection with the pulse of nature, with its energy, with its simplicity, with its consciousness.

Leadership: Does the creation you experience concretely facilitate a deep understanding of a state and a vision that transcends reality, almost impossible to define from the perspective of a single form of artistic expression?

Art opens a spectacular window to that reality in which life is not limited to "surviving", but to trying to be different, something full of many spiritual meanings, being more than a simple primitive artistic impulse. If I could clearly see the miracle of an artistic manifestation of visual level, under the delicacy and modesty of a luminous face, in a composition capable of passing the test of time, my whole life would become a confession of faith in all states of mind that are fulfilled only on the surface of the canvas painted with great skill.

I am the artist, and the rose is the homage of the artist to the high idealism of his literary creation. Looking at the vigorous objectivity of a being who is both body and soul, unfolded before a much greater world, with the simple generosity with which the rose continues to make me partaker of divine heights, I take the time to define myself by the term Mainshiryerra, as the promise of a purely imaginary, illusory happiness.

Only one artistic form defines my art and personality: the revelation of an existence that transcends corporeality and the material. I am an artist whenever I change into a rose, delicate and uplifting like a good thought addressed to the dream of being as natural as possible in experience and feeling. Only then do the words of the writer Simona Popescu seemed relevant to me, those said in the novel "Juventus":

"I would have liked to write about the ages of so many ways we have gone through so far without realizing it, about those that bring us closer or separate us from who we are; about the inability to speak of yourself as a unitary being, about the horror that at any present time you are, in fact, only an intermediary, a forerunner; about the disgusting idea that you will one day become your own distant relative; about the humiliation of not knowing who you are and what you will be; and the horror of knowing who you are and what you will be and how long you are allowed to live."

Leadership: Can you look at yourself in a mirror and recognize yourself in completely new ways of being, following the formulation of a new vision of art and creation that can be passed on?

Otherwise, artists are, like obligatory anchors to approach the reality of things reflected in another dimension of existence where God, the endless creator of all things, is mirrored as the destiny of an uplifting art expressed in the form of a thought transposed into the plane of nature. They claim the right to live freely, in peace, more and more distinctly, the number of other worlds and Universes, all the more so as the level of spirituality that unites their dreams, ideals, destinies, is determined by enumerating comparisons with metaphorical value that make up the "Poetic" portrait of a literary work.

When I write these lines so delightful, receptive to beauty, to the poetry of a calm and sublime world that is part of the universe of a painting capable of speaking to the soul in a universal language, I am overwhelmed by the emotion that the rose "Double Delight" – evolved into a reflective vibration entity called "The inability to be a fact".

The artist is more than a man, more than an ordinary land, more than a fruit of nature, he is the shell of a soul freed from passions, immersed in the mystery of an imaginary world.

How much does the rose know about me, about me placed among other people, about me that is someone else when I am surrounded by colors; about me, the same self in another world, much more fantastic than any imagination could inspire? And if it knew my past, comparing me to the past of the whole world, to the history of a repeating world, to the world of an atypical being who is also one with God in the fullness of his attributes, could it recognize itself in me as a Creator of a quiet, balanced painting?

Dear reader. If you happen to come across a rose that smiles at you just like in a mirror where you can see yourself, smile at it just like when you look at yourself in the guise of an artist who feeds on the euphoria of creation. My vision is a projected image in the future of what my world will look like, close to that world of the spirit that lives in everything and all surrounding things.

Leadership must be received as a mirror in which you look with maximum sincerity at yourself, what you see as the reality of a dream transformation, subordinated to a vision that cuts a singular perspective in the world plan: the work of an Absolute Creator.

The Outline Of An Eye Full Of Its Own Gaze can be considered complete when it is made by an artist whose destiny embodies the spirit and essence of a rose captured in a moment of search for beauty in any fragment of life sprung out of nature.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-outline-of-an-eye-full-of-its-own-gaze.html

The Outpourings Of Creative Anxieties

On June 19, 2014

Keep up with initiatives to improve the processes of formation of creation, prioritizing the installation of all components of its "content."

The continuous searches during script writing – which, initially typed on a typewriter, contain numerous erasures, additions, alterations – prove, I believe, that crystallization in the maker's consciousness happened along the way as well. This explains, perhaps, why some of the notes may arise assumption that they were made after filming. While the essential elements are in the editing sheets, so they were thought of before, others will appear downright later in the film.

All of these findings, as well as many others that are pointless to detail here, shed light over how the film "Battleship Potemkin" was created. From the moment of Eisenstein's arrival in Odessa up until finishing the film, we see continuous searches, carried out in a fever of creation. A permanent creative anxiety that led master Eisenstein to the successive finding of a new solution. "Battleship Potemkin" was created in a state of creative incandescence with an apparent spontaneity. *

Leadership: Do you prove, under any conditions of improvisation, the strength to fight with the constitutional means of creation through a "Think Back" that has the power to crystallize a new form of fusion between subject and background?

In terms of building leadership that is in direct contact with the fertile ground for the transmission of theoretical and practical knowledge, we are often dealing with a relatively significant change of emphasis regarding the act and rationality of Creation. And here we are dealing with a new fusion between the subject and the background, meaning that what you want to highlight must have an impact at the level of vision, but it must also have resonance at the level of reception, approach and use of the means of achieving the interpretive and improvised creation.

The construction of a creation is based on continuous searches of new horizons, new arrangements and new supports of achieving objectives of individual performance. Here it must be considered the search of expressions of intellectuality (which ennobles the work of an artist) and their suggestion through both technique and the conceptual.

"Think Back" is the testimony of a fight that you fought long ago, with gathering and finding associative formulas for presenting and promoting art. Finding evidence that attests to the veracity of an art requires sustained efforts and thorough documentation, but the results are worth it.

The content of a creation is crystallized by numerous erasures, additions and modifications that prove a placement in the context of the passion of an initiatory, tumultuous and fruitful journey.

A work is often made from momentary improvisations and those of the addressed themes, in the process of identifying the significant elements that must be transmitted through the message. In fact, creation is based on a continuous back and forth between feelings, thoughts, emotions, ideas, connections, interpretations of "I want, I don't want" that twist around each other. Everything is part of the process of establishing new approaches and views on the implementation of a new version of "product."

In a sense, the view of the artist leader, which starts from the premise that the only way he can understand and support art is by seeing beyond the prejudices built over time, corresponds with the initiatives to improve the processes of producing creation.

Because you cannot make a mix and give stability to the forms of founding a science, rich in elements of a technical culture, essential to the proper functioning of the court authority to others, unless you give priority to searches of montage of all "content" components.

Leadership: Does your increase of authority in the sphere of creation imply new means of building fundamentals and concepts following the path of frequent concerns about your potentiality and your needs for knowledge and action?

The analysis of the concept of authority in the sphere of creation, but also the promotion of art of a particular and elevated resonance that establishes new forms of expression, crystallizes within the consciousness of the maker a certain formula of composition, an amount of errors called values, a new forming of the means of building fundamentals and concepts of major interest.

The priorities given to the means of creating and managing creation, in scientific representations, become more a matter of possibility rather than will. Two realities are present in the sphere of priorities: the reviewing of ideals and the renewal of all elements of knowledge, on the one hand, and the forms of learning and evaluation process on the other. And finding successful new benchmarks that outline the specifics of a particular professional role. That's only if you consider art as an expression of individual value.

Being a director means discovering a new way of expressing one's emotions through a creative way in which any combination of notions and realities is allowed.

The Outpourings Of Creative Anxieties highlight that feverish agitation of leaders, created because of the search of new means of producing and transmitting creation, respecting the conditions of implementation of new conceptions of quality and performance.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-outpourings-of-creative-anxieties.html

The Pain Of Mastery's Imperfection

On May 01, 2010

Whenever you will make a great step towards perfection, your soul will be put to a hard test.

One day, Mr. Selder, joyful and eager to see again master Dürer, invited him to his house. This one gladly accepted the invitation and made his appearance at the established time. You could see from the very beginning that the master was no longer the man he used to be, young, ambitious, with an extraordinary work power, with a wide and intuitive vision on the future, although he was still the most famous and talented drawer and painter in Germany.

His hands with long fingers, marked by the diluents and paints, betrayed his modest work, which he still practiced with pleasure and pride. By his aristocratic looks, by the way he talked, one could see that was a true thinker, a man gifted with much wisdom and very educated.

Master Eimer, that was also visiting Mr. Selder, together with him, hiding his embarrassment, started to speak in praise of him and to laud his art.

Dürer, a little bit ashamed, trying to smooth down their impetus, told them on a grave voice:

- Maybe I'm looking for perfection, that perfection only a straight line or a circle have, that is why I am never satisfied with half measures. A line wrongly drawn destroys my drawing and I must repeat it again and again forever, and I almost don't like my early works any more, although, at that time, I rode many times to Bologna in order to take perspective lessons. But perfection only exists in God. Everything earthly lacks something, that is why I feel the pain of my mastery's imperfection.

Leadership: Can you capture your baggage of knowledge from the distance of a creation that challenges your commitment to provide yourself an efficient experience of motivating the self?

Even complete people have sorrows, even they suffer. But their suffering, especially artists' suffering, most of the time, consists in their not being able to achieve perfection of even getting close to it, fearing more than anything that, one day, the sun of their greatness and splendor will die.

The fear from feeling humiliated and petty, especially at an advanced age, when they frequently make errors, gets ahold of their spirit, turns them into the prisoners of their own aspirations, not being able to control their own destinies. From being active, they molder, they lose the impulse that they once had to improve their performances, to accomplish their objectives, even though they are open-minded and spirited, and they fall into a state of melancholy, almost stunning, having their thoughts more and more scattered.

The more a man knows more and is more masterly, the more he is suffering.

The greatest fear of master Dürer, who, besides being gifted with an extraordinary artistic talent and a wide and deep vision on human nature, was that he would never rise to the level of his very large expectancies.

The more he knew, the more he learned, the more he wanted to be perfect in everything that he did. A circle, a line, should they not be perfectly drawn, it meant he had to take from the start all over again, disappointed, looking at himself with a critical eye, regretting, feeling tired, worried. If a spot of color or nuance didn't match the image he wanted to create, the painting would be considered a failure, meaning that he would take it from the start all over again, just like Sisyphus, in a new attempt, perhaps more fortunate.

Leadership: Can you live with the regret of the compromise of bearing the negative effects of an excess of perfection, and at the same time stay with the conviction that you have overcome a great weight that few can push?

The pain felt in the soul by the one who wants to achieve perfection when stumbling upon imperfection, when acknowledging that he doesn't rise to the height of his own expectations, prevents him from expressing himself, developing himself at maximum capacity, determining him to become more uncertain.

Such a man is ready to become the pray of sorrow, always carrying his pain in his heart, until what he tries to accomplish comes out perfectly. To make mistakes is a sin for a complete man, maybe not a deadly sin, but certainly one, which is not forgivable.

The great weight that few can push is to maximize your potential for re-use of the action in the pursuit of perfection.

And who may save a soul dominated by such a sin? Who could encourage, caress, and enliven a soul possessed by a relentless hunger for perfection, but a hunger always haunting him and that he cannot satisfy? Who is it and where is that wonderful angel who can energize the mind of a man crying for absolute perfection, bringing him back to normality?

Leadership: Can your bright successes be interpreted as an indication of limiting the potential of exploiting creative inspiration, and thus, lowering the pressure placed on maintaining a position of balance?

The more victories he registered, the greedier he became for power, and, at the same, any failure would throw him a step backward. He used to say for himself: "How could I lose a battle? I, Napoleon?" Then, angrily, somewhat bound by his own conscience, he cast again in the vortex of battle, with an impetus defying any limit, with a much more dynamic spirit, until he would win the victory, no matter the cost he would pay.

Pity that any bravery story has an ending, just as any art has delimitations and conventions. Napoléon's love for power and his inability to reach his goals produce a big pain in his soul. His poignant inner suffering, greatly because of his endless hunger of being the absolute master of Europe and, if possible, the entire world, have produced and increased his illness.

Leadership: How does your relationship with morality affect the relationship between "achieved successes" and "initial claims of having creative freedom"?

People with a very strong will, who devote their entire life to one ideal - the perfection, seek to be perfect in everything they do, in everything they seek. And I personally believe that it is every person's duty to try to be the best in his field of activity. But every high aim corresponds to an intense inner unrest. Whenever somebody will make a great step towards perfection, his soul will be put to a hard test.

Of course, great leaders linger for perfection, raising the bar of their standards higher and higher and, of course, they enforce it to the people on their team. Setting an accelerated and intense pace may have beneficial effects only within the collectives made up of people with the same objectives, the same training and same quality standards (and not only). But if they are not identical to the "prototype" called leader, they may tear down, both them and their leader.

True perfection means keeping in balance what concerns your will and motivation of being consistent in managing the asset called: self-esteem.

As an internet user had well put: "Self-esteem is the way we evaluate ourselves in relation to our own expectations and with others, being directly proportional to the awareness of our own value."

Conclusion: A man who wants to ascend his work to the level of art, a man seeking perfection in everything he does, must adjust his level of standards, his pace and intensity of activities, otherwise he will have a feeling of frustration and even guilt when he will find that he still has imperfections or that he doesn't have the possibility of reaching his own standards.

Are you honest and objective enough regarding the ability to achieve very high standards?

 Note: Mika Waltari - Mikael Karvajalka, Editura Polirom, 2005.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-pain-of-mastery-s-imperfection.html

The Pain That Looks Towards The Stars

On March 03, 2014

Come closer to what makes a man "tick", keeping into account those convictions regarding his capacity to ignore or accept negative realities.

Bishop Myriel could have been called anytime at the bed of sick or dying people. He knew that was his most important duty and his true purpose. The families of the widows and orphans didn't need to call him. He went by himself. He knew to sit and keep quiet for a long time next to the man who had lost his beloved wife, next to the mother who had lost his child. The same as he knew how to keep quiet, he knew when to speak. A wonderful consolation !

He didn't try to soothe pain through forgiveness, but to elevate it and crown it through hope. He would say: "Beware when you think about the dearly departed. Do not think about what rottenest. Look straight forward. You will see the living light of your dearly departed glowing on the sky."

He knew the benefactions of faith. He tried to give advice and soothe a man caught in disbelief by pointing towards someone who has resigned. He tried to transform the pain that looks towards the grave, showing him the pain that looks towards the stars. *

Leadership: Can you accelerate a man's access to a superior form of "revelation and enlightenment" by underestimating the functional authority that possesses him?

Are you trying to show that you can collect together other situation approaches than the participative ones in the development of man? How would it be, as leader, to try and accelerate the access of man towards a superior status "forgetting" himself, underestimating the functional authority that possesses him?

The spiritual guide is a man is a total man who knows and uses the instruments of science (philosophical, sociological, theological), who shaped his character and personality by cultivating values such as: truth, good, ethics, peace of mind. He can be analyzed through a demonstration of attachment to a certain form of spirituality that puts it in the challenge of finding joy and motivation away from the agitation of social life, thus manifesting itself in a nonconflictual way with oneself and with others, motivating him to adopt a weighted and balanced thinking style.

You also can accelerate people's access to a superior form of "revelation and enlightenment", if you offer for exploration that part of the world they neglect or are not aware of as an act of creative meditation, as an act of unity with nature, as an act of piety, as an act of kinship with one's self and as an act of kinship with the Creator. Leadership must first be seen as a form of spiritual development.

The functional authority that possess such a man is given by the duty that he assumes entirely: to contribute to strengthening the role of an intermediary between equilibrium and extremes. He is ready to fight constantly for the development of full consciousness that is placed in relation to an external entity, with a presence of the immutable, to reveal the divinity surrounding him.

Spirituality is the means by which you can know your higher self, interacting not with the laws of perfection, but with the permanence of a possible state of calm and inner silence meant to ease the forgetting of any suffering.

The interesting fact for the future of leadership is that there will be no discussion about promoting a man that lacks spirituality and faith in a happy peaceful normality, in terms of either-or, but in terms of and-and. Which means you have to be a realist and a visionary, understanding and supporting, and a guide in the same time.

You can't always limit a man's reality, but you can try to change his existential status from "nonsen" to a certain level of perceptiveness. To place his thought, feeling and suffering reference frames in a different orientation. For leadership to have a soothing effect on spiritual pains, taking into consideration the dimension of your involvement in other people's life, it's not enough to try and bring to light that infinite beauty and love – which represents the foundation of life and exists in each of us.

But you have to build a healthy psychic foundation, get close to what makes man "tick", taking into account those beliefs about his ability to ignore or accept negative realities. As is clear from the practices of Bishop Myriel, the blessing of living in the agreement and the integration of a realistic and positive spirituality, but above all the integration of a new vision on the act of "healing" man, viewed as a unitary whole, cancels the individual fragmentation of his nature.

Leadership: Are you trying to diminish the effected connected to sensitive phenomena that take place inside misdirected "living systems", regarding how you react to what's happening to you?

We have the strength to be aware of every situation that other people come across. We can choose what we do further so that they can appreciate more and remember their worth. We can assert our emotions in order for them to feel better in their skin, accept themselves, develop themselves both mentally and emotionally and reach their maximum potential. We can bring them back to a level of self-contempt that makes their life easier. Only in this way we can grow new aspirations from the seeds of our achievements.

All these aspects of our understanding and positive influence on a man, controlling his existence and needs in life strengthen and depend on each other. They form a painting full of vibration that represents our authentic self – who we truly are in situations where we feel that the others lose control over their lives.

Are you trying to make your way through the complex spiritual life twists and turns of the people around you?

Living systems are units of thought supplemented by assemblies of states, processes and the psychological characteristics peculiar to each individual, significant by their organization in a position of authority. They are compatible with the meaning that we give to the puzzling phenomena so much nowadays: ecstasy, insight, revelation, sensitivity to pain, healing effects produced by what is called more or less "faith".

If these systems are not oriented towards an entity of a higher order, man loses his ability to neutralize the transition from wakefulness to self-denial.

Leadership: What feeling do you convey when the beneficiaries of some negative experiences insistently demand an "invoice" for the guarantee of a new personal stability?

Think about this question: Who are you when you notice the inappropriate operation of the human existential apparatus? Are you a clockmaker who tries to fix the mechanism of human nature with patience, strictness and precision? Do you try to reassemble those pieces that don't match their transformation dimensions that integrate perfectly only in the background of a barren reality, condensed in one situation or the other?

Let's remember what Viorica Ardeleanu used to say: "Watch-making is taught daily. It happened to me many times that someone brought me a clock that I have never seen before, but that looked similar to others somehow. I created connections between the other models that I managed to fix and the clocks I saw for the first time. I fixed clocks with a golden cover, but also simpler clocks."

One of the major requirements of maturation and personal development is the adoption of the fundamental attitude of the one practicing the discipline of thought and feeling as a form of reconciliation of spirit with the power of thought of the spirit as a form of regaining the inner balance as a form of normalization and purification of the state of mind.

The Pain That Looks Towards The Stars is all about those dark and hidden sides of your personality that if you can't manage to understand and eliminate through meditation and peace of mind, you will find your foundation only in hesitation, embarrassment in your relationship with others and under-appreciation of your own self.

 Note: Victor Hugo - Les miserables ;

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-pain-that-looks-towards-the-stars.html

The Painting In Which I Have Captured Your Portrait

On November 03, 2018

Learn to make use of a mix of art and decor, by guaranteeing the authenticity of your own confessions.

Her memory preserves the exact mark of every single thing, from the artistic to the aesthetic, vis-à-vis everything that surrounds her, so she does not miss any detail, no banality, no episode experienced in her presence. It never happens to her, like writers who tell their story sensitively but captivating, to hesitate for too long or to decide too quickly in the way they make a state of affairs in the event of an unpredictable conjuncture. It's just her. Everywhere and in any context.

Usually, when you try to characterize someone you omit to mention their name, but you always assign them a fictitious identity that can support the reasoning based on the finitude of a closed world between the macrocosm and the microcosm. Somehow, I feel as if I have to embrace a star that illuminates the dark night sky only, without expecting anything in return other than the thrill of living in which she becomes invisible. And if I try to characterize in one word the young, beautiful and mysterious young lady, I would struggle with the pleasure of taking possession of what I love, without getting what I'm fighting for.

She seems to benefit from all the strengths of a master actor in non-verbal theater art. I am the skilled magician of the words made to rhyme with the voice of a demiurge who knows the language of silence.

The image of the reality focused on the experience of looking into yourself depends on the white background surplus that you cannot highlight in a painting of great refinement.

If I were to portray the traits of her personality beyond the immortality of a material world in the universe of human passages, as a kind of representation of an alternative reality, I would probably wreak havoc in a surrealistic collage of images seen only through the kaleidoscope of a century of loneliness. Garcia Marquez would envy my literary style for the strange play of the plausible and surrealistic associations that only allow for the rest of a reading to identify a space strongly impregnated with symbolism. A symbolism placed on a demiurge who, absorbed in himself, endlessly shapes ever deeper universes.

With a glance, she tries to discover all my thoughts, judging me coldly, as a lawyer, but that only gives me a better position in the midst of trying to find a secret geometry in the nature of an intelligent volitional intervention that fascinated creators over time. The particular form of reason that can be attributed to it under the unpredictable sign of a destiny reconstituted in imagination belongs to the skill of creating a complex world illustrated by the surplus of the power of coloring some sequences born of the mystery of a challenging and risky game: "who manipulates who".

A young and beautiful girl is a reality that is found in an eternal dream, a parallel existence in my writings, an appreciation of the past, and no indication of the future, especially when by consulting art an attempted is made to penetrated into the literature of a world that is revealed in the formula of the agglomeration of fine details. I still have a lot to learn about life, even more about art, especially if I would imagine myself searching the mind of a girl enclosed in a representation of a different reality, which seems to send out a triumphal cry out of the heart: "I admire you, but only from far up ! "

Leadership: Can you engage in a harsh action of overturning appearances beyond perception, in relation to deepening into a unique painting from which the main figure stands out?

It is never the case that she forgets something without suspended herself in an imaginary space. She was a tough, cold girl in the old days, but you could easily get in her good graces as soon as you tickled her pride. I would like to be more lenient now. Often, reality is a deepening in an original painting from which the main figure stands out. I'm not the way you imagined, but you're just the way I imagined. Have I not arranged them well? I have not given due importance to an expression of things that benefit the quality of your power to share intrinsic knowledge? Know, dear lady, that art means to detach yourself from the fund of a composition that resembles another.

The depth of symbolic content lends itself to the use of a varied chromatic field, made up of red, orange, yellow and purple, which increases the efficiency of intellectual activity and influences the search for novelty satisfaction. As a side note, this kind of association between the beauty of the model, the enigmas of a forgotten book and the symbolic space of a work with metaphysical depth, has its historical precedent in the technique of cubist collage that captures the momentary state of things, unlike the futuristic current that captures their movement.

She continues to believe in me, through direct intuition, that I will be able to make the core of a deep-seated creation only by increasing the intensity of the colors obtained by direct contact with the environment, with different images and natural objects. At the same time, the expression of her face seems literally the opposite of the impression I had about her. Seems like she's devising a way through which everyday objects take the form of people, which she would like to lead on a permanent journey into enigmatic realms full of magic and detective plots. Probably, my dear, you have forgotten who the creator is and who the viewer is.

Leadership: You benefit from the perceptual availability of the eye to move successively from one vision to another on the background of the same composition, knowing that on the back of the painting hides another painting?

By triggering positive affective feelings due to the appreciation with which I have been overwhelmed many times, I succeeded in achieving a natural empathy stemming from the impulse of the desire to conceal a bit of my arrogance and attitude of superiority in front of a being that is just barely approaching that savoir faire of reading art. I gave her the impression that I still have a lot to learn before I get creative in the true sense of the word. Clearly, I acted modestly, but behind the modesty lies the shadow of an eternal glory.

I will always admire you in many ways, you are attractive, intelligent, you know how to appreciate the man who always has back wind on his sail. But out of the shadow of a secret look, if I try to bring you a delight of the senses through a coloration of eyes, from the serene purity of a summer morning to the gentleness of an autumn sunset, I would probably not be able to reproduce the real image of what is presence or lack thereof, calling or refusal, perspective or opacity, innocence or mistake, proximity or distance. Reality gets another look in the angel-winged painted man in a chromatic gamut dominated by browns and bright orange.

Art is the detailed version of a solemn world defined by feeling. The brush full of the meaning of a story where everything seems miraculous as long as everything seems full of meaning, renewed from eye to soul, becomes enriched with a feeling of happiness of a completely different nature. A beautiful young woman has the gift of suggesting a series of passionate associations, a formula that tells my imagination that I can go against the current. Which does not tire her, it stimulates her. Clearly, seduction is the beginning of an adventure where things become interesting.

But she lacks the boldness of the painter who knows how to turn a boring topic into an interesting one. She does not at all fight to own what she truly loves, she is led by a sort of cowardice covered by pride, a collage of sensibilities that do not advance to virtue. Something, however, gives her the necessary moment to enjoy the little things, fine pleasures, without thinking that things could be different, by their very own power to associate or to substitute themselves. The art of conquering a woman consists in abandoning all the things she controls.

I will not ever know you too well, I will never be able to save you from the depths of a heart devoid of content, but intuition tells me that you are part of my universe. Because you will never be able to leave the painting in which I have captured your portrait.

Leadership is the portrait you masterfully craft to define someone's profile, yet leaving a small white background circle that occupies the forefront of a world never known to the fullest.

The Painting In Which I Captured Your Portrait can best be found in my heart, who never knew the regret of knowing you, but rather the regret that I could not render you in a more expressive, clearer and more transparent manner.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-painting-in-which-I-have-captured-your-portrait.html

The Parable Of David's True Faith

On March 02, 2022

Have so much confidence in yourself so that your confidence will continue the story of an unbroken destiny. From confidence to destiny, your performance is measured !

Around the time when I was in the third grade, I saw a video of the battle of David and Goliath, an example of true faith. I really liked it. First, because I like movies about winners, and second, because I've always been a winner. And I don't like to lose. Well, Goliath was a huge Philistine warrior, famous for hand-to-hand combat, about four meters tall, victorious in all his battles. David, on the other hand, was thin, of medium stature, hadn't taken part in any battles, but he knew how to shoot slingshots better than anyone.

Everyone warned David to be careful, because he has no chance of defeating the great Goliath. But more important is what David felt in his soul, ignoring the repeated warnings of others. The seed of faith and holiness planted in his soul by God manifested itself as a powerful impetus to accomplish the impossible: "Goliath is so huge that I simply can't miss him with my slingshot ! "

This is a very valuable lesson. You'll be able to beat anyone who thinks he's BIG, if you have the right slingshot. And what is the deadliest slingshot in the world now, in the 21st century? Well, TECHNOLOGY is the slingshot that can bring down any Giant, any mountain and any obstacle !

Okay, but you might be wondering: there's room for everyone. Why win one or the other? One answer to this question: because there will always have to be a David capable of creating a distance between people endowed with enormous faith, and those pranksters, false performers, who make an image and a status of "Almighty" just as Goliath considered himself.

There are certainly too many like Goliath who do not deserve to be considered more than they really are. It's time for the slingshot to have its due effect and, if possible, the effect to be as quick and as powerful as possible.

Leadership: Can you fulfill your mission to be strong, in terms of understanding a high-impact image and its meanings that can be deduced from the relationship between what is hereditary and what ennobles you?

A new David will appear with each generation, one whose sole purpose is to remind those like Goliath how weak and helpless they really are. The world will remember those like David, the preachers of the true faith, not the false leaders or the false apostles...

Perhaps in my genealogy there is a distant kinship with David, despite the fact that he was younger when he committed the immortal and glorious deed. Or perhaps, in order to sustain faith in an incarnate God, one needs someone less "huge" to stand out by those special deeds that only faith can accomplish.

Indeed, every man chosen by God is a unique individual, endowed with a certain force of knowledge and having a unique purpose in life: to highlight the result of a supreme will, of a directed faith, with precise purposes. From this perspective, a man of great faith is an original, but also unpredictable, especially through the results obtained: unexpected or unusual.

The point of view of writer Mark Fisher is revealing: "In each of us there is a small voice, which never dies, surviving even in the harshest conditions. It shyly whispers in our ears that the image we project publicly is false and that our true personality remains hidden and unrepresented. The consequences of self-denial and refusal to give the world our best are inevitably frustration and sadness."

Perhaps this is also the significance of the biblical theme of the struggle between David and Goliath: to bear in mind the lofty purpose of keeping the candle of faith burning in the context of a changing world, or in the context of the reorganization of society, creating the premises for a differentiation between those who have access to divine grace (which transforms character), and those who have no access. When you refer to the status of "conqueror by faith", you are actually referring to the power of divine truth, which says: "The Holy Spirit is meant to strengthen each one of us."

Leadership: Can you manifest a special attachment to a state of consciousness that goes beyond the limits of the normal media act and requires an act of faith, invoking the prediction of an event that triggers new creative energies?

Mindset is a set of perceptions or beliefs that people have about themselves. In my case, I knew that if I wanted to be victorious in any battle, with a good chance of overcoming a mountain, to fight idolatry and false faith, I would have to be different from others, to be myself and not be afraid of anything. Most importantly, I don't have to be afraid to display my true personality in a world where heroes live dramas of soul imbalance, and are represented only in images that tell stories. By the way, I learned to observe everything very carefully, and from time to time isolating myself from the rest of the world, I learned to be honest with myself, to learn more about who I really am.

Goliath is a metaphor for the darkness of unbelief or idolatry, a landmark of how a charade's identity crisis works that perpetuates incompetence, creating a great breach in the wall of strong values on which an orderly society is based. Values such as honesty, dignity, temperance, respect, order, perseverance, will, faith in God. And if I were to consider the hypothesis of a differentiation between tolerance centered on the relativity of values, and tolerance associated primarily with the valorization of equality, without underestimating the importance of an inner transformation, I would add that only a precise intention doubled by a spiritual attachment can lead to a positive result.

I understood that transformation must always take place inside, by forming a clear and precise picture of my ambitions and desires (aimed at achieving high performance). But that is not enough to make a difference. At the same time, I must go into the smallest details regarding the exercise of major competencies and interventionist acts to accelerate the progress of science, in order to promote a new vision of the future.

By no means do I want to affirm myself by exerting certain acts of constraint at the level of acceptance of an image that doesn't even come close to honesty, dignity or greatness.

Great people are the ones who, despite having nothing, manage to achieve amazing results. Little people are the ones who have everything, but can't do anything extraordinary.

Of course, in support of my actions, I have often taken this imperative into account: "When you have a real intention, 90% of possible obstacles tend to go away on their own, and the other 10 percent can be easily controlled with the tools at your disposal. The power of intention is almost unlimited."

The latter is also the conclusion of the complicated demonstration of power in which, slowly, I inscribed my intentions to communicate a spiritual message: "A man of great faith is a man who has given himself with great passion to science and art, to support innovation and its wide dissemination throughout a demonstration of authority in the field."

Leadership is your demonstration of power done by invading a territory that is accustomed to lying and bad faith.

The Parable Of David's True Faith shows me only one landmark of verticality: serve no false idols, that is, to trust only in myself, and never to put anyone above my power. But I need to know exactly what I want to be, where I need to go, and turn my desires into intentions – formulating them as clearly as possible.

In fact, the struggle between David and Goliath highlights the difference between truth and falsehood, between authenticity and appearance: it is one thing to be really strong (by faith), and quite another to consider yourself BIG without having God on your side).

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-parable-of-david-true-faith.html

The Passion Of The Iceman

On November 01, 2011

Build your ascent to perfection, by removing all those parts of your consciousness that are in opposition to your true values and beliefs.

- Pain is bad ... Make it go away. You can help me, sir. Take me to the world beyond – said the sick old woman to Joe Black, immobilized in a wheelchair, suffering from a tumor that affected her whole body. It was obvious that she recognized the evil spirit that dwelt in him.

The Prince of Darkness, in the person of Joe Black, distinguishing in her voice the disappointment generated by the situation in which she was, and then the lack of confidence and the fear that she felt for him, he looked at her totally indifferent, and talked to her with a real asperity in his voice:

- Maybe I'll help you, and maybe I will relieve your pain, but now "I'm on vacation." You have to resist a little more, old lady.

After a few days, Joe Black returned to the hospital to meet with Susan (the doctor of whom he was in love), meets again the sick old woman. This woman, sitting on the bed, overwhelmed by her own suffering, told Joe about her so severe pain.

They both looked long in the eyes. At that moment, Joe felt a sense of wound in his heart, and it seemed to him that through that wound is running a feeling. Not the passion, because the passion remained, but respect for her last wish. That staggering, and yet so powerful longing for death of the suffering woman was something more important than the understanding that he had on people. Little by little, he gave way to the sense of rejection. Suddenly, he was covered by a mild fever of an unconscious resentment towards his own fault.

Leadership: Can you recompose the experience of an event from the forgotten beauty of life in a manner that engages in a game of essences beyond worldly appearances?

In terms of leadership, bringing together, despite differences in appreciation and vision, people who think differently, but also knowledge of all their events and suffering, the good administration of their contribution to ensure their constant growth in any direction exclusively concerns the production of safety and self-esteem. They are useful to have access to their fund of vitality, impetus and enthusiasm. But for it, one must also possess that spiritual and innovative dimension, which bears significance by its direct or indirect use value of the limited identity they cross in critical moments.

If you have ever stretched a rope across a river in order to move forward with a boat, does not mean that you are paddling, but that you pull the boat along the rope by hand from one hook to another.

Exactly like that are staying sometimes things in our dealings with others. We try to get as soon as possible to their souls, but instead of showing a better understanding for their concerns, and showing respect for their values and beliefs, we "pull" of them to follow us in accepting our beliefs and ideals. We make an honor of the qualities that we value so much in us, but we ignore any requirement from them.

Experiencing an event from the forgotten beauty of life is necessary to refresh the consciousness of an enormous ability for empathy. Absorbing each throb of the soul, every curiosity of the mind, every fiber of the being pulsing with life, any form of nostalgia as it spreads in the strange game of chance, we get closes to beauty. Otherwise we are gray caricatures drawn by banality.

Leadership: Can your forceful spirit be tamed by a sense of helplessness?

If you saw the movie "Meet Joe Black (1998)" perhaps you remember the sudden change of personality of Joe Black. He, who served with a total consistency and dedication, without ever making concessions, with scrupulously to his own rigorous principles, suddenly changed into another person. Because he is "on vacation", he has disregarded his basic duty: to transfer man into the other world.

The sick old woman was actually an exception to his so well-nailed rules, this thing helping us to recognize the extent to which an individual can detach from his fixations, and to what extent can change his attitudes through the proximity of others. She managed what no one else had managed: to soften through humiliation, through suffering and feeling of helplessness, his spirit full of darkness and strength. Due to her, the world appeared better to Joe.

Leadership: Can you fix the image of a fleeting world, living with the pressing conscience of a very low action of a man coming from another world?

In each of us lies a whole conception of the role (or purpose) that we have to achieve, which marks distinctly the thing that separates our principles of ethics and equity, by others. If you manage to penetrate the depths of their soul, if you manage to connect to their inner world, by eliminating from the arsenal of your leadership those concepts that are opposed to their value system, then you will succeed to reach that high level of quality of which each leader would feel proud.

Just as a painter imposes his style by the calm of his compositional harmonies, performed by a certain rhythm of lines, a certain refinement of color - so you too, to impose your style of leadership and the values underlying it, first you must get a certain degree of loyalty from people, by showing a strong tendency toward compassion, kindness and understanding on the way to unity and harmony.

Sometimes, experiencing a sense of personal worth is healthily built only on the basis of accepting the inevitable by integrating the intervention of the profound man coming from another world into the final moments of life.

The passion of ther iceman brings attention to the transition from one stage to another of your personality, from a negative and cold attitude, to a positive one, of acceptance and sharing what is best in you. You can shine in the hearts of others, or you can overshadow willingly your ascension according to the substrate of your personality.

Just as the blood circulating throughout the body enables the functionality of all organs, so you, to ensure the functionality of the team, to cement the relationships with others, you must first change your optics about yourself, to learn expressing your feelings without coming into opposition with yourself, by removing all those parts of your consciousness that you consider "dark".

Moreover, guided by the spirit towards personal fulfillment, resist the temptation always comparing your perceptions and conceptions with others, without relying on a deeper analysis of your own personality.

Conclusion: The flexibility and malleability based on understanding of your own personality but also of others, of your own limits and of others, are human characteristics, which should be much more pronounced in a leader. They, along with compassion and empathy, must be carefully dosed, so as not to conflict with your own ego, or with the other collaborators.

Rigidity, inflexibility, the lack of understanding of human limits are defining that passionate leader and with the heart of ice.

Build your ascent to perfection, by removing all those parts of your consciousness that are in opposition to your true values and beliefs.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-passion-of-the-iceman.html

The Passionate Anger Of Blind Souls

On May 12, 2014

Check your character traits, by interacting with what is beyond your own appearance.

The child stopped at the bush without noticing Jean Valjean. A 40 copper coin dropped on the ground and rolled into the thorn bush, towards Jean Valjean, who immediately put his foot on it.

- Sir, said the little Savoyard with that childhood confidence made out of ignorance and innocence, give me back my money.

Jean Valjean, tired and angry, suddenly rising to his feet, with his sole still on the coin, became almost menacing: "Get out of here, boy ! "

After a few moments, the child left, running for his life, not daring to look back or give a shout.

The shadow dropped around Jean Valjean. He had not eaten all day. He pulled his cap over his eyes, unconsciously sought to wrap his coat, stepped forward and leaned to lift his stick. And at that moment, he saw the 40 coppers coin that his foot sunk into the ground, which glittered among the rocks. He felt like an electric shock: "What is this?", he said through his teeth.

Simply put: it wasn't him who stole, not the man, but the animal that, usually and instinctively, foolishly put his foot on that coin, while his intelligence struggled in the flood of so many new and unheard obsessions. When his intelligence woke up and he realized the animal's deed, Jean Valjean drew back in terror and gave a gruesome yell: "Oh my God, what have I done? I am a bastard ! " *

Leadership: Do you shape your character in terms of "good" that is evil or "evil" that is good?

In terms of how you perceive and manage your own being, activating that force of the soul, which according to experienced reality, determines it to manifest more and more pronounced, you cannot avoid the emergence of a completely new automatic control system, with new forms of protest, but also with new values. And, obviously, with new representation and operating structures, and with new, solid, simple, clear and harsh laws, which make life seem a hard to climb mountain or a river passing mountains.

Leadership becomes, in this case, a new symbolic superstructure, respectively a second order authenticity, in that it cannot indicate the ratio of authority, influence and impact, due to moral and value constraints.

Leadership becomes a practical uncertainty, a shift from material to spiritual world, depending on a two temporal dimensions situation – past and present – that could facilitate your future interaction with what is beyond you. More specifically, with the experience of "good" that is evil or "evil" that is good. In symbolic terms, the two extremes are represented by "The Man" and "The Animal".

Little Gervais, the child who lost his coin, made an indirect good to Jean Valjean, helping him understand his dark side. And Jean Valjean, who remembered the evil man that he was, had to rehabilitate, doing only good deeds.

Leadership: Do you consider the possibility of losing yourself in a foreign character when your existence is lost in the outcome of a situation that is distinguished by the impossibility of understanding it?

The true face of battle, which rises or descends leadership, here it is. It is this challenging and powerful meeting point between what you are capable of becoming, creating a vacuum to be "filled" by an effort of understanding what you are, in terms of how you react to what you experience, and what you have actually become from how you managed the personality "crisis" that you crossed.

The bigger the discrepancy between the emotional Ego (often singularized through your external manifestations) and the self-consciousness (expressed through the inner verbal discourse, creating opposites that allow you to think), the lower your degree of maturity. No wonder Anthony Silard, President of The Center for Social Leadership, often advised: "Focus only on your high-quality ingredients, which make you unique, dynamic and worthy of love."

To develop your leadership in situations where you feel out of control, it is not important the possibility to get lost in a foreign character, which intrigues and enslaves you at the same time, obeying those high vibration thoughts that cause you negative emotions. But to contribute to reduce those life aspects, which in dealing with yourself, can bring you value.

You cannot always change what you've done; you cannot always "patch up" your remorse with optimism and cheerfulness, but you can try to humanize "the animal" you feel that you've turned into.

The character that limits your leadership is the finding you make about your personality in a context where your profession, activity or mission records major image costs.

The Passionate Anger Of Blind Souls concerns that way to evolve to good and very good, on an upward trajectory, unclouded by pride, passion and violence.

 Note: Victor Hugo - Miserables;

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-passionate-anger-of-blind-souls.html

The Path Beyond Magic

On January 14, 2013

The main thing that distinguishes a wizard from ordinary people is that he uses his powers to tell the story of his life in a way that will shape the future course of the world.

I was first attracted to magic 50 years ago. (Half a century ! How time flies !) What I would not have given then to have access to a book like the one you now hold in your hands ! But at that time, such knowledge was difficult to obtain. I had to look tirelessly and do research, follow ancient clues and long forgotten paths. I had to beg, borrow, and learn from the few better informed magi I could find. Over the years, I have learned how to use the crystal globe, how to guess in tarot cards, heal with hands, use herbs and potions, and do many other things that you could not find out from anyone or were not normally at your disposal.

I learned everything about spells, charms, and how to use magic. I have travelled on a long and at times difficult path. But it was rewarding and, practicing what I learned, I was able to help others and bring them happiness and relief. After a while, I became a professor myself and I was able to pass on the knowledge I had gained with so much work. I dedicated my life to magical arts and the transfer of knowledge assimilated to those who are ready and really want to accept them – to those like you.

This is a grimoire, a wizard's initiation manual that we designed specifically for you. Let yourself be carried on a journey. It will open your way to another universe, tell you how to become a wizard, teach you ideas and concepts, and then lead you through a secret trail that winds through a forest of ancient knowledge with trees that sometimes seem scary. Throughout this time, you will learn that things are not always what they seem to be. What many people perceive to be frightening will seems the same to you, but rather you will find it empowering and uplifting.

The path that crosses the forest continues indefinitely, but the deeper it goes, the more interesting it becomes. It is like you would venture into the Forbidden Forest near Hogwarts. It is a place where secrets are kept, and mysteries cannot be revealed. *****

Leadership: Can the image that you promote about yourself be substituted for a unifying image of past existence through a filter of knowledge that abstracts from the word "power"?

Just as poets build their lyrics from life material, in the same way the imperative of sustainable development will feed only from the inexhaustible material of the vision that strays from the formal laws of modern thinking. The most skillful magicians follow the direction of the echo of invisible things, breaking away from the echo of what ordinary people are accustomed to understanding.

Much of the information that the magician possesses instilled the idea that things are not always what they seem to be, and if they are not seen it means that the world focuses its attention in the wrong direction. Thus, the illusion must be the total success of the deviation of attention, but for this it must be perceived as a place where secrets are kept and where mysteries cannot be revealed.

An open mind is a system of production of an individualizing income, of the "key interest" type, which increases with the value of the probability of producing changes. The best leaders know very well that science is not necessarily modeled after men, but rather after the defining elements of the teachings drawn from everyday experience. This is the key interest that you cash out after your forays into the perimeter of the thought system that processes and values that entry data and information (those extracted from the external environment).

The veracity of a magician consists not in the experience given to them through books, no matter how precious it may be, but rather in finding the answer to the question: "How efficient can I become if I compare myself to the wisdom obtained from books?"

And his existence is passed through the filter of a knowledge that abstracts from the word "power" because it does not seek to gain popularity, devotion or benefit from anyone. Every encounter with others is a test designed to prove how much he has learned at each stage of his becoming, a test that can confirm new skills and open new possibilities to prove his perfection.

Leadership: At the end of the process of selecting and transforming information, can you become a book yourself, but in such a way that it replaces the lives of those who read it?

At the same time, the magician can be the hero a writer has to invent on the road to his own destiny, reliving the serious moments in the life of a creator who intensifies his valences when he is not sustained, when he is not encouraged, or when he is marginalized.

Thus, the validity of his own identity consists in the transmission of knowledge provided by an experience experienced by personal significance of the events and the flow of life. And the ultimate test of his journey, "the great passage" to an immortal existence lies in his ability to prepare the world for a new endless tale.

The motto "know thyself", the daemon, the inner genius of man, the tormenting and yet stimulating spirit, becomes rather a partnership, an exercise in extending memory, of storing information, which by different combinations and associations provides a workout for thinking, facilitating the discovery of new truths useful in defining a new identity.

At the end of the selection and transformation process of data and information, you must feel that you yourself have become a book, the most comprehensive repository of human intelligence, storing in its files the scientific knowledge accessible only to those who wish to learn from your experiences and apply those teachings further.

Leadership can gain a long-lasting orientation according to the lecture: "What is important is what you learn from yourself while transitioning from magic to a book."

The famous magician and writer, Oberon Zell-Ravenheart, wrote in the preface of his magic manual:

"Take heed reader, the Master of Darkness has a tremendous power, being helped by innumerable hosts, and his influence is felt in every corner of the world. You cannot hope to defeat him by the force of the weapons, because he has the most terrible weapons ever captured and controls the richness of the empires. He is the father of lies and pretense, and he can turn your fathers back against it. You must teach weaknesses and to make use of them, turning them into things that give you the power of love, compassion, magic, purity of heart and nobility of soul. Life has prepared you for this adventure. You will endure painful lessons that will show you what you need to know at every stage of your journey."

Magic is a book meant to remind you that the totality of life includes not only early education, but especially good and evil, and that above this opposition lies your attitude in front of it.

The Path Beyond Magic can be correlated with the importance of the story that outlines the idea of a future designed to capture your attention through the following statement: "We are in a place between worlds and a time outside of Time. Your role is not to leave this place, but turn it into a hospitable and charming one."

 Note - Oberon Zell-Ravenheart - Grimoire for the Apprentice Wizard, Editura Polirim, 2007.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-path-beyond-magic.html

The Path Lost In A Hard-To-Find Verticality

On March 09, 2020

Nothing is more preferable than what you could have preferred, and you did not prefer.

I met a man who ran quite well, dominated by the objectivity of a personality untouched by the feeling of futility. But he did not run best, as well as a champion, and in the end, he chose to run only for himself, as well as he could, without comparing himself to the other runners. He continued to run at all times, free, more understanding, more in harmony with the feelings of life, only to run in the fullness of bodily powers, in his soul dispositions (often contradictory, but still in relation to mutual conditioning).

The years have passed, and they do not return. But something remained imprinted in his soul. The longed-for desire to be a champion, because any soul process affects the outside and causes intense feelings, different sensations, emanates power, character, personality, positivism, gives a certain charm to the destiny made by those who live their lives for a dream in the service of performance.

And whenever he has adapted his attitude to the different feelings of his exalted spirit to the holy ones, deep in dedication and outstanding results on the line of progress, so often a whisper from the ether, a call from the heart of a hint of foreboding, a prayer brought from the divine, foretold to him a part of the later work of the Enlightenment. As if he had managed to capture the most impressive images of a world detached from a cinematic matrix in the form of a feature film, in the dynamics of the expression of a reinvented life, of an original reality crystallized in harmony with the evolution of the universe.

Knowing how to bear what is off the runway is less worrying than feeling something great that, filling you with self-respect (but also caution), awaits you beyond the safe world you were used to. You step into a lost world and find yourself elsewhere. You start from a realistic dream, and you find yourself in the secret room of the spiritual book, decorated with a portrait of the hero with a thousand faces and his symbolism that simultaneously denotes death and life, wisdom and infinite knowledge. Go from one extreme to the other without wondering how the change came about.

After all, what really matters is the attitude that your ego takes towards the different feelings that feed the substance of the novel called: "The path lost in a hard-to-find verticality."

Leadership: Is the objectivity of your own idea of yourself revealed in an expression of maximum artistic sublimation, insofar as it is considered an essential coordinate of human action placed in the service of an external immaterial cause?

Regarding the personal experience I posted here, so well imbued in coloring the feeling of the inevitability of change, I think it is as relevant as describing a painting workshop for conducting a study of the spiritual life that any artist experiences, both spiritually and materially. It takes you some time to move from a side path to a middle one, to go from a simple idea to a huge achievement, from a single-epic theme to one that can reinvent anything using mixed work techniques. Therefore, patience...

True. I admit that I have the perseverance of the long-distance runner, but at the same time I am close to that state of grace of the painter when he intertwines with Nature and works in its rhythm, without being emotionally and unconsciously guided by any complicated philosophical discourse. After all, I may belong to that painter's preference for the "Other", paying attention to the divine call – to seek a path that all can take, but few take to.

Perhaps it would be better to be blinded by the brightness of a star beyond the limits of the conventional, to embrace the "perfect perfection of perfection" that exegetes have fought for decades to trace and impose as a golden rule of the Enlightenment. And what is the Enlightenment other than the association of an ordinary man with the status of a being animated by the divine (creative) impulse, descended as if from a heavenly body, not having the prejudices of a tradition unsupported by Revelation.

Let me put it differently. A small individual claimed his right to property over the holiest of sciences, leaving the memory of an unknown hero in Romanian sport to dominate, and this if I am to give a new color to the feeling of the sublime. So, I think that beyond every configuration of the connection with the great act of universal creation lies a fighting spirit specific to athletics. In fact, the long-distance runner trained, imposed himself, and finally distinguished himself as a modern, innovative painter, able to revolutionize the arts themselves with three-dimensional manifestation, which can rotate any perspective and any perception in a variety of directions.

Leadership: Can you consider the moments of maximum spiritual enlightenment as an experience of God's word that is revealed by the revelation of a transition from one existential stage to another, from one hypostasis to another, from one self-image to another?

So well-grounded within me were the foundations, values, and discipline of athletics that the coloration of the feeling of the inevitability of change did not suffer a sudden "turn" to the petals of a flame rose, or to the green of a meadow on the hull of a ship stopped ashore.

There was, indeed, a rapprochement between athletics and painting. In the middle was the same tendency to test the limits of my nature, the primary urge to overcome them, the challenge, the madness, the chance to self-assess my skills in a way that wasn't too striking, an act of blurring prejudices, a free way of releasing my strong emotions from the burden of a more or less obvious captivity.

Visionary people, rare examples of personalities in which the rare moments of spiritual enlightenment are intertwined, are characterized by the curiosity to see what comes out of a "command" given to the spirit of finesse that reconciles the professional cut with pure emotion. If athletics turned me into a visionary of the unique, it was because I had reached that stage of adoration of heroes and great deeds, that stage of serving the ideal of "new and immortal man", considering the moments of enlightenment as an inner experience, even if for the ancients they came from outside.

I approached very seriously this subject of the transition from one state to another, from one shade to another, from one stage to another, from one world to another, so that in the end I found that everything that explains the true meaning of beauty has its roots in a well-known, well-mastered phenomenon, in a content of thrills, unsuspected expectations, vibrations, frequencies, waves, energies, mysteries, legends, all these being confirmed by a closer examination of the problem of the Self. Perhaps some spirits were pre-chosen for the accomplishment of the "Great Work" at the prime time of God's expansion on earth.

Once again, the attempt of the ordinary man to be part of an invisible, transcendent and infinitely abundant source is confirmed, feeding on a higher creed that gives exceptional destinies a sacred influence. Yes, I am probably more than an ordinary person, I am a performance athlete who has performed in the field of visual arts, honored with the attention received from an external and superior immaterial cause.

The Enlightenment is what is revealed to us through divine revelation and is confirmed by our own experience as the transition from one situation to another, from one status to another, through a broadening of self-consciousness to the dimension of an avant-garde consciousness.

Or, as someone said on a website: "Beyond the physical and vital envelope of the world, we need a conscious connection of our soul with that of a being from whom we can feel only a disposition of intimacy or presence full of seriousness and dignity, without prejudice to a previous situation."

The Path Lost In A Hard-To-Find Verticality is an unforeseen way of embracing reality differently that makes the purpose of our lives (and all the events that stand in our way) extend beyond the limits of the knowledge we have at a given time. At the same time, it designates that elevation of thought towards a complex of tendencies of emotions, of sensations, which taken separately or all together, passing through multiple changes, form the permanence of a metaphysical Ego, of infinite dimensions.

I also add here the words of Ioana Sarah, a good educator of spirit who always followed my becoming. She said: "Spirituality is sometimes like a rocky hill, sometimes it's like an egg, it's like a project from which ideas are born and flow every day, it's like a flowing river: the same water never passes over the same stones. The world is like an infinite column, it impresses with destiny... And the resonance with the divine is like a temple to which we have to add another brick every day, otherwise it collapses and falls..."

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-path-lost-in-a-hard-to-find-verticality.html

The Path Of The Rose

On August 13, 2019

Leadership is the virtue of embedding yourself in an image that only takes a few seconds to look at, but which is imprinted forever.

Sometimes, I would like to be part of another world, an immortal one, always animated by the beauty of a colorful garden, the tranquility of an immense state of delight, which would be the welcome triumph of a liberation from the captivity of time, from the material prison of a consumerist and superficial society. I would like to be part of the image of a reality that perpetuates its existence among the palpitations of a heart always inflamed by the sacred fire of the gestures of sensitivity, of the tender moments in the area of spirituality.

Thus, I came to describe myself through the excellence of the aesthetic of being part of the daily life of a rose. This is what it is called to desire a refuge for the soul, to have a unique experience, protected from impurity and overflowing with vanity. The untouchable luster of the rose, so close to the fineness of the brush that spreads the colors on the canvas, in a state of the first mixture of worldly and evangelical, is due to the release of the chains of the human body to penetrate the revelations of the supersensible world.

The soul and the rose, my non-material essence and the form of expression of the encounter with another world, are the object of a connection explained by the fact that two similar esoteric entities are face to face with what the painter will pour into artistic form, the highest form of spiritual validation, by the absence of the cries of despair in the midst of earthly suffering.

The true miracle that God gives you is to feel that you are living the life of a perennial plant, from the Rosacea family, caught in a painting which the viewer can give, once and without delay, a note of amazingness, truthfulness, greatness, preciousness, perfection. Finally, I feel free to think in terms of consensus with the aspirations of peace of mind, in the sensuality and symbolic richness of a rose that is eagerly preparing to change its nuances for another season. Sublime and uplifting, is it not?

Leadership: Can you improve your spiritual disposition related to a particular event experienced as an aesthetic experience by revealing an image that tends to replace the existing world?

As it is easy to see, the integral factor of my consciousness to report to the world is the image of the "Ego" which is structured from the following components: the sublime of a dream-like view, the conscious search for a spiritual fusion and the spiritual disposition related to a certain event experienced as an aesthetic experience.

Temptingly, I came to believe in a change of perspective from which the image of a new identity is understood and conceived: of things, happenings and life – seen in terms of their ability to accommodate the emotion of a painting that transports you to another world. It is not enough to consider yourself as a whisper of the silence provided by the movement of the brush, remembering the vast stretches of a holy trust in a present that you want to continue at other times, the other dimensions of being, you also need to establish yourself in a dialogue with the subject and the means of execution.

And this aesthetic experience aims at adopting a special sensitivity, a positive attitude of the type "I possess an innate refinement", which denotes a great capacity to empathize and understand the diversity of human nature. It denotes a solid accumulation of states, ideas and visions, which tend towards the exteriorization of an ideal of purity and spiritual honor, which privileges only the basic characteristic of the rose: to be always sincere, charming and elegant. To be made pleasant all the time with its blooming.

The connection with art is achieved through the charm of the power to surround yourself with all that is beautiful, with a positive, discreet aura, with good taste, as the painter surrounds himself with colorful stains that, gathered or scattered, keep the eyes and the heart focused on an image of paradise, still unfinished. The painting makes me no longer believe in the ordinary mortal who is preparing for confrontation with the absolute limit of time, but at a redistribution of the meaning of life by inducing the feeling of belonging to a paradisiacal, cosmic, astral space, of the consciousness that regards everything through the eyes of eternity.

The great significance of art must be realized by exercising the power of modeling reality in a context of high visibility, by referring to a revealing content of "expressive potential" in building the vision of a completely different world.

The beautiful implies the serenity of aesthetic feelings, such as sweetness, grandeur, dreaming, vitality, astonishment, in a symbolic theme of pure spiritual inspiration, especially in the reflection of the red and yellow colors of the rose.

The rose is my only bridge between parallel worlds, between the beauty of art and the so-called beautiful in nature. It inspires me with a state of timelessness, a concentration of emotions and events in the same image, a major stake in a process of alternating between good taste and simplicity. As if I were tempted by the spell of a pure cashmere caress, full of tenderness, sincerity and delicacy that nature makes visible and tangible for a painting of great finesse in the forefront of which stands a visual-artistic entity that meets the conditions of a spiritual awakening of great magnitude.

The painting, like my life full of pursuits, joys and failures, is the reality of a sensitive story, of an amazing beauty, which only nature can pluck from the red rose of an emotion-filled moment, kept in an astral spark, in the spirit of a rebirth in another form, in another space of the universe.

Leadership: Can you define a concept of admiration for your content of life that is structured (in an artwork) as an echo of the encounter between two similar worlds linked by a certain event experienced authentically?

The meaning of an experience must determine the intensity of man's reaction to an experience of confirmation of the "exceptional" thought as a meaning of a life that does not melt by excess. He must signal or anticipate something related to the theme of the rose extended in the light of an unmistakable art.

Writer Mary Balogh achieves this when she confesses to being part of two over-sensitive experiences at the same time, through her favorite character, artist Joel Cunningham. That is, by continuing the poor use of the canvass and by the vulnerability to support the vision of a profound change in attitude regarding the role, content and significance of the image.

"I painted all day. I painted furiously and without pause and achieved the total concentration I need when creating. I painted this woman according to the sketches I made, from memory, and from that part of me that cannot be described in words. The portrait is by no means finished, but I am terribly pleased with it. There is something so delicate in her being that I feared that I would never be able to capture in my dream, vision or on canvas. But I think I captured her beauty, the joy of living, the vulnerability, the sadness, the unfulfilled hope. Oh, I could speak a lot of words, without being able to express what I feel about her. I have never finished a painting so fast. But it is not careless or superficial... it is sublime."

The size and the value of an artistic effect is the result of a series of combinations of meanings, color overlays, vivid word combinations, intersections of decorative elements, artifacts of perception on reality, thematic obsessions, others compared to the initial joining.

These become normal to a personality that takes from the symbol of the rose a special form of sensitivity, adapted for the reception and analysis of a figurative image that can only begin with choosing the predominant color at a certain moment of insight, honesty, lucidity and confession. At the end, you are amazed by the incredible simplicity of the composition.

Leadership is the comparable world between life and art, seen as an infinity of images that respond to each other in full order, illuminated by the same intensity of red of the feeling of belonging to an identity of the "New Man" type that makes the transition from a loaned identity to a real one.

The Path Of The Rose is a concept of admiration for my content of life that gives the viewer an intrinsic value regarding the creation that continues to fascinate me, called "The New Man".

The journey starts from the point where the first buds start to bloom and continues, finally, with the artist's effort to offer that "different" in the presentation of a fertile dialogue on the theme of a unique identity, translated through an image characterized by a dominating intense chromatic: red. Passion. Vitality. Balance. Imagination. Rejuvenation.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-path-of-the-rose.html

The Patriarch Of Art

On October 08, 2010

Provide expressiveness to the shape of your leadership, emphasizing your personality by contrast with the style matching your level of maturity.

The writer Adina Nanu stated the following about the great French sculptor, Antoine Bourdelle: "Bourdelle's creations meant for the public, during many decades, the emblem of sculpture of all times, seeming to exceed everything ephemeral and placing himself in the timeless zone of great monumental art."

She obviously wasn't wrong. But how did this man of praise stand out?

Being 20 years younger than Auguste Rodin, Bourdelle worked in his studio until he found his style. While Rodin's sculpture was designed to convey in movement a passionate gesture – Bourdelle tried to fixate stable aspects, understanding sculpture firstly as architecture of the original volumes.

At the same time, from one of his uncles, who was a stonecutter, Bourdelle learned to handle the chisel and the hammer, listening to the rock that "seemed to speak", indicating after the sound to the attentive ear of the master if the shot was well implemented. And from his father, who was a furniture carpenter, cabinet maker and sculptor of decorative pieces, he learned to carve reliefs in wood.

From them, he learned to enter the light of fame.

Leadership: Can you fix the stable aspects of an art that deserves in-depth knowledge, understanding the evolution of Creation primarily as an architecture of monumentality that goes beyond the ephemeral?

Educating yourself, without anyone's help, is in vain – you can't improve your performance. Your efforts are, in this case, as a grain of sand without clepsydra – an effort that does not fill the gaps in your experience, in your culture, a very distant point of propulsion to the true performance you aspire to.

That very important and valuable grain of knowledge, which should flow into your time glass, giving you the opportunity to develop your specialist skill and competencies, will always remain still. So, your progress will stagnate and you won't be able to make the qualitative leap to "mastership". As for the knowledge that an artist shows, this being about a dynamism in eternal development, inherent in the plastic approach, whose tension can vary from one cycle of works to another, it seems to be closely related to the purpose to any Creation: to serve to mature his soul, to help him become a completely perfect being.

Without a doubt, it is important to become a perfect artist. But only those close to you will determine your level of efficiency. You alone can't increase your knowledge and chances to make a career, but the mentors that you choose can do so. You must put together relationships with the best guides possible, to find a way to adopt the clear and beneficial ideas of their vision, to implement and contribute to them, if they are valuable and on the same wave length with you. The secret of leadership isn't to gain as many followers, but to surround yourself by the most valuable mentors and outline your vision after their model.

To understand the evolution of your Creation as an architecture of monumentality that goes beyond the ephemeral means to develop your knowledge to include ideas outside the norms, so that you become a "classic" of the avant-garde in terms of receiving the Artwork.

You mature by understanding the "art" that others practice. Your maturity level increases or decreases depending on the degree to which you engage in assimilation and use of the most important elements, methods, aspects and information of their art. Now is the time to test your knowledge and see how many of your achievements can fit into the unity of the work of art, which is not only given by the sum of several themes put together, but by a double intertwining relationship: between what is sustainable and what is considered prestigious internationally.

Just as carbon dioxide from the air (CO_2) intervenes in the "food" assimilation in plants, so your development occurs if others intervene with advice and suggestions that are designed to complement and enhance your level of knowledge and improve your performance – so only if you assimilate some of their style of thinking and art making.

In order to give expressiveness to the shape of your leadership, shape your personality in contrast to the style that fits your level of maturity.

The maturity test of an artist lies in his ability to understand and make others understand the evolution of knowledge starting from its objects; at the same time, it resides in his ability to interpret and explain the relationship between artistic phenomena and the media context.

The Patriarch Of Art is the one who possesses the secrets to better understanding and knowledge of the art of leadership, as well as the power to achieve great performance in his career, serving as an excellent role model.

Before becoming a "master", you should cultivate yourself in the rhythm of those who are better than you, finding similarities between their vision and yours, acquiring that knowledge and skills meant to help you develop your own leadership style.

Conclusion: Knowledge underlies leadership, as well as the desire of improvement and the willingness to learn from the experience of others. Then, it is important that your "art" carried on the high peaks of perfection withstand external evaluations of field specialists.

Learn from everyone and, especially, let yourself guided by the advice of your mentors and you will be satisfied with your performance, your results obtained with a huge effort on your part, but which have ascended you on the value scale of the society.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-patriarch-of-art.html

The Particularities Of Science

On July 27, 2016

You cannot give value to your own reaction to reality, without proving the infinite value of your resistance in the face of its unknowns.

The epidemic is spreading rapidly, more and more individuals are stuck in a sort of partial death, a state of unification with the most aggressive of evils, as malignant as a subtle cancer to which you are unaware you've been infected of until you transform into an undead being. The virus continues to remain just as ciphered, unstoppable, an evil among all things that are done under the sun, whose unusual effect becomes so pressing that no one could hide it or deny it.

Only a wandering soul gazes with serene eyes towards the place where he knows he will never go to – in hell, because he himself is the antidote to this plague that transforms any being into a ferocious animal. Only Garry Lane, an investigator, a brave soul of this guilt ridden fate, only this scholar that in the bottom of his heart believes in the great sovereignty of knowledge, has the right to find key challenges in formulating the unknowns of a world diseased by an unprecedented factor.

But before engaging into battle all of his powers of reason, of the most efficient of attention and analysis, he has to choose between two major decisions: the adamant decision to live on for a medical purpose "to find the cure", or to forever live diseased, damned, equal to an "undead being created through the reanimation of a human corpse".

In the reality of a fallen world, only the chemist that manifests himself through The Particularities of knowledge, through the prism of a diagnostic algorithm based on the complex analysis of the profile of those dodged by the virus, and also by revealing the formula of a complex organic structure, determined from a blood sample taken from his own organism seeded with a reaction catalyst, has he any chance of survival and leadership. *****

Leadership: Do you make sure the imagine you're opening over the challenges in your life has a high value, using the "On" or "Off" function in the field of experience to be above your own nature?

He who walks the sinuous path of the battle between two capital decisions, under their alleged contradictory existence, owes responsibility both to himself and to the world, without making one's self vulnerable. Such an individual subjects himself to the process of rational thinking, analysis and insight, which make him see things and situations differently, helping him find a balance in that which entails identifying the elements that determine a certain attitude and a particular certainty.

Providing personal power in an optimal response form to psychological effects and identity divergences, by adjusting the mirror of reality (where a certain comparison to the secondary elements of the investigated cause appears) is one of the variants of ascension to leadership. Psychology is a part of identity that says: "Worship not a reality from which vision and your influence over it have been omitted."

The center frame in which you are captured in the middle of things, sets you into one of the two majors decisions: the relentless determination to live on for a purpose, or to forever live as a victim. The leader does not recognize himself for the purpose he has set in the midst of devastating events, but in the maturity and creativity with which he makes the major decisions: to embark on the foreground of a life that, using all of its world, transcends all its legalities.

To be above your own nature means to make from the perspective of living at the limit of some unique, real and intense experiences, the awareness of a new dignity and confidence of deliberate and thorough propagation towards the ideals of a happier future. Let us consider what is the nature of the being situated at the limit of unforeseen perspectives, so that we can discover in any experience lived to the maximum the potential of a new consciousness, willing to evolve, in this way increasing our confidence and dignity towards the real values of life.

The experience of being above your own nature belongs to the higher being by the fact that the events to which the progress of your prediction science relates are experienced at the level of feeling and consciousness.

However, the center frame also reveals a winning of your essential by experimenting a state of compatibility or incompatibility with the uncertain present, and brings forth a phenomenon often ignored by practitioners of leadership: you cannot give a certain value to your own reaction concerning reality, without showing the infinite value of your resistance in the face of its unknowns.

The image you open over the challenges in your life can have a high value by using the "On" function when you express yourself with confidence by The Particularities of knowledge that can improve the response given by decision factors. Probably, the challenges of life are the image of an openness to the future that can bring out the high truth of science, as if "what you discover is only a small part of the gigantic mountain that you have to move out of the way."

Or, that very same image can have a high value by using the "Off" function when you're not able to anticipate its base effect, or when its effect doesn't bring into contact all of your capacities: first of all, the reasoning of serving yourself with the conditions of development and replicability of the general effect, in order to lead yourself towards a different trajectory of your course of life.

Leadership means assuming the conclusions of negative life experiences from the perspective of intense, authentic living, of a superior being who knows how to turn science into a balanced, calm, rational attitude in any situation.

The Particularities Of Science are coherently expressive only in relation to the whole of impulses, feelings, desires and ideas, often found in discordance, in the face of an unavoidable reality.

 Note: World War Z

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-peculiarities-of-science.html

The Pen And The Brush In The Sphere Of The Sanctifying Creation

On October 29, 2020

Art gave me the chance to play a game called Immortality. I gave art a chance to balance the weight of the game by adding the divine mode.

The pen with which I write my life brought to my attention the purity of immaterial things transformed into immortal works of art, being himself a learned and profound philosopher who looks at the world by the slight rotation of the brush in the rainbow of more and more bold colors. Nor could I have been easily convinced of the existence of immaterial things if the pen itself had not been a way of seeing beyond appearances and perceiving reality beyond illusion.

Likewise, from a writing of living that belongs entirely to the moment of great interpretive force, the artist is inspired by light and intrinsic pictorial values which, with the help of the brush, ensure the value of beauty that is really imposed by itself and for itself. By a firm will to win the sky, by trying to explain the rainbow as a natural phenomenon of nature, the brush is led on the same path as writing, in the timeless direction of the heart of all ages, receiving that life of creation beyond sight, in the future of an illusion about the world.

I myself managed to order the brush to do what the pen had promised before: to get rid of the material appearance, in order to obtain an expression or a metaphor of purity. According to the understanding power of an artist, which is above all understanding, it is most correct for the brush to use the glory and beauty of beautiful writing, so that its enlivening may be a blessing of pure spirits.

The purer the pen and the brush will be in expressing emotions beyond the present bearable, the more I will see reality with different eyes than I see it now. The pen will produce similar influences on the brush when a charming corner of nature urges me to different reports of the concomitant order, so that both are contemplated as a representation of the divine. And I think that's why I'm immortal, because my pen, acting as a brush full of inspiration, manages to bring to life a reality beyond visible appearances, and at the same time manages to reproduce an image from another world, a colorful enchantment, full of symbols.

My spiritual eye will finally open.

Leadership: Is your power to remain in the present relationship with the sublime act of Creation a way to penetrate the depths of a reality that cultivates more space in the visual field than in the field of a common theme?

According to the face and the resemblance of the brush, the pen also works, in the sanctification of an expression that goes beyond the formalism of the patterns, the inertia of the patterns, determining astrologically an effect of light reflection beyond forms, beyond thought and stars. When both are in conjunction with the luminous or illuminated planets, the sun or the moon, even as far as the so-called "government of the universe", the pen and brush can gain a certain brilliance by mirroring a tangible reality that marks three-dimensional minds.

By this I mean that an artist is not a true artist until he embraces writing as a brushstroke, from the evolution of the universal movement. And both, touching very well the subject of Creation faced with the beauty of an imaginary world, integrated in the juvenile reality, manage to embrace "Divine Grace" at the point where the "Eyes of Horus" open the window of life of an ageless age to a new state of defining living through transfiguration, transformation and resurrection.

According to this aspect, light absorption is achieved by using pale colors, but also by invoking the existence of a cursive, neat and orderly writing that conveys emotion, memory, molding and shaping the interior of a sphere of symbols and meanings resulting from a fund of vitality and positive energy. Yes, that's right, I am immortal in that my Creation extends to the amazing and varied things God has done within me, thanks to a brush that always contains other certainties about reality, disguised as works of art.

Both the pen and the brush give me wings and the power to strive for perfection, to remain in the present relationship with the sublime act of Creation, as a kind of code to penetrate further into the depths of a reality that cultivates more space in the visual field than in the field of a common theme such as "emotion as benefit".

Rather, what is seen in my writing, and what mirrors the brush in its delicate shape and appearance, falls under the theme "Nothing changes until you change."

Leadership: Can you live the experience of a part of yourself, experiencing the fulfillment of the destiny of an entire creation that has its point of support in understanding an abstract image?

We can mention here about the existence of a rose, drawn in the likeness of a woman with a work of art, being admired and shaped in the words of a painting that expresses the essence of the human soul caught in disturbing life situations. I am immortal in the fact that I gave life to a rose, thanks to the pen that mobilized to understand and soften the brush that is the object of a mind-boggling Creation, meant to express the free spirit of the "Creator of Worlds" who knew how to imagine them, to draw them and design them physically.

Well, even the pen has a weakness for painting, because the brush can prove to be above writing, being largely visual, that is, complemented cerebrally with previous images of a self detached from matter. Or being immortal in expression through metaphors and symbols, becoming vulnerable only to the celestial powers, the pen is articulated according to the inner tendencies of the artist to express his depth by embracing the brush that has become an alternative symbol of the Renaissance.

I realize that it is not enough to be an artist of writing to embrace painting, but I must also be the subjective reflection of the objective world in the brain of a star, similar to the Sun, which reshapes by color rays the raw image of nature. And I believe that this is the destiny of my creation that I must fulfill by meeting writing with painting: the opportunity to facilitate the understanding of an abstract image that is equivalent to the discovery of an identity between essence and existence, between appearance and reality.

Leadership, in the first phase of the Great Work, is the act of communicating through an artistic message an intellectual attitude that persists on a spiritual level, allowing the artist to identify with the Creator of Eternal Worlds.

The Pen And The Brush In The Sphere Of The Sanctifying Creation are the divine instruments used by an artist whose spiritual force can only be known through the prism of the fact that it shelters the feelings of a sensitive conscience.

Above all, a sanctifying creation attributes to the artist a large part of the scope of the concept of "all in one", especially if we consider the pen as a recording of the movements of the brush on the easel, and if we consider the brush as performing the magic of conversion handwriting in complex symbols of faith.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-pen-and-the-brush-in-the-sphere-of-the-sanctifying-cr

The Penetrating Gaze Of The Eyes Illuminated By Representations Of Art

On July 04, 2021

"When you don't have to prove your talent to draw the real, all you have left is the imaginary expressed in color and free forms."

I hold in my hand an older, fine-grained tile with a waterproof finish. I don't think it's made in Romania. I look at it carefully, with that attention I need to reconnect to a changing reality in a globalized world, and I don't know what, but something particularly draws me to it. Maybe the colors that make up its model in such a fine way, a color scheme composed of shades of brown and beige. Maybe the texture of which it is made, an airy and bright one, applied longitudinally, strongly evoking the rock stone.

The tile is too well made, my eyes like to look at it without getting bored, because if I look at it from opposite angles it looks different. Why I'm so attracted to it, I still don't know. But the colors so important through their impact, meaning the existence of a huge arsenal of the micro-cosmic imaginary, which my eyes enjoy immensely, highlight the interconnection of fine and chosen tastes in terms of the symbolism of art that an artist feels closer to then when all he has at his disposal is the imperfect instrument of talent to bring out something extremely captivating.

Colors are a kind of visual language, reflecting the instincts and sensibilities of the artist, aren't they?

I looked at the tile even when I had in my head a combination of colors that best suited my personality, in the name of an immediate reality that I had discovered through the "seeing and doing" system. In fact, when you see a combination of colors that impresses you, you are tempted to retain the combination for the future through the "eyes of the mind" focused on the inner feelings and states of consciousness.

Haven't we drawn attention so many times that a color or a wide range of colors must attract the viewer's attention, to tell a real story, a beautiful experience from which the artist drew new lessons about the true richness of creative forms?

Leadership: Can you merge with an artistic creation that tries to highlight the moment when you find yourself face to face with the reality of the visual, focusing on the possibility of expressing your soul in a unique way?

As a sign of deep gratitude to visual artists, I decided to keep the tile, considering the temptation to reproduce the model originally illustrated only with the help of the visual prompt. In my mind is all the richness of the creative act that the artist's eyes agonized over by studying the most meticulous works, supported by the perception of the compulsion to respect the original style as rigorously as possible. I point out that my eyes are not just admirers of forms of beauty, such as natural beauty and created beauty, or taking into account the symbolic form, the classic and the romantic. But, first of all, my eyes are destined to the systematic refinement of observation and methods of evaluating works of art.

Someone said this well someone on the web: *"When you don't have to prove your talent to draw the real, all you have left is the imaginary expressed through color and free forms."*So, the tile has to tell a secret about a design that seems classic for its time, but new for these times when art no longer finds its place in the manual making of products, but in technological competition. And even if the natural mechanism of sight of my eyes loses their colors as they look from a darker angle, it seems that the tile gives its freedom to express representative colors, in combinations that are pleasing to my eyes.

Colors are important in their impact, aren't they? If I changed the color of any image to the opposite color of the colors that my eyes perceive naturally, and if the pattern of the tile would curve around my field of vision, in a round similar to the "shape of the gaze", then I would better understand why I consider myself an artist of rebellious colors, of shapes shaped in a simplistic flexibility, of explosive compositions through poignant and symbolic themes.

At other times, my sight is endowed with an effect of openness to a transcendent of the soul, in the sense of accepting an invisible reality that is obtained through a game of chiaroscuro, through shadows and lights, in which I could find myself deceiving time.

Leadership: Can your creation facilitate the exposure of the sensitivity brought back to the present by a reinvention of the reference model of the act of creation that invites to an overcoming of one's own artistic personality?

Only an artist fills his eyes, before painting a picture, with those successful models of creation that inspire you, through color, to meditate on the perfect beauty that surrounds you. I also believe that, in the depths of my being, there is a reserve of admiration for the height of expression, a "cult" and a phenomenon of the personalized object in pastel colors, through a special sensitivity. Imagine that if it weren't for the pleasing color of the eye, I wouldn't have been attracted to any shape of the pattern inscribed on the tile. Therefore, the tile is a faithful copy of an image that my eyes cannot replace with another, because the colors themselves, vibrant and fine-textured, unaltered over time, have a great significance: they distinguish the being of a nation of the being of other nations.

In this regard, the famous writer Antoine de Saint-Exupery had something important to say: "In the making of man it is important first not to instruct him, which is futile if he ends up being a walking book; he needs to be raised, educated, he needs to be brough to the height where things cease to be, and left are only the faces born of the divine knot that binds things together. For there is nothing to be expected from things if they do not resonate in each other, this being the only music for the heart."

Perhaps the tile itself has a life and a soul, on a metaphysical and atomic level, of course. Otherwise, it could not have withstood the test of time, perhaps even more than any human being. And it had something to say about me when we met by chance. It told me that I am a special artist precisely because of my ability to distinguish beauty where others do not see it.

According to this fact, assuming that the tile would be curious to discover how this feature exists in an artist of stylized shapes, working either with many colors or in contrasts of black and white, it would be determined to imagine that it is dealing with a soul as great as it is, a soul of a supersensible nature, which can be felt and found in all surrounding things.

Let us not forget that the reference model of an act of creation is the preparation of the soul for the recognition of its immortality. And, in this case, the Great Work of Creation is the product of a soul that, standing or traveling, displays its splendor, erudition and substantial energy, in a surreal reality.

The Penetrating Gaze Of The Eyes Illuminated By Representations Of Art includes the feelings of an artist whose reality is related, mainly, to the external world or rather, to the knowledge of the essence of things (prior to the concrete experience).

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-penetrating-gaze-of-the-eyes-illuminated-by-represent

The Perception Of A Colour Contained In A Single Glance

On May 17, 2023

What you see influences the options available to you to recognize the uninterrupted transformation of the ordinary into artistic creation.

It's a hot summer day. The sun is constantly shining all around us. I walk slowly and confidently towards the Palace of Culture when, suddenly, my eyes are surprised by the navy-blue color that marks the parking area for the disabled. It is a skill to know yourself as an artist, one capable of developing close connections with the surrounding space, in the context of a continuous adaptation to new creative realities. But it is a sublime art to see with the corner of your eye, with the flexibility of subjectivism, which is not at first sight subject to the ever-changing trends of design.

The navy-blue color triggered a unique moment of lucidity, of sparks in thought. To this is added the artist's mastery of deciphering the very core of the world in the gleam of a gaze that senses color, matches it with shades of delicate sensitivity, but not as it really is, not as a result of the action of light (of different wave lengths) on the eye, but as a reference to a model of self-formation that often has a strong spiritual component.

I wonder: does the color know that I look at it in relation to the intensity of the light, not just as an image that meets the qualities of orientation photography? Does she suspect that I see her not only as a powerful tool, capable of convincing and influencing the gaze of the beholders, but as a process of constituting the Self through the construction of the Senses? Does the color navy-blue have a soul, a soul reborn from storms, from beyond the clouds? Does it have a vision, a clarity captured by the correct impression on a perspective of spiritual ennobling in an illusory world? How much does it resonate with its viewer's perception?

Leadership: Can you extend the limits of your reality in relation to a means of expressing the value of a visual retrospective that is directly proportional to self-image?

And if the color of infinity, the cause of the desire to return to a certain moment, is a power that directly influences the soul, then what do I really feel when I look at it in relation to a means of expressing the value of a visual retrospective that is directly proportional to self-image? Everyone walks past it, trampling on it, others lose sight of it, not knowing how to use this supreme indicator of the complexity of the drawing to correct certain aspects of the Self and to develop qualities necessary for their own development.

In this case, the value of a visual retrospective is given by that unique state, that unique feeling of the moment when you feel that you dominate time, when you feel that you are caught between dimensions and you do not want to rush things. And this is exactly what I felt, that I can master an eternity in one place, a fact totally contrary to my conceptions of the world and life, that I can concentrate in a single imaginary point, which I named "controller", all my reflections, experiences and thoughts.

Thus, the image of the self becomes the subject of the image of a new reality : "What I see in myself is what surprises me in the presence of the ordinary." Through my eyes, so attentive to trivial things, I often manage to distinguish or associate different variations of colors, shapes, styles, between reality and fiction, between evanescent and eternal, especially at the moment when I least want to capture the ordinary. I can already think of myself as an artist who, being in deep relationship with matter, manages to pour his ever-changing imagination into the solid matrix of the visible real, not the real hidden from the eyes of the world. More than ever, the navy-blue color has caught my eye today.

Leadership: Can you develop your perceptual power over the meaning of the concept of "a true image of parts of reality" in the substratum of a sensitivity and a vision that essentially defines your uniqueness?

In fact, the great advantage of the navy-blue color is that, by integrating it into a decorative image, it can take on many different shades, even if over time it can fade, and can be traced back to the moment of starting a meditation on relationships tied to appearance and essence, with a metaphorical transition between the two themes: the ideal of Renaissance truth and the ideal of performance culture.

After all, only the perceptual power of the human eye is what limits the range of tones in the spectrum of colors inspired by nature, so vivid and expressive. But the impact that navy-blue has on the mind becomes a kind of "axis mundi", a center of Mannerist art, a kind of mirror in which the artist sees himself, a sign of the world of Morpheus, which indicates that something must be changed regarding reality. Here, without a doubt, the words of the great painter Nicolae Grigorescu reinforce my point of view:

"Eyes are easy to make. A gaze is harder. Everything has a more expressive secret of its own, therein lies the secret of its life. Usually only those who look for it can find it. Woe to him who, seeing a beautiful thing, so alive, for all beautiful things are alive, looking at it only once and only from one point of view, thinks he has seen enough of it ! Nothing is a repetition, no flower, no single thing, no color. No light wave. For millions of years, since the sun sent rays to our earth, no two have come in the same way."

So too is the case with my color, navy-blue. At that moment, none of them were the same. It seems fair, I could only see it in a photogenic square, open to the gaze that knows how seek the unusual in the banal, where the world does not crowd to observe the artistic representations of beauty. Spontaneously, revealingly, comprehensively, a new eye has opened in the world of forms from now on, an eye that feels that it can color a world with that color that the soul calls the "Great Work" – as if it had known it for a long time, recognizing it, it gladly receives and unites with it.

I build my leadership through any image that comes before my eyes. What I see influences the options available to me to recognize the uninterrupted transformation of the ordinary into an artistic creation. All in all, leadership belongs to the plan of Creation.

The The Perception Of A Colour Contained In A Single Glance can paint an image of all surrounding things, but from which the artist extracts for his own creation only the element whose qualities he amplifies, not the one he destroys by hiding, by forgetting, by routine or by confronting the rest of the world.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-perception-of-a-colour-contained-in-a-single-glance.ht

The Perfect Coincidence Between Image And Sound

On April 02, 2008

For two reasons, I love art so much: changing perspective and broadening my vision.

Prokofiev considers the director Sergei Eisenstein a fine musician precisely because he notices the symphonic character of his editing constructions, the nuanced understanding of the musical phenomenon. Eisenstein, who has often remarked on his inexperience in music, once wrote, "I think that I am a composer merely by chance. Because I am most passionate for compositional issues." And Prokofiev, a brilliant composer, takes into account the musical opinions of the director, he happens to remake the music of a fragment six times and when he introduces some themes composed earlier, he then recreates the music at the request of Eisenstein who "did not allow for old tunes to slip by."

When Prokofiev starts, the director adapts his editing to music, according to a special mechanism. First of all, he has to imagine very vividly, to see clearly all the plastic material available for that scene. Then he has to look for the perfect match between a precise image and a certain fragment of music. He seeks the coincidence between the "make of the object or landscape" with the time of a musical passage, an intimate consonance that cannot be explained rationally, between a musical fragment and a fragment of the image. It's not so simple, because at this stage the fragments of images are in chaos and their ordering, according to the precise structure of the music, pushes him to jump from one end of the film to another, to guess which side of the fragments will correspond to a certain musical phrase". *

Leadership: Are you determined enough to look for the perfect match between a precise image and a certain fragment of a sensitive act of communicating emotions, at the junction between what is hidden and what is shown?

What did I learn from this? That only in a context of representation of artistic Creation, by ensuring the image of subjects of great scope and great relevance for the contemporary world, will you be able to perceive the difference between what you think and what you generate through your feelings and intuition. Moreover, considering the vision of a surprising reality appeared in the phenomenal artistic horizon, looking for the coincidence between the "invoice of the object or landscape" you will be able to express remarkably a sensation of rebirth, revival to life with the help of suggestive images.

How do you reach the coincidence between the "make of the object or landscape"? I think that through a conjugation of images that capture an abstraction, through a mystery of a historical or spiritual nature, through a projection of an idea of becoming through emotion, through a projection of a reality that escapes the ordinary capacity for perception.

In the art of film directing, it is important to adapt the montage to a revelation of knowledge, enlightenment, ideal and beauty, as proof of high spiritual values. It is important to create a creative atmosphere, full of emotions and surprises, just with the help of simple elements and in just a few seconds.

Then, the fragment of any image you expose to the whole world must capture the states of people in extreme situations, so try to appeal not only to the art of looking, but also to the art of thinking with sounds, with sensory elements, so that to bring the spectators to a point where they are totally open and able to better understand the connection between symbolism and realism, between old and new, between static and dynamic.

Leadership: Can you express in a practical and flexible way the concept of personalization of a subject very little present in the public sphere that would keep the fundamental idea of a new form of dissemination of a message or a teaching?

Note the following. Many times, directors direct the combination of what is expected to happen with the characters and what exactly happens during people's lives in reality, in order to be able to express emotions visually, artistically. Therefore, the directors practice the awareness of a dramatic intention to develop film scripts to a fabulous level, promoting the art of managing the impression produced by the act of responsibility of the critic towards the value of the creators. So, through creation, it is necessary to appeal to free artistic living and expression, better emphasizing the idea of synchronicity between fact and fantasy, between what is and what is possible, between what could be true from what is in fact real.

A broadening of the vision of art occurs with the use of music as a dynamic factor of action (the art of movement), or as a factor of temporal direction of movements and aesthetic cultural education, especially as a factor of spiritual uplift or as a tool for predicting a worlds to come, And if it is true what the singer Diana Saveanu said, that music is a language that allows you to convey much more easily what you feel, then the image that is projected using this language must have a metaphorical level, a high resolution of the captured scenes (highlighting important objects and details) to announce a new approach to the subjects and a new expression of the reality of life.

The change of perspective in art occurs as a form of expression of people's feelings and beliefs, with the help of a language through which you have the opportunity to superlatively express a certain idea, beyond images, beyond words and gestures, beyond appearances.

The Perfect Coincidence Between Image And Sound is obtained when the vision you project about Creation and Art exerts its force to traverse time, to traverse different worlds with the help of a language through which you communicate your ideas, feelings, life experience.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-perfect-coincidence-between-image-and-sound.html

The Perfect Handler Of Metaphors

On August 23, 2014

Self-evaluate your experience regularly, practicing the meticulosity required for the realization of your vision.

When the removal of the factory director in a stroller was being filmed, Serghei Eisenstein wanted to use a metaphor, likening the director with a toad. The director asked for the toad, filming was stopped. Everyone went on a desperate expedition to the pond in search for a toad.

A props member had to enter, in that cold October day, waist-deep in water. Everything proved useless though, because Eisenstein refused all the toads that were brought to him. He found them to be too small, or didn't like the way they looked. Toad after toad was being brought, but the refusal was categorical: "It won't work ! It's small ! Catch another one ! "

Someone went to the zoo, but not even there could they find something suitable. Eventually the toad was found. But too late, it was dark and the toad had to be discarded. Everyone began to get mad, but Eisenstein remained implacable. What interested him was the realization of his idea, not the difficulties arising in its path.

*These events evoke the meticulous attention to the smallest details necessary for the director's vision. **

Leadership: Does your creation discover its meaning and veracity through a vision that promotes the model of "open science" attributed to the impetus of experiencing a vision that includes the fruitfulness of the meaningful contexts of "pure visuality"?

The reasons for the development of professional experience, in support of the process of identifying new creative practices, meaning the possibility of demanding more from yourself and others, are easily understood. At high levels of well-contoured message management, in terms of using an exceptional visuality, the dominating power of science is stimulated especially by using the patterns of recognizing new "rarities" by capitalizing the "background" of existing scarce resources.

Regarding adherence to art, the rarities are the "metaphor" ingredients or any other form of expressing ideas, which give startup power to innovation projects, made available by those circumstances that attract a noticeable increase in the degree of promoting valuing perspectives of creation. And leadership can be attained by the practical realization of an exceptional montage, of the prototype type, including ideas, concepts and principles underlying the creation fueled by vision.

The pure visuality of an external reality is achieved by the distribution of living elements that become integrated into a more profound, deep, emotional, fascinating or thrilling artistic image, stupor or melancholy. In other words, pure visuality is characterized by the objectivity of telling an event that has happened for a long time, but explained by your own experience and vision of life.

Leadership: Can you capture the reality that is configured using symbolic systems correlated with a vision that cannot be discarded by emotions and inhibitions?

Science, as a platform of furthering the process of creation resulting solely from an enlightened mind, depends exclusively on the new elements in the structure of the filler material and the ways of interacting with environmental factors, which must be gradually introduced in an advanced version of assessing experience and individual performance.

You can say that you are on track to achieve performance in leadership when the new elements are validated by a wide range of perspectives to the process of establishing a masterpiece, a viable and exemplary model of art.

Symbolic systems, correlated with a vision that cannot be discarded by emotions and inhibitions, include those background elements that can animate the setting of real events. And in leadership, elements such as the "scabby toad" can offer a broad insight into character traits such as: boldness and prudence, confidence and doubt, etc.

The "open science" model includes practices and research, initiated and maintained by those who are worthy of being followed by the care they show to any form of organization, promotion, materialization of innovative impetuous creation. The creation of these promoters – genuine artisans – is based and enhances its value on numerous attempts and explorations, which are meant to materialize our vision of the model of "open science". Thus, the attempts contributed efficiently to the implementation of the vision, in an understandable form, full of meaning, which will be adopted by the majority.

Shaping a vision is the result of the curiosity to know and relate those events in your life that assume the purpose of the "passage of time" mechanism.

The Perfect Handler Of Metaphors is the leader who possesses the extraordinary ability of extracting the essence of what he creates with the help of vision. He finds the factors that truly motivates people to contribute to strengthening his efforts. What interests such a leader is the realization of his ideas, not the difficulties that arise in their way.

A powerful and ambitious leader self-evaluates his methods and means of implementing his vision, which must be embraced and adopted by the majority of his supporters. It is a difficult path in which the essential role is held by the explorations and systematic attempts that must be convincing and come to the aid of an "open science" type model.

* Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-perfect-handler-of-metaphors.html

The Perpetual Call Of Science To Understand Science

On March 05, 2021

The way you understand the connection between art and creation is a reflection of your predestination towards union with demiurgic thinking.

I learned to do one thing very well: to play with science, with my science, not with the science of others, and to experience it with a little more perspective and understanding, to feel it like the fine caress of the piano keys offered by a virtuoso capable of masterfully combining intelligence with intuition, exceptional talent with fantasy, without abusing too much his possibilities of capturing the public's attention.

Whereas this fun game with science, impeccable, endless, terribly satisfying, this index of sensitivity of subtle things, the delight of a real adventure lived and captured artistically, is related or coincides enormously with the inherent significance of a painting subject that stands out by exposing a single color in a single interior.

From delicate sounds to virtuosity, from a paddle to a writing-board, is a distance measured by the perfect moral agreement between the original, motionless and everlasting beauty of a work of art, and the forms of a moving multiple of a timeless show called: Semertahma(The unity of vision in a multiplicity of styles).

Of course, if someone were to ask me to determine the value of what I'm doing, and that's very difficult to show because sometimes I don't realize the value of what I've done, I'd tip the scales to adopt the Stradivarius violin chord and an exceptional violinist, more than the agreement between the inherent dynamics of beauty and the movement of a brush meant to give color to a life that vibrates continuously in another world or in another reality.

Leadership: Can you make an installation of selective thinking by creating a state of suggestibility of the mind that will allow you to access the reality of a vision called to impose itself in the face of the relationship between vocation and predestination?

And seeing as how I keep going on and on about the science that helped me become aware of my vocation and predestination, between painting and music, therefore a science located beyond words, including an evolutionary view of the state variables of the intensity of the energy fields of the Universe, from which God does not can be ruled out, then I will say that any attempt at access to a new self-consciousness is an attempt by my intellect to rise above the worldly mind, through infallibility, to God.

It must also be said that no science must be motivated by the exposition of a single reality. But by exposing a theme that springs from the realities of a world inaccessible to "ordinary mortals", that is, from the realities of a time line passed indirectly through a Frutessebitus, a kind of continuum between matter and spirit that latently becomes a test of sensibility of artistic, unitary, avant-garde language.

My vision is the man that became a Creator. My vocation is to offer a unique experience of knowing the area of artistic concern. And my predestination is the obligation to offer the right of creation to be known and promoted through artistic means. Finally, the demiurgic thinking that revives my soul, ordering me to walk through the labyrinth of life, includes the mediation of an image or an idea that tries through the sensible to enter the intelligible.

Leadership: Can you subordinate the external reality to your own vision, force it to submit to your inner rhythm and recompose it into an image capable of exploring the dialogue between yourself and the universe?

I was reading in some random book about Goethe saying that colors arise from the light-dark interaction. He called the colors "accidents of light" that arise when light, making its way through physical environments, loses its virginal purity, absorbed and partially reflected. And from that same book it appears that Goethe started in the study of color from the understanding of the mechanism of visual perception as a fundamental moment of human existence, constituted in a real process of knowing shapes, color structuring and exploring its spatiality.

So, if I have to relate to science, and I will always refer to science, and not to any science, but to the science that I call the "Window Artwork", then I must realize that everything that turns this world into one of beauty is based on the power of the chromatic universe and musical language (perceived as a form of artistic expression associated with a transcendental effect).

In this case I would opt for music as a form of expression of creation through an unusual combination of sounds, arranged more or less arbitrarily, according to certain aesthetic rules, in an order according to the practical requirements of the most valuable painter. And as for painting, evolving as a deep and sincere reflection on the emotional state of the viewer in the most pleasant way possible, I would tip the scales in favor of a more intuitive form of expression , similar to the suggestive expressiveness of a music that intonates "Pink - The Color Of Love" by Yakuro.

Here, then, is the essential: until I know the true pleasure in perceiving art, from which life itself absorbs from my eyes all the events, steps, resources of sacredness, I will not be able to know the true measure of the experience of being tangent to infinity.

The great force of science is that revelation of (idealistic) self-consciousness obtained through the act of creation which promotes the solidarity and consubstantiality of man with the universe.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-perpetual-call-of-science-to-understand-science.html

The Perspective Of The Close-up

On October 14, 2015

Approach the universe of science, trying to compose a "poem", and not just tell a "story".

Let us consider two examples that will probably better clear up the relationship between the two directors, Griffith and Eisenstein, and will allow us, later, to better understand the genius of Eisenstein's work. The Close-Up was therefore not an "invention" of Griffith. Edvin Porter used it, as a technical means, making a bandit shoot in the close-up, towards the viewers. This caused a sensation and nothing more.

But Griffith used in a film the close-up of a woman waiting for the return of her husband, followed by the image of the one she was waiting for. This alternation caused storms through its unusual nature.

- How can the subject be torn, he was asked, with such jumps? No one will understand a thing.

- But Dickens, answered Griffith, did he not write the same way?

- Yes, but, he was Dickens; he wrote novels and that was something else entirely.

- The difference is not even that great, I write novels in pictures.

However, Griffith's close up was tied only to a way of seeing, by the physical conditions of the way in which you can see a character: namely, from up close.

*Eisenstein will use the close-up not to show something specific, but rather to represent. In other words, he doesn't simply watch a cheek or an object from up close, but rather uses it in that aspect to express an idea, to give it a new meaning. Griffith tells a story, Eisenstein composes a poem. **

Leadership: Can you distinguish a new dimension of revisionism from the horizon of an experience that needs to be frequently fueled through the intervention of a particular achievement?

The ideal and profound sense an artist seeks in the process of elaborating new concepts, turning leadership into a sort of stage design – a way of thinking up an image over the real world, or an image of man reflected in the world, based on a fixation of science over an omnipotent fact, is transposed at the level of experiencing his existence.

The artist himself turns into a first impact on the phenomenon of representing a large picture and, more so, on the evolution of approaching the way in which he sees and perceives "what he knows" in the vastness of the information surrounding him. This image captures the significance the artist attaches to the act of creation along the line of conduct of a man who knows how to communicate with what others see in him.

The content of the message you supply to the entire world, becoming the main subject, the equalizing force of assumptions, often subjective, related to the organization of the real, which can lead to a new form of art, remains bound to the complex representation of the close-up. It's about the thinking self-directed towards a finality of revelations that satisfy the conditions of an ideal of knowledge springing from the experience of research, from the very substance of those previously assimilated.

Revisionism is a form of belief in a finding that turns into amazement: the feeling of being in front of a reality often ignored by the world, but opens the way to the ideal greatness of an explicit reality. It is about giving meaning to that thing, incident or phenomenon, from which draw certain subject values those basic attributes resulting from the perspective of what you see and the way in which you explain what you want others to believe.

Leadership: Does the way you represent a point of view in a composition of great expressive resources reflect a central point of the extended self-esteem that you experience through what makes you different?

Leadership continues its advance towards a more precise modeling of facts that need to be revealed through meanings, based on objective representations, with the help of technology and information, in various contexts of affirmation of the power of creation, not only if you "tell a story", but rather if you manage to "compose a poem".

Therefore, the close-up is tied not only to a way of seeing, not only to the physical conditions of the way in which a certain subject can be approached from up close. But rather it represents the result of the synthesis of an entire experience, the consequence of an extraordinary accumulation of notions and concepts, a model of defining science connected to a significance attributed to a peculiar achievement, thus completing the area of continuity between creator and receiver.

The attitude or action that follows the reviewing of concepts pertains exclusively to the artist who, like a collector that is so passionate about enticing objects sits for hours on end in front of them to better penetrate their mystery, builds his work through arguments that comprise of reasoning and evidence concerning the relationships between image, ideal and reality.

An extended self-esteem is obtained through the content of reason to transpose yourself into an artist who no longer cares about his own creation, though concrete, living by the only thing that makes him different from the rest of the world: capitalizing on the original spectacularism of a masterpiece in a sustainable life lesson.

The Perspective Of The Close-Up is generated mainly by the elite performers who constantly probe the hidden depths of being and the world, through science, in order to obtain not only a different meaning for existence. But also, to clarify for themselves the experienced truths, through others, in their own way.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-perspective-of-the-close-up.html

The Phantasm Of A World, Out Of Which Yours Is Only A Remnant

On May 02, 2012

Steadily maintain your noble character, by opposing yourself to any tendency of violating the limits imposed by the emotional and moral filter of the other people.

The main character in the movie "Lionheart (1990)" Lyon Gaultier deserts from the Foreign Legion and reaches the United States of America. He finds his brother between life and death, and his wife without the money for healing her husband and taking care of her child. To help her, he gets involved in illegal fighting, at the urging and under the guidance of Joshua, with which he binds a close friendship.

And Joshua was Cynthia's subordinate - "le joueur professionnel" - who kept things under control. Or at least this she wanted. She was one of those cold-blooded creatures that you were glad to have closer only when it comes to money. Extremely attractive, with the charm and the fascination of a princess, but deceitful as a snake. Being incapable of sincere feelings, of familiar wishes, she was the carrier only of her dominant heredity, faulty, certainly not noble. She does not love anybody besides her.

For such a being, attracted like a magnet only by fame, seduced only by the glitter of the money, of the luxury's life spectacularity, she that would go over everything and everyone to find the fulfillment of her changeable desires - you cannot invite her to a romantic dinner without risk, that for one reason or another, suddenly, something will not suit her, and to burst into angry fits, and you would wake up suddenly put on "disable".

Leadership: Does the challenge of accentuating the importance of the facts that you reproach from life requires that they move to the forefront of a detachment of the perceptions of some dominant centers of interest?

At one point, Lyon makes a visit to Cynthia. She was alone, lying in bed, provocative, dressed in the most summary underwear, quiet, dreamy, as she would be immersed into a perfect world. Seeing Lyon, all her being was seized by enthusiasm; she seemed enlivened by the thought that finally, a strong man like him, a so good match, could appease her cravings.

- I will do it, says Lyon. I will continue to fight for you. But I must open an account. Do not ask me why. This is my condition. And I must leave this place. I cannot live in a luxury hotel. I must live like a fighter. This place is too comfortable for me.

And suddenly the face of the women, that previously was so sweet and gentle, was visibly changing. Her jailor's heart increased the beats like in the rhythm of a cuckoo clock. Her so fascinating world seemed collapsed, turning into hell. Who does he think he is? How dare the miserable tell me that he leaves, without giving me what I want, without satisfying my cravings? Wounded in her own pride, the rich woman, and so influential, was never able to find kindness, any sign of understanding. She activated her fervor, depth, consideration, tact, and now she lost them, or rather abandoned them.

Modifying the attitude that defines you is the condition for determining a high percentage of doubt attributed to a lasting character that depends on the probability of achieving random events.

Armed with all the possible concentration, was sweeping with her eyes the man near her, the vile, wicked, wretched, for now Lyon was not anymore her biggest "desire", but only a cheater, a convict, a sinner. And therefore, she tries to see things as they are, with the most perfect cold blood, that is no longer attributing them a preponderant positive connotation. Some shocks causes, visible or not irreversible upheavals. Her cold anger, repulsive, which would freeze anyone, showed its teeth:

- Are you sure you leave because you have not found another woman ... something more comfortable on the street? Do not answer ! That's my business ! Mine ! (then hits the glass into the TV.) I'm sick of you ! Out ! "Get the fuck out ! " From now on our relationship will be only professional as it should have been from the start !

Leadership: What is the nature of your personality in the context of a wealth that keeps you mentally or emotionally trapped around an image used as a link between what you can offer and what you are asked for?

Without a doubt Cynthia would have had a positive influence upon Lyon, because she was a beautiful woman. But her "flaw "character, her inability to empathize, to feel, to be receptive to his potential, to his emotions, on his true character – has caught only his contempt. Finally, she has lost her money, and Lyon.

A leader like Cynthia, who always regards the garments inside out, that is blinded by any sense, handcuffed by the lust of money, must be left to consume herself some time, to spend time alone. Must be left to reflect, as a wise man, better to the essence of her character. To treat, just as a doctor treats the disease, her addiction of always being in focus; to better understand the possibility to be someone else - until the menacing flame of her thoughts, feelings and her reprehensible beliefs will be extinguished.

Only by damming those negative reactions, impulsive, unstable, that are not making place to any form of increasing the positive influence, you could dominate more time the spirit of the people, keeping alive their intention of relating to you and accepting your imperfections.

Leadership: Do you use your baggage of inborn or acquired traits to cancel out the negative effects that you can consciously bear by committing yourself to a quality that does not honor you?

The philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer said: "A good character, measured and gentle can be satisfied in strained circumstances; while the envious and the malicious one will not be satisfied, not even in the middle of all wealth."

What will be the nature of a leader's future personality is certainly very difficult to say, for it depends on the size of his image, by the understanding of his mission, by the way he judges people, by the way he relates to the new realities, by the way he educates his own self, and by the way he manages his own reactions.

I cannot say too much about the evolution of a leader, about the transformation of his character, especially without observing him. However, I would predict, for example, that no judgment, no influence, no way of combining the elements of leadership that could increase the chance to him in achieving greatness, could not perfect the ability to establish genuine relationships and connections with the other people.

Just as a sculptor shapes his work and pours it in bronze, you have to shape your character to get the maximum results in the sphere of relations and cooperation. You will not be able to communicate deeply with people and to fit into their world if your ego does not find a strong enough echo in the hearts of others.

The lower quality, which does not honor you, is perpetuated between the confrontation with deterministic events and the apparition of the "saw teeth" effect (the more you use your authority, the more likely you are to blunt your skill of mastering your impulses and reactions).

This quality can be INFLUENCE itself !

The phantasm of a world, out of which yours is just a remnant, aims your own personality, and the way you look at the world after you were denied by the other people, after you were sent to the ground because of your own errors of feeling and judgment. You can get only a remnant from a world where other people give you, or not the acceptance to be at their head - a remnant of yourself, in a world isolated by your own Ego.

Steadily maintain your noble character, by opposing yourself to any tendency of violating the limits imposed by the emotional and moral filter of the other people.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phantasm-of-a-world-out-of-which-yours-is-only-a-re

The Phenomenology Of Art

On February 12, 2015

Enrich your leadership with new meanings of expression, communication and new models of reasoning, finding those angles of approach that are compatible with different levels of power and control.

I had to struggle to defeat myself, to the limit of thoughts and ideas scattered every day in shriveled phrases, by going through the two circuits of potential significance: Q1 positive and Q2 negative. Two circuits connected in parallel by a filament arc within the brain, at the boundary between accuracy and tolerated error, neighboring the virtual world's anticipation flow. They each sent to each other – like a mirage in the desert – unreal imagery, curious contrasts that removed the idea of any evolution or permanence.

Perpetually, these circuits alternated by an electrifying inspiration stream produced a magnetic inductance that cuts the high frequencies of background ideas, flattening them through a distribution of loads that possess high vibrational energy. Without stopping, the ideas poured through the open door of the subconscious with the speed of an arrow sent in the direction of a three-dimensional grid connected to a space crammed between the visible and the invisible, fed by the power of interrogative lucidity.

Obviously. The trajectory of my art intersected with science. In the end, I seemed to be enclosed in a horizon of fiction commanded by the intensity of often incoherent thoughts that characterized my style and performance from the angle of second order thinking of philosophical reflexivity – organ of the great crystallized body, the most expensive pearl of the sphere of creation. I was whimpering in a strange room, the space of a changing immensity, driven by the visionary spirit of the physicist who rationalizes his theories and remains in the perimeter of tangible and concrete evidence.

The great physicist Isaak Pomeranchuk was concerned with the theory of phenomena that could reveal the deepest properties of the physical world. I am concerned about the application of the method of making science by using fecund meanings and metaphors. With their help, the thinker artist managed to deepen bright splits into the ideal world of abstract composition – in a realistic manner. And vice versa.

Leadership: Is your work's importance determined by the extent to which it exceeds an outside receptivity?

Russian physicist Arkady Migdal said: "Both in figurative art and non-figurative art, the importance of a work is determined by the extent that it exceeds the limits of an external receptivity, of the depth of the parts it's made out of."

The dimension of the art you set up, analyzed from the point of view of the elements of meaning attributed to new variants of what you know or perceive, must be so inspirational that it gives depth, authenticity and intensity to the meanings you communicate – either by word of mouth, in writing or by personal example.

Receptivity is about what you cultivate in people's minds and the feedback you receive, but it is distinguished by the power of the lucidity to delineate the appearance from the essence, the concrete abstract. The understanding of new notions and concepts does not occur immediately because the capacity of people is limited, but it cultivates the predilection for the individual, manifested in science, revealing itself as a source of novelty – creation experiences and representations of different worlds.

In many ways, we can represent in the field of leadership new meanings of expression, communication and new models of reasoning – through what we experience, but especially through what is revealed to us through study, creation and vision. The methods of approaching the science and knowledge that we create will continue to act and develop into more important approaches – as a bridge to new evolution perspectives.

Outer Receptivity aims at other people's trait of being aware of what is happening in the perimeter of your authenticity reflected in the imagining of new expressions of evolution. This expressions, in their turn, allegorically capture those realities manifested in the sphere of knowledge, ideal and emotional, with which you feel life and the world in an unrecognizable hypostasis of feeling.

For example, we can communicate what is maintained in the tangible perimeter, conclusions drawn from the research. But we can equally promote unrealistic imagery, hypotheses, curious contrasts that remove the idea of any evolution or permanence. It depends on what we want to express and the power that we get this way.

No matter what we try to inspire to those around, ideas or perspectives within communication schemes that make information one of the essential foundations of development as long as they open new points of interest and new horizons means we have power.

The power to penetrate an area that hosts the vision of going out of the ordinary, embracing that artistic form that triggers exploratory curiosity without accepting or rejecting abstract reasoning.

Leadership: Can you exploit an infinite number of lives amidst a fleeting world?

"To exploit an infinite number of lives amidst a fleeting world" is a metaphor that highlights the connection that is formed between the foundation of a value judgment and explanation of a phenomenon of depth dealt with in an innovative way, but from subjective and objective standpoints. A sort of blending of abstract compositions translated in a realistic manner, with the intention of opening the way to the philosophy of science and the new possibilities of updating the creative potential.

Great art – the effort of the mind to obtain an unlimited number of thoughts transformed into elements of originality – is complemented by new hypotheses and special considerations on the perception of this philosophy.

Through the idea of abstract reasoning, using a succession of elements with different meanings, independent of direct experience, you manage to some extent to give expression to a new content of ideas and concepts. It is important that their presentation allows for further processing.

The Great Work or "The art that broadens the horizon of knowledge" consists of what you are trying to reveal from the image of your personality so that the reality you resonate with is ideal in a context of the type: any reflection is accepted, as long as the final result is coherent.

The Phenomenology Of Art highlights the role of creation that often transforms reality, but establishes the vision of escaping the ordinary. This involves accelerating the process of clarifying concepts embedded in "personal work" that are compatible with different levels of power and control.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phenomenology-of-art.html

The Phenomenology Of Artistic Composition

On July 25, 2015

Try to demonstrate the force of that improvised piece that elevates any imagination to the rank of art, so that the act of creation materializes into a large-scale work.

My enthusiastic imagination, caught in the shaft of an immense scheme of equations, with each addition of visual elements that intertwined, comprised, and exceeded the relationship with surrounding things, permanently produced a quantity of information flows. But, without restrictions, burning and producing an irresistible passion for that perpetuum mobile of aesthetic landmarks, it could destroy the work I had devoted myself to in an instant.

Imagination is the strength of the feeling that you belong to a perfect world characterized by the very inability to master it. I wanted myself to be a creator without boundaries invested with the ability to move successively from vision to vision on the background of the same composition, a demiurge who guides things willingly in a certain direction in the context of asserting an expressionist style which nourishes the ambition of going beyond the visible envelope of beings and the world.

Demonstrating the force of this improvised piece that elevated any imagination to the rank of art, so that the act of creation materializes into a large-scale work, involved a sort of tenderness for those strange realities, driven away from the field of knowledge. Please forgive this confrontation of mine with the field of my ability to build new beauties for the already known world, based on the inner laws that made up the games of tangible goods – that could very well have been just as intangible.

Leadership: Can you see yourself from the particular perspective of a world that fails to be yours, but reflects the reality that you constantly create through your thoughts?

I was reading in an older book about the naturalist Georges Cuvier. He would take a squid, place it on the table, dissect it and rummaged through the tender body, looking for the nerves, circulatory and respiratory organs, and other things. He would prepare organ after organ, draw, note. Then he would take the freshwater snails – Lymnaea and Planorbidae – and afterwards went on to the slugs. And the more he dissected the more the general picture was clearer to him.

The meanings attributed to the work and the creative self were revealed, in my case, by interpolating the missing parts of the imagined picture, and to the image always corresponded a different area, full of adjustments, until a painting full of force and magic would take shape. Dissecting. Processed. Innovational.

The collage of a particular world painted entirely from the imagination of a mind related to superior things, where each event acquires another value, where every moment acquires another dimension and significance, aims to explain the misunderstood things that yield the right fruits. Sometimes I was no longer making the difference between the image previously seen in reality and that of the false splendors that were hiding in the deep layers of my creation.

The compositional concerns, as in the case of paintings with living or still-life, in which are done arrangements and organizing of elements after considerations of color, exposure, size or shape, would discretely direct my attention and perspectives towards an artistic technique of interpretation of background joints that could not only have been achieved through the usual means of reproducing what can be seen. But, rather, through what can be felt and experienced.

Leadership: Can you define the composition of an ideal world from the point of view of an imaginary reality, so that you can perfect the form your work takes?

Leadership is reflected on what can make you more efficient if you learn to observe something that you can only sense somewhere inside of you, later storing it in the body of concepts that you animate in the face of art. But this something, at times, appears to be increasingly hidden and you cannot always find it so that you may articulate it.

What you observe through imagination is the key piece of the collage of a creation that authenticates you as a holder of a background of thousands of images in memory that can appear anywhere, anytime, beyond anything, serving as starting points in the course of evolution scenarios.

Imagine leadership as an image in which you have to capture the entire universe and that a place of this kind is a place of artistic freedom. You are in a position to cast a sidelong glance up, down, right and left, then translating everything you see through an unusual lens, a lens that you see very clearly but you cannot explain to others, hasting to judge, not understand.

Leadership is not part of the category of visionaries, but also of artists, because it becomes an individual utility in the use of the meeting space between creation, the oneiric, imagination and embodiments.

In this direction acts the very organized form of adding elements of reference, from the fruit of imagination and construction of a new form of transposing ideas and feelings into sensitized matter. These, in terms of stimulating information, ensures a plurality of perspectives on the subject of interest.

Any leader-artist is led in each of his actions by the following rule: "feel and experience all you imagine".

Such a seeker of novelty first controls the composition he thinks of, so that he may be able to control the shape his work takes. It's like when you fall in love with a woman: this is only possible if you accept her fully with all of her defects. But in turn, she takes over that significant part of you that induces receptivity and sensitivity.

Does the painting that outlines your style of leadership facilitate the transition from "producer" to "promoter"?

Here, composition (which must be, to some degree, the measure of the order of an immense scheme of equations in which are used the properties of the reality you try to bring into your consciousness and that of others) represents a set of relationships between what you forge through feeling, inner vision, imagination, not only through "command and control" thinking type.

Like a magnetic field acting upon a conductor, composition (highlighting all those thoughts, experiences, traits that define you) acts upon leadership through the fact that it brings new functions of making something new, such as that of interpreting connections you achieve through the means of intuitions and revelations.

Remember that the meanings attributed to the work and the creative self are often revealed by interpolating the missing parts of the forged image, and to the image can always correspond a different area, full of adjustments, until a picture full of force and magic takes shape. In turn, this picture shapes the style of leadership that facilitates the transition from "producer" to "promoter."

The Producer is a world forger, a passionate designer who changes reality according to his personality and attitude. His creation imitates reality according to his attitude to a certain subject, to certain currents of art, to a cultural fact, to all he sees is changed radically in this life. The Promoter is the revelator of a unique image that has to go around the world.

Leadership is what you notice has changed into the thinking of the world after your creation has been accepted as a new vision of the imaginary, where life is drawn in more precise outlines of a new orientation of approaching high ideals.

The Phenomenology Of Artistic Composition highlights the connection that is established between art and leadership, through forged images that can radically alter reality, in the sense of an imaginative orientation or of an intellectual and affective renovation.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phenomenology-of-artistic-composition.html

The Phenomenology Of Authentic Knowledge

On February 04, 2016

Be your own model of inspiration, escaping from the habit of accepting narrow horizons of perception of reality.

I pounced on a small part of the border called "My secret plan" with full responsibility, like Jean Valjean who tenses all of his powers to pull old man Fauchelevent from under the stuck carriage. I realized that the effect I had upon the world was in fact a replica of the attempt to "share your own kind of hero."

And since no one can easily move his beliefs, as a chess piece is moved when in danger of being taken by the opponent, it was vital for me to consistently follow my entire counterbalance in the face of an eventual error resulting from this border. A narrow horizon of knowledge aims to bypass a dreamlike, unexplored world.

Seen from somewhere up above, everything happening in this tight engagement of the conjunctural experiences, between the simple exploration and the different interpretation of the events of my evolution, as far as the possibility of applying the coercion called "Transcendence", it would've seemed without a doubt to be an intangible invention, a case of turning a random fact in the reason of my being above what can be thought of or understood.

Only after a few years, reaching the sublime of an immense victory over a certain type of being, I was going to realize that during this whole journey in me stesso it was as if I was seized in the spell of bizarre situations, worthy of the game "XCOM: Enemy Unknown". From explorer I had become a conquistador.

I could not say even today if this had happened due to the influence of the belief that I am more than the arithmetic sum of simple incentives, or if it was merely a consequence of the surpluses of appearances from which essence transpires. A single thing I can say with certainty: you must be a gamer to make it easier to obtain control over inner relationships and at the same time to become aware of what is happening outside of you.

Leadership: Is the main object of your knowledge the relationship between the strength of your presence in a place where you have not physically lived and the strength of your life in a continuous superlative?

A tendency of the attempt to escape from the habit of accepting narrow horizons is felt in the fact that can't always convincingly distinguish between the two opposing forces, otherwise defined in the abstract. It is the force of your presence in a place in which you haven't lived physically and the force of your experience in a continuous superlative. Both show the quality of your mind of developing a new understanding and of not being limited to what we call the conventional parameters of the "experiment" of life.

Leadership, introduced in the backbone of performance reaches new limits, always accepts new challenges, involving varied experiences of the self. You are your own model of inspiration. In this regard, the ability of using and exploiting the power of the mind – to jump in alternative borders and install alternative versions of observation, so to see everything from somewhere up above, always from a different height, must always be strengthened by the belief that you will always have something new to learn from yourself.

The main object of the knowledge that the creator of an image of the type "an existence seen in opposition to an illusory essence" proves is the alternative of a world cloned after a reality much deeper and more advanced than the one accessible to all.

I cannot disregard what a representative character of Paul Auster's work thought of: "We are not where we are, but rather in a false position. Because of a weakness of our nature, we forge an imaginary situation and we sink in it, and thus, we find ourselves in two situations at the same time and it is twice as hard for us to escape."

Here we distinguish the conditions of a superiority that resides in fabricating and immersing into an imaginary situation, which places us on a different plane than the one related to the conventional of certain situations. It is a false place in relation to what it appears we are experiencing in reality. What is the place we occupy in the perimeter of an independent understanding called compromise?

The compromise with conscience, negotiating the limits of a victory over the inertia of assuming other perspectives and ways forward, can change the ratio between what you can know and the objective reality. If you are in a false position, forging all kinds of imaginary situations, it actually means that you manage to rise up on a different path, towards a new dimension that at first you couldn't even imagine and one which brings an important contribution to individual knowledge.

Consciousness has as a support the approval of accepting a reality that others deny. People who cannot assimilate a new knowledge through self-induced revelations can only relate to the arguments offered by the surrounding reality, which they assess rationally. But for brilliant minds, the surrounding reality sometimes proves to be a prison, not a calling to themselves that facilitates that "much too far away" of authentic knowledge.

A single grain of the great wisdom of the world can withstand any temperature: "When you are in a prison without bars the worst thing is that you are not aware of the screens that close the horizon; you wander through a thick fog, believing that you can see through it. You don't even suspect the existence of things that escape you."

The progressive acquisition of an increasingly complex knowledge is the result of an individualization creation, of good quality, which emphasizes the reality seen in opposition to the daily existence of each person.

The Phenomenology Of Authentic Knowledge highlights that personal "declaration" of accepting the conditions of a superiority residing in fabricating and immersing in an imaginary situation, but one that turns each individual into their own unique model of inspiration.

Authentic knowledge results from the interpretations you ceaselessly attribute to your inner world, in the countless quarrels with yourself, with your soul, and with your mind.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phenomenology-of-authentic-knowledge.html

The Phenomenology Of Magic

On February 03, 2015

Learn to believe in what cannot be understood, integrating yourself in a culture of originality and unique experiences.

I was rather looking for the basis of the real in the game of the inner world than in the solidity of the outside world, everything black on white, pushed by the desire of defeating the impossible. Even to the negation of my nature. As if my mind had been framed in an intangible border that gave me individuality in relation to a gigantic effort of controlling the explorer instincts of misunderstandings. And the veiling of my mind in a mist of mystery of a higher order, impenetrable, clothes in the unusual ornament of appearances in which you could capture the signs of a time of noology, made it that I couldn't distinguish beginning from end.

It was an unmanageable contradiction between the tendencies of understanding the impossible that had its roots in the games of shapeshifting, in the distilled lyricism of essences from a calculated spectacle of masks. Substantia mysterium. A nebula in which the meaning of life could get lose in the 180-degree rotation of reason. What could I have added to my perceptual horizon, so full of meanings full of misunderstandings? The answer was simple. None other than new varieties of fictional forces, acting in a sense convenient to my repositioning in a real that wasn't everything.

Does Dante not say that doubt offers just as much enjoyment as knowledge? I would've wanted to be present everywhere in that version of my integration in this impossible, like in a magic mantra, to be the witness of all unimaginable events, of all beginnings and ends, to confront nothingness, to master the material, to accede to the peaks that seem unattainable in real life. But the ghost tucked away in my mind was stronger than me. What would Christopher Priest have to say about this regular chaining of the phenomena of consciousness that accepts relativism?

The man with the black cape stepped into the spotlight and in their intense glow, raised his hands in sight, spreading his fingers to prove that he was hiding nothing between them.

- Look at my hands. Now I am making my last trick. I will pull a bouquet of flowers from the hands in which you know I have nothing.

Leadership: Can you ensure the exceptional condition by which getting close to the active character of knowledge is achieved without using the negation of your nature?

The differentiating activity of the self is the main constant in the equation of limits that need to be assumed and surpassed in the base of existence, thought and conscience. And the inclusion of utopias and realities in a complicated game of identity dilemmas, lived in the singularity of a world located on another plane of existence than the usual one, creates an unrealistic version of your ability to represent the axis of a natural phenomenology.

However, an existence whose meaning is reflected, as in a mirror, in what cannot be seen, can ensure that exceptional condition through which getting close to the scientific character of a story that enchants. To find yourself at the border between known things and surprising things is an opportunity of integrating yourself into a culture of originality. It is a unique experience of revealing an unseen world that gives you the chance to restoring yourself like a sort of magician of the methods of tricking reality. In this case, what can be seen cannot be touched, the meaning deviates from the requirements of verisimilitude.

Albert Einstein said at one point: "The most beautiful and profound human experience is mystery." He believed with all his being that the feeling of mystery underlies all trends in science and art. Do you have the ability to establish the reality of your duplication in a coupling of forces opposed to classic mentality? Do you have the power to metamorphose your whole mind into a ball whose meanings cannot be fully deciphered by anyone?

This means, narrowly, to reveal a new facet of knowledge by experiencing and going through mystery until achieving the main objective: personal reinvention. And leadership emits a different frequency of approximating your own identity, which must coincide with that of the meanings you convey. Be careful what your magic consists of !

Using the negation of your nature to make a quicker approach to the active character of knowledge requires using credible arguments to conceal your dominant feature by combining notions, ideas, effects. These, even though they sometimes seem absurd in a certain context, reach a certain moment of revelation that causes viewers to discover that you are someone strong, resourceful.

Such a "I am not who you think I am" kind of negation can induce some confusion to those who look at you, but it is one of the main causes (perhaps even the most important one) that allows you to accomplish things that no one thinks possible.

Leadership: How it is reflected the doubt towards the demands of reality by taking into account the truth found behind the experiences that individualize you?

The formula of any scientific approach can be expressed as: "I want to believe in what cannot be understood". This brings to the fore the possibility of obtaining a rational understanding of mystery, going from the game of appearances to truths that can provide a new science. The inclination towards the mysterious, towards the unusual, the appetite for miracles are in your nature, but they must constitute a foundation, a direct given of the development of science that others can love, even if they cannot explain it.

If you do not capitalize what is particular, whether embracing mostly the notions of the art of transformation and the repositioning against your own experiences, whether, on the contrary, by fully restricting the sphere of knowledge you limit the angle of approaching various views of the mind, then you will fail to fit in the spectacular path of the development of leadership.

The destination of unicity – that can facilitate your access to the fundamentals of the science of breaking loose from any petrification in the rigorous, to dedicated yourself to a different, more subtle reality, inspiring new patterns of thought, starts with the innocent game of appearances and mirror images. They question your relevance of placing yourself under the baton of an Alter-Ego.

Doubt towards your own self, namely to the truth behind the experiences that individualize you, going even to the negation of your nature, offers just as much enjoyment as knowledge – because it prepares the field for your unchaining from the influence of a narrow perspective of understanding complex phenomena. These phenomena can produce significant differences in the results of your condition as an "immigrant" who first limits his possibilities of creation.

Leadership is that particular thing you suggest in a certain context in order to achieve a positive overall effect on multiplying the relationship between what is not known and what can be done to make it all possible in a different reality.

The Phenomenology Of Magic is closely linked with the development of creative thinking that has no relation with the concrete man, but with the man transformed into a superior entity that can only be understood by taking into account the "hidden" parameters of his own nature. That means to rather look for the basis of the real in the game of the inner world than in the solidity of the outside world, everything black on white, pushed by the desire of defeating the impossible.

To make your existence plausible through magic, by amplifying the feeling of power and by creating the impossible, that is worthy of a superior leadership. Hence one of the main traits of the leader – openness to the new, the ability of combining and recombining the representations of reality – and if need be, to give them up.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phenomenology-of-magic.html

The Phenomenology Of Representativeness

On December 06, 2015

Raise the question of time on another plane, bringing into play the intertwining of relationships between "Old" and "New".

Thus, Eisenstein has to solve a complex compositional problem, imposed by the concrete case which appeared to him through the theme of this film. The solution to the time problem was sought for a very long time, it was and old and constant concern of his, and it is probably the case here that we say it. "The Strike" was in fact the crystallization of a fact repeated continuously historically, in a fable which encompassed an entire experience accumulated historically, so in time. The film "Potemkin" solves the same problem in a different manner, focusing a revolutionary period into a single representative episode.

*The optics used in both cases was that of focusing on the principle of the metaphor: symbol in one case, synecdoche in another. The dilation of the events in the film would've led to the historic fresco in time. The film "The Old and The New" raises the question of time on a different plane, bringing into play the intertwining, the conflict between two stage of human history. **

Leadership: Can you achieve that experience of progress in stylizing the composition to achieve the unification of the subject and composition, using the approach of a visual representation based on metaphor?

Leadership is reflected in the forms of expansion of the methods of combining the elements that turn creation into an act of communication. Basically, the user of science communicates his points of view vis-à-vis a certain peculiarity of his personal way of relating to a certain context or subject, focusing especially on the principle of metaphor. We are dealing, somehow, with the way of capturing several different frames of events or happenings, by other means of perceiving reality, so that the coherence between the foreground and the background can be combined in a single representative episode.

Preferably, regarding the area of research and the highlighting of the image of a certain subject, is that these elements distinguish themselves as a form of advanced knowledge. Here occurs increasingly often the tendency of focusing on establishing principles and assigning symbols to key components that ensure the validity of the promoted "product." Meaning, the movie. This can be fine-tuned by encouraging the focus on the metaphor principle that an image should be viewed as an opening of a road, not as a closed door, in order to be credible.

Or, as one person on the web said: "The metaphor has to be emotionally saturated, creating an image, because the image is "the bullet with its center moved, it sticks in memory for years."

Directors and artists, in general, follow a direction of development based on research on the absolute size of the plus-value resulting from enlarging the meanings attributed to happenings or surrounding events, in relationship to man, time and the given story. The crystallization of a fact repeated continuously historically, in a fable which comprises an entire experience accumulated historically, so in time, represents the factor that determines the proportion between lucidity and imagination.

Leadership: Can you revise your vision of artistic representation through a different conception of creation and its diversified character, so as to give a unique note of the unification between subject and composition?

The events have the chance of becoming an episode representative for the way in which these makers of creation understand the relationship with the world, with reality, time and with themselves. An episode able to suggest the entire set of aspects that make up the mission of giving life to certain characters, making the processing and defining of compositions, new data and types of concepts more exciting.

Leadership, being able to also give interesting results in determining the types of personality that correspond with your own understanding of the world, includes the relationship between lucidity and imagination. And the representative is what grows by exploiting this relationship. It should also be taken into account that a creation can be valued only by the ability of the director to adhere to unwritten "rules" of the moment, and to focus more on form than on content. For example, it may be more important to understand the idea conveyed by the film, than to choose in image that will have a great impact with the public.

Only those who manage to conceive a certain primacy of representation by raising the issue of time on another plane, brining into play the intertwining of relationships between "Old" and "New", will be able to grasp that experience of the progress in obtaining unification between subject and composition.

To concentrate an image in a single representative episode means to give a truthful note to the composition that triumphs through an ingenious chain of sequences containing the value of "absolute intensity" at the level of the transmitted message.

The Phenomenology Of Representativeness implies that quality of artists of highlighting unique traits of a certain researched subject, in relation to the world, reality, time and to themselves, with the purpose of obtaining new compositions and concepts that are worthy of the appreciation of others.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phenomenology-of-representativeness.html

The Phenomenology Of Science

On February 06, 2015

Access the power of science to enter into the subtle game of confusion, amplifying that characteristic of thinking that arises from the contact between experience and the thread of life.

Everything seemed detached from a set of views beyond appearances, beyond reason, beyond things, beyond the infinite. In agreement with the unique area of pseudo-truths, under the sphere of improvisation and unpredictability. Isolated, I was in a vast process of evolution, stretching as a sort of directing attention in another direction, expressed through an entity of meaning that fed itself with the answers to the endless questions.

Nonconformist. I was cast in a role that was not credible for a normal man, in a world dominated by a science that varied on so many unknowns arranged as combinations of continuous and interrupted lines within generalized coordinates. The task of coordinating indexes and perception sensors involved in developing a new cognitive structure became more complex and critical as the questions and answers were gathered.

Implausible. I am at the point of utmost altitude, driven by that unending thirst of catching between the vertebrae of the mind the ineffable that only the genius can release, which burns you to the depth of your soul, making you involuntarily enter into a subtle game of confusion, yet still attracting curiosity. The indefinite that I could not fit in a form, and that God Himself with His omnipotence had branded with the red iron of the measure of the esoteric transcendental, became a product of impulses that generated spontaneous outputs.

A perspective indicator. I did not limit myself to general observations, but I began to attribute metaphysical meanings to attractive searches, fluid feelings. At the risk of exaggerating the edges of science, damaging the truths obtained through revelation. Like leaping into understanding the universe, moving from an obscure space to a clear space.

I think I resembled French botanist Lamarck: "He was reading one book after another, filled whole reams of paper, scribbling book pages with a lot of notations. An amalgam was born in the mind: the judgments of the medieval alchemists were intertwined with the ancient Greek theories, and the contradictory hypotheses collided in his brain in a kind of mad dance."

Leadership: Are you guided by the temptation to place science anywhere in the space of subjectivism, building integration patterns of a new orientations coordinates at the existential level?

The essence of the first metamorphosis of science is a kind of incompatibility intimate with madness, in the process of continuous and unmistakable reflection on personal reality. The way you train your own thinking, which is a class of considerations and reflections that can only be found in the subtle game of confusion that triggers a new wave of questions and answers, under the sphere of improvisation and unpredictability, enters you into a sort of mad race towards achieving a different degree of development.

More specifically it is that progress of science able to make you master the solid foundation of a deep and revealing experience, the unique effects of a new reality. The true art of mastering science is highlighted in what is not obvious, what is not visible at first glance, in the reality masked by assumptions and exceptions. Leadership attains in this new context an adage of unlimited power, because it allows you to discover what attracts you as information and significance, not only as an orientation of perspective on a medium and long term.

A Russian scientist said at one point: "Unlike art, where the most important thing is vivid and immediate reaction to what we see and hear, in science you need to learn to amaze yourself of the results of thought, of the meaning of knowledge gained. The noblest of motivations and the one that best suits the spirit of science is curiosity, the desire to learn how nature is made."

Information extracted from the observation of life, from the contradictions and twists of profound transformations, creates the way to new points of reflection, being the privilege of the desire to learn how nature is made. In your mind is born an improbable amalgam: judgments are intertwined with theories and conflicting assumptions collide in a mad dance.

Leadership: Does the opposition you encounter between personal reality and the unclear taste of endless questions serve the distinction between the significance you attribute to existence and the effect of its final confirmation?

Reconstruction of new value scales, a new power base, a broad vision and mature start from the actual experience of the self and life. And extends up to a priori judgment, namely, torn by experience. Here, science, through the combination of higher significance, is constituted as a cohesion of truths, of reason and views beyond the sphere of experience – measuring the relative importance of different results – with yourself.

Leadership that values unity between man and experience can be summed up as so: to fight hard until you manage to defeat yourself and, finally, to take control of the situation. It is the result of a self-surpassing which is achieved by increasing understanding of impact phenomena; it is the result of thinking that occurs at the contact between experience and a real thread of life that seems detached from another world.

So we could say that this kind of leadership is the result of the science of the power to enter involuntarily into a subtle game of confusions caused by conclusions, observations and analyzes of the "unknowns" of reality, yet drawing curiosity and producing results through the convictions based on choosing from multiple variants of approaching them.

The final confirmation of existence comes as a result of diminishing the intentions of limiting the effects of transition from the certainty of a reality that cannot be extended – to the possibility of surpassing yourself that is accomplished by communicating the truths gained through the revelation of a new world.

The science that broadens your horizon is measured through what you get after you have eliminated the cause of this suite of contradictions and confusions that can distort self-image relative to the subsequently found reality.

The Phenomenology of Science can be associated with the plurality of operations of processing information, a way to collect representations of aspects of abstract reality, and extracting the essence, a feature of thinking that occurs at the contact between experience and the thread of life.

This approach is reflected in the outputs that you generate at each scanning of impact phenomena that can totally change your perspective on life. Practices such as indefinite, contradictions, confusions, paradoxes or antinomies of the finite-infinite type, light and darkness, life and death, old-new, good-evil, truth and lies, etc...

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phenomenology-of-science.html

The Phenomenology Of The Particular

On March 14, 2015

Follow that guideline of your path towards superior thinking, expanding your perceptions about what an event of learning and discovery can offer.

I continued to believe in something every step of the way, without evidence that this certain something exists, so implausible, as the flame of a candle held by an invisible hand. This something pulled me out permanently from any law of existence, in the failure to adapt to certain fundamental conditions that I as of yet did not know, but felt as a consequence of overlapping the real and the imaginary in a cycle of oscillations of different frequencies.

I would've wanted to be able to define that "something", to shorten its existence that became very problematic, for my potential for madness to not climb too high, to not get to a limit of vanity. This something is not for everyone, bat can happen anytime and anywhere. You do not have to answer for your deeds before any authorities. Through your whole being, finding the same old you, a certain someone of someone else before being known.

I would've wanted someone to understand the mysteries that I felt somewhere, at the limit of my situating in an un-analyzed area – of The Particular – understood only by the thinking of the chemist who reduces all compounds of the elements to the force of chemical attraction. In an actuality that doesn't want to become the past when it meets the future, as an idea that gets lost the moment it takes shape. Could this "something" reveal its irreducible identity to me, inviting me to its grand prize: to develop on the ends of a continuous axis of the never-before-tried?

Once he reached the bottom of hell, Dante pierces it and climbs to the other side of infinity. "The something" places itself where there is nothing, obliging without obliging. A universe of imagination, nondescript. A kind of irresistible mystery that requires effort to be discovered. Life gives you something unique, unknown, whether it is evil or, on the contrary, good, perfectly fitting with the ambiguities and clarities of your entire becoming.

Leadership: Are you confronted with the experience of merging between what is out of your sight and what seems obvious to you in comparison to the perception of a possible unity of things?

Life continuously gives you a special "something" – the particular – an effect of deviations from the systematic, perfectly fitting with the ambiguities and clarities of becoming – as a kind of symbolic representation of your whole aspiration towards the mysteries of discovery, towards "Dante's infinity", giving the guiding line to your path towards a higher knowledge.

The something is the proof of things that are not seen, but which might happen. It is the reflection of things that take place in your heart, even if they remain invisible to others. And when the something eludes you, it means that your perception of things is devaluing. Perception must open the door to the experiences of life. American writer Wayne Dyer said it best: "When you change the way you look at things, the things you look at change." They gain power over your life and your future results; they will take control without delay.

The unity of things is based on experiences that change your life both from the perspective of what should mean "opinions about what is given" and what the term "certainty" refers to when concerning matters that are important to you in order to obtain a certain result. The unity of things encompasses the totality of the attributes of those parts of your ideas, beliefs and accumulated knowledge that can determine the conditions in which access to a reality is made to last.

The road to superior knowledge begins with the determination of "something" from a larger picture of the things that unfold in your life.

Whenever I tried to understand the circle of the surrounding phenomena through the vivid life of things, I missed the image of a reality tainted by the moments of a life that ought to have given it life. I felt like Captain Nemo in search of a distant earth that can only be discovered by the power of imagination. What seemed clear to me in comparison to the perception of a possible unity of things was the desire to experience a wide range of emotions through the tough and permanent filter of the question, "How long will their order and nature work?"

But seeking the unknown and believing that you've found it and mastered it, as you wish for it to truly fit you, in resonance with a new body of information, from the matter of thoughts twisted in every direction within the mind with which you constantly fight, can elevate to a cardinal principle that most depressed feeling of lockdown, preventing you to act in complete lucidity.

So, do not let yourself be fueled only by the geography of the imaginary. The particular has its counterpart not only in your mind, but in everyday life. Everything is there to be discovered, to let you connect to your inner fire, to that energy that gives you the energy of freeing yourself from the slavery of the ordinary and the familiar.

Leadership: Can you capture the essence of things that are expressed in the world of your ideas through the experience of assuming an identity that is not enough to itself, but is defined by relationships with external elements?

Every thought is born from the cult of the concrete, given by all knowledge rooted in direct experience, viewed from the perspective of transformations that deal with working with the self, allowing for its evolution. But changing the perceptions of what existence and building a set of values means, depending on the interest manifested for what you are as a human being, depends on the fundamental conditions underpinning the "particular" – the role, evolution and its finality.

The fundamental conditions or, to put it differently, the circumstances on which the appearance of a phenomenon or something that influences the course of an action depend upon, being able to stop it or stimulate it, is aimed at those aspects to which you relate in one way or another, encountered in life as being projections of certain moods and thoughts of the moment in the context of the explored reality. In close connection with the mystery that makes you different, bringing into account significant details that you hide in your definition.

What defines you also individualizes you, by specifying that it is about the approximation you give in relation to the components of the real and the imaginary in a cycle of oscillations of different frequencies.

You can check the validity of leadership, requiring a matching recommendation: "This is who I am", according to the vision and ideas that take shape while widening the perceptions regarding the particular. To manage to place a new foundation where there is nothing and obtain an equation that unifies impressions, conclusions and assessments in a sort of transformational experience, to create a certain level of awareness, a factor of evolution of great impact, from that universe of imagination, hard to define, it means to know how to get inspired by starting from scratch.

An identity that is not enough for itself but is defined by relationships with external elements is a construction of the relationship between your perception of reality and the perception you have about your ability to change the composition of reality.

Identity is what you expect to find new to yourself when you always have the opportunity to ask questions and find the right answers, even if you are not quite ready to give them special meaning and turn them in something of value.

The connection with the world appears according to your state from these two time intervals: the moment when you decided to initiate yourself in the mysteries of a less known phenomenon and when this phenomenon caught you in its grasp.

The Phenomenology Of The Particular highlights an isolated form of knowledge, gained by broadening perceptions and opening of the mind, in order to realize new aspects that surrounding reality offers you by probing the imaginary.

To act in full awareness of certain circumstances that define the experience of the "something", by designing a different process of self-realization, means to privilege the practical and personal initiative in acquiring a deeper knowledge. And this experience has the "never-before-tried" as a central point.

The question remains to be clarified: to what extent is this "something" suitable for existence and your abilities as a discoverer?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phenomenology-of-the-particular.html

The Phenomenology Of The Secret

On February 09, 2015

Highlight the uniqueness of your identity, without processing and putting your whole experience in the service of creating and promoting a virtual entity.

How is it unidentifiable? Excuse my language, my friend, but I cannot answer that question. It is an extension of a well preserved secret existential, the kingdom of my inner world, the effect of a body made invisible, rich in meanings, located in coordinates from minimum to maximum, according to the rules of a synthesis type permutation in an irregular time intervals. Its confession could mitigate the effects.

You try in vain to note the presence sensible of the magic fluid of pure science, which contributes to making whole the image of a special destination of suggestiveness. For as the work of art that takes on special meanings by gaining high steps in the aesthetic hierarchy, the secret – by a strong mind that only asks two questions of the world: Capital A and B – can fall subsequently to the destitute and the ridiculous as soon as it detaches itself from me.

Watch it fiercely, constantly whispers my heart, take care of him, do not deviate from the consideration you owe him, for behold, he is the imprint that makes you recognizable and unmistakable. My friend, there is something important at stake, a whole area of creative imperatives specific to the mathematician who finds symmetry between A and B, studying with the utmost rigor deliberately simplified models of the phenomenon of interprétation linéaire by redefining vector space – something you do not know and cannot explain, with all your erudition.

It is understandable why this impenetrable force must be abjured, this element of a superior substantiality that coincides with a point in space that comes to my mind and transmits to me the wealth of boundless knowledge, positioning me fair to God, to others and to myself. The key to this knowledge, the totality of potential which is not canceled at the border with the intangible, is the art of getting lost in the interpretations of the self and to find yourself in a higher form.

For eight years he lived in the castle of Count Herissy, French naturalist George Cuvier walked beachfront studying sea animals thrown on the beach at high tide. He sat for hours with eyes fastened on one point.

This detail awakens me from the world of thoughts that struggles strongly within the universe of my mind. I always hear the same Safe-Message: do your best to set the secret as close to one point as possible, but so as not to give the impression of a prison.

Leadership: Does your individuality tip the scales towards an upwards or downwards evolution – in relative isolation that separates you from the risks of a radical repositioning towards others?

As a consequence of constant feeding with new fruits of knowledge, leadership is crossed in the early stages by a subtle entity of the type "Private", which measures the hidden motivations for estimating uniqueness and the degree of dedication in serving an unattainable ideal. This level is superior to the claims of progress supported by creative ability and ideas in books acquired over time.

Merging what you have learned through study and what you gained through experiences, representing you as a more sophisticated version of the man you will become, not only attributes a very profound meaning to the leap toward greater self-realization, but gives you a touch of uniqueness.

To have an objective measure of personal transformation it is necessary to enrich understanding of the idea of "secret", thus reinforcing the findings of research conducted individually. The secret is a form of identifying yourself in a fundamental way with your differentiating character, projecting a certain superiority over others – to know something that nobody knows – the dynamics of a new cycle of access to a philosophy of individuality.

But does this individuality tip the scales towards an upward or downward evolution – in relative isolation that separates you from the risks involved by a new repositioning towards others? For the enhancement of a unique identity through an intellectual work supported and conscientious, reveals a picture residing in the deep intellectual universe, a prerequisite of how you perceive a side of yourself that can only be addressed on an equal footing – only in terms of superiority.

Here leadership does not enjoy the exemplary status of a privileged "vehicle" that satisfies the conditions laid by erudition and deep understanding of things, streamlining and facilitating the transmission of a push forward toward new discoveries, to break the boundaries that are increasingly more inaccessible. But faced with a unidirectional approach.

The secret aims at completing the image of a special suggestive destination that proves an original optic of an "old" world in new conditions, metamorphizing, of authentic living, split from the search of what is beyond the appearance of things or what is not in your immanent world.

An outcome of how "the secret" is build, as part of an experimental leadership, can be determined when you measure your productivity and intellectual performance with the level of understanding and perception of neophytes when implementing a new development direction.

Such a model of leadership processes higher frequency information, combines all elements of perspective in a harmony of a customized view. Or, rather, processes and puts the whole experience in the service of creating and promoting an almost virtual entity, even if it extends to personal "face to face" communication, it cannot shape the world based on a vision.

The Phenomenology of the Secret expresses the aspiration of perfection whose ineradicable symbol remains the unique edifice of professional credibility. Secret relentlessly denounces that "something else" as a term of a deeper understanding, but it cannot respond before a "court of appeal" when it is subject to validation of critical judgment. And leadership is addressed only through a form of mutual understanding.

How can you keep track of thoughts and ideas that mix in a deep and dark vortex, without wasting them in a kind of spotlight, without you yourself doubting them? But more importantly, how can they safeguard the future of this art called leadership?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phenomenology-of-the-secret.html

The Phenomenology Of The Value Of Things

On July 09, 2015

Learn to know the "High" function of things so that you use the logic directed towards their knowledge as a solid testimony in support of the formation of a new reasoning.

I wanted to grant myself the freedom to think of things that really concerned me, when the very meaning of their importance and the faith in all that they could cause change in, had a correspondence in day to day life, even if life revealed itself to me as a great mystery. Something strong and alive, applied by the formula Thought + Illusion = Magic, for every value of my identity, from which the fields "discovery" and "meaning" would be obtained, in the meeting point between the amplitude of life and the moment of escape from its screenplay.

Who could have believed me? Who wouldn't have been tempted to say: so, you dared to believe that you could turn an essential thing, by its importance, into a life meaning? And this meaning, between the limits of what human power does it fit?

It is needless to mention that, in the ways of many that viewed things and even myself, everything seemed an exaggeration, an attempt to recreate the same system of meanings of the experiences that gained new values, a wide use. Things, that same as experiences, vibrate at specific frequencies.

Maybe it was only a figment of imagination of the superconscious that clarified as new meanings were formed. Along with the distinct reason for which I became a universe, part of a whole that acts and thinks in terms of essentials. All only because of the hidden seeds of the mind that, same as drugs, gained solid form after the copulation between matter and energy. But the effect had put absolute domination over my life.

Maybe I wanted to highlight the dimensions of the great futurists' conception, I thought that such a way of thinking is superior to others.

Who would have tried to understand the state of things that my researched mind tried too early to discern, to be there where things are included within the very value of life, in the direction of a "something" from beyond notion and logic, would have been immediately projected into a world whose existence went by entirely unsuspected. Except everything that was served to him as being a universal truth.

Leadership: Does your work have the capacity to be the foundation of the real life, or is it a testimony to the "habitual" belonging of things to the right to acquire a new form of conceptualization of your own life experiences?

The work that represents an artist is the image of all the things that surround him, from the customization of the life experience, from the suggestions of a great perspective on creation or the symbolic space of receiving isolated parts of nature.

A work based on the fabrication of universes un-probed by anyone else, containing the balanced combination of science and experience in crafting a meaning of the superior self, has the life of real things. Namely, it consists of the essence of that which you extract from the bond of everything that surrounds you, it is to be, to perceive, to experiment, to search for something truly valuable in the variables involved in the causal chain that influences your way of thinking.

Same as things love and acquired in time, the work is complex and particular. And their study, the shape of functions to be merged, separated and framed in a broader context, the temptation of a retreat of identity becomes ever stronger, as well as the outcome of their adjustment in an area of values and of the meaning attributed to inspiration, it overs us a measure of their consideration and putting them to use.

Leadership: Can you turn everything around you into a landmark of an artistic creation that invites the viewer into the true universe of the values of a protagonist who offers access to another style of viewing life?

To quote French critic Hippolyte Taine for a moment, that so thoroughly wrote about Balzac: "He was a collector, almost maniacal. He needed wonderful books, antique chairs, precious furniture, of special carved frames, specific paintings. He allowed himself to often be trapped in unpleasant situations due to the desire of obtaining porcelains from Saxa, tapestries and whatnot. His passion for beautiful things resembled a sort of physical itch, it was sooner a sensual desire rather than a noble taste of the spirit."

Leadership begins to take shape where the product of everything that surrounds you is reflected in a realistic plan of development, into a plan of probing and re-organizing of the self, in a more professional manner, in a certain style of thinking. If someone knows the function of things, then they know how to use them to support their own development.

Things become accessories and harmonize exceptionally into a unique whole, into a space filled with potentialities, subjected to an orientation that takes into account the bond between life, work, ambition and art. To turn leadership into a work that rebirths from the things you love, you own or think about, is the greatest quality of an artist, of a man destined to do great things.

The artist inclinations, such as the faculty of discerning information using the aesthetic or hidden dimensions of things, often prove to be synonymous with facilitating the process of conceptualizing their own life experiences.

To conceptualize life experiences means to give a new name and a new meaning to the particular features of surrounding things, fitting them into a vision that does not go beyond their tendency to be a figment of imagination.

The arguments that support the formation of a new vision relate to the perception and interpretation of all forms of expression of creativity consisting of the sum of the things that you have paid attention to up to now and the indulgence of giving them a new meaning in the needs of life.

The Phenomenology Of The Value Of Things can be understood in terms of content and orientation of all things known that, always gravitating around man, create the space necessary for individual liberty to define its training and style of thinking, throughout the work that is accomplished by uniting science with life.

Have you acquired the depth of studying surrounding things? Do these things have the function of stimulating thought and the function of representing yourself in relation with life and science?

The Phenomenology Of Time

On July 12, 2015

Recognize that facet of time that applies to the relations between who you were, who you thought you are and who you wanted to be, passing it through the sieve of the imaginary.

At times, I was possessed by the infallible desire to endure time, in a state of total acceptance of the imaginary. Clearly, I nurtured the hope of reaching the future, in direct collision with the mind and experiences of other individuals, on the long and roomy passageway of the invisible. The impasse I found myself in, a moment of straying by experimentalist tendencies that I didn't know where they will lead, was the opposite of what I was gaining in an effort to overcome the limits of significance to the phrase: "I am a world that should not be ignored".

To convince myself of the structure of a reality of which I thought was untraceable, in the virtue of laws that embrace eternity, I had to obtain the components of the "intangible" field by means of the potential of deepening what I only assumed, from which, slowly, derived the concrete – whose expression I did not know. Could I return from the world that was about to be back to the world that was before?

Time was more an enemy than a friend, because I was not able to guess that deep promise from within me, that call to a special reality, to a change that could have made me understand more about myself. I was dealing with that orientation in space during a hearing of the most exciting existence, from Umberto Eco's novel, in which everything moves in a particular direction, awareness becomes attention and attention becomes perception. This is what troubled me:

"In the face of inexplicable facts, you must try to imagine many general laws, whose links with the facts you are dealing with you do not yet see. And suddenly, in the unexpected connection between a fact, a result and a law, you see a judgment that seems to you more convincing than others. Try to apply it to all the similar cases, use it to draw predictions from it."

Leadership: Are you committed to a revealing destiny of new meanings about the difference between yesterday, today and tomorrow, at the level of the thought of what cannot be mere chance?

Experimentally, in the way I reacted with this free madness, with this force given by the spiritual level that disturbed the very history of my life, stopped at a point of my fictional universe, as if written in the philosophy of an imprecise science, the laws of time could've been broken, leading to its cancellation. This process was somehow based on applying the formula $dT = eV+O$, in which the components of the dimension of time were produced by the energy of the void gathered at my point of origin.

In Dante, I have learned of the milestone between the middle ages and modern times, the sign of a moment that let itself be expected, extending to eternity. And such milestones, like in a sort of rebirth, made the transition to a new thinking, expressed in other structures of reality. Of course, my relationship with time seems different from situation to situation, because reality itself seems to be detached from an imaginary eternity that surpasses the philosophy of my science about sensitive matter, about society, about life.

These times, in privileged moments of my detachment from the world, facilitated the meeting with an Alter Ego inspired by the immortal brilliance of an indestructible whole, the horizon of a situational understanding hopelessly encased in an extremely narrow space. The amazement of all that meant "surreal" became an axis of knowledge, more of a clairvoyant judgement than a lucid intuition.

Time is the creative truth of a world in which desires, dreams, imagination are part of a reality that, in a more or less distant future, is already being built, prepares to be discovered, to simply become life.

Therefore, the meaning of my destiny gained valences of "an exception to the written rules of the world", more so because I was part of a fiction that has no properties other than those attributed to the story of events experienced under the prediction of some variables with an irregular development. It is no coincidence that my thoughts forged another reality, in which case everything that characterized me became an integrated part of a future that emphasized the creative word meant to write history through imaginary landmarks, by imaginary heroes, by the force of images, through the spontaneity of language.

Who does not have the pluses of the experience of seeing themselves from other worlds has none of its negatives. Both pluses and negatives are conformed to an increasingly probable distribution of the imaginary content that, by breaking the norms of the system of beliefs, tends towards a growing perception of reality in a remarkable context – one that has become a symbol of evolution towards a higher level of self-governance.

Time takes you beyond the limits of everyday life, being perceived as an assimilation of a materiality independent of yourself, or as an alternative to you in a parallel universe. To lead yourself to a new world, is equivalent to trying to recreate the original intensity of the sensation: "There is nothing more interesting than rewriting personal history", actually represents a re-conquest of time, decorated with isolated elements subjectively correlated, in which you renew your affinity to what is different or non-compliant with the beliefs of others.

This show, in leadership, that special power: to forge, to weave, to knot or intertwine new coordinates of evolution that can be characterized as such only in the moment of total acceptance of the imaginary.

Leadership: Could you return to a place that remained unchanged in order to realize how much you've changed?

The imaginary has influence over the science of leadership through the fact that it adds new characteristics to time and reality, in addition to the classic mode seen up until now, even if it is identified with a state of overstimulation. It is the source of revelations, a system of probability that introduces itself in the system of thinking in order for its manifestations to be seen. Time conveys the confidence in the experiences of another person who has access to a world exposed to interpretation and understood by ideas, notions, representations, by comparison with the relationship between memory and evocation.

To make the connection between time and revelation better understood, I will quote Nelson Mandela: "Nothing is more interesting than returning to a place that has remained unchanged for you to realize how much you've changed."

Here we can glimpse the sign of a moment that let itself be expected. We can recognize that facet of time that is applied to the relations between who you were, who you thought you are and who you wanted to be, merged as a prerequisite of development in a single point of existence. A new beginning, a new state of things, a new power, a new consciousness.

To turn leadership into a science of leaps to higher levels of understanding and manifestation you must constantly seek, to encounter, to obtain that ideal rebirth – your conversion to an approach meant to make the transition towards a new thinking, towards a new state, a new power, a new consciousness, towards superiority. So basically, an approach framed in other structures of reality, but produced in the temporal dimension of the imaginary.

The idea that builds the design of a new world, by optimizing a new structure of thinking, communicates the fullness and uniqueness of a work that arose from the desire to see me all the time in another place. Time can be understood through the relationship between what you are and what you look like in a fiction waiting to be discovered by anyone.

Leadership is a vision of time that teaches you how to look at everything that surrounds you from a different perspective as an alternative to a thematic composition whose first stop is to create a relationship between the character of a look outside of something in which you-are-and-you-are-not, and the author of a life out of the ordinary.

The Phenomenology Of Time highlights that courageous act of self-transformation, due mainly to the movement of thought, the imaginary, clairvoyant judgement and lucid intuition, having the test of time as an indicator.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phenomenology-of-time.html

The Phone Principle

On January 16, 2010

The important moments that can change your life are like a phone. You never know when they come, just like you never know when the phone will ring. But when it rings, pick up the receiver and answer. You could get the good news that would change your future.

A book I consider it was worth to reread is "The Count of Monte Cristo", by Alexandre Dumas. It tells the story of a young man, Edmond Dantes who, betrayed by his friends, gets to be imprisoned in the dungeons of d'If castle, where he stays for a very long time. For years on end, he stays all alone between the cold stone walls, without talking to anybody. But he doesn't think about escaping – far from him this thought. There are things that seem so impossible to accomplish, that you don't even think about trying, but to instinctually avoid them. He resigns with the thought that he will end his life alone, far from his family and friends, and this thought pushes him more and more to suicide.

But everything changes one day when another prisoner, Abbé Faria, unexpectedly enters his life. Faria proposes Edmond to join him in his attempt to dig a tunnel in order to escape (meaning to dedicate to this work three more years of his life so that, in the end, if they succeeded digging 17 meters in the ground, they would get to a cliff on the seaside; then to jump from a height of 15-20 meters risking to fall over a rock, assuming that the guards' lead wouldn't kill them first; and, finaly, be constrained to swim for a mile should they escape all these perils).

Leadership: Do you have enough presence of spirit to respond to the rescue call when your life relies on the order of reflection on the grounds of justifying your unhappiness before God?

Edmond starts to ponder and assess his chances. In the end, he accepts, under the condition that the Abbé teaches him everything he knows: Mathematics, Physics, History etc.

Edmond "answered" to Abbé Faria's call to help him dig the tunnel that would have brought them freedom, and, furthermore, this answer brought him other benefits, as well: learn how to write and read, learn philosophy and develop the abilities and skills in using weapons and knowing people. What would have happened should he not have answered "the call"?

And what would have happened if, when he got the chance to escape, he hadn't known how to use it, even though the chances were minimal? Isn't it? He may have never regained his stolen happiness and freedom, he may have never punished those who betrayed him, he may have never been able to reward those he cared about.

Like Abbé Faria said, the lucky escapes, those crowned with full success are carefully planet or fully prepared escapes, but the best ones are those occasioned by chance. The chance to escape, which Edmond had waited, finally appeared and, like any brave person and having initiative, he used it immediately. This was the great chance he had waited. Should he have failed, he wouldn't have got another chance.

After his spectacular escape and after he discovered Spada's great fortune, Edmond became richer than anyone. He got above everyone else. He got to be considered by everybody a great lord, a protector and charitable man, a respected philanthropist in the Parisian saloons, as well as a feared man, especially by those who betrayed him.

Leadership: Do you act in a way that highlights your intellectual strengths or in a way that only gives you a sense of freedom?

The phone principle is very easy to understand, but it's not at all easy to apply, that is for sure. A person's destiny can be influenced by the unforeseen events or happenings of the outside world. Many people have daring and grand plans for the future and they impetuously jump to fulfill them.

But when the storm comes and they are thrown through the rocks, they resign. I think there is one thing that could save them: courage and initiative. When opportunity will knock, just like a fearless tiger which waits a long time for his prey, they will have to jump and get it, with aplomb and agility.

The secret to the ability of detaching yourself from a turbulent past is to be prepared to take advantage of moments favorable to a rise of power from which you can create a true purpose in your life.

I'll never forget what writer D. Rosenzweig once said: "Napoleon Bonaparte may have remained a modest artillery officer in a small province town if it hadn't been for the great political and social subversion process in France, between 1789 and 1794. But Napoleon adjusted to the actual situation of that time and, taking advantage of that great opportunity (the revolution), he quickly evolved and became a counter-revolutionary as soon as he took over power. More precisely, counter-revolutionism drove him to power. He stood up in front of the nation and presented himself as the restorer of national unity, as the bearer of French glory."

In other words, Napoleon has managed to use brilliantly the possibilities offered by the events around him.

A characteristic of efficient people is that they know how to recognize occasions when they seem to be favorable and they jump in to take benefits from them.

The entire masterpiece of existence is the consequence of using a perspective of visualizing the future from an offside position at the limit, which can at any time trigger a dangerous attack or a change to score.

Napoleon, just like the Count of Monte Cristo, only needed an opportunity, a "call", in order to rise above everybody else. And if they hadn't recognized and profited from that one moment, which sometimes comes only once in a lifetime, and had given up before that, everything would have been lost.

Towards the end of the story, the Count of Monte Cristo sends a letter to his friend, Maximilian, which ended like this:

- Never forget, my dear friend, that until the day when God shall deign to reveal the future to man, all human wisdom is summed up in these two words: "Wait and hope".

Ring ! .. Ring ! ... Ring ! ...

Leadership means to recover your direction at a turning point anchored in that part of life that you lost, which you no longer belong to, that you would have preferred death, but pain can give a meaning corresponding only to the divine plan.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-phone-principle.html

The Picture Of Your Own Value

On March 28, 2010

Give people the opportunity to find the deep meaning of your creation, so it is not misinterpreted.

A special occasion has compelled me to want to have a talk with the one I consider a great artist. In a simple little room, but which seemed to me, I don't know why, fairly funny, maybe because of the four paintings mounted in a special way on one of the walls, the master concentrated his attention on finishing his latest creation, representing a scene from the Greek mythology, a scene full of life and expressiveness requiring a special technique.

I was looking at his painting with the same attention I had looked at his other paintings, on other occasions. You could see in him an unusual desire to do something spectacular, something that nobody has ever done, something that would be well-seen in society, and which would stay in people's memory. He would very easily and creatively transpose his own thoughts and feelings through the painting in which a variety of colors were concentrated, lively and dynamic colors, as well as the eternal white and black.

He could render with much talent the features of the characters with their natural coloring; the faces were very expressive, the features seemed to be exact, the eyes, the hands, the feet, the constitution, the clothing being attentively detailed with shadows and lights. I have never seen such passion for painting, for beauty and novelty.

Leadership: Can you distinguish yourself as an artist by applying an effect of enhancing the visibility of the entire image you create or just a portion of it that basically reflects the amazement of being yourself in an exceptional version?

Prompted by interest, I asked him:

- The impact of your paintings on others is the one you expected?

The master looked at me, a loving smile appeared on his face, as if he had long wanted someone to ask him that. He answered:

- An artist is noticed and admired by the paintings he makes, by the virtuosity with which he reproduces reality; by the way he knows how to convey an impression or a feeling. When people look at me, they don't see me; they see my paintings, the art I produce. The expressiveness and the beauty of them, the message and emotion they convey, the force of colors, contrasts and shapes represented, be they abstract or realistic, show the extent of craftsmanship I have reached in the field of this art.

My paintings are creations which prove whether I am endowed with a lot of talent or not, and if yes, how am I different from other painters. Nevertheless, you need a lot of inspiration, talent, technique and a complete work, for those who look at my creations to consider me a really exceptional painter.

Leadership: Does the choice of a sense of existence increase as a preference in the science you apply in shaping a perfect brand experience in relation to the requirements of a revealing art?

This is the most important lesson that you, as a leader, must learn it. It is the golden lesson that you must learn during all your life: people will never see you, but they will see the "painting" you made.

The painting is the sum of all your qualities and skills, as well as defects and imperfections. It reflects the talent you have been gifted with, and which you must bring forward. Reflects the skills you fulfill all your tasks with, with which you plan and reach your goals. Reflects your passion for the art of leadership, for perfection, but also reflects the way you are different from all others, by a unique style, efficient and balanced.

On the other hand, it might also reflects the incompetence you prove in leadership over time, with all its defects: with the negligence you treat people, irresponsibility, your carelessness, your lethargy and many others. The painting is, in one word, your value.

A revealing art has within its composition that knowledge that open you up to the unlimited scope of an experience of renewing the means of expression, referring to the building of harmonious connections between all the innovations that you try to manufacturer and the content of meaning that receives various forms depending on the imagination and culture you promote.

To become a better leader means making an exceptional painting from all points of view. The more nuanced is your painting, the more expressive and original, the more you will be appreciated and higher considered by those around you. You can add huge value to your leadership only if you have inspiration, vision, and potential and if you have the unusual will to obtain maximum performance.

Leadership: Can you elaborate a new formula of your uniqueness in relation to exceptional?

In relation to exceptional, bringing with it a new formula of your uniqueness, taking into account the leadership domain, the picture would be defined –not just as a landmark of your value, but also as a necessary presence in private life, a joining to a deep reality, which objectively exists beyond you, beyond the perceptions that others have of you.

This reality is designed to ensure that necessary cohesion between you, the artist within a creation and affirmation space, and the world of idealistic expectations of people outside this area, which can also be yours in a mirror that deletes the unsightly or deformed details.

The painting brings up the type of static, but very flexible object concerning what prints in people's minds, expressiveness or shadelessness in a wide area of meanings.

A very important role in shaping a perfect brand experience has the development of a new formula of uniqueness in relation to the exceptional one. Referring to the fact that what you are attempting to convey through the image must first be a guide for the one who wants to know and explore the unknown, then a journey of self-reliance in a world of difficult adaptation, and, in end, a space of encounter with God.

Tomorrow's world of knowledge and understanding has high hopes for the general meaning of the painting, which the individual can invest the world with. And rightly so. For before becoming a leader, the individual plunges into an anonymity that lacks scale, a reality perceived only inwardly, so in a certain impersonal area of existence, where access to a new conscience, free from any restraints, seems to be strict and problematic. No wonder you can't anticipate the form your ideal takes or every one of your virtues when your objectivity is challenged.

Through this painting, specific to self-concept, you will always ensure extra aesthetic character to your value. Tomorrow's world has high hopes for the possibilities of spreading the art of being an "artist", valuing your efforts to be different regarding the presence of intellectual and volitive aspects, which positively influence tastes, to repudiate gaudy image production.

The art of being an artist is based on the revelation you experience through the image projected over the world, finding the expression in the sense of creation that the reason for a new way of manifesting through the need for self -expression and the passing through the filler the sensibility of a symbolic chromatics.

Conclusion: Do your best to get to a high level of performance. Your value is reflected by the "painting" you make. Just as a painter searches for the most appropriate means of expression, so you have to search for the most appropriate means to demonstrate your precious qualities – harnessing them by creating a personal "painting", as more complex and realistic.

Leaving something behind you, something that would remain in people's memory, something that would take your organization to another level of quality, better and more beneficial, demonstrates your value as a leader.

Your value is reflected by the "painting" made by you.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-picture-of-your-own-value.html

The Pilgrimage Of Truth

On April 02, 2009

Carefully take care of every detail of your personality, showing skill in shaping your character.

No one dared to help the widow Regina Lampert besides Peter Joshua, a stranger whose good and generous intentions ultimately proved to be just a strategy to enter her good grace with any price, in order to obtain her deceased husband's wealth. Everything was perfect between the two of them. He showed a responsible and trustworthy attitude, expressing in a clear and deep manner a sense of security and solidarity, while she, mesmerized, seduced by his charm, gave herself up to his imagined scenario, making everything under his guidance and influence.

Everything changed in her life when she came to the conclusion that Peter Joshua was just a crook who used the qualities which nature endowed him with to persuade her to disclose him where her husband's money were. Thus, for the first time, the link between the two plans was clarified: the affective plan, which created her a sense of safety and comfort, and the rational plan, which caused her a certain degree of instability, risk and interior depreciation. Regina Lampert was submitted to a real challenge.

For those who watched the movie "Charade (1963)", it is clear that, in the young widow, coexisted two mentalities, two different conceptions about Peter's character, which were, however, both diametrically opposed on the relationship between them. One was the limited, careful attitude towards him, the other was an acceptance of any compromise, which gave him a state of apparent security and stability.

Leadership: Can you reveal the value of your own self with the help of a visual-revealing experience corresponding to the unfolding of a flow of images strongly loaded with emotional states?

A movie with a happy ending, I would say. Peter falls in love with Regina and even saves her from death, rescuing her from the hands of other hunters of her dead husband's wealth. But what turned Peter into a good Samaritan?

His character. Or, better said, the need to restore the balance and truth in his life and in those of others. He had the will to eradicate "the evil" out of his own interests and harmful thoughts. The moral returning to his old concepts and beliefs meant his release from "the dock", the cage of impure and harmful beliefs.

There were always sensational images between Peter and the Queen, good to set against the backdrop of a troubled, but adventurous and challenging life. Images full of surprises in which a search for emotional states can be performed, more on how the human personality is shaped around lives in which needs and circumstances are intertwined, in which small things make big differences.

We can more easily understand how images can make a positive or negative impact on people's lives based on how they look their pain in the face and begin to feel equal.

Some people view their differences as resources of sensitivity and reasoning about the essence of self-respect. Others, perhaps more deprived of the spiritual dimension of life, look upon their perishing with their own eyes, than to share their possessions, often losing the comprehensive understanding of the life of the world and their life within it. And there are those who secretly look at their own weaknesses as they would look at their reflection in the mirror, and indirectly refer to their shortcomings, thus having no chance of achieving their goals.

Leadership: Does the way you turn things around that you consider are under your control mean that any character can appear in the multiple position in which he is positioned by the meaning of life?

You shape you personality as you please, according to the rules that you impose yourself. It is interesting and significant the fact that the germ of truth and personal knowledge emerges precisely from here. Getting to know your own "content", your own personality – where positive attitude, a healthy mentality and chosen and well-established qualities should prevail – is the first step towards gaining peace of mind and a resonance deeply beneficial over others. In confrontation with yourself, you appear to be another man; the whole conception of others on your personality changes. They get acquainted with another man.

Just as a swallow return in the spring to its nest which it left the previous autumn, so do you, for your leadership to have an echo to honor you, you must first rediscover yourself, you must return to you own "shelter" that you left by your fault or that of others, and you must restore your inner balance. Take care of every detail of your personality, showing skill in shaping your character.

A character can appear in the multiple position in which he is positioned by the meaning of life when he has to choose between two opposite variants: he can imagine things that are false, but he can only understand things that are true, or when he tries to keep his integrity despite the most terrible attempts.

Leadership can broaden the meaning of life if we come to the conclusion that any man who has power is inclined to abuse it; that any man who tries to be good all the time is obliged to ruin himself among the great number of people who are not good; and every man who loves something feels the need to confess.

The Pilgrimage Of Truth designates that inside process of knowledge by which you separate good and bad. The way you shape your character resides precisely of this self-knowledge process by which you can "overcome" this sloping road which, in time, can seriously damage your leadership and relationships with others.

True verdicts are given when knowing the truth. If people find a difference in "tone" among the majority of your actions, then they will leave you.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-pilgrimage-of-truth.html

The Pleasure Of Making The Slide With My Own Hand

On July 19, 2010

Leadership is the power to maintain your vision, even when resources are limited.

In terms of distribution, Eisenstein had serious problems. He had arrived accompanied by only a few of those who were to play the leading roles, but a number of important performers were still missing. True to his own ideas about type, Eisenstein looked for figures as expressive as possible. Strauch was tasked with tracking them down. But not only him, but also the whole team ran all over the city, looking for the faces requested by the director on the streets, in trams, in offices or meetings.

The doctor was not found, and Eisenstein, as a painful compromise solution, chose an actor. One day she was going to film in the boat with him and, indisposed, she avoided looking at him. He only looked at the others in the boat, internalizing his irritation. In front of him was a fireman from the hotel where they lived, employed as an electrician in the team. Eisenstein mused sullenly: "Why do they hire these skinny guys to hold the heavy mirrors? This one is capable of letting the mirror fall into the sea or break it, which is a bad sign."

But suddenly he looked at her face. With other eyes. He put, in imagination, a mustache, a barbison... On December 01, 2024, in the scene of rolling down the steps, became Eisenstein himself. He said: "I could not deny myself the pleasure of making the tumble with my own hand."

Commitment to a vision is expressed when you choose to be personally involved in the creative process, demonstrating the talent to face practical and artistic constraints.

Cast examination is an essential part of the complete film evaluation, because the right choice of actors can decisively influence the quality and authenticity of the film. To carry out this process as functionally as possible, the directorial vision must be expanded using special creative techniques. The director's eye allows the visualization of the expressiveness of the actors, their dramatic potential and the ability to embody the characters. Close observation may reveal anomalies such as inauthenticity, forced expressions, or role inadequacies.

In complex cases, such as those encountered by Eisenstein, it may be necessary to use an indirect approach, such as the analysis of behavior in everyday situations, which provides a stereoscopic picture of the actors' potential and a wider creative field. Thus, the director can discover unexpected talents in unexpected places, such as the hotel stoker or the gardener in the orchard. If you look carefully, the eye tells you a lot about reality and life, but especially about how to create a story from the details.

Authentic leadership involves personal involvement in realizing the vision, even if that means taking on unexpected roles.

The correct interpretation of physiognomic aspects requires experience and in-depth knowledge of the cinematic type and psychology of the characters, especially since every detail can change the audience's perception. Eisenstein, faithful to his own ideas about type, looked for the most expressive figures, sometimes having to apply an imaginary "pince-nez" to the faces he encountered to transform them into the desired characters. If an unsuspecting worker was dressed in the proper uniform, becoming Dr. Smirnov in the film, then it is possible for any ordinary man to become a memorable character.

This creative approach in casting allows the director to overcome the limitations of traditional casting, finding novel solutions, such as turning a worker into a doctor or personally assuming some roles to achieve "with his own hand the degringolada". Thus, the casting process becomes an extension of the artistic vision, contributing to the film's authenticity and originality, as each casting choice reflects the depth and detail of the director's narrative intentions.

Visionary leadership consists of the ability to redefine reality according to one's own perspective, highlighting the ability to see beyond appearances and transform unexpected resources into essential elements of success.

The pleasure of making my hand tumble is a kind of creative release when you get directly involved in the chaos you create, because it gives you absolute control over every detail and amplifies your personal connection to your work. I say this knowing that every artistic gesture is adjacent to a vision that embraces both imperfection and spontaneity leading to unique results.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein , Tineretului Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-pleasure-of-making-the-slide-with-my-own-hand.html

The Poem Of Human Consciousness

On April 07, 2010

The treasure of Christian conscience is the infinity that man carries within him and which, with hope or despair, he tries to measure with the humility of the feeling of his being, by his deeds.

The reader guessed, of course, that Mr. Madeleine was none other than Jean Valjean. I have looked into the depths of this very demanding self-consciousness before. It is time for us to look again. We cannot do it without being engulfed by emotion. There is nothing more frightening than this kind of research. The eye of the spirit can find such brightness and darkness nowhere other than in man. One cannot dwell on anything more dreadful, more complicated, more mysterious, and more boundless. There exists a spectacle greater than the expanse of the sea: the sky. There also exists a greater spectacle than heaven: the human soul.

To write the poem of human consciousness, if it were a single man, the most insignificant of men, would be to merge all the epics into one superior and definitive epic. Consciousness is the chaos of delusions, lusts, and trials; it is the hearth of dreams, the cavern of thoughts of which you are ashamed; it is the hell of sophistry and the battlefield of passions.

Enter at certain hours beyond the livid face of a thinking human being and look at what is hidden there, look inside this soul, look into this darkness. Under this surface silence there are giant fights like in Homer, there are fights of dragons and scorpions, riots of ghosts like in Milton, whirlwinds like in Dante's imaginations. How dark this infinity is which man carries within him, and which he desperately tries to measure with the will of his being and his deeds ! *

Leadership: Are you able to probe the deepest depths of your own being, without knowing your greatest weaknesses, but only through a confession that bears the responsibility for what took place?

Pain and suffering bring to light one's greatest weaknesses. From what man leaves behind, tormented by that desire to find a noble meaning in life, without stifling the sentimental spontaneity of choices of all kinds, important are some of the greatest potentialities of the self. That it has in it something of the tenderness of a soul that circulates under the signs of a bittersweet destiny that has its ups and downs, that it has in it something of the steadfastness of a fighter, this only shows us that in front of the world the most illuminated are a little more reserved.

This man, named Jean Valjean, given to us by the hand of destiny through Victor Jugo, so trembling with the emotion of his creator, remains not only sincere and shy towards himself as well as others, but he has given us a summary of the great conscience, in all the appearances of his personality, which in the last part of the novel had become so varied. He represents the destiny of an entire nation, the lonely spirit of the departed in the light of God, most likely returning higher and suffering less from the challenges of life.

You have everything you want in his life: sin and blessing, pain and love, loneliness and spirituality, you have the story, you have the symbol, you have the interpretation of the human soul in a good evolution of the life of those who do not speak, but who have feelings made to expresses beyond articulate language a whole conception of the world, namely: "Everything man does is to escape, to be saved from the limit."

Scholarship also participates in this spectacle of impenetrable confessions, being available where moral firmness intervenes in the correct interpretation of divine laws.

Leadership: Do you have the power to maintain that primordial state of inner life that lies "beyond the knowledge of the intellect", through an encounter of the inner life with the speech of God's mind?

The remembrance of the facts, if it has nothing to do with that sweetness of feeling, however light it may be, cannot highlight the true power of man — which is his meekness. Everything is there, and yet it is a unity that is the very note of his soul marked by an Estrapedanthar(a change of the inner life), which erudition turns into a corner of heaven. So there are tender people whose hearts mourn the longing for something they could never have, even though they may be very talented. There are others, with a high-performance computer attitude, but cold to the senses, who play skillfully with the simplicity of others and, when they want, bring tears to the eyes of others.

In the character of Jean Valjean, more than in any other person, comparable to other literary works, the feeling itself is shaken by what his character says. Without lowering his eyes to the power of passion, he is constantly struck by the shyness of a tender nature, he catches you in the spell of a story from which you can almost escape, and this is due to its most precious feature: the feature of being simple; lack of formality, complications; lack of artificiality, affectation, hypocrisy.

And while his face and the voice of others are indifferent to us, and we feel no closeness to their lives, Jean Valjean's work can never be separated from him: the intertwining of his thoughts and feelings of love with the thirst for knowledge always enlightens us, even if it sometimes gives us a smile in which there is always a lot of grief. And in his way of talking to the world, one sometimes feels despair, as if having the caressing modulations of a child who feels a loving look gliding over him in suffering.

The speech of God's mind highlights the dialogue you have with yourself in the same peace with which God welcomes the wonderful end of His ways, filling your heart with joy, because you have entrusted everything to Him.

The Poem Of Human Conscience refers to the very soul laid down in a true epic, called life, which God does not make easy, for it is part of the personal cross of salvation. For these reasons, we should not view life as a challenge to stand up and answer for it, but as a "ladder", a continual ascension to the glory of God.

* Note: Victor Hugo, The Miserables, State Publishing House for Literature and Art, 1964.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-poem-of-human-consciousness.html

The Poem Of The Man Who Seeks His End

On December 08, 2012

Follow the tangled thread of trends of the "Human" within you, without ensuring the full exploitation of superiority towards other people.

The moment of revenge arrived. But, oh ! Who on who? What a mess ! And what a strange coincidence ! All the changes of direction, all the metamorphoses are committed for the first time in them, in both of the artists, in the two strong characters coming from rather similar backgrounds: Llewelyn Moss and Anton Chigurh.

The full exploitation of that gem "superiority" an ethical component of the lawlessness sphere performance and its implications, was the ace in the hole, the key of the entire match between the two of them. A grand conquest of Byzantium, but an opening of the Pandora's Box that would have produced strange effects.

When Llewelyn Moss had to leave the hospital, when those terrible words of the assassin who was on his tracks, echoed in his ears, the generous offer, carefully selected "You bring the money and I'll kill only you, but I will leave your wife alive ! " he understood the terrible sentence.

A sudden transition into another level of existence, in the middle of a battlefield, between good and evil, following the laws of one law: "I decides who lives or dies". The most dangerous turning point, fueled by rebellion and intolerance. An agitation somewhere within him just as strong as an engine revving at maximum. Llewelyn's answer came unexpectedly, like a stone thrown down at random: "I decided to transform you into a special project, Anton. You will not have to come looking for me. I'll find you ! "

Could he at least try, or even, consider an alternative, another one than sinking into the deepest and muddiest waters, which did not come from a spring of clean conscience? To be initiated into the mysteries of diving into those murky waters, was the same as suicide. But, in the same time, his only salvation.

Leadership: Does the way you relate to the situations in which you experience life mirror the way in which cohesion is achieved between what you regard as a moral duty and what fulfills you from the point of view of the ability to cope with an overwhelming challenge?

Creation called "life" VERSUS tragedy called "death". A poem of life, without rhyme, in which Llewelyn could no longer trust. A poem, in which the metaphorical had no place. A deceitful lust of imagination, of the emotions and feelings of the moment, risky, which could end up at any time.

An "impossible", firm and very blunt - creeping through the most tortuous thoughts, which were forcibly making place, pulsing through his most fragile veins, relentlessly attacking the conglomeration of his red blood cells. But with the opposite effect.

A ray full of hatred, a ray of the true light of the one, who suddenly perceive the most authentic feeling of danger, by which was decisively perceived Llewelyn Moss. Time was precious. And rare. He must act ahead his rival. And at the same time, he had to find a reason in order to put an obstacle to his will, not be the same man willing to negotiate.

An evolved psychological war, a fight to the death. Two poets caught in a game of hard nerves, using the lyre of mercilessness, comparing, following and threatening each other. A bizarre confrontation between two muses, Erato and Terpsichore, in order to fulfill a correlative obligation. Forced to hide or run away, each of them putting to the beat their arsenal of thinking.

Two poets of the willful reason, two enthusiasts of the action, qui vont et viennent. A poet, who never got to complete his creation called "life". And, a poet, who has just delayed a little the tragedy called "death". *

Leadership: Do you represent nothing more than a random factor at the end of a transition from the denial of integrity to one of generating a unique profit in the dialogue between what "simply happened" and what "was not supposed to happen"?

The changes of direction, and all the metamorphoses that are done within you, are the fruit of a lifetime lived under the sign of the essential? Do you ensure the full exploitation of that gem - superiority towards other people of the same caliber? Can you, at least try, or even consider an alternative? Or, you accept to be the protagonist of a deceptive lust of imagination, of the emotions and feelings of the moment, risky, which may end up at any time?

Your ability to become another person depends on how you react to your own change, which in its turn has its roots in the structuring mode of your personality.

It is obvious that on the stage of everyday life, you will meet all sorts of twists and unexpected events, many of which are not to your advantage. Extreme situations when the model of your personality will be unmasked by itself like a straw man, which responds to the command of an external will, not an internal one, so reporting himself to some influences alien of his true essence. Furthermore, if this latter statute is very prominent, the leadership, just like the marble, may lose its glossy finish and its normal protection.

In this case, it is about a prominent figure model, which presents difficulties of assembling the components that participate in the implementation of a principle of finality, unique and essential. That operating principle of the "Human" within you, which combines two fundamental properties: self-renewal of the reason of "to be" and abandoning the idea of supremacy (the idea of owning something more important than others, to see you ruling over all).

A parallel relationship for long periods of time that underlies the functioning mechanism of a genuine leadership. An evolved psychological war that goes behind the scenes of your own existence.

Leadership: Are you able to assume a supremacy that starts with what you are capable of facing and ends with what you can accomplish by giving up?

There are evident these ups and downs who do good. Your reaction towards the transition from A to Z, by an increasing of the immunity towards the desire for supremacy, with the involvement of a reason, which calmly put order into actions and effects, could motivate you to put yourself in the service of people, through a noble goal, through great things. Therefore, exposing yourself, accepting an identity that would assure the continuity of life, finding some common ground with other people, sufficiently reliable, thereby, becomes particularly useful for maintaining a lasting leadership.

Jules Verne knew what he says when he concluded: "To acquire the engine that gives spectacular results, to ensure it to yourself its exclusive exploitation, this is the deal that must be made."

"The engine" that provides full functionality of your leadership, and that can offer spectacular results, is given by the relation YOU and THEM. A tendency towards reciprocity that must be maintained in the long term. A business that is developing in the pace of the reason of "to be" and which can help you get to the desired level of perfection, only if you can resist the changes imposed by the events of your life.

A leader never rolls the dice when he is unable to decide between two possibilities: to live or die, but to face them both with stoicism as if he should win a well-earned prize called: "The Master of Destiny".

The poem of the man who seeks his end marks that attitude of accepting who you are when you depend on surrounding events, without knowing how to make use of them for building around them your own strong identity. Or, conversely, using them arbitrarily in order to impose your superiority.

If you want to achieve excellence, abandon the position of supremacy, at that "who on who" you or others. Otherwise, you will disintegrate by yourself in a war of attrition, in which there will be no winners or losers. But only a transition from one state to another in the way to a more agitated life, in which you will miss its real joys, values and meanings.

 Note: No Country for Old Men (2007)

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-poem-of-the-man-who-seeks-his-end.html

The Poisonous Potion

On June 22, 2010

Protect your vulnerability in front of the constant of being great, without allowing anyone to impose themselves permanently in the sphere of your emotions.

Thebes, the city of the living. Pharaoh Seti returns to his sumptuous castle of the Nile river. However, when he enters his huge chamber, he found himself face to face with the servants of the high priest Imhotep, his greatest witch doctor. It's no fair thing, he says to himself. He furiously makes towards the balcony. There, next to a beautiful statue, Anck-su-namun, his wife, awaits him all alone with a loving smile on her face. He realizes that someone touched her. And no one but him was allowed to touch her.

He suddenly turns. Then, unexpected, the priest Imhotep, bravely and tenaciously, draws the sword from his sheath. Then Anck-su-namun, getting all her strength, all the courage lying inside her heart, gladly stabs the dagger in the Pharaoh's back. A deep groan takes his breath away, and his strangled voice seems unable to break through his stiff throat. Then, with an indescribable thirst, with a consummate hate, Imhotep strikes him the fatal blow. The king is gone. All that's left of him is a simple: "Once upon a time".

Leadership: Do you remain loyal to the values that give meaning and scope to facts that reveal your majesty, without giving up the impulse given by feelings?

Force against force. It's a terrible thing to be a Pharaoh and to feel deep inside, with a visible shudder, that your moment of agony has been decided, and it will happen straightaway, and you can't fight it at all. Uniting in a single thought, a single will, devoted to a single desire, the high priest Imhotep and his lover, Anck-su-namun, formed one power which brought Pharaoh to perdition. "God" proved to be lower than perfection, sharing the same fate of ordinary people, but in a violent manner.

I wonder how Anck-su-namun could pretend that she is faithful to the Pharaoh and loving him, and during this entire time to betray him with the high priest Imhotep. No doubt that her agility and subtlety, with which she managed to manipulate him, were the two weapons with which she deceived his vigilance. For Pharaoh, who was certainly conquered by her irresistible charm, would never have accepted being betrayed. As a proof, when he realized that he was betrayed, he was mercilessly killed.

Although he was very strong and brave, the Pharaoh was deceived by the strongest human passion: love, the attraction towards for Anck-su-namun. He should have better investigated how things are and to be vigilant, not to put all his confidence in her. This big mistake became an undeniable reality when he realized what lies behind appearances, and he paid the ultimate price for it.

Leadership: Can you cure a wound of love without turning it into a deadly wound?

"You never know if a woman's love holds true" once remarked the Spanish playwright Francisco de Rojas Zorrilla. And he was not wrong.

If the Pharaoh had been able to read Anck-su-namun's heart like an open book, if he had deciphered what lied behind her appearance, if he would have realized earlier her changeable and treacherous nature, then things would have been quite different. Nevertheless, the Pharaoh, overconfident in his own powers, built his entire life philosophy on the idea that everything happens according to his wishes.

Well, things didn't work out like that. In the end, he was defeated by the force of this woman. For she brought him to death, although she was not alone in this. Even so, she was the main culprit.

In leadership, before you are subjected to the amplification of a longer-lasting experience, you should encounter that safety distance that helps you better see what is the "peak of trust" in people, getting closer to the perspective from which God looks at what He intends to accomplish. A distance that will allow you to stop safely even if the heart continues to suffer.

Leadership: Can you control the role that others play in your life when you feel confident in a game played under the sign of a naive realism?

Every leader has a weakness. The Pharaoh's weakness was Anck-su-namun. Just like Judith, the rich Israelite widow who charmed general Holofernes – the besieger – and cut off his head while he slept, so that Nebuchadnezzar's army could not besiege the city of Bethulia, just like Jael killed Sisera from Canaan, who was leading an army against the Israelites, hammering a spike to his temples - so Anck-su-namun stabbed Pharaoh Seti so that she could spend the rest of her life with the high priest Imhotep.

As a consequence, we can conclude: the leader who abandons himself to feelings and lacks perspicacity proves naivete, having all the chances to be lied to, cheated and betrayed.

Not every good-tasting potion keeps your power

Love is blind. It is a nutritious potion, tasteful, which can give you energy and vitality, so that can be useful and can get you rid of all sorts of evil. Even so, at the same time, love can be a poisonous potion, which can make you sensitive, vulnerable to all sorts of influences, to everything happening around you. Love can be a fine and tasty drink fogging your mind, blurring your thinking and confusing your spirit, and finally leading you to failure. Powers become weaknesses if you sip of the poisonous potion.

Lower-level leadership is a consequence of the weakness of seeing you strong when power feeds your hidden emotions.

Conclusion: Any leader needs moral support, and he can enjoy the best support from his life partner, the one next to him for better and for worse. She is the one he can count on during hard times and who will never use the "poisonous potion".

However, we must not forget that any leader has at least one vulnerable point. And any rival can annihilate a leader, attacking him in this point.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-poisonous-potion.html

The Popularization Of Leadership

On March 14, 2012

Be prepared to triumph in the midst of large-scale events, giving way to an act of living and organic participation at a high level of spirituality.

The novel "Aztec" written by Colin Falconer ends with a special example of leadership approach. The famous Spanish conquistador, Hernan Cortés, being at a distance of about 1 km from the Mexican armies, addresses his soldiers:

- We are overwhelmed again. But think about how many times we've been in the same situation in the past months. Did we not fight an equally frightening force on the Tabasco River? And did we not triumph? Remember the Tlaxcaltecs and the cannons and the cavalry Narvaez was waiting for us with at Cempoallan !

He paused for a moment.

- We have always triumphed because we are not ordinary people or soldiers. Now you can all proudly say that you are Cortes' soldiers. In the years to come, ballads will be composed that will sing of our bravery. Because not only your courage, but also your skill in handling weapons, sets you apart from ordinary mortals. Remember that you have been chosen by God Himself to march under His banner.

To strengthen his words, he raised the blue-and-white banner, which had once fluttered on the mast of his ship.

- The cross will help us triumph ! And now I would like to tell you one more thing: remember that you are at an advantage as long as you have the strength to fight. These Mexicans do not want to kill you, but to take you prisoners for their pagan rituals and that is why they are more vulnerable. As you know very well, they will not fight as a united army, but individually. Today you will not be dealing with a battle, but with a series of duels. I think God will give you the strength to resist. Stick the swords directly at the target, do not turn them blindly over your head, so as not to expose yourself to their sticks and knives.

Leadership: How do you use the synthesis of all the "believe in something more powerful than yourself" experiences that have intersected around large-scale events based on a single constant?

The evaluation of the finality of one's own efforts to obtain an advantageous leadership position, has as a premise of appreciation the uncertainty that eclipses the course of events. That is, the eventuality of the finality of a large-scale approach, very advantageous in terms of the benefits obtained as a resource of the power of affirmation, is important for understanding the context and order of events that make up the world.

Cortés triumphed gloriously not because the events were about the one who was right, not because he knew how to persuade the world to follow him, but because he noticed the mood of the opposing army, not considering it dangerous. Recognizing your opponent's mood is more important than the influence you have over your subordinates. If Cortés had known that he was dealing with the army of a categorical leader, willing to sacrifice himself for a lofty ideal, he probably would not have been in danger in a battle with heavy losses.

Cortés' leadership experience was probably "believe in something more powerful than yourself", meaning it's not enough to trust your abilities, but you need to better assess the position of your opponents' faith in order to succeed. It all has to do with the events you need to focus on in a strong mood, and these large-scale events need to be based on one constant: the presence of God. That decision of God by which He chooses a number of individuals for salvation and glory.

I summarize by noting that a winning behavior is constituted by the interference of numerous psychological circumstances that often complicate or even make it impossible to predict the evolution of events. The winning behavior, as a whole, and that of people marked by the psychology of struggle, by belonging to a great goal, involves different levels of resistance and spiritual vibration, different levels of direction and encouragement.

The leader who is around the great events understood the true meaning of the divine words: "That is why the Master has set you above your companions / So that through you we may reach the will of God."

The Popularization Of Leadership is addressed to that type of hero who knows how to use events and people in favor of a deterministic God, for all that is honorable to a hero is the glory with which he surrounds himself as a dedicated servant of God.

It was not Hernán Cortés who conquered Mexico with a small army of soldiers, it was the man who put God's will first who triumphed in the midst of events.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-popularization-of-leadership.html

The Portrait Of A Lost Thought In The World Of Art

On June 21, 2017

Learn to look at yourself from the perspective of a hidden secret, to achieve a high artistic perfection.

What would it be if you were trying to draw my life in the colors of the night, with the richness of the fine nuances of tears full of hope and dreams, from a tension that comes from a mental program that is emotionally reflected, but which is manifested at the level physical? Does the poetry of the heart not have the same rights as the poetry of captive thinking in the abstract visions of art?

Important is how you look at me from the perspective of a well-hidden secret that leaves no room for any mischievous interpretation, but with care not to place it under the sign of a compensatory realism. Ideally, you have to represent your idea in living images, a trick with the change of inspiration in an intellectual and productive formula, beyond the romanticism that leaves no room for doubt about the feelings you give me.

Learning to look at yourself from the perspective of a hidden secret to achieve a high artistic perfection is to grasp the projection of a power of expression to which you can encompass its greatness.

Among the enthusiasm of thoughts that portrays the art of portraying an ideal of beauty, for which the secrets of creation always assume a new physiognomy, you must use the light pulses of the stars on fantastic and infinitely long lines. On which the premises of manifestation of dependence on beauty give the conclusion of a thought full of satisfied desires. How well do I fit into symbols of a transcendent reality behind the lyrical journey of Shadows of the Night?

Leadership: Do you express the desire for what is above you through a creative rendering of the distance between truth and illusion?

The gravity with which you look at me in a mystical dream can become everything, a stretch of a thousand light years to the center of the universe seen from a single angle: the aesthetics of the work of art.

Try to carry out a thinking experience, as is the practice of physicists, allowing fictitious fables to eliminate the hazard of reality. Can you express with sufficient force and warmth the truth of the phenomena surrounding me to achieve a high artistic perfection?

There is always something missing, it is true, as a conclusion full of confusions and without a right of appeal. And there will always be something else, like the moment of acting an attraction force in relation to the axis of a sequence of transformations. There are probably things you do not know about me yet, and when you find them you think something will change from the perspective of the pure portions of aesthetic theory? And how can you raise your ideals more than by rendering the relationship between natural beauty and beautiful art?

Here I know you better than you think, the way you manifest your self-forgetting, the pursuit of what is above you. Your present now speaks with my present, so the present is pleased because we both resonate with it.

In art, the special ability to realize the idea and the feeling not directly – by deed, but through a poetic rendering of the distance between truth and illusion, tends to the modern forms of visual art in accordance with the desiderata of the present time.

Leadership: Can you see what is above you by escaping from a state of a surreal story?

As the archaeologist's point is to reconstitute an entire culture out of its stone remnants, so too is the first and most important mission of an artist to penetrate the inner life of the model. A kind of gravity more than inherent that does not reveal itself at first glance, precisely because it hides roots entangled in a disturbing depth. And to find a balance between the sensitivity of pursuing hidden dreams, the rotation movement of a star and the escape from a state of surreal story.

The essential difference between me and whoever you perceive me to be in terms of creation is an indulgence of human nature in the exercise of contemplating a landscape that can have a profound emotional effect, surpassed by the awakening of a vision of symbolic force. Thus, you have the possibility of connecting with the infinite.

A perfect artist knows how to distinguish any color in the confessions of a mystery thirsty mind, even in the strain of an insatiable expectation from the time of inspiration, such as the color of the urge towards the universal, or the color of a vibration of ecstasy. Blue and Yellow blending into a framework of aesthetic thinking, freedom, and authenticity. Do you think if you never understand everything about me, you can even imagine it?

Expression in leadership is the space to represent an association between the interpretation of the model quality that the gallery of ideas and experiences puts at your disposal and the particular image that you form about yourself.

God, King, Honor, and Women. In the dimensions of art, with its intimate springs and its hidden consequences, in the symmetry of time, space and inspiration, these overwhelming presences correspond to the difference between the thinking of the poet and that of the thinker.

In the view of a literary critic like Nikolai Dobroliubov, the former thinks in a concrete way, without losing sight of particular phenomena and images, and the latter keeps generalizing everything, conveying particular signs in a general formula.

The Portrait Of A Lost Thought In The World Of Art represents a significant step in the creation anchored in the rigorous observation of human nature made in the direction of the art in which a face is a window inside of you.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-portrait-of-a-lost-thought-in-the-world-of-art.html

The Portrait Of A Rose In An Artistic Vision

On February 18, 2021

If science becomes an art through passion, then art must be a direction of sensitivity manifested in science.

I am a being created according to the laws of nature and, therefore, I am conditioned by the same laws that determine the existence of a "Double Delight" rose in the central space of my garden. Whereas this beautiful rose, amazing by perseverance, does not exist as a plant isolated from other flowers, equivalent to the image of a more comprehensive presence in its permanence, but exists as a kind of continuum between matter and spirit, as a universal link between two potentially autonomous worlds, neither of which can be considered superior to the other.

In this regard, I point out that the rose belongs to the Rosaceae family, the symbol of a spiritual resurrection and a mystical journey that opened my mind and soul to beauty, adaptation, change, governing my relationship with God through discretion, more through the distribution of the sensible rather than an order based on the equality of the visible and the intelligible that accompanies it. In addition, when you look through this lens, you begin to see nature with exceptional clarity.

Even in my secret manuscript, Tukerlyeress(The Mystery of the Incarnate Word), the rose occupies the leading place, because it needs to feel integrated in a protective environment, to belong to a mystery beyond the heavens, the mountains and the waters, beyond any earthly understanding. It is a presence full of meanings, a warm and intelligent interlocutor from the point of view of an artistic consciousness, pulsating with an explosion of colors, with a life not bound by imitations.

Yes. The rose is always where it is created, in a maze of words without death, in an omnipotent way resembling the perceptual confidence of a mystical being in front of a mirror lit by a candle, without any shaking, impressing through silence, reservation, obedience, virtue, like a poet who contemplates nature more through lyricism than through deep meaning.

Leadership: Can you bring a significant improvement to your perception of self-continuity as a result of managing sensitivity that can only be identified in a work of art?

Through my intellectual activity, accompanied by a voluntary effort, pulsing of something mysterious that amazes every beautiful loving eye, so leaving myself mastered by artistic inclinations still unexplained, I try to reach the state of domination of nature. Only through the Great Knowledge is everything realized. For this I have to differentiate myself from other people and to situate myself in relation to the ontological nature of the story that makes up my life from another world, from another space, from the perspective of the most delicate flowers of nature painted in rosy shades.

And yet, the mystery that envelops the main teaching of my dialogue with the rose, spirit alongside spirit, with a kind of aspiration to accept the ideal promoted by the Renaissance, seems to be a permanent tendency towards the purity of watercolor, pouring from unraveling the mysteries of nature to acquisition divine enlightenment. To better understand the middle of a century full of amazing aesthetic achievements, this is my main concern.

It is no coincidence that my self continues to take part in a reality that totally absorbs me, devours me with my consent and systematically detaches me from the banality of everyday life.

At this moment, I consider that the echo of a world beyond appearances is preferable to the overflow of a millennial nature that seeps into me, through the sieve of expressive eyes, through all the nuances of my life, a boundless curiosity. Whereas the rose, not only can it see it, but also understand and represent it through the filter of their own sensitivity that reflects the innocence of sincerity, spontaneity and undisguised curiosity, characteristics detected only in works of art. With this sensitivity the artist creates micro-universes.

Leadership: Is the unity of the world you experience through the act of creation distinguished by the materiality of a reality that builds its meaning, apart from the intrinsic meaning of words?

The reality that constructs its meaning, apart from the intrinsic meaning of words, is nuanced by using an image at least unique in a framework of artistic experiment in which the fragility of the being is significantly associated with a unique beauty of nature. Every creator must go through an immersion in the metaphysical being of nature in order to reveal his inner artist and create his own visual encoding code.

Suddenly, the rose takes the form of a mysterium tremendum when I try to understand the technique of painting, not because of an apperceptive psychology aimed at the world of colors laid on the easel, with freedom and skill, but rather due to isolating some fragments of my soul complexity strengthened by artistic collaboration with the addition of the wonders that have crossed its threshold for a long time.

Speaking of art. The famous novel "The Philosopher's Stone" written by Marquerite Yourcenar, begins with a quote from the learned Italian humanist of the Renaissance, named Giovanni Pico della Mirandola:

"Oh, Adam, I have given you neither an image, nor place, nor a gift that would belong only to you, so that you may desire and possess all images, places and gifts through yourself. Nature restricts other species by laws established by me. But you, unrestrained by any forbiddance, define yourself by your own discernment in the will to which I have left you. I have placed you in the midst of the world so that you may better search all that is in the world. I did not conceive you as a heavenly, nor earthly, nor mortal, nor immortal being, so that by yourself, freely, as a good painter or as a skillful sculptor, you could perfect your own form."

That's how it is. I am sure that if I were to exile myself in a sphere of the perception of beauty, and no less to delve into the practice of the vocation of beauty, expressing my boundless admiration for the height of expression, then the rose would help me decipher that "release" of the Impressionists that can only be experienced in nature. It is no coincidence that I have perfected the form of the image I am transmitting to the world. I am the agent of the connection between two vibrant worlds.

Art is the means of the creator to constitute himself in a vision whose perception requires a certain subtlety and finesse towards the rendering of a supersensible reality, observed only through the comparison between what is felt and what is contemplated.

The Portrait Of A Rose In An Artistic Vision is the image of a creator captured on canvas, in his own universe, in a moment of brilliant manifestation of a vision full of meanings that takes into account his possibility to transpose himself into other poses, without losing his identity.

The Portrait Of Exceptional Personality In The Sphere

On November 07, 2016

Try to create the framework of expanding the ideal self by capitalizing on the experience of meeting yourself in the form of a manifestation of creation attested by the progress of science.

Nicolaus Copernicus was a young man with permanent intellectual anxiety, with an innate propensity to create new ideas, and during the Renaissance, he had the opportunity to make them worthwhile. He quickly adapted himself to university life, buying books with avidity (a new and wonderful opportunity that emerged with the invention of printing) and taking part in the courses of the valuable mathematics and astronomy school. He explored the humanist ideas from Italy that began to gain ground in the face of the rigid scholastic dogmas circulating in Krakow.

He studied canonical law without forgetting his first love, astronomy and mathematics, as well as Greek history, medicine, philosophy and Roman law. In Bologna he had the chance to study with Domenico Maria de Novara, one of the greatest astronomers of the time. He read all the books he found about astronomy and took advantage of every opportunity he had to learn about the observation methods as they used to be in those times. Apparently, he began to think about a new, simpler conception of the structure of the universe: a heliocentric system with the Sun in the center and the Earth with the other planets rotating in the orbits surrounding it.

He was afraid, as he was going to write later, that "some people will immediately cry out for me and my ideas to be kicked out of the scene", explaining further:

"For a long time I had hesitated whether or not to publish what I had written to demonstrate the movement of the Earth or whether it would be better to follow the example of the Pythagoreans who used to entrust their philosophical secrets to their relatives and friends in oral form. to leave the work completely in its final form because of the contempt that I had every reason to anticipate about the novelty and the apparent opposition to the reasoning of my theory. *

Leadership: Does your existence constitute a unique set of conditions for testing an alternative knowledge from which the propensity to promote a new conception of the evolution of creation arises?

People are fully aware of their own value, concerned about what they can really achieve with the help of science, rises above the status of autonomous practitioner of new thinking, to be considered a masterpiece of their time. They develop skills wherever they are, without being limited by the amplified proportions of getting close to or away from the value of a single "Restrict" type variable that blocks access to an advanced thinking.

They are constantly moving in a direction that offer the possibility for extending knowledge and evolution beyond the area of experience, always working according to moral reasons, philosophical, objective and subjective. They are like painters who make countless portraits, exposing their works internationally without having the necessary approvals and without getting involved with other authorities in the field. Because they are predominant in their desire to affirm where they had not once succeeded, the desire of the obliged to flee to be found and to be fulfilled, and finally, the desire of confirmation in a space that had remained inaccessible to a beginner level.

To open new avenues of research and development in leadership you must raise your level of knowledge and understanding of the elements that contribute to the development of that science whose guidelines are rising. Seeking to harmonize your thinking with new elements that the force of science can generate, you will become fully capable of owning this quality called "Shining", which can lead you quickly towards a new dimension of your value.

Leadership: Do you re-evaluate the idea of attitude towards life as the full potential of innovation, in the light of the importance of thinking a different style of communicating things that seem important to you?

If you want to overcome the limits of cheap and imperfect knowledge, brush up on your determinant elements that stimulate the progress of your science. And make an effort to make it so that your thinking and creation become an autonomous sphere of leadership. Be like a painter who oscillates between erudition and brush, the features of his works combining encyclopedism, while having as a model and horizon of ideality the rebirth of a new concept of life, of a new approach to art and the learning of science.

Your science can compile a unique set of conditions for testing an alternative knowledge only if you become the conscious creator of a reality difficult to reach by others. And only if you succeed in building the logical line of a reasoning that uses new hypotheses of interpretation of the matches between the "obvious" and the "hidden."

An artist in science continues to manifest his superiority in overcoming the banality of naturalism, the bare artificiality of formalist experiences, and maintaining his philosophy of life with new theories of rationality. One of these theories would say that nothing is more necessary to succeed in making room for refined and alchemy things in his life than to stand above all through a sort of anticipation regarding the apparent intellectual opposition of the other researchers that may be contrary and incompatible with its horizons of experience.

A new conception of the evolution of creation resides in the experiences of life that enrich you spiritually, which matures you with both the good and the bad if you can evolve through wisdom and patience.

The most valuable creation of an inventor is that form of existence that stimulates the capacity to develop itself as a personality and as a deep, superior, spiritual, consistent, systematized intelligence, one who understands the meaning of the events and knows how to arrange for them and scientific progress.

The Portrait Of Exceptional Personality In The Sphere Of Science consists primarily of the main dimension of the life of the inventor expressed by the appearance of the intellectual, physical and moral traits, showing a certain openness to culture, to novelty, to perspectives that approach the future in a very wide way.

 Note: Ray Spangenburg Diane K. Moser - History of Science (vol.1), Lider Publishing House.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-portrait-of-exceptional-personality-in-the-sphere-of-sc

The Power Of The Leader

On June 26, 2010

He who does not prioritize his own Ego will not reach the Absolute and will not decipher life either.

The Romanian painter, Nicolae Grigorescu, was made to see inside of things. Silent, always thoughtful, restless, having not only the passion to observe, but also the gift of seeing, this man was unable to be satisfied only with what the shapes say on the surface. All the depth of this meditative soul demanded outside its proportion of depth, in the glance it cast upon things. He was not a hurried passer-by in this world, whom he sought to see without being seen. A hurried worker, yes. He hurried to shake off as much life as possible and understood as much as possible from the frightening flight of his moments. To see quickly, and quickly to say what he had seen.

His whole life was in his eyes. There the flame of his soul was burning. In the eyes and hands, which were just a continuation of the eyes. An urgent need to express his impressions in lines. He thought in lines. At home, on the road, in his travels around the country, as well as in his travels abroad, he noted what he saw, quickly, with the speed of instinctive movements. Even when he was sick and had to stay in bed, he felt in his hand that restlessness, that need to create. If a fly lingered on a drop of syrup on his marble table, posing for two minutes, the fly was on paper, ready to fly. In Paris, once ill and unable to move for about two weeks, all he did was draw the fantastic figures his bright eyes saw in the flowers of the wallpaper on the walls. *

Leadership: Do you build your vision of a model of reality that pushes you towards creation, towards the new, even when reality becomes a prison?

What is your life: a prison or a shelter? Referring to leadership, let's see this through the eyes of an artist who reveals the color of the imagination with the imagination of color.

The distinct color of leadership is imprinted by the one chosen by the majority of people, who have decided that it is best to represent them and ensure their interests. But the color of leadership can be likened to that of fresh, freshly picked leaves from branches that, far from being perfect, with various more visible or less visible defects, can make an excellent cake.

A leader must know and learn to feel, to perceive what he can achieve from something small, if not excellent, at least something much better… highlighting each of the components – good and bad. Being alone with yourself is not a prison, but a refuge from the endless noise of life in the middle of the world. Or, as the painter Constantin Brâncuși said: "He who does not prioritize his own Ego will not reach the Absolute and will not decipher life either."

Being alone with yourself is a painstaking job in which you have to learn how to enjoy yourself regardless of what happens to you when you are in the midst of the world. Yes, you certainly learn a lot about yourself from successes, but especially from mistakes, and most of all you need to know how to make sure that many accept change in all aspects of life – in thinking, in education, in behavior, in order to be in line with reality.

Leadership: Is the way you visualize reality different from the way your soul resonates with the environment you are in, considering that what is happening around you is the expression of what makes you and assumed person?

*"I never deliver the first blow until the stone has told me what I am to do to it. I wait until the inner image has formed well in my mind. Sometimes it takes weeks for the stone to speak to me. I have to look inside very carefully. I don't look at any appearances. I'm moving as far away from appearances as possible."*said the painter Constantin Brâncuși.

He was right. Before you listen to yourself, in an environment that resonates with your soul, you must observe the way time flows in your mind, you must find your energy both in the material body and in the way you visualize reality in your mind.

People's perception of the quality of your leadership, the actions, and the decisions you make is always very clear, rarely distorted by external factors – and therefore an infallible indication, a solid foundation for your form and leadership style.

As a leader, you must first educate these people, change their mindset, apply new ways to attract them to you. There are more and more cases of leaders who indulge in the pleasure of being in the lead, neglecting the quality of their leadership, or confusing this quality with the detection of the most demanding forms of change and adaptation to the new. The quality of leadership is given by the results you get in the process of changing the Self.

Do you play the role of facilitator of change, showing people from the beginning the need for their development through a reorientation of vision, motivation and the means to stimulate their development? Or do you just play an aesthetic role, which, out of inexperience or ignorance, could turn off people's desire to be better?

Can your leadership borrow the expression of an intense feeling that the artist is trying to convey by referring to the idea of raising man above his state of fact?

In the case of leadership, where all values, feelings, principles, beliefs are accumulated – which must be alive, able to influence, to impel, to enliven spirits – is added the problem of an objective analysis, of the systematic evaluation of man. In order for the leader to fully prove the evolution of his own Self, the proof of continuation not only of knowledge, but especially of sound principles, spirit and values, adopted and promoted, he must develop the analytical spirit that will allow him to self-assess and properly assess their people and the situations they face.

The power of the leader lies precisely in understanding the fundamental aspects of the human dimension, just as the power of the physician lies in his theoretical and practical knowledge. He finds a reliable ally in the previous process of knowing, of discovering the most uplifting feelings, aspirations, ideals that he releases, approaches, emits the human being as a whole, faced with difficult decisions (in order to complete it).

Only the knowledge of the constituent elements of the human being – by understanding its complexity, only the intelligent and beneficial manipulation of the mind and spirit that constantly nourishes its faith, the power to move forward – can prove its true value.

Only by instilling in people strong feelings that touch and vibrate the most sensitive strings in their soul can he prove the evolution of his own Self. For the functioning of leadership depends on the functioning of other people, just as the life of a racing driver depends on the perfect functioning of the engine of the car he drives.

The leader is not able to give value to his leadership alone, just as the subject is not able to give value to a picture alone.

In leadership, people are important, they always determine the size of the leader's influence, they are the ones who determine the leader's form of vision – but vision cannot be a criterion, and fortunately the masses will always continue to judge leadership only by results obtained. Leadership is an art that involves interpretation, the contribution of the individuality of the leader, of his creative vision.

Have you developed a solid relationship with everyone who works for you? Are you able to value your own leadership? How do you prove your true worth? How do you prove your evolution?

It is essential for a leader to know how to induce to himself and induce to others to feel that change is a necessity. And in order to accept change, he must believe in his own potential and that of the people, know how to self-motivate and motivate others, and especially believe and induce the belief that the future can be even better if changes are adopted, starting today, from now on.

Do you assist those who work for you? Do those outside your department or area of responsibility respect your opinions and ask for your advice frequently? Do those who work with you have a very good opinion of you most of the time? Are you constantly fulfilling your professional goals and objectives? Do people consider you an expert in your field and are they always looking to learn something from you? Does your performance take the team to a higher level? Are you a continuator of knowledge?

To reach the Absolute means to be aware of the power of the Ego with which you identify and which governs you in moments of reflection.

Perhaps, however, the absolute master of his own Self is that meditative spirit oriented towards loneliness, interspersed in the flow of a silent but fierce language, in any case artistic, by transmitting the emotion provoked by the most famous steps of peace of mind.

The Power Of The Leader lies in the Ego he is trying to bring forth in the midst of the world. Moreover, he must learn not to confuse the ego he perceives in others with his identity.

 Note: Vlahuta, Alexandru - The painter: Nicolae Grogorescu, Editura Tineretului, 1969.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-power-of-the-leader.html

The Power To Be Present In Your Own Masterpiece

On March 25, 2024

The value you assign to your activity is constituted by the decisive weight given to the birthing effort by an impulse that transforms each step into an act of self-understanding.

My sister, Oana Fântânaru, won another medal at the recent Running competition which, added to the other medals won in recent years, makes her the pride with which I raise my own standards. It is good that these successes are chained, so remarkable for their perseverance and commitment, in line with overcoming any obstacle of a physical or mental nature, giving birth to a kind of Inseloratae Endiogat Ishitiscur , a release from social constraints and an invitation to unlimited exploration of freedom.

With ease, with clarity in identifying the sensation, I realize that the blood that feeds his muscles during intense physical effort, the fruit of an efficient metabolism and adequate oxygenation, flows without restrictions, does not interrupt its rhythm even when award the prizes, because passion knows no breaks. Yes, she is my sister, blood of my blood, our impetus coming from the line of an artist who paints his life with the bold colors of passion. And if the artist in us expresses its efforts sublimely, through a kind of humanism that embraces every detail, then the flame that animates every gesture, making the muscles subtly dance, becomes the healing ray of our zeal, guiding us to our maximum potential .

Just as a painter possesses the gift of impressing upon the pictorial matter the suggestion of an identity of substance with the materialization of the object, in a synthetic configuration of forms, so the runner displays his abilities, harmoniously combining body and step, to create a vivid and powerful image of his determination. Not only does Oana, through intense effort, uncharacteristically break free from constraints, and not let a stone within her falter, but she gives the inner struggle a supreme identity, like: "a phoenix bird reborn from its own ashes" .

Leadership: You can create interactive art that invites active participation and personal involvement from the audience, transforming your artistic journey from a simple glance into a direct and creative collaboration where everyone becomes a co-creator of the artwork ?

My sister, Oana Fântânaru, has the soul of an artist before being a devoted runner, because her passion is the beauty she expresses with every step, through her attitude and through the energy she exudes. Art part of the challenge to find oneself in every step of the race, as if part of a living painting, spilling out beyond the limits of the sport, in a destino fatto per volgere il volto a colui che ha saputo cambiarne il corso a suo vandigto .

And only by observing her tension and dedication during the competition, her potential to become something powerful, and at the same time aesthetic, could one understand the psychological complexity behind her performance.

Always and always, my sister tempers her nerves in front of the competition, and her tension seems merged into a single entity Phoraaziel Ohatarrem Ethisitian , that is, beauty responds to the divine vibrations in the soul with the same sensitivity with which the painter touches the palette of colors, without feeling any constraint.

Leadership: Does the context in which you find yourself bring to light the importance of emotional control and clarity of objectives to achieve the desired success, only if it is marked by a mutual interdependence between two mobilizing entities?

It is almost impossible not to witness a doubling of the personality, for half of her thought and behavior seem conditioned by the uncertainty of the final result, that is, by a hopeful expectation, except where the ultimate goal is clearly defined. And the other half, carrying the torch of sublime artistic ideals, manifested only through expressiveness, pulsing like an incandescent heart, merges through an affinity born from the stars.

He must overcome this tension without achieving an impressionism that, up to a point, can be considered natural. And because she is my sister, blood of my blood, united with my spirit, looking from the perspective of an artist who paints with vivid colors and passion of the heart, I can consider her worthy to shine in the light of a common soulful vision: "Every step of race is a drop of color on the painting of my soul."

I was the initiator of her running steps, and she masterfully carried the baton of my spirit on the heights of the podium, in a harmony full of grace and power.

Leadership: How does your understanding of cause and effect in the course of events stimulate your search for the visual representation of conscious perception, as an image that challenges you to discover your greatness?

There has always been in Oana Fântânaru that extraordinary aspiration for transcendence, the effort to overcome oneself, like an epic of the fierce struggle that nature gives against man, and vice versa. In running, as in art, you cannot create a masterpiece without feeling the pulse of your soul. It is a magnificent exaltation of the continuous human struggle, of the immense energy of the man who never lets himself be defeated, being the symbol of the invincible being, of the perseverance that knows no limits, analogously to the artist's need to extract from himself the essence of his soul and to give the world a masterpiece.

Her fire is a fixed, burning star whose light guides her path, guiding her to new horizons. Her work of art, the toil of doing something grand and unforgettable, whether it's running or any other form of personal expression, shows the whole world that, in the face of unwavering will, obstacles turn into stepping stones to success, and any the steps they follow are striking, exactly like a choreography of the vision of an artist willing to face the limits and explore new horizons.

So, her course in the recent running competition is not only a demonstration of speed and physical endurance, but above all a testimony of inner strength, a proof of determination to pursue her potential to the highest possible level, without let no attempt or failure discourage you. This lesson of determination that Oana Fântânaru offers us, this reward of the vision according to which limits are only illusions that can be overcome, going beyond simple sports competition, becomes an example to follow for each of us, regardless of the field in which we carry out our activity.

The fulcrum of leadership is the triumph of the human spirit in the cross-challenges of art and sport, thus: "The power to be present in one's own masterpiece transforms the race of life into a journey of self-discovery and the expression of authenticity."

The power to be present in your own masterpiece aims at the path you must follow to truly express your aspiration and effort to overcome yourself, to bring out the essence of your soul and give it to the world in the form of creation.

In closing, my sister's story in this race is not just about running, but about the fact that every step forward on the course reflects a step forward in one's own evolution, in one's own journey of self-improvement and self-discovery. It's about the art of living with passion and turning every challenge into an opportunity for self-improvement, having the vision of a painter creating a masterpiece.

Therefore, it is worth stating that any runner can be an artist through what he achieves on the route. In essence, it is not about how to be victorious in the race of life, but about how to perfect yourself in this race like an artist who creates a masterpiece in every gesture and in every moment of self-awareness.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-power-to-be-present-in-your-own-masterpiece.html

The Powerful Confrontation Of Man With The Self

On October 03, 2013

Engage on the spiritual front, in the act of reforming the self, in order to find the optimum balance between reason and emotion.

The fickle hand hurries things. How to stay away from its destructive effects? The muffled sounds of fatality make themselves heard, accompanied by truly apocalyptic clouds which reflect on the mind's dense fog. On the unwillingness to accept the great enigma. Something eludes lieutenant Boyle, something incomprehensible, he doesn't understand the connection between all these.

When his right hand is caught and pulled downwards by the monstrous force, he instinctively feels the end is near. Worrisome sign. How could this happen? How did Hannibal release himself from the shackles? Confused, Boyle seems to feel blocked. And in an endless humiliation. The quick behavioral reaction can't be explained at the level of a conscious thinking.

But time lacks patience precisely in the huge moment of punishment. It's clear that the inherent restlessness, the most disarming dread fueled by the most unsettling suspense, can't be quenched anymore. It can't be pulled out of the grip it exerts over the mind. Similar to a fire that transforms anything, this deep restlessness, as if controlled by some powerful cohesion forces, activates nerve centers. It generates the inhibition of will and the action is blocked. The poor man seems to go through a numbness crisis.

Leadership: What is your mind's response to the life situations you face by streamlining an "I want to see if I can afford an extra-premium of sensationalism" intervention?

The reflex answer to this strange happening, through a sole deep strike, just like a scalpel, sections any strong connection with balance, with the spiritual front where the mind kept watch. And as the abnormal force propagates more and more in the fundamentally positive perimeter of man, the pressure in the circulatory circuit grows. The peripheral blood vessels start to dilate, determining a rise in temperature and a redness of the skin. Terror fully hit. Straight in the heart, it hit the misfortunate who had the courage to look straight in the eyes of darkness's messenger, death.

Barely now, when he can no longer cover the psychical crack where the powerful shadows barge in oppressively, unrestrained by any positive thought or good deed, barely now, does man discover itself in his weakness. In his errors, in his perdition. So well does Boyle close in himself, that he can no longer manifest his capacity to exist autonomously. Is as good as dead.

Hannibal Lecter, the character from "Silence of the Lambs" manages with the mastery of a magician to dominate a situation from which no one could escape. On his line of thought is placed not only the simple desire to escape, to evade from a well-deserved punishment, an unexpected move otherwise, but the public expression of a different trait of character, a much more serious one: he is able to oppose the law and to raise the level of performance of a ruthless judge who pronounces with satisfaction and without the right of appeal a death sentence. Everything that is put before him is condemned by a final judgment, as a proof of his cruelty and harshness of character.

He dirties his hands with blood in a gesture of sensationalism to respond to a higher performance condition, estimating the risk corresponding to a certain size of the hazard, thus proving a subsequent knowledge of the events. Sensationalism is not just an act of terrorism, but a vector of performance enhancement regarding the achievement of a meaningful mission: "to be above the passions that sin brings to you".

Leadership: Under what conditions do you immerse yourself in the conflicts of your own self, taking as a reference for measuring top-tier intelligence the right not to be subjected to a significant automatic decision?

Along with the concern of ensuring the clean preservation of consciousness, related to other consolidation works for the infrastructure of leadership that has the role to support a man's identity, regardless any external forces, an interpretation of the reality which can't be fully explained is necessary. A limited set of actions, with a not exactly predictable finality can be granted to the system of diverse replays in one's mind, to the decisions taken at a certain time in life.

The expansion perspectives of leadership in the world of tomorrow should also be discussed in light of a different reality that the man can't control. It is about the voice of reproach that limits your gestures and actions, calling your name in the high sphere of sin to dominate and destroy the lives of others in the interest of a long-running passion whose intensity can give birth to a legend of perfection. Here, peak intelligence gains the meaning of illicit and antisocial de facto, even if it lends itself to the ability to adapt to the environment and difficult situations, seen as a way of doing well in life.

When he sinks in the conflicts of his own Ego, namely when reality doesn't react to any of the mental orders, man distances himself from his place in leadership. He detaches himself from the personal configuration created according to an accepted model. And thus, he severs from his normal status of "being", like an object from a cheap collection, destined to serve one and the same purpose – to break in the face of the weakest external force and to break. And such an object will never "sell" successfully.

The right not to be subjected to an automatic decision with a significant character belongs to the man who measures his self-awareness through what he is willing to pay for his deeds.

The leader weighs his facts before answering for them, with the specification that the self-image he builds from the momentary revelations of a bright mind must have the dimension of the experience to admit that any mistake can turn against him. Whereas Hannibal was not such a man. For a psychologist like him, deep knowledge of the human being implies rather the decision to subject it to pain, so that its awareness and subjugation are total.

A Romanian writer explained at a certain point: "Man's entire spiritual drama resides in the terrible suffering generated by shock." People react differently from the perspective of a stringency of thinking, fueled by the deeply rooted lapses and the uncertainties. Shock, the sum of all tension, which can't be chased away by the essence of resounding with the initial positive moods, thus making a decent neural activity impossible, creates a certain discrepancy in action when it comes to imposed values. That's why the quick behavioral reaction can no longer be explained at the level of a conscious thinking.

Due to these strong contrasts between states and limiting judgments, felt by man in all their depth, the positive characteristics of his personality are deformed. In order to find balance between the distorted reason and the dysfunctional stages he experiences, man must be involved with all his force on the spiritual front, in the act of reforming the self, from the perspective of a faultless lucidity and accepting a challenge.

Denying or not accepting the situation, an apparent way out, doesn't do anything else but "freeze" reality, discouraging leadership (which averts emotions from dominating reason) and manifesting itself.

Being in the position of lucidity without defect means developing your ability to free yourself from the pressures of consciousness in order to fulfill the task of being "who you are when no one sees you".

The Powerful Confrontation Of Man With The Self occurs in critical situations, heavily trying the solidarity of efficient counteracting reactions and of annihilating the causes which created it. The lack of a permanent "training" threatens the capacity to answer quickly by disabling, even if temporarily, the will to act.

Just like a well trained boxer, who is a voluntary subject to trials by participating to various competitions with more and more able opponents, each of us, particularly a leader, has to confront the requirements of a bleak reality. To promptly face any external force meant to have a destabilizing effect.

Going around obstacles, no matter how large they are, isn't a solution. More likely, a prompt and efficient approach would be a good auspicious action for a leader. Who has to permanently act based on the rule: "well aimed, well hit".

 Note: The Silence of the Lambs (1991)

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-powerful-confrontation-of-man-with-the-self.html

The Powerful Rays Of Influence

On April 10, 2009

Develop your personal value by anchoring you to the leadership dimension of the one who guides you.

As usually, people give up when they see that their efforts do not give the expected results. Alejandro Murrieta wanted at all costs to revenge his brother's death. But right before he dashes against Captain Harrison Love, an old man cut off his path, by stopping him from his too stormy boom.

Right then, at that dangerous moment for his life, Alejandro was lucky to meet Don Diego de la Vega (Zorro), who saved him from a certain death. He said to him: "You're drunk, you're angry, you are not able to fight with a professional soldier ... If you want to get revenge, I can help you. But now is not at all the time to take revenge."

Do you remember the movie "The Mask of Zorro (1998)"? The events have approached so much Zorro and Alejandro, that simply their matching - their attitude, the way in which they have joined their powers, interests and aspirations through collaboration - has created a common soul, a single energy, turning them into an unbreakable unit.

Alejandro has taken the essential from Zorro, has developed his own value by anchoring to the leadership dimension that Zorro was practicing. This is one of the secrets of success. To really succeed in leadership you have to unite in a single being with the one who guides you - just as two artists of genius, so perfectly synchronize their creation as they would act like a single brain. You need to get along with him without "half measures". Your intentions must correspond, in fact, with his ones. Your leadership must be penetrated by the same basic tone as his one.

Leadership: Can you reconfigure a lost cause by dominating passions and cultivating an individual's inner freedom, so as to interpose yourself in a reality that is configured from the very being of the self as a path made by oneself?

In mathematics 1 + 1 = 2. But in leadership 1 + 1 = A unitary whole, a single being.

Alejandro has come to look upon Zorro "from peer to peer". The miracle of their meeting was precisely to harmonize their capacities. Just as, beyond the clarity, a film director seeks at the film montage some compositional effects, which would allow him to establish a closer connection with the audience – so and you, beyond the special qualities that you have, you must follow to adopt the pattern of thinking and action of the one who leads you in order to establish a closer link to him.

Zorro has helped Alejandro to highlight his qualities, endowing him with that obviously superior power to see farther and more clearly, due to which - and only due to this fact - he managed to do those things that seemed impossible to do, and to achieve goals that seemed nearly impossible to achieve.

Just as the sunrays penetrate and shine through tree branches, the same and your influence can penetrate and shine in the lives of others. However, for this, people have to appreciate you at the highest level. They have to recognize in you a precise style of leadership that can fill their "gaps" which can help them really develop their potential.

To interpose yourself in a reality that is configured from the very being of the self as a path made by oneself, means to condition the freedom of a man with your own version of reality, so that what will happen will follow the coordinates of a single purpose: to generate a single vision of the same self on the individuality of the other.

The Powerful Rays Of Influence are given by the way you draw attention to the things you want to highlight, and by the context that can stimulate people's motivation for change. There are fewer hopes of progress in the teams where people do not want to enter the sphere of influence of the chosen leaders, in this case to achieve common goals will remain only a beautiful and utopian dream.

Conclusion: An individual is chosen as a leader due to his qualities recognized by the most people around him. This thing implies his acceptance as well as compliance of his strategy and methods of obtaining performance. Those who have chosen him must enter his sphere of influence, so to consent to enter into a process of development and individual improvement.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-powerful-rays-of-influence.html

The Prestige Of An Empire

On April 01, 2009

Take full advantage of your potential while maintaining the pulse of your own value at a maximum rate.

It is all too well known that the Russian filmmaker Sergei Eisenstein revolutionized cinema in the early twentieth century with his theory of montage, a fairly new filming technique for the time, which he translated into historical films, including Alexander Nevsky or the Potemkin Cruiser. Once, the great Russian film director Sergei Eisenstein has confessed the way he was working in the producing of his films. He said:

"I work very professionally. Raising the waves of erudition. Debating with myself principles and programs. Accumulating calculations, equations, conclusions. I like to fit the music to the course of the film. Sometimes, exceeding it. "

Leadership: Are you able to capture the totality of reality from the evocation of a time that has not been left covered by oblivion, through a corresponding modification of the particularity that an imaginary representation gives?

The "Creation" in leadership it is like a movie in which the music background should be in accordance with the approached theme. You must fit a specific "track" that would be great, appropriate and to vibrate with you at your own scenario of reality - a leadership in which your passion must acquire a vivid coloring and to pretend to an excellent quality.

Completely absorbed by the passion for his work, always thinking about the future of his career, putting all his resources at stake, the famous Sergei Eisenstein was always able to find that unique element for his scenarios, common with reality, by which he constantly has developed and perfected the series of his shooting techniques up to the maximum level of his capabilities. Too few are like Eisenstein, few are those who, starting from an idea, think with all their being that they can also realize it, and at the same time they are as well able to manage it.

Leadership: Is the element of construction that defines your "Creation" a synchronization between imagination and reality, in the dynamics of a technological evolution that continues to keep up with historical moments?

Leaving a valuable creation to your descendants means approaching the maximum level of your potential. Your leading ability is affected by the way in that you develop your own potential, by the level of your demands in its self-evaluation and capitalization. Only developing your competencies, increasing the demands towards you and your "creation" you'll be closer to the maximum level of your potential.

Just as a film director strives to create in his show a distinctive relationship with the audience through original compositions of space, sound and light, even so, and you must strive to achieve a special relationship with your own leadership, with your own self, with your own feelings, thoughts, attitudes through a unique approach, through a certain rhythm, through an exclusive combination of enthusiasm and inspiration to raise the level of your performance, to guarantee the quality of your activities.

Your creation can be evolutionary and can keep up with historical moments only if the idea you capture in images takes place in a context of transforming a story into reality.

The Prestige Of An Empire is built over time through your most active involvement in the projects that you set to yourself. Sergei Eisenstein has revolutionized the montage techniques. He created his own empire of techniques and means used for the implementation of films because he managed to take full advantage of his potential while maintaining the pulse of his own value at a maximum rate. His value was given by the extent to which he raised his potential to a higher level.

The excellence in leadership is obtained by making serious efforts of improvement and development of your skills, abilities, along with the increase of demands towards you - the leader - but also to "the subject" of your creation.

An empire is built hard, and the excellence and reputation are achieved when you give your best interest to accomplish something almost perfect.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-prestige-of-an-empire.html

The Prestige Of The Art 'In Memoriam'

On October 13, 2010

Identify a common ground with others, by managing all your leadership qualities so that it can work in your favor.

One of the paintings, in which the famous painter Gustave Coubert has rendered scenes from the life of his fellow citizens from Ornanse, is "L'Enterrement a Ornans (Funeral at Ornans)," on a large-size canvas, in which he groups about 50 people in their natural size.

When the painting first appeared before the Commission that had to decide which works should be received at the annual Paris Salon, all have been scandalized. They had the impression that they were in front of an ironic man, devoid of any feelings, by any trace of respect for people's pain in front of death. Consequently, the painting was rejected.

In our days, the same picture is considered as one of the great achievements of the French art from the first half of the nineteenth century, which excels through a deep and expressive study of human figures, which reflects strong feelings and emotions.

Leadership: Can you translate your ideas into an original creation that never expires, because everything you express in terms of the feelings you share is part of the plan of an image that will never leave the memory of the world?

Coubert was criticized by his "immoral" subjects. The fact that he represented people as they are in front of death, it was considered as a provocative and irreverent attitude in front of "the eternal art". Few were those who immediately realized the rare quality and the essence of his paintings.

The businessman Sorin Neagu stated: "In any business you have costs and benefits. Important is to manage them in such a way that at the end when you draw line to get in addition. "

Coubert did not manage in such a way his artistic resources that at the end, when he had to drag line, to get "in addition". Although, his art was both visionary and so naturally in its expression, superior by its simplicity and good taste, even if it was perfect by the way that it was close to reality, it was not deeply communicative, did not reach people's hearts, did not create that effect of gratitude in order to contribute by itself in achieving a substantially higher share of significance and importance. As a result, his art, categorized as insensitive, has been questioned, and not acclaimed by almost anyone.

As a leader, if you want to be successful, you must identify a common ground with others, by managing all your leadership qualities so that it can work in your favor. People need to know your "work", all its attributes, but for this, it should not appear as a protest against their principles and concepts regarding leadership, especially in the eyes of the so-called connoisseurs. In other words, you must give life to a leadership designed to gather all the common points between you and them: vision, values and beliefs.

Grant to your work a percentage of increased acceptability to the public. On this should be based your great effectiveness. Do not submit your work as an enemy of the beliefs of others, only to see everything in the light of your own principles. Even if your style is more complex and differs from of the others, present it in a manner that would represent you and would attract attention, and to allow them to recognize its importance.

Leadership is the self-image transposed into a suggestive image that will never leave the memory of the world, as you yourself have to go through those feelings that derive their strength from the description of desired or unwanted events.

The Prestige Of The Art "In Memoriam" means only the stability of your leadership over time, depending on the way it was understood and accepted by others.

Just as testing and evaluation of a new medicine are made by applying it to hundreds of thousands of volunteers, so your leadership evaluation is made by the mutual agreement of the others, according to the share of your ideals and aspirations in relation to the one of them. If your leadership is against the manner in which they perceive it, then you risk losing your credibility.

Conclusion: For a leader, to uplift his "work" to the rank of art means in fact, that it should be accepted and recognized by all, and its "benefits" should be obvious and indisputable.

Innovative ideas are not always widely accepted, their promotion should be done with caution, and only if you have the "accept" of the others. Visionaries are few, and they must be enlightened about the benefits that would come. And once achieved, they will strengthen the position and the prestige of a leader, and his art will persist "in memoriam".

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-prestige-of-the-art-in-memoriam.html

The Price Of A Giant Leap In The Secrets Of Identity

On Februarie 13, 2013

Achieve an extrapolation of your perceptions regarding human dimension so that your evolution towards a superior stage of understanding leadership won't become contradicting.

My evolutionary process towards a superior stage of understanding leadership didn't simplify things at all. It complicated them more. Constantly making measurements which influenced by their variation the results of research on the world and people, I suddenly found myself trapped in a world of contrasts. Of appearances, of unmasking and revelations that pretended to overcome, to correct or to disturb my convictions. Thus confirming the fact that my true ego was subjective, different from everyone else's truth.

There were no perfectly isolated walls in this mini-gallery of life and color, of characters and figures and portraits chosen for the study. Sparkling because of so much intelligence and feelings, because of so much conscience and will to live. And the interaction of a system of evolutionary factors randomly distributed on a coherent field of possibilities to understand impact coordinates in contact with a concrete and cruel reality, could only be done by ratios of different forces.

Reality could be supported only by creating balances that didn't affect the structure of my capacity to perform, to outdo myself and to fulfill research objectives.

But in this equation of my initiation in the fascinating world of the human universe the problem of the planning forms "within self" intervened, beyond any finality. To a certain extent, I represented the inexhaustible fund of knowledge that conditioned my development. But this "Myself" modified by idealizing some moods and aptitudes combined with the hardly maneuverable thinking of the unit called "Themselves" which targeted models such as heroes, kings, artists, scientists, explorers.

We are dealing with an extrapolation that started from one's own person, using certain presuppositions that I might not have been aware of. And it expanded towards a foreign ambiguous dimension, with a large variety of values and non-values, truths and fakes.

Is the evolution of your leadership conditioned by a real representation of the profiles targeted by the suggestion of an autonomy in the plan of creating an image that lends itself to a conditioning "behind the scene" ?

In a society where people whimsically guide themselves only after their own rules, acting strictly based on the dimension of their code to recompose reality, there is a need for a better involvement in "recruiting" and promoting this common understanding that does not present requirements such as "behind the scene".

In a world of many unknowns, people are seen by me as a result of the research experience of a mentality that only initiates have in a type of philosophy of imaginative perfection. Each man is assigned a connection profile with the claims of an individualist mentality, something akin to the idea of living through the most generous, but which one can do with a single object called "art" or "literature". In this scenario, he has to express his own unique perspective on a given situation, about an alternative reality or about an eternal life.

Man becomes the experiment of an intermediate reading, from the category of found manuscripts, or the experiment of a photo that captures the differences between real-life actors and interpreted characters.

The evolution of leadership requires a deeper and more in depth analysis of performance at an individual level, but that as a whole it is conditioned by a real representation of the profiles targeted by the measure of reality contained in the coordinates of a police intrigue, or in the coordinates of a painting that seeks to overcome even the concept of abstract art. In this case, individuals are seen as rational actors who instrument an entire system of values, built consciously, transmitted continuously especially through interpretations.

And the possibilities to understand the impact coordinates, in contact with a concrete and cruel reality could only be done by ratios of different forces: between their nature and their available base for knowledge. And that the leader must decode and use in order to formulate and issue a valuable judgment.

Leadership: In addition to the truth of your own judgment, are you prepared to understand the truth of a new reality detached from the impact of searching for an interaction between the visible and measurable modus vivendi of man?

To launch a new scientific theory on the world, I first had to describe what I saw in the lives of other people and measure the results with the course of my own life. Visible was the significance of reality beyond theory, and measurable was what I succeeded in doing with what I know when I depended on other people's rules and updates. Modus vivendi refers to the supportability of decisions that limit or direct the course of events.

In light of the significant performance indicators that have passed through your own access laws in a reality you can use in order to accomplish your training, you can achieve a comparative and competitive analysis of your values and characteristics in comparison with the personality traits of others. Based on a continuum between the measurable background of leadership and the predictive aspect of the impact forms: intellectual, emotional, spiritual.

But you can transform in an advocate of the contraries if you don't manage to understand and to accept the truth of that new reality, under the lenses of a subjective judgment that doesn't find its place in your conception about "Man". Sometimes even rejecting it because of the limits built by the perspectives of an impossible unification between "Yourself" and "Themselves".

Through an extrapolation of what is of what is visible and measurable within each corner of the group of observations that have become reference points in the countless line of true understandings that direct your intellectual authority towards instating some convictions that have been more integrated into leadership, will you be able to distance yourself from that unitary mass of opposites. That could throw you in an irrational duality.

And by means of the wholeness of human knowledge in relation with a succession of objective experiences, as superior form of materializing scientific thinking which has as purpose the evolution of leadership, you will strengthen that subconscious, subtle perception about yourself. According to which the quality of constructing your identity based on what you believe about others and what they believe about you, is a difficult to reach stage.

Leadership is the truth you have come to relate to as "be yourself" in a context of scientific research whose endpoint is found in the life experience you are experiencing in comparison to an alternative reality.

The Price Of A Giant Leap In The Secrets Of Identity reflects that continuous preoccupation doubled by a deep self-analysis, towards an ascending evolution in leadership, with no contradictions and in compliance with reality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-price-of-a-giant-leap-in-the-secrets-of-identity.html

The Price Of An Immortal Rose

On May 16, 2019

Learn to look from the perspective of a creation that does not cease to amaze, considering the composition of an image that represents you by its nature.

There is something between me and this rose, it is something in us that speaks to us in the opposite direction of any gravity of the seemingly derisory enigmatic: rather than in pain, suffering, wandering, better anything else. It depicts the beauty of the world as a form of imitation of the features of an artist who adds to his paintings the plans of a vision of earlier earthly lives, the intimate foundations of an explanation given to the universe: "why exist without living through the very listening of time?"

The rose highlights the "near-far" relationship between the earth and the universe, between expression and freedom, the symbol of a great creator of beauty who adds spines to the conventionality of its representation on the stage of life. He possesses a mystery aura that persists on the reception of imaginatively transmitted ideas, sometimes graphic, in the symbolic equivalence of a mature being aspiring to perfection.

Watching him in the raindrops, feeling him transfigured into a believer who elevates a hymn of glory to the Almighty God, as the effect of a magic happened directly in nature, I imagine him lost in the infinite depth of a deep pain that dazzles him like a lightning, as if his presence in this world would be overlooked. I sense him plunging into a sentimental past, a path the Spirit takes in a linear space to check the laws of the universe governing man's life, under the engraving of a sacred symbol of creation, having the charm of a word that repeats obsessively in the temple of immortality.

If you manage to look at a rose as a miracle of nature, in the sense of a creature that is continually growing in meaning, perhaps you will learn to read the thoughts of God.

Leadership: Are you able to impress the nature of your being in forming a distinct image, interpreting this experience as a journey into a universe that reveals itself through a unified approach to aesthetics?

The greatness of the rose lies in the sincerity of a moment that is experienced through senses, not through reason. Through that silence that tells you to be patient and to not doubt what you feel, what you think. It knows all the conflicts and controversies of this world, but also all the value valences of an exceptional artistic creation that is not yet ready to be understood by ordinary mortals who are at times mistaken for gods.

The secular experience of painting consecrates it as the mysterious connection between heaven and earth, a subject of knowledge of various realities, a superior blend of knowledge and belief, existing within a certain amount of time sufficient to be able to associate the initiate's myth in a state of "Alterity" due to the feeling of being different.

With devotion, I speak to him as to an old and dear friend, with whom I have experienced a story of 2000 years, never avoiding the reproaches of an object of love ending with the letter "i" to a point of justified warning on the authenticity of a subjective narrative.

Double Delight. It is the composition of a classical image in the work of a genius painter who delights in the environment and sinks into his feelings by rendering them as colorful as possible. We're attached to each other. He mumbles my words with insistence, as if he wants to pull away from me the years spent together and to experience in one moment the fullness of a creation meant to extend to its definitive fulfillment, when God will be "all for everyone".

In my rose, Double Delight, is always mirrored the beginning of a new storyline full of excitement, a certain fullness and warmth, just as in any good soul a special star shines, just as in any infinity of colors shines the inner world of an artist who boldly draws his life. It encompasses the vision of a relationship with a complex universe in the plane of immortality.

So, the aesthetics that characterize the portrait dimension of my creation is the clarity with which I capture a moment of eternity of time, an example of beauty captured in an alternate universe, based on the indulgence of nature to say: "Ascend your spirit to the heights of the joy of giving a new meaning to the world you represent and share it with great talent".

Leadership: Can the meaning that you attribute to your image as an artist be understood as a work of a spiritual nature that favors a meeting with the "Creator of a world full of metamorphosis" called upon to express his vision in the memory space of time?

Loneliness does not exist in the world of my rose, not because I speak to it daily, but because my voice appears in the memory of a time that is repeated, making the return of a part of my own being into a carefully chosen compositional setting, in which the painter rewards nature with expressions of divine impulse, beauty, sensitivity, creativity, expressions of how the mind and the soul have seen and imagined the perfect world.

Indeed, very few artists have come to terms with the understanding of the Great Work. The rose, in a wide-open vertical plane, viewed from the point of view of the logos-creation ratio seems (paradoxically) an act of renunciation of the line and the object, being perceived as having as substrate the intellect of a superior mind reached precisely by simplifying living.

"Have I resurfaced any sorrow, have I revived any lost cause?" He asks me, humbly throwing a petal on the wet ground, as if warning me of an eternal weave between the spiritual aspirations of a universe too little explored and the complexity of the problems that interfere with the subtle dynamics of the spatiality of a creation that exceeds the power of encompassing the human mind.

"Definitely", I answered immediately, watching him lean forward in the soft beating of the spring wind. But I did not breathe a word about everything I thought was linked to our union in spirit, to the service of the same cause created by a complex universe that is strictly within the imaginary space of the word printed with the voice of time.

It is never too late to recover from my dependence on beauty and to choose the anatomy of suffering due to the lack of understanding of a universe far superior to the existential impression that the rose has printed in the memory of time and in which I have wrapped my own living being.

Leadership is the life expectancy of a genius creation meant to find correspondence in a parallel universe in which the simple graphics rendering of reality no longer presents a dose of the spectacular, only living by comparison is what matters.

My dear rose. You lived more than anyone and you will never die, you find yourself in the theme of great paintings, you push the genius of being original in the foreground of the artist's imagination, you are perceived as a way of measuring the expansion of time in a meaningful universe.

Through you, I experience the masterpiece of a life that goes on gradually to complement the symbolic equivalence of a magical amulet, bringing luck, because it holds the powers of the universe.

The Price Of An Immortal Rose is given by the link "rarity – universal echo". It refers to the complex product of a unique creation made by a genius artist, endowed with the ability to decipher the message of a universe that does not cease to define itself as a being, nature, image and power potential.

The nature of my being includes the goodness of dividing the thought and will of God with an artist of nature: "Live as dictated by the feeling of spiritual bliss."

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-price-of-an-immortal-rose.html

The Primed Mines Of Leadership

On March 22, 2009

Strive to guide people without diminishing your ability to empathize with them.

Kevin Scott seemed not to understand with absolutely no one of his team. His orders were too difficult to execute. He simply asked too much from people. At one of the training, things took a serious turn when one of his subordinates, Sailor, wanted to give him a lesson. Before things to run even more, Colonel Cal Rhodes, the initiator of the rescue mission of prisoners in Vietnam, intervened between the two ones. He took Kevin aside and told him:

- These people are veterans, Kevin. They cannot be treated as new recruits. You must earn their respect...

Scott has recorded every word of Cal, but he became confused, and at one point he fell on contemplation. It might, indeed, to be so incompetent with people? he wondered to himself.

If you saw the movie „Uncommon Valor (1983)" then you probably remember what amazing effect has had the words of Cal. Scott changed his attitude instantly. He became a totally different person.

Leadership: What is the consequence of the finality of the cause that made you restrain your expression of certain emotions, and from this consequence can an absolutely binding decision to receive or give an unforgettable moment be obtained?

The key to leadership lies in discovering the cause that can affect you, or in constantly updating your self-information to gain a status of equality between what you want to convey and what your interlocutor perceives. Remember that there is a big difference between what you want to hear to satisfy your vanity and what is true, even if it hurts to feel guilty about the mistake you made.

To know how heavy it is the burden you have, it is necessary first to examine yourself. It will come easier for you to understand the dimension of your leadership if you are searching by yourself for your weaknesses. You can realize your own potential for leadership by the attitude that others take towards you in critical or problematic situations when they lose patience or interest, or when they lose any chance to comprehend you.

Kevin knew that he had to choose between two paths: either to disobey Cal's friendly advice and to anger even more against the people under his authority, which would be greatly damaged his leadership, or to find an amicable way to work with them.

Remember that in leadership, the ability to empathize with the other people is synonymous with finding a compromise between what they want to hear from you and what you want from them. Nothing leads to create strong links between two or more people than achieving success together. Mutual success is based on long friendships. Do not ever lose sight of this, future leader !

The finality of the cause that made you restrain your expression of certain emotions refers to a hopeless situation in which you can find yourself when the Ego removes your consciousness from the "Now" moment and places you in the next moment of your becoming, when you are at the point of accepting that you apologized.

The Primed Mines of Leadership are common causes that can trigger an unwanted event. And the aftermath of this event and the control measures to prevent the onset of risk and to limit the effects have a lot to do with how you react to change.

Leadership is like a minefield. If you manage to pass the land on which you build your own model to follow, avoiding all the mines that deplete your resources and limit your potential, you will be praised by all those around you, even the skeptics. Even so, if you stepped on any mine, it is all over with your leadership. A single mistake, an uncertainty or any wrong decision, makes you crash in the eyes of all and fell into the black oblivion.

Are you familiar with digital cameras? If yes, then you know that the function Active Mode removes the effect of "blurring" to photo and video image, especially when the capture is done in motion, at large opening.

Well, when it comes to getting along with people and to develop deep relationships with them, you must remove the effect of "blurring" your emotional intelligence, especially when you are watching the imposition of certain rules or principles, or some unexpected steps that they have to go through for the best possible course of business, and to achieve common objectives.

In other words, strive to lead people without diminishing your ability to empathize with them.

Conclusion: As a leader, it is essential to know how to avoid every situation that jeopardizes your role and position that you own. In other words, you need to know to avoid those "mines" put in your way, and that detonated, can break down or reduce your impact on others. The explosion of a single mine it is enough for people to lose confidence in you. Furthermore, you risk losing definitely the influence on them. That mine is the inability to empathize with people. Any reduction of this capacity can lead to major failures in leadership.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-primed-mines-of-leadership.html

The Primordial Egg And The Power Of The Entire Universe

On September 28, 2009

The search for understanding "origins" reveals the complexity and relativity of our perceptions of time and space, urging us to accept the limitations of human perspective in the face of the vastness of infinity.

- Cheops, said Ibebi, after each sat down on his mat, you will soon reach the end of the part of the road that was given to you to cross accompanied by me in the temple of Thoth. We will return to some remaining points, these days, in suspension, to deepen and clarify them. So, we will talk again about the divine Ogdoada, which you learned is the substance of Thoth, the multiple manifestations of his being. Learn therefore that originally, as said, it was Ta-tenen. It was a formless chaos, yet within it was the power of the entire universe. And suddenly it exploded, from it came the primordial egg, and from this egg sprang Ra, from a lotus flower.

The size of this egg cannot be described: it was huge and yet small, for when there is no point of comparison, what can be the measure of things? And all this happened in the mist of time. But how was this time expressed in floods, because the Nile did not yet exist, nor the floods? Nor the years, because the Earth did not exist, because the sun did not rise in the morning in the east to set in the west in the evening, because it did not exist either! Now, isn't the measure of time given by the movements of the sun and the moving stars? So there is no time, no space, because space only exists according to the bodies that occupy it.

Leadership: Is your mind capable of understanding the connection to divinity, realizing that you are only a finite being, part of a whole that transcends the complexity of the whole?

- In this case, why did Ta-tenen suddenly explode, why did light suddenly emerge from the primordial egg? Why did this happen at some point millions and millions of years ago, according to our way of measuring time, and why not before or after the time when things happened? And whence comes the formless matter of which Ta-tenen was constituted?

- There are many mysteries in the universe, many things that our mind is not able to understand in relation to the divinity, because we are only finite beings, parts of a whole. However, the finite cannot encompass the infinite, just as the parts of an ensemble cannot perceive the entire complexity of this ensemble. The other day I told you that the idea of creation through the word, starting from nothing, is absurd, unless we admit that the god created, starting from his own substance, the visible and the invisible world, the spirits we call "ahu " and the matter that takes in our eyes the forms that have become familiar to us.

Leadership: Can you accept that true understanding of the universe requires sustained effort of thought, knowing that there are limits to the revelations you can receive?

Now you will be able to understand its meaning, but do not think that, by what I say, I will drive away all the shadows that darken your mind: you will only be able to grasp the meaning after long efforts of thought, and not in its whole totality, for there are mysteries which we are not permitted to discern. The primordial egg is a tiny yet immense point that potentially contains the entire universe.

As there is neither time nor space, for these concepts have acquired substance in our minds only through the observation of nature from childhood, there is neither before nor after, neither here nor there, but only Ta-tenen, an unlocated point. Therefore, the question you ask me, that of knowing whether the egg came out of Ta-tenen at one moment or another, does not make sense, because what we call a moment, a particle of time, did not come to life, had no existence, because there was no movement.

Leadership: Could your perception of reality be influenced by the understanding that everything is a manifestation of a higher entity whose universe echoes in every aspect of your existence?

So who are Huh and Hauhet? It is organized matter, matter after the explosion of the primordial egg, water in its potentiality, the primordial elements that, combining, will create matter and, in particular, water on Earth after its creation. The egg helps us to get an idea of the real shape of the universe, it symbolizes the harmonious organization of the universe in front of the dense but formless, indescribable matter of Ta-tenen before its expansion.

But Ta-tenen, from which the god came, is, in reality, divine matter, is the god himself, so that the world is never but a manifestation of the god, everything that exists being a particle of the absolute Being we call Divinity, which encloses in it all the emanations to which I have given special names, which are those of the various divinities to whom I have consecrated a cult, i.e. Ra, Ptah or Thot, Hathor, Sekhmet or Neith.

Before opening yourself to the great knowledge, you must be able to grasp the infinite essence of the universe, attributing to yourself the greatness of a universal Self.

The primordial egg and the power of the entire universe are the two key concepts to which any human who aspires to attain a higher level of knowledge must relate. Through your perception of reality, aren't you answering the call to decipher and represent the mystery and complexity of the universe? For this reason, I believe that the first step towards reaching a high level of knowledge is to reflect on the following aspect: "Don't you yourself reflect the dynamics and perpetual transformations of the universe?"

 Note: Guy Rachet - Cheops and the Ibis conjuration , Lucman Publishing House, 2003

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-primordial-egg-and-the-power-of-the-entire-universe.h

The Principle Of A Dream Formed From A Single Glance

On July 14, 2020

The gaze cast in a dream that enlightens you is identical with the increased concentration of the artist's eyes in the direction of his divine retrieval.

I had a tumultuous dream, unpredictable, but expressive, which seems to give meaning only to a work of art signed Admystierdhes(the product of a creation that dominates the divine). And in this strange dream, brighter than the stars of the night, more complex than the mere agreement of the colors of the oil, a splendid red rose appeared, the color of Moorish blood. But both the dream and the bloody rose seemed to spring from an enigmatic soul that in another century the ancient Kabbalists glorified in pages worthy of the history of an immortal nation.

Art unites the real with the unreal in a kind of creative attitude through which the artist justifies his existence extracted from the science of the divine heavens. This is why the dream, finely weighed with an artistic mind destined for the painting of the deep landscape, categorically surprises with a beautiful visual stratification of the various metaphorical correlations. I am referring here to the novelty accessible in an astral journey, through a design of open, authentic, spontaneous emotional expression, in a space whose watchword is fiction.

One day I will look back and remember my dream, so vivid, so profound, so necessary to the artistic act, and perhaps I will understand at least a small part of God's plan for my destiny. The rose is part of an artist's dream, just as the artist who accesses the divine consciousness is part of a privileged space, in which all aspects of the SELF unite in ONE.

Everything that makes the artist aware, resulting from the essence of his rediscovery in a game of chance, which is also another dream of approaching the imaginary of a world little known, refers to the effect of his work on the spiritual life or sensitivity of man. The SELF restricted into ONE is the most convenient starting point for a comprehensive treatment of art that begins with the harmony between the Divine and the Worldly, between Heaven and Earth, between the Creator and Creation.

Leadership: Can the work you create be an art of "double looking", in which emotion plays a leading role in an artistic manipulation given by the background of a memorable image?

In the dream, the rose told me with that simplicity and warmth of the utterance of a great artist:

- Look around without looking at yourself as the world looks at you. Try to feel with your own eyes only what your eyes are prepared to understand in a time that has written a history of human spirituality, untouched by the vigor of forgetfulness and vanity. And if everything you feel is recognized in a meaningful look, from a time faithful to the divine will, then your art will be a warm and expressive homage to creative talent, which is the same homage to the life beyond death.

I listened to his advice. I took my gaze with the same ease with which the painter tries to paint the paper before applying it to the easel, raised it above the gaze of the world, and placed my hope in the highest spiritual otherness. Painting had become a part of the meticulous gaze, as beautiful as it could be in a painting whose viewer clearly realized, with all his might, the purpose of building a special culture for art. And if I had managed to constantly mirror my gaze, with pride and admiration, in the light of eyes that visibly broaden their horizons, then maybe, just maybe, I would have managed to enliven a story that descends from the mists of time and becomes reality in front of the easel.

For the same reason, of the dream that stunned my existence during sleep, my special eyes turned sentimental, with a fruitful look in a vision that means distance, to the words of Umberto Eco from the novel The Name of the Rose:

"A dream is a scripture, and many scriptures are nothing but dreams. However, the more I think about your dream, the more I find it more meaningful. Maybe not for you, but for me. Forgive me for taking possession of your dreams, in order to further my hypotheses; Yes, I know, it is an ugly thing, it shouldn't have been done. But I think your sleeping soul understood more than I understood... awake."

Leadership: Does the image you shape of a subjectively perceived world offer the possibility of adding an emotional dimension to an imaginative process that amplifies the experience of knowing in ONE?

My dream corresponds to the discharge of a deep spiritual experience through the obsessive reflection of the image of a "Double Delight" rose, and it does it well, through the creation of a famous artist who knows how to see in a painting too full of his own being. My notes full of metaphors, full of thoughts, full of color, confirm this. Me and the dream. The eyes of these two coordinators of the creation of the world are distinguished only by the closeness of the spirit of nature, a spirit evocative of art, of light, of feelings. And the rose secretly watches over our resonance, being the common denominator of the noble alliance between the act of creation and the spiritual being.

One day I will try to write an aesthetic treatise about my deep eyes, so that my so serene, affective gaze encompasses an entire artistic horizon. To enliven an artistic object is a fiction, but to animate a body of nature is a mobile perpetuum of the order of a surrealism that can be explained by the connection between the language of the work of plastic art and the metaphysics of a turned reality.

Of course, I would not try to describe a psychological phenomenon that appeared during sleep, especially regarding art, without following the irradiating force of some revealing metaphorical nuclei in relation to the transcendence of another world into my world. The dream sees through my eyes that art of dialogue between the sublime thrill of the pleasure of experiencing an endless story and the sublime thrill of the spontaneous delight gained in the face of the eternal artistic mystery.

The experience of knowledge in ONE reflects an important element of the resemblance between God and man, namely immortality – obtained through the prism of a true creation that deliberately mixes the register of the fantastic with that of the miraculous.

Finally. If after everything you read here I left you the impression of the veracity of the dream that makes you think seriously, taking into account the compromise between an archetype of the imaginary and an archetype of human sensitivity, it means that I have succeeded in approaching the essence of art: the fiction full of vitality, the opening of the flight to the sky of another, unforgettable world.

In this way, the subtlety of a philosophy of being, prone to attempts of art to define myself in terms of the concrete plan of nature, in fulfillment of the agreement between vision and vocation creator, could be given the fruit of a new form of inwardness: Samizordesthru, proof of the subtlety of a poetic experience hidden behind a metaphorical image.

My texts are full of subjective experiences. Sometimes, the interpretation of words with double meanings is passed through a projection of unconfessed desires. Symbolic language does not always provide the right keys to the open locks of the souls of all my readers, but for those who understand it, it builds bridges from heart to heart. Perhaps this is a defining aspect of surrealism, and will always remain present in an effort to move an entire world toward a single ideal: total freedom of expression.

The art that can contribute to the popularization of leadership has as a trigger the look cast inside a dream of centuries lived (as in a story) with the eyes of an artist capable of creating completely unexpected and incredible masterpieces.

The Principle Of A Dream Formed From A Single Glance has the power to move an entire world only if the artist manages to reproduce the resemblance between a language full of symbols and its transposition into a surreal world, of essence, which does not fall apart.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-a-dream-formed-from-a-single-glance.html

The Principle Of A Level Difference

On March 08, 2012

When you keep going forward, others fall behind.

On December 17, 1903, with only five people present, at 10:35 a.m., Orville Wright, lying on his stomach between the wings of the airplane, soared into the air for 12 seconds and landed at a distance of 30 meters from the place of departure. It was the first flight in the airplane.

An hour later, Wilbur Wright reached 50 meters. At noon, the plane managed to stay in the air for 59 seconds !

The combustion engine airplane had been made, and the Wright brothers were the first to design and test it in flight.

The young men had listened with their mouths agape to the story of the aviator, as if they themselves had taken part in the adventures of the famous invention of the Wright brothers, stood up and thanked him. The narrator also stood up and held out his hand. From afar, from the line where he added the line of airplanes, which took part in the acrobatic contest, came, to their hill, the rumor of military music.

*- Goodbye, boys ! And don't forget the Wright brothers' lesson: forethought, courage, and especially perseverance !

Leadership: Are you ready to follow the direction of a win-win approach to the relationship between what you experience as a performer and what is almost impossible to accomplish, in terms of unrestricted autonomy?

You must always be aware of your uniqueness and value if you want to dominate the leadership area, in that no one else can take your place in a history that you write, with your hand, with evidence of your achievements. The uniqueness of the value that the results obtained through perseverance and even with the risk of life give you, aware that any mistake can bring you down from the height at which you rushed with courage, is an attempt to dominate that factor called "always" despite any "since always".

When you set out to achieve a goal that is difficult to achieve, and if you are given all the freedom to try at least one "first intervention", only then can you place yourself in the category of those who know that they need to be noticed if they want to differentiate themselves from the rest of the world.

But your place may be in the area where you do not want to compare yourself with someone else, because the achievements obtained with your hand must contain proof of the performance of a character who writes his own immortal story. Success belongs to those who have risen above all others. Or when you get the best in the world you start to get used to the first position and you never want to go down to the second place.

Leadership: Can a relation experience be added to your life experience between what you are able to become and what you are able to achieve, so that the proof of your value is valid in one direction of evolution?

It was well-said by someone: "Being yourself in a world that is constantly looking to turn you into someone else is the greatest achievement." Because the only direction of human evolution, besides any other form of self-motivation, is to bring its realization to the level of the exigencies of its own vocation.

To be the best in the world in one field means to be aware that you are evolving rapidly to perfection, while others are behind you for too many years to be able to count them. And if the brightest spirits came together in a wonderful brainstorming, be aware that all together they would not do even 1% of what you did. And all together they wouldn't get close to your talent in over 1000 years.

One man is worth more than the rest of the world. Take Freddie Mercury as an example. If all the singers in the world came together, do you think that all of them together will ever be able to compose a "The show must go on", version 2.0?

The big problem with the characters who became "great stars" overnight is that they hurried to assert themselves, but without letting God grind their talent to perfection. The only proof of perfection is that transformation of man, gradual but evolutionary, with the speed of a snail, which occurs in a long time, through many trials and failures. So that you would need extremely rich testimonies regarding the fruits of his steadfast toil to follow him in the natural dynamics of history.

Leadership is the vocation to every day face the challenge called "innovation" in terms of what you are willing to leave behind as a memory of a creation that remains permanent, unforgettable.

The Principle Of A Level Difference is closely related to your ability to overcome your self-imposed limits (or those imposed by the faith of others), so that everything you achieve is directly proportional to the value you attribute to yourself and the way you allow others to relate to you.

 Note: Mihail Drumeș - Stories about the brave, ion Creangă Publishing House, 1989.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-a-level-difference.html

The Principle Of Absolute Trust

On January 30, 2010

Don't believe in yourself as long as you're not a hundred percent sure that the outcome will favor you.

A novel I liked a lot is "Warlock", by Wilbur Smith. This time, I'll stop over one certain fragment which I reread today and I consider it very important.

One day, pharaoh Nefer Seti invited the beautiful princess Mintaka, whom he was in love with over his head, to a duck hunt. They agreed to have a contest: whoever kills more ducks will be declared the most skilful hunter.

Nefer, determined to impress the princess and very confident in his skilful hunting abilities, decided to use spears instead of the bow and arrow, being certain that she wouldn't have the strength and skill to handle the heavy weapons, thus having an advantage.

The first flock of wild ducks came unexpectedly, each bird having a distinct mark on their beak. They made a wide circle on the sky and then started to descend in a line. They spread their wings and then plunged, quickly losing altitude, passing over Nefer's boat and then over Mintaka's boat.

Nefer calculated very accurately his time, then, suddenly, he stood up and threw his spear towards the leading bird, but he only succeeded in wounding its wing. The duck fell into to the water and swam quickly so it couldn't be caught. Nefer missed a great chance.

The way to maintain a good reputation is to make sure that you are what you want to look like in a context of personal over-appreciation.

From the next boat, the princess' boat, one after the other, two arrows flew to meet the group of ducks, and the sound of the double impact was heard clearly in the entire lagoon. Immediately after that, two birds fell inertly, with their wings spread and heads hanging, cleanly killed, in the air, in the moment they were hit by the arrows. They fell in the water and remained there, floating still.

Nefer instantly realized that only an experienced archer could have hit two ducks, one after the other, in such a short time, at that height and speed. Mintaka was more than a princess, she was a cunning hunter.

From that moment, Nefer, completely dopy, first by his miss and then by the unexpected skills displayed by Mintaka shooting with the bow, he moved his attention to the boat she was standing in. In stead of focusing on his own performance, he constantly looked over to see what happened in the other boat. The results were as unsatisfying as they could be. Losing his sense of measure, disoriented and feeling humiliated, he threw the other spears directly, without concentrating, either to soon, either too late, until his hand grew so tired that he almost sprained his wrist.

In the end, Mintaka was the winner. Nefer overestimated his competences in the face of a seemingly insignificant fact, "the impact of affectivity", because he lacked the exercise to consider an aspect that pertains to the field of psychology. The woman is a confused character, difficult to perceive. Therefore, over-appreciation is the quality of people expecting a great destiny, living only through the imposing sight of promising longevity, without taking into account the provisions of unforeseen events.

Does the reason for your professional assertion has as a first component of leadership approach the development of a sense of honor, so as not to turn the most important moments into a wrong orientation tendency?

Who knows, maybe if his mind hadn't wondered, if it hadn't been for that feeling of superiority deep in his mind, Nefer would have won the contest. But when he saw how skillful the princess was, he was overwhelmed by a feeling of inferiority, by fear well rooted in his bones, thinking that he wouldn't be able to impress her anymore. Lost in his dark minds, he became increasingly careless and started missing blow after blow. This is what happens when you start off with the prejudice that it's impossible that something bad may happen.

Nefer thought, no doubt about it, that hunting is a strictly males' occupation and a woman could never have enough experience, dexterity, flair and an unmatched confidence. But he didn't know the princess at all, he couldn't have known that, in fact, she has trained daily, for many years, that she had participated in many hunting parties and that she handled the bow better than many men. And Mintaka knew how to profit from the advantage that she had, the ability, the experience and the training. Thus, the winner is the one who knows how to take advantage of his qualities and the opponent's weaknesses.

What do we have to learn from Nefer's experience? That we cannot assess something as impossible if we lack enough information on that something, be it a person or an action. Should we have absolutistic convictions, based on false prerequisites, we risk failing in everything we have set our minds to and even shame ourselves. We will never be able to reach a superior level of performance if, when we see a light at the end of the tunnel, we strongly believe it's a train.

Before you learn the knowledge needed for leadership, think about how to gain a high self-esteem by controlling the tendency to consider success (in a competition) as the basic rule for acquiring a strong orientation toward the benchmarks of an independent man.

Nevertheless, the impossible occurred ! And when Nefer saw himself facing reality, which was totally different from what he expected, he suddenly got out of "fuel". Disorientation decreased his performances, slowed him down and made him careless. Which lead him to failure. Reality beat him.

When you want to assess your chances compared to your opponent, always gather as much data on it as possible, as well as on its performances. Don't star from the prejudice that you are the best. Sure enough, there are situations when you don't have enough information and you cannot obtain them. In this case, it is necessary that you develop your abilities and competences in good time, as you never know who have to deal with.

A leader thinks at the level of the honor of serving only one ideal: to not leave anyone behind. At the opposite pole, an independent man has as a life ideal the honor of presenting himself alone as a bold hero, the only one responsible for the smooth running of things. An independent man is sometimes more valuable than a leader, because by referring only to his own experiences, to his own goals, he is more attentive to how he places the arrow and how he tenses the bow, without depending on the support of others or the circumstances that others create.

A tiger is a far more skilled hunter than the lion, precisely because its success does not depend on the involvement of the group.

The reference values of an independent man, taking into account a positive self-image, are: discretion, the nonconformity, predictability, perseverance, and subtlety with which he interprets the consequences of his decisions and facts.

The Principle Of Absolute Trust could be formulated as follows: "Don't believe in yourself as long as you're not a hundred percent sure that the outcome will favor you."

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-absolute-trust.html

The Principle Of Accelerated Development

On August 25, 2010

The more people are involved in the system, the more simple and flexible to use is the system.

Probably each of us used at least once the Google Translate tool. Google Translate is a free automatic translation tool that allows you to translate phrases, documents and even entire sites instantly. The way it works is fascinating. Well, behind this application, there is a very complex program that scans the texts the user wants to translate from one language to another, searching for meaningful statistical models – i.e. models between translation and the original text, which are unlikely to occur randomly. Once the program finds a pattern, it can be used to translate similar texts in the future.

Translations are not always perfect, but constantly, by delivering new translations, the Google Translate tool develops and translations are getting better. It's no wonder that, in the last four years, more and more people and services have turned to this free translation tool. So, the next time you translate a phrase or a web page using Google Translate, think of the millions of documents and billions of patterns that lead to your translation – and all that happened in a flash.

Leadership: Can you identify yourself with an image that is criticized from the point of view of its domination over an art that provides information processing in a form that cannot be understood without access to its essence and purpose?

The Google Translate tool generates translations based on patterns found in large amounts of text. It analyzes millions of texts which have already been translated by human translators, using a process called "automatic statistical translation". These texts come from books, documents, organisations, such as the UN, and sites worldwide. If the translation is not done properly, there is the option (often used by millions of users) to correct the text itself.

Google Translate is the masterpiece of the art of using the knowledge of millions of users not only as a source of competitive advantage, but as a credible, complete and accessible data source that contains the same "record" value that accompanies the call to the revision of the option to intensify the activity of populating the Internet.

The Google Translate tool is simpler and more flexible to use when more people get involved in improving translations, as content information comes from multiple sources and so their validity increases, so fewer misgivings, errors or complications are encountered.

In other words, Google Translate, which is currently the best and most famous translation tool, can't work and constantly improve if people don't resort to it, making more and more translations. The wonderful thing about Google Translate is that it constantly improves with the help of information provided by people. The strategy that Google uses to improve this formidable translation tool is to involve as many people in its development process as possible, ensuring it a continuous improvement.

Google is a leader in terms of innovation, and its developed strategy, in order to differentiate from competitors already on the market, turned in another direction, mainly focusing on users. In other words, Google guided in its development process by the saying: "In order to develop fast, you must involve in the development process as many people that would become contempt with the system's reliability."

Leadership: Does the success of the work to which you should give full credit to represent the essence of its "free initiative" concept always confirm the value of mobilization for a particular use?

The use of a "computer work", such as Google Translate, can be achieved through the concept of free initiative when those who constantly access it are fully aware that the effects of this information processing phenomenon affect the core values of a visionary company.

The development of a system requires continuous improvement, including human relations. And Google Translate is visibly improving each day with people's help. This tool, which is meant for the entire market (i.e. all people, regardless of age, sex, education, etc), not just one specific segment, is one of the levers Google sorporation uses to increase its value.

To improve the quality of any system in your company, through which you can get many benefits, you must continue to develop it. But the only way to sustain development is to turn increasingly more to people's help. And the more people are involved in the system (and as capable as possible, if possible), the more it develops faster.

Therefore, as a leader, your most important duty is to find a way to attract as many people, making it so that they also have to win. If their impetus is strong, then they will continue to develop and the company you run will also grow along with them.

Using a computer work is intended to ensure understanding of how viewers are thinking when asking for loyalty from beneficiaries: you need to understand the importance of the information they provide and be demanding in terms of market coverage.

At the same time, using the Google Translate tool is meant to ensure an understanding of how each person's actions really influence the success of each team.

The principle of accelerated development brings many benefits, much higher compared to investments. This principle is based on creativity, innovation and the involvement of human factors as the desire of improvement, of interrelationship and the curiosity and desire to know new things. Alone, without the involvement of these human factors, the advanced technology can't ensure the accelerated development of a system and neither of society, in general.

 Note: http://googlesystem.blogspot.com/2010/08/how-google-translate-works.html

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-accelerated-development.html

The Principle Of Background Perception

On July 11, 2021

The image you bring to life through creation corresponds to a comparative visual representation between what is hidden and what is revealed.

The match begins, the Italy-England final. I was never a football fan, although I played football in my youth. Sounds really weird, doesn't it? And if I only watch the final, at every European championship, it is because any important match can give an important lesson about life.

I'm not a supporter of any particular team, but I hope it's a good match. It's already 1-nil. Did the show start or end? Because that's the way it is in football, just like in life, we like to score, and after we score, we no longer play a good game. Surprisingly, the true calling of man in this life, the right to be a performer in the light of the primordial chance to score a new success, can take a radical turn: the temptation to be good at any cost may be in fact too much of a demand on the part of a man without any skill in the field of quality and efficiency.

Whereas what does a beautiful game mean? It's when both teams are balanced, when there is fair play, and when both fight to get a positive result, not necessarily a victory, but an entry in history, or a fans' favorite rating.

How important this is to know. Recognizing and changing our attitude towards life is similar to the liberating ecstasy of the public at unimaginable heights, at every stage of emptiness.

Leadership: Can you increase your chances of experiencing a moment of remembrance by proving that you can stimulate your imagination to represent on the mental screen a vivid image whose artistic force is amplified by an incomparable inner tremor?

Football does not need special conditions or excessive attention to take care of the "eternal inner space" in which the content of your life takes place. Or moving away from what you enjoy doing, just to train for the exam of life, is defined as a period of reconnection, meditation and mindfulness that helps you reduce your stress and anxiety.

I would add something else. Football is not a creation meant to awaken spiritual feelings, to stir in your past and to be viewed with sensitive eyes, like the eyes of a painter who boldly redrew his life. Football does not fall into the category of inexplicable curiosities that make the poet transgress, through the consciousness of belonging to the being, all the obstacles of space and time. Rather, I believe that football is just the temptation to seek the happiness of the moment in an event full of glory that does not belong to you, but to the titular players. So, as I said, it's all about resemblance and comparison.

But the comparison with football is a figure of speech that consists in associating images, situations or characters in the same visual area of the spectators. Let's try something else. Imagine yourself in the position of a painter who transposes on canvas the images created by the poet. In this case, here's how things look, as someone sees them and wrote about it on a webpage:

"The dominant color will be dark blue because it represents night. I will use the cool colors to express the moment of the day in the poem and to create as real of a picture as possible. I will highlight two lovers and I will also highlight the moon and the pale light that it emanates, in order to create a more romantic atmosphere. In the background I will paint the waters that shine in the moonlight. I will use the shadows next to the leafless trees and the light only around the moon."

To conclude. In order to complete the physiognomy of an inner resonance phenomenon, so the physiognomy of this unsurpassed phenomenon of comparison and cause-effect relationship, we must try to look at things not only from above (from the height of a glory that soothes our thoughts and souls) but also very close, very deep, in the light of a painting whose subject exudes passion and movement, in warm, pink-orange colors, and whose model of inspiration cannot be revealed, but only intuited.

Leadership is the reality that you perceive or create about an image whose composition consists in elaborating a form of comparison of the self with your mirroring in a legendary moment.

The Principle Of Background Perception has as its first consideration to take into account that form of reflection of reality in human consciousness, through which we understand a process of comparison between an image that moves through the impression of something living, authentic, experienced directly in fact, at first hand, and an image of great finesse whose essence is the inner meaning of the being.

Let's always take into account the content, the sum of the elements that constitute the internal structure of a thing, which appears as its essence and conditions its appearance, when we want to understand leadership or pictorial art.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-background-perception.html

The Principle Of Clamping

On February 03, 2010

The more pressure you exert on people, the more they will become introvert.

Everyone's nature has two separate sides: one of them is agreeable, delights people and makes them feel better and the other one is disagreeable, becomes transparent in moments of crisis and rejects everybody, discourages them and makes them lose their interest. Why do I believe this?

I still remember the days I used to play football. I was registered at a juniors' club in the city, where I also played in the first team. Every day, I used to go training, make great efforts, as well as great progress. I particularly liked playing football, it was my biggest passion during high school.

The coach was a pretty tall and sturdy man, with short, auburn hair and a bit speckled face. But what made him memorable was his bad-tempered nature. He was always ill-humored and he flamed out from no apparent reason. He couldn't help screaming and cursing. For him, any mistake made by a player, no matter how tinny that mistake was, it became a huge one. Still, he was considered to be a fine coach.

Leadership: Does the experience you attribute to a disappointing result actually represent a self-image that integrates into a context of "What did I gain from a shot fired with two accusations?"

One day, we played a friendly game with a junior team from Constanta, if I remember well. It was an absolute disaster. They lead us with 3-1 till break. We were immediately called down by the coach in the locker room. Angry, with tears in his eyes, deeply disappointed, he vehemently cried out:

- So, you're mocking me. You're mocking my work. What the hell do I train you for? For you to play like some fusty boots?

His mind was going insane. He started screaming, criticizing us, and insulting us. One of the boys, sick and tired of the coach's aggressive attitude, got off his t-shirt, dropped it to the floor and was off for good.

The second round started. The 45 minutes elapsed in a painful and non-constructive way. We all played with fear of making the slightest mistake, which automatically made us fail. We lost our self-confidence. And we received two more goals. The final score was 5-1. As I said, it couldn't be any worse. The coach was distraught with rage. If I told you the whole riot he made, you wouldn't finish up this article.

"A shot fired with two accusations" is the expression of an offensive attitude, usually attributed to the coach, translated by showing a lack of respect for all involved in the game and a lack of vision regarding the price of a certain decrease in his motivational success or regarding the long-term performance of the team.

Leadership: Are you the owner of a voluntary act undertaken by a convention establishing a servitude or by accepting an inner certainty of success?

The man who strives to transform everyone based on his power model will never gain the acceptance of an inner certainty of success. Such success, compared to a spring that never runs dry, can be expected from that hope sprung to life by the vibrant colors shaped by the note of conceptions of self-acceptance, and only those actions that are done with the circumstances provided for promoting a culture of self-examination.

The way our coach influenced us is not at all neglectable. His morbid desire to criticize us every time we couldn't score great results, his hypocrisy, his inadequate attitude in different situations, the high standard he established and imposed us, the pressure he exerted on us, determined us to move to another football club. Two or three months later, more than half of the team was playing for another football team.

How could someone reach a considerable level of performance if he's always out in the cold, permanently criticized, blamed for incompetence or idleness, labeled as bloody minded? What does someone feel every time he finds himself offended, cursed or denigrated? How long could someone bear with all of this? Until when? And what would the impact on him be?

The truth is that, the more pressure someone exerts on people, the more they become introverted. They'll become more and more confused, and then they'll feel ever guiltier because of not being able to better themselves. They'll become undesirous and uninterested. They'll refuse to cooperate further, they'll become introverted and they'll build a protective wall for themselves. And, finally, they'll look for another job. In other words, the one who tries to compel people to fulfill his desires, just like a clam, will score counter results.

Leadership: Is the way you define your own experience within a game of truth reflected in how you manage the image you want to escape from?

The leader influence those around him through his actions, either in a positive or negative way. He can do good or bad around him through his attitude, he can propose himself some great aims he can quickly or never achieve. After all, his whole future depends on himself, because he's the one giving the necessary tone to people in order for them to better and develop themselves, and to achieve great results in the end.

Through his personality, he inspires people's actions, both within the organization and at a personal level, bringing them closer to him. But, on the other side, he can ruin people; he can make them unhappy, smashing their self-respect, self-perception and self-confidence. And, at the end, if people don't perform efficiently and don't get the predictable results, the one who loses will be the leader.

The image that represents you may be the product of personal autonomy, personal authority or emotional experiences that make your life better and enrich your spirit. Which one will change your way of expressing your authenticity, whether it shocks "normality" or not?

The real game the coach oversees is not football, but rather the experience itself in the face of a truth that can totally disarm him: you can get rid of what you consider to be overzealous but you cannot run from what consumes you.

I find it very hard to work with people. "The human resource" is different from other resources and it requires a lot of work and patience which, of course, require lots of energy and availability from the leader. He must be endowed with a balanced nature and behavior, doing the impossible to equal the level of understanding of his collaborators; he himself must be a facile and flexible person, in certain limits, of course.

The Principle Of Clamping applies when the leader does not know the hindrance of limits. The more pressure you exert on people, the more they will become introvert.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-clamping.html

The Principle Of Dissolution Of Authority

On October 27, 2010

A leader who doesn't have a strong and balanced psychic will lose his authority in front of the world and in front of the greatness of life.

I remember the enthusiasm that reflected in the master's eyes while, with the pen in hand and the notebook on the table, I was writing down all the precious instructions he was giving me. I remember the pride I felt that day, when I proved to him that I understood what he taught me. Seized by a great desire to discover the mysteries of art and its ins and outs, I promised to myself, I promised to him that I would do anything he would ask me, I would listen to him and follow all his advice.

The master looked at me with great satisfaction. His face, filled with joy, was reflecting his inner essence, his personality. He was a man of exceptional kindness and gentleness of soul, of sublime greatness. He said to me at one point:

- Nicu, do you know that there was once a very talented artist, named El Greco, who suffered from a condition of visual analyzer, named astigmatism? And do you know that all the portraits he rendered were prolonged? In Spain, there are many churches with his paintings that depict deformed characters? And do you know that the famous painter Van Gogh cut one of his ears due to his fragile mental state? Or that, as some claim, Mona Lisa is, actually, a self-portrait of Leonardo DaVinci?

I was a bit puzzled. I didn't know what he wanted to tell me, giving me these examples, but then, he continued:

- Nicu, the work of an artist reveals his true interpretive capacity which, in turn, is closely related to anatomical and functional integrity of visual and tactile analyzers.

Leadership is a creation to which you transfer your life experience accumulated over time into the story of a character whose traits echo in the immediate reality of the facts that influence the perception of the world on the notion of "fragility".

Famous painters who have suffered from various conditions held up and enjoyed a real success ever since their lifetime. And even if their works remained immortal, they largely reflect the conditions they suffered of. For example, there were painters who only painted in shades of green and blue, because they suffered from a disease called dyschromatopsia. They perceived the surrounding reality in a distorted manner and could not imagine it any other way.

Just like an artist's work, the " work " of a leader reveals his true leadership ability, which is closely related with his psychological substance and the way of perceiving the surrounding reality. He can depart from morality, fairness or liability, if the reality he sees lives or realize isn't coordinated by a solid psychic. A deformed perceived reality can generate chaos, panic and dissension.

Fragility is what you leave behind after you've exhausted your best efforts to build a reality as your own revelations about yourself. Here we are dealing with a tragedy divided into two perfectly equal halves: the fact that you evoke a sense of compassion for the deep wounds and limitations of genius people, who often suffer from megalomania or narcissism, and the fact that you have an admiration, similar to idolatry, clinging too often to certain qualities such as intelligence, insight, imagination, without being aware that you possess them.

Leadership: Is your evolution determined directly on the quadrant of a time that stops you from being yourself, under the impact of a reason that requires a communion between instinctive impulse and the pressure of social norms?

Your evolution is determined directly on the quadrant of a time that stops you from being yourself when it manifests itself in an unstable and disappointing psychic, not in a superior, human psychic. The instinctive impulse of man is to respond to the needs and desires of the moment with the help of vast knowledge and experience, but at the same time he is subjected to an instability in the case of a depression caused by the intensity of certain frustrations, such as lack of value, lack of expression, the lack of a position of authority in the field, the lack of permission to feel pleasure, or even the lack of measure in creation.

The man who did not have the time to cultivate his values, spirituality, will have limits only in choosing to interpret his own role. He will only take into account the accumulations of the past from which despair, pride, distress or indifference have been born, and in the general course of his "work" there will be no less to accept than the hazard.

Let's point out one thing now, right? Leadership focuses on the human dimension as a means of obtaining performance results in a field or another. If the leadership produced, demonstrated and practiced around by the leader is not inspired and controlled, if it's not in harmony with human values, then it can only be one of domination and submission, which instead of generating satisfaction, only generates tension. Definitely, a leader's way of action and his so-called "work" depends on the normality of his psychic.

Adolf Hitler is a good example in this respect. He managed to win the German people by his side by his original, possibly good, great ideas and a sortable doctrine. But because of his psychic, he eventually fell into the extremism and ended in genocide. Strange as it may appear, this ambitious pretender to high ideals had an absurd conception regarding people, races and religions; he wanted to obtain a pure Aryan race at any cost...

A leader who suffers from a mental illness can have a great persuasive ability and can graft in people's minds an idea apparently normal, but he risks deviating from the generally accepted idea, reaching a fallacy.

Leadership: Do you choose to live in a dimension of assuming responsibility for a past that stubbornly does not pass, or in a dimension of consciousness that manifests itself in the form of a claim to build a "New Man" ?

Personal fulfillment equates with the rejection of the claim of receiving moral damage due to a rough and unscrupulous character. Or, on the contrary, it can be due to a reluctant, permissive character, who does not trust his own forces, which is limited to complacency in utter laziness, that is, that he does not use his nature given talent.

The leader needs a balanced psychic, otherwise he can collapse and start to see everything in one "colour". And just like bulls get angry and react when they see red, their pride may be aroused when people around him deviate from his principles. And for the fulfillment of his ideals, the one with a weak psychic will be able to sacrifice even his dearest things. And giving the fact that nobody can bear the presence of a tyrant in his life, the power of this leader will diminish fair and steady until extinction.

For any leadership position, it is necessary to have a strong personality, with a psychic in normal limits, a balanced mind - a person with a clear mind and able to perceive correctly the surrounding reality, and also be endowed with important analysis and synthesis abilities.

The New Man is the copy of a man with chosen beliefs, who has learned that the only great glory one can enjoy is not to be "unique" in a field of wide interest, but to be strong in the face of temptations of any kind, in front of their own standards and principles in life that can always be damaged at the first impulse of energy, adrenaline and enthusiasm.

Leadership is the responsibility you have to prove when you are aware that what defines you at the level of uniqueness is totally overshadowed by the mental image of what you have previously experienced as a weakness of emotions or intellect.

The Principle Of A Dissolution Of Authority refers to the inner problems that are usually encountered by geniuses, artists or intellectuals whose existential sense is no longer just about creating and performing in a particular field, but about relating to self-centered needs based on the refusal to accept the realities of a world trapped in the madness of an uncontrolled evolution.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-dissolution-of-authority.html

The Principle Of Efficiency

On February 19, 2010

Measure your responsibility foundation to what you give and receive, correctly increasing the dimension of your self-image.

When he was student, Mikael Karvajalka, in order to make a living, asked the great doctor Theophrastus Bombastus Paracelsus von Hohenheim to accept him as his disciple and teach him that complex science called medicine. After a good thought, the doctor accepted, especially because he needed someone who knew the local language. The doctor took the boy to the barn used as hospital and told him to talk about the plants used by the locals for their healing properties.

While talking about plants and their properties, Mikael nodded his head in admiration and said:

- You are a lucky man, doctor Paracelsus ! If you will ever work for him, the king will reward you with a lot of gold, land and green forests.

After a wild look at him, the doctor answered:

- My luck is the traveller's verge and the joy of picking up as many good teachings as possible, nothing else interests me beside science. I know that I will sometimes become the best doctor in the world and the most illustrious doctors of the high universities won't be worthy even of tying the laces of my shoes. Should I be seeking wealth, I could have worn silk and velvet, I could have worn golden necklaces for a long time now, but I am satisfied with the bleak clothes of a traveller and the poor man's food. You will never increase your knowledge by staying at the courts of kings or emperors. In order to have knowledge, you must trustfully shake the hands of those who understand the language of nature.

Leadership: Does the amount that you pay through a manifestation of essential qualities determine the level of skill acquired through an assessment test?

If you haven't read the novel Mikael Karvajalka by Mika Waltari, I warmly recommend it. It's not a medicine book, but an adventure one. But it is very well written and you will certainly learn a lot of interesting things.

Doctor Paracelsus had a stubborn wish to learn new things. He increased his knowledge studying at the universities in France and Italy, by traveling in Spain, England, the Netherlands and many other countries, making contact with many other masters of medicine. But he didn't choose the path the other doctors did – who imagine they could learn something by staying warm, eating fried chicken and wearing silk and velvet clothing.

But he chose the path of science, devoted body and soul to the suffering people, he was in a constant search of cures and remedies. Sometimes, he would wake up in the middle of the night and wander on the fields for medicinal plants, should the position of the stars be favorable, making various observations. Or he would rest near graves in order to study the specters of the dead. He didn't fear the vicinity of bodies filled with worms, nor was he sickened by their stench.

Doctor Paracelsus always ardently sought the company of strange and simple people, not only the company of the learned and noble ones. From the honest and intense desire to help everybody and because he was an extraordinarily skillful doctor, his reputation grew enormously fast. His advice and treatments were priceless and the people, satisfied with his seriousness and kindness, always relying on the skillfulness he so often proved, always came back to him.

He always increased his self-worth and life value by manifesting an essential quality: the tendency to assume a higher intelligence. This intelligence, regardless of how we understand it, was hardly ever linked to the sublime of an ambition or the sublime of an art. But rather to the sublime of an experience expressed by a rhythm of the soul drawn from the appreciation with which it offered its teachings and knowledge.

Do you assess yourself as a whole that almost pushes the world away with its maturity and perfect operation, or as a whole which enables the perpetuation of high ideals through the value content that you possess?

Valuing means to really love your innate qualities which make the people around you gain a new perspective of affirmation.

Endeavour and perseverance will determine your level of efficiency. If you are willing to work with great joy and from all your heart, if you have a strong appetite for novelty, you will be able to obtain maximum results and you will be admired and respected. Your endeavor and perseverance in gaining as many abilities as possible will be rewarded by a high level of efficiency. The more you will "train", the more your level of efficiency will be higher and the more you will become masterful in your field. And, with no doubt, the performances you will obtain will determine your level of success.

A very good doctor recognizes the symptoms of every illness and knows how to put an exact diagnosis. And depending on the particularities of each case, he can establish the type and duration of treatment. He knows how to distinguish between illnesses, for example, between pulmonary cancer and pulmonary emphysema. They are both important illnesses of the respiratory apparatus, but they have different symptoms and specific treatments. Some symptoms last for a few days, are less important, disappear and reappear regularly. Other symptoms are tardive and appear in the patient's final months of life. Other illnesses are very rare and can be differentiated with great difficulty and others are very frequent and easy to recognize. The importance of knowing every illness is necessary in order to make an earliest diagnosis as possible, in order to apply an effective therapy.

The representative function of efficiency is an affirmation of practical life that embraces not only the material, intellectual and moral activity of man, but also the causes that produce another value.

Just like a doctor, you will master perfectly your abilities and you will raise your level of efficiency just by practice and long research, but more by direct experience rather than by theoretical and scientific analysis. If you don't try hard to become an artist in your profession, if you don't devote yourself body and soul to work you won't be able to raise your level of efficiency and you won't have exceptional results. And the impact on your people will be insignificant.

The principle of efficiency is a prerequisite self-image that can be correctly increased through the value you produce through the uniqueness of your value. This principle can only be defined in terms such as "benefits outweigh the costs."

* Note: Mika Waltari - Mikael Karvajalka, Editura Polirom, 2005.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-efficiency.html

The Principle Of Evolution Towards Absoluteness

On December 18, 2012

Give a sense and continuity to your own transformation, without leaping your knowledge at a height that could jeopardize your meant to be a Man.

It states that everything is possible, that what is unreal may become real. And vice versa. What is real can actually be unreal.

Sometimes, waking up in the morning, I was seized by an insane fear and I could not open my eyes. A hard blow, of punishment, given to my insistences of understanding what seemed incomprehensible. As a repercussion of my curiosity to all that was around me, to everything that was in a new form, towards the laws in a continuous state of change governing the time, the Man and life.

I was overwhelmed by the memory of that night when I had been awakened suddenly, like hearing a terrible thunder; by a flash of lucidity… again I had no other desire than the one to decipher the complexity of the phenomenon. As if I had been in the middle of a phantasmagoria, and what I felt was simply the effect of the nightmare from the heavy sleep that is life.

As if someone descended from a world more advanced than mine, ours, of the mortals, someone alike the beings superior to us, having the knowledge of good and evil, of time and life, the sole possessor of acquirements in all fields of knowledge, committer of all the world mysteries and of the universe, with all the elements related to their formation – it would have made my summary of all the truths, which until now have not been discovered and revealed.

Leadership: Can you capitalize on your ability of constructing a favorable self-image by guiding yourself according to the law: "If you know everything, then you are only halfway along your journey"?

In that state between sleep and reality, I thought I understood everything. It seemed, suddenly, that I became an Atlas of the deepest mysteries, the keeper of all things visible and invisible, being able to explain, to give a harmony and a sense to all laws in all.

But something persisted within me; something was troubling me, discouraging me in all this array of revelations which defied me intellectually. Alexandre Dumas' words, these words loaded with such a cognizance were beating with insistence at the door of my thoughts, limiting my horizon of understanding:

"On the day when the man will know these laws and will follow them, will get free of his duty. And as this duty is the death, the man will become immortal. To create and not die, is not it the ideal side of the science? For the science is God's rival.

If the man would know the mystery of all things that are in the world, he could support the irrefutable theories before the divinity by itself. God will answer:

- If you know everything, you're only on the half of your way; now create a worm or a star and you will be my equal."

It was better not to know everything, to accept my limitations and to move on with myself, in the present which was the most important. To become the man who I was supposed to be, the simple man, not a sophisticated one, so difficult to understand. To remain the same, the man who loves life and its little miracles. And lives it with dignity and joy. Just that, to be a Man. No more and no less.

Leadership: Have you taken it upon yourself to establish the sources of authentic knowledge and determine the value of your knowledge by relating to a self-experience that gives you a new type of experience?

To have access to the entire science, to start looking for it, and fully assimilating it, like a treasure locked with seals, is a very profitable occupation. And very popular especially among the most erudite people. But the number of these seekers towards absoluteness, of these sobresaliente that never stop growing, rising more and more as the sea waves on a deserted beach. Because it rarely happens in humanity, for a man to be more than he was given to be, no matter how enthusiastic he would be in his searches.

The mechanism that strongly facilitates the relationship man-leadership works based on two components: science and knowledge. The science of becoming who you want to be, and the knowledge to manage your new status, the newly formed personality. However, these two components are lacking, definitely the third one: balance. And the balance is given by the "message in the bottle" brought by the waves of life.

When you go too far with the researching of the unknown, when mixing too much science and knowledge in your practices, you have all chances to shipwreck on a deserted island at one time. Your only help, your only chance of returning to normal is the message from the bottle: "Come back to you. Come back to life."- A respite of your renewal, a break between the two rounds: of search and doubt, of the total knowledge and of trying to retrieve the most valuable asset: the state of satisfaction.

Leadership: Do you dare compose a work of unquestionable quality and coherence, in which the most important moments of your life are noted, in an interpretation that highlights the revelations of the science that motivates you?

Leadership, I defined it at one of my webinars as a set of processes, well-defined and transferable means, designed to lead, under conditions of proper approach, to optimal results. Also leadership is composed of a set of transformations of situations and decisions, of phases, and relations, meant to ensure a sustainable development to the society. Therefore, it represents a lever in achieving an agreement between the two sides: the human dimension and the social-economic one.

Until today, the term of leadership was felt as a result of its usability in the field of a moral and cognitive appreciation, sometimes wrong, of the personality of those arriving in high positions, and regarding their level of training. For many people, leadership means to perform with ability certain tasks, missions, according to a widely accepted set of rules.

For me, very concisely, leadership means transformation.

And the transformation begins with you, starting from the present point, and reaching the highest point of evolution. And this maximum point of evolution, like a river flowing into the sea, flows forward along with the fluxion of science and knowledge that you accumulate, once with the continuous fluxion between receiving and giving forth, between accepting that you are in the same boat with the rest of the world and rejecting at all means that you are different.

A bridge between evolution and crash, the perfect balance between "to be" and "to become" crossing multiple areas of life, it is decisive for the "Man" within you.

Being a man, just as nature fashioned you, not a robot, not a "lateral" human being, superior by the skill with which wields the science and the advanced knowledge from any area or another, is an art that some people, although they are human beings, could not master it. Being a "Man" is the first requirement of leadership toward the best way.

The only quality work you can make out of the revelations of the science called upon in key moments of life is a consequence of giving up on what is absolutely necessary to do with what you know and focus on what you feel about what you know in the present moment.

The principle of evolution towards absoluteness highlights that minimization of the human value, of the one that fails to give une signification merveilleuse to his life. But which, driven by the deepest impulses, inspired by the most powerful ideals, tries to reach the Glory, crowning himself with the laurels of superiority.

Do you insist to understand what seems incomprehensible? Is the"Man within You" a consequence of your curiosity to everything that surrounds you, to the laws in a continuous state of change that rules the world?

Do you accept your limits and move on with yourself, in the present which is the most important? Or, you tend to be alike a superior being, whose whole and only wealth is the science?

That which gives value to life is the habit of always withdrawing from the empire of appearances kept between the imperatives of science and the preventive feeling of the limitations of abstract thinking, trying to rise to essences.

Are you a man who is heading towards his own conviction, trying to understand absolutely everything, ignoring the riches of life? Or, you are the man who loves life and its little miracles, and lives it with dignity and joy?

Stop halfway. Do not continue to climb up where you were not given to reach. Give a sense and continuity to your own transformation, without leaping your knowledge at a height that could jeopardize your meant to be a "Man".

P.S. Only when we will know how to really use life, only when life will open its heavy doors of its immense reasons, only when we will learn to assimilate the splendid mechanic of time, with all its dimensions, with all its forms which are spinning, rolling and rotating by imposing new boundaries and new horizons - only then will decrease the distance that separates us from the unknown truths, only then we can fully understand, or at least we can glimpse the answer to the great mysteries of the man and universe.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-evolution-towards-absoluteness.html

The Principle Of Fruition

On January 26, 2010

For a relationship to be long-lasting, it must bare fruits at the right time.

We only get contrition when we do something wrong. The bigger the wrongdoing, the more our inner self suffers. In the worst case, if the mistake we made is to severe, we risk paying a very high price. It is clear as daylight that the famous proverb "one learns from mistakes" doesn't make any sense if we get to the point in which we can't change anything anymore. Thus, for things to always be as we want them to be, positive and nice, we must avoid making major mistakes. Or we may be lucky enough to meet, at the right time, a special person to save us from trouble, to prevent us from making irreparable mistakes and to guide our steps in the right direction.

Alejandro, the main character in the movie "The Mask of Zorro (1998)" was one step away from making a lethal mistake, but he was saved in the last moment by Don Diego de la Vega (Zorro). He was at a table, drunk, when he saw captain Harrison Love, the one who had killed his brother. Without thinking too much, overwhelmed by an unlimited madness, he took the sword, got up from the table and jumped on him.

He was lucky enough that Don Diego de la Vega suppressed the bad impulse coming from his heart and prevented him from fulfilling his plan, otherwise he would have been killed and nobody could have avenged his brother's death.

Leadership: Is your reaction to the duality that tests you in moments of doubt a representation of your situation in a context of accepting random circumstances?

Long-lasting relationships bare fruits at the right time. Just like Alejandro, who wanted to avenge his brother's death, Don Diego de la Vega wanted to avenge the death of his beloved wife, Elena. Neither of them could have achieved their goals should they act on their own. Don Diego de la Vega, wiser and more skilled, proposed to Alejandro a collaboration and only thus he would succeed in avenging his brother. Alejandro accepted and, soon, they grew into a very strong friendship.

But did they met by accident or not? What would have happened if, say, Don Diego de la Vega had met Alejandro five years earlier? Or maybe five years later? Or what would have happened should only one of them had needed the other, and the other one hadn't?

Well, most certainly things would have been completely different. But they met at the exactly at the right time, when each of them needed the other. Thus, they were prepared to communicate well, they trusted each other and they could fulfill their goals. The reward for their alliance was sortable. In other words, "they sew" the seed called collaboration and harvested "the fruit", unfortunately, called revenge.

Duality is the conflict between the negative and the positive that occurs when you have to make a pressing decision in unexpected circumstances. First, you reject your qualities by comparing them with those of others, then you become aware of your own qualities and as precisely as possible tell yourself of the system of values to which you relate so that you are confident that a particular mission really suits you in order to fulfill it.

Sure enough, life beats the movie. In real life, things are not at all different from the way they happened in "The Mask of Zorro (1998)", only the story and time are different. Always, the best relationships are the result of two or more persons' devotion short of selfishness in view of fulfilling a common goal.

Leadership: Does the way you integrate a fragile personal experience within a supportive framework, change the optics through which you relate to others in a mode of inferiority or superiority?

Coincidences are not at all by chance. When you set yourself a higher goal and wait for something good to happen, surprisingly, all sort of events happen to lead you to the right direction. Sure enough, exactly at the right time, you will meet the right person to help you fulfill your goals and, by the help you will offer at in exchange, you will help them fulfill their goals. Just as Brian Tracy, one of the most famous lecturers and personal and professional development consultants, once said, in most cases, coincidences are not at all by chance. Every aspect of life is just as it should be.

I believe that every human relationship, in order to develop and resist in time, must be made at the right time. Not at all before that. That is when two or more persons are emotionally prepared to start a collaboration relationship, when they unite their efforts in order to achieve a common goal, when they have one direction. Relationships that are born quickly, but don't stand on a common basis they quickly consume and die. They are not continuous and long-lasting as they should be.

A collaboration relationship is hard to establish and hard to keep if two or more people don't have anything in common. The nature and the purpose of the relationship are those determining its durability. Most certainly, all human relationships' characteristic is the engagement of two or more people, right from the start, to help each other, in view of achieving their common goals.

But whenever you integrate a fragile personal experience within a supportive framework, the optics through which you relate to others change. You can relate in a mode of inferiority by putting your dignity before your feelings and before making any decisions. Or you can relate in a mode of superiority by giving up actively receiving learning experiences and providing feedback of the type "thank you, but I haven't asked anything of you", to friendship suggestions.

Leadership is a way to express your attitude of superiority through an assumption of inferiority when you have to earn a learning experience.

P.S. Only the people who have a clearly defined goal and are willing to make everything in order to achieve it will meet, at the right time, the one trustworthy person, willing to collaborate with them and support them in everything they attempt. Or, as Don Diego de la Vega said, "When the student is ready, the teacher will come".

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-fruition.html

The Principle Of Human Value In The Present Continuum Of Eternity

On April 11, 2022

Your value is neither higher nor lower than the one you set yourself in the race against destiny.

I would have liked to turn the purpose of my life into a magnificent idea, an unprecedented combination of experience, talent and ambition, to make the right decision for the first and last time for which I would not regret anything. No previous interaction with other ideas had proved effective and profitable, no opportunity to assert myself had gotten in my way. With the same warmth with which fire burns forests, I would have liked to focus all my energy on a proposed, well-thought-out and defined goal, to turn myself into a kind of Magellan who, with that great intellectual effervescence emanating from a tenacious and ferocious temperament, turns the purpose of his life into a magnificent obsession.

But really, things are not as they are in books, and books do not change things nor great ideas, and do not even separate the purpose from that simple but fixed idea, able to orient your personal and professional life more easily and precisely, with little effort. It is not at all easy to overcome your mental limitations and increase your self-esteem, aiming as high as possible, inspired by the enthusiasm and energy of great events. Indeed, if I had a fixed idea, and believe me, I had many opportunities to fabricate such ideas, perhaps I would have acted like a magnifying glass: I would have focused all my energy on the goal.

Despite this, I sought an alternative to success under the influence of a conscience that helped me to be better, more understanding, and to overcome some of the limitations I had, and finally, as a prophetic calling, to prove the finality of an idea in which people are willing to believe. As in the case of Magellan, I started from a wrong idea, una cosa da poco, and ended up with a victory: the progressive realization of the Great Hermetic Work, this mega-waterfall called Elekmesithus (an unsuspected momentum for eternity), flowing from a huge cliff at the edge of a precipice: "The Ego's Mirror".

Leadership: Does the distance you travel to success help to create a sense of greatness, in parallel with the formation of the feeling of "sense of human value organized in a representation of the Supreme Self"?

Eventually, any attempt to be someone else becomes a fertile ground for overcoming the Ego, a justification for establishing a distinction between the Supreme Self and the Divine Self with the intellectual and speculative support of the soul: Thanusintreck(the unity of true faith founded by Christ) which man cannot reach without exclusive divine support. It also requires a solid knowledge of alchemy. And so, trying to observe objective reality through the mirror of my own subjectivity, completely unbelievable, I began to amplify my self-esteem, aiming as high as possible. Over seas and lands, over all time constraints, over all distances under the womb of the world.

The Supreme Self has measured my worth, which can be translated as "I have become the person I aspired to be." It is a symbol of aspiration for perfection. Or an indication of aspiration for spiritual freedom.

In the end, all things, all events, everything that's happened to me, conjunctural or preferential, led me to get a broader view than I was used to. Knowing that energy is always in the direction of thoughts, and that intuition, through a subtle sense of greatness, always makes its way into the laws of the mind, I was able to overcome my conviction of self-worth. Only immortal time will prove how forgotten the world I had built myself as a kind of frivolous mediator is, before I set out on a journey that never ends. Or if it ends, it actually resumes.

Leadership: Does the momentum towards the absolute materialize through an exemplary decision taken to the limit of genius, thanks to an exemplary deed that spreads at the level of promoting the myth of total destiny?

And what else remains to be fused, between faith and denial, between discipline and spontaneity, between rigor and freedom, than the powerful deed, coveted by all and done only by me, that gentle caress of the crown of victory: the discovery of a new fundamental force of nature, translated by the exemplary determination, taken to the limit of genius, to reach the truth about me.

Yes, it was possible. In a single moment of my life, in an astral second – burning as the sun, held by geography in an archipelago of encouragement — I realized that I could do more than I thought I could. And that changed everything. It was man who understood nothing more and was able to comprehend in his own loneliness, like a whirlwind of glory, the heavenly, universal praise, transforming it alchemically into an act of the descent of God into man and the ascension of man to God, through faith and free cooperation.

The chance for an absolute boost materialized into a prophetic sign that was beyond imagination. Perhaps from the beginning he had to adhere to a certain algorithm that ordered in ascending order the elements of a vast knowledge of the main diagonal of a given matrix, guaranteeing the obtaining of an "Ab Solutus", the effect of a speculative push towards intelligible heights, la forma de una carrera tumultuosa hacia el infinito del mundo.

Remember what I'm telling you now. In its immensity, and in a single moment, the power of God can fill wandering spirits with the highest science, but only at the appointed time, only when the stars align and when Mercury is not retrograde. So, the only thing that fate has asked of me, in a time of turmoil of transition, has been waiting for the pre-determined time, a heavy burden for the unbelievers, a glorious work for those who will perform miracles.

Leadership: Can your pursuit of success be interpreted as an exhortation to "abandon yourself to a more distant view" until you reach a degree of consciousness that is the very measure of a prophetic capacity that never ceases to amaze you?

Especially from Magellan, destiny demanded a high price before he became the hero of the world after the accomplishment of the exemplary deed. And the writer Stefan Zweig best illustrated the great value, the brilliant superiority of the work of genius, the sublime manifestation of latent energy focused on the heavens of eternity:

"A man always achieves the maximum possible only when his deed becomes exemplary. And in this respect Magellan's example – his almost forgotten deed – has always proved that an idea, if carried by the wings of genius, if always carried determined before a passion, he is ultimately stronger than all the elements of nature, and his great deed has shown that one man, with his short and fleeting life, can turn into a reality and an immortal truth what had been only a wish, just a dream for hundreds of generations."

This is no exaggeration. This is the pure truth: my value is infinitely greater than I ever thought possible. But one important thing to keep in mind is that only a man of unwavering will, willing to sacrifice everything he possesses in this earthly world, will be worthy to embrace between the wings of infinity an idea capable of crossing the threshold of eternity. For an act to gain time, to snatch a particle from infinity, it is not enough for its author to embark on a long and dangerous journey, he must return with the most precious win that exists in this world: a new consciousness.

The purpose of leadership is as follows: "The value of man is given by the measure of his conviction of his own worth, as the only way to reach the level of the power of Destiny."

The Principle Of Human Worth In The Present Continuum Of Eternity actually reveals man's power to impose himself in the face of a destiny which, even if it imposes much torment and suffering, leads him to the fulfillment of an exemplary deed that will ensure his leap to immortality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-human-value-in-the-present-continuum-of

The Principle Of Looking Beyond Sight

On December 16, 2021

What you see around you is synonymous with the way you describe your thoughts in a direction that supports the life of another reality-reflecting system.

I look at this shriveling rose in my garden, shriveled by an indistinct dissatisfaction, by the fear of some future pain. Its body still has a lot to bear. It feels my silent, discreet, thoughtful presence, as if we were both trapped in a psychological labyrinth, artificially maintained, in which once you get lost you forget any kind of selfishness and personal interests.

Indeed, when you feel abandoned, bewildered, forgotten, you feel an acute need to know more about the world, about life itself, with its fragments of chiaroscuro framed in a picture with many bizarre, unexpected and atypical contrasts. I feel that this is how it must have been, that the forgotten one should be remembered and ennobled with that mysterious sparkle, destined only to beings predestined with grace, and the one promised to a great artist's destiny to successfully post in the catalog of immortality an almost stellar beauty.

The honesty with which I write down and research my visual experience, the feeling of belonging to the same reality, restores the solemn bridge that unites us. Being an artist of well-chosen colors and shades, and the rose being a model of great inspiration, this complicity in building a metauniverse in which even death is relative makes us not turn our eyes away from reality itself – to abysmal obsessive perspectives of the fears of beings alienated from their true identity.

I don't believe anything anymore, not even if I have to put myself in his place to realize that, no matter how much of an artist I am, I tremble at the parting of a new friend. Maybe, however, I was a rose in another life, and not just any rose, but a splendid "Double Delight". That's why I say, and often I repeat, that I can't separate myself from myself, because I'm made up of another half in a different plane of vibration.

Leadership: Can you build your vision of a model of reality that pushes you toward creation, even when reality takes on another "life" in its own duplicity?

In order to be better informed with myself, I would advise my heart to research what it sees well, before it is truly ready to beat by checking the existence of someone else's pulse. The rose belongs to an interiority that only partially understands what is happening to it, while I belong to the experience of living the internalization of the idea of qualitative non-differentiation between parts, as an inseparable continuum between the concept of "destiny" and that of "creator".

The rose shows no sign of being clear today, but I could remind them of the gentle sun of yesterday. And since we are both bound by a vast area of transition to maturity, by a kind of unseen, energetic, and spiritual thread, I would ask my heart for guidance in the sources of an art far superior to what was once offered by Schelling's teachings: "the humblest became the supreme, and the faintest portrait became a multicolored poetic universe."

Moreover, I would ask my heart to research life on Earth with the help of the sight of a rose, through the lens of a photographer who captures that area of the visual field outside the ordinary sight of the ordinary mortal. Here I think the words of Mika Waltari from the novel "The Etruscan" are moralizing:

"Treasures and riches perish. Wonderful painted amphorae, delicate statuettes, what do you have left of them? Only the painting on the stone walls of the tombs will be preserved. Because no one steals walls from graves. And the precious stones will remain in their place. But no one will be able to read them.

I am sure that after I bend down to pick up these smooth stones from the dust in which they will be buried for centuries, I will find myself. I will climb the narrow staircase and come to light again. My eyes will be alive again and see the sacred cone of the goddess on the mountain in front of the tomb. I will recognize myself, I will remember myself, the one I am now. And then... after that, everything will be decided."

Leadership: Is your creation aimed at assimilating a destiny meant to assume the version of a symbol that captures the duality of a real and imaginary Self at the same time?

What did I notice? The rose is able to understand life on earth, history as well as the present, without having to define it in any way, being itself a concentration of expressive culture, incorporating stories, ideas, symbols. As such, in a parallel aesthetic universe, closely linked by a conditional connection, in a single pale concentration manifested against the backdrop of a fairytale setting, it is precisely that perspective on life from which we never look at things. like an ocean from which there is no way out...

From time to time, the rose glanced around, its eyes involuntarily lit by a strange twinkle. And what does it see? It sees the accomplishments, only dreamed of, of thoughts which are certainly momentary, thoughts which belong to all, but which few have the courage to put into words. Perhaps, it too cannot detach itself from a reality contained in a picture with many nuances, that reality of a human life experienced through art, through symbol, through comparisons, which, although belonging to the past, is present precisely through the form given to the objective world.

I'm still trying to read my own life in its eyes, with the little deeds of the talking brush that knows how to write on the canvas the story of a small trace of the present in the entire history of the Earth. And, at least for a moment, I see myself in the position of that creator who, being able to animate a flower, a stone or a metal, and everything else around him, still cannot change his destiny. I have only the right to consume my destiny the way I feel, or felt like regarding a happenstance...

In the case of art, leadership implies the belonging of a creator to the establishment of a dualism of his being: by feeding an ego that continues to hold power, and by inventing an Alter Ego that projects itself in a figurative plane.

The Principle Of Looking Beyond Sight refers to the means by which an artist breathes life into any body in the environment, accepting the idea that everything comes from matter and transforms into matter on another level. Basically, the artist can turn everything into a complete picture which, as an exercise in imagination, can function on its own.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-looking-beyond-sight.html

The Principle Of Parallel Ascents

On November 07, 2024

The rise of one extreme will always lead to the rise of the other extreme, like a counterbalance of opposites where polarities seek and complement each other in perfect harmony.

In the labyrinth of our existence, each climb to one extreme becomes the catalyst for another climb. Like an "Astralis Vorterix Luminex", the point of convergence where opposites meet, the extremes attract and potentiate each other, in a new horizon, from a perpetual process of becoming. This is exactly how things are in the great mountain running circuit, which the towering and majestic mountains host year after year in Romania. And while moments of maximum intensity transform physical competition into an expression of the search for universal balance, the search for the culmination of any effort becomes the very expression of the thirst for the absolute.

Yes. Every climb is a chance to regain your lost balance. In this place of transcendence, I notice how each leap towards a limit becomes the mirror of another leap. It's as if the universe has designed a series of double steps, where climbing up one side inevitably leads to climbing up the other side, like an Escher painting where the stairs seem to go up in opposite directions but end up at the same point. Here, my sister, Oana Fântânaru, almost every time becomes the expression of an artist with great openness to new horizons, by turning every step into a creative act.

Leadership: How do you manage to transform the tension between two extremes into a creative force, making their apparent opposition a source of energy and progress?

With each step towards one extreme, y con la fuerza del destino inevitable, the other extreme intensifies its own ascent, in a ritual of balance and mutual complementation. That things are like this, Oana herself confirms to us, every time her steps rise under an artistic impulse, forming together with the movement a continuum in which the universe of a triumphant story coexists through the very art of the body to transform into an instrument of transcendence. The polarities of physical effort and the creative spirit meet at the climaxes of the race, coincide with the moments of grace of victory, of which only one recreates the artistic space of pure performance, by mirroring with the vibration of a cry of the heart in which the brilliance of the colors of reinvented life is mixed with fear, anxiety, anguish in front of the competitive fight.

This dynamic of opposites, between what consumes energy and what regenerates it, reminds me of the words of Hermann Hesse: "Always when a man has reached the highest step of one extreme, he will find that the other extreme has always been waiting for him there. "

In the same way, in search of limits, Oana discovered each time that the extremes are actually gateways to the same fundamental reality: "Everything that consumes me physically, at the same time elevates me spiritually."

The peak is the height of charm. Up there, everything seems to be suspended, in an unstable balance, above the abyss, but the unshakable will maintains the state of "transcendent grace", as a kind of ecstatic gliding over the obstacles and difficulties encountered along the way. The space between the extremes of these two states, namely physical exhaustion and spiritual elevation, becomes a Nexoris Ethereal Synoptix, a force field where polarities meet and transform. Like a Kandinsky painting, where rigid geometric forms merge with the fluidity of colors, extremes find harmony in their apparent contradiction.

Leadership: Does your push to the limits reveal the power of an inner call to balance, reflecting a deep echo hidden at the core of a creative vision?

Oana's exploratory eye captures the synergy between ascension and self-discovery. I mean that the polarities between constraint and liberation, conscious and unconscious, meet in moments of grace, from which only the conscious recreates the artistic space of pure performance, by mirroring the essence of the creative spirit. In this alchemy of opposites, it is vital to understand that each extreme carries within itself the seed of its own transcendence. As in the Japanese art of kintsugi, where cracks become golden lines, extremes complement each other creating a new form of beauty.

Every step that Oana takes in the mountain turns into a creative act whenever it exceeds the limits of the ordinary, acquiring a transcendent dimension that art calls "revelation". It is truly a revelation to see how physical limits melt away in the intensity of the climb, so that each challenge becomes an expression of continuing the race on a new path. I repeat, in this complex game of parallel ascensions, each extreme becomes the teacher of the other. It is like that moment described in the Tao Te Ching when the sage realizes that light and darkness are two facets of the same reality.

Not for nothing, Oana's creative vision can be expressed in the following way: "Each step is an affirmation of the spirit, a testimony of the courage to carve my own path in the stone of destiny."

Leadership: To what extent do you manage to maintain balance between opposing forces, turning them into a creative process rather than a destructive conflict?

Is not each extreme a mirror of the other? As if the universe had designed a perfect system of balances, where each force finds its exact counterweight in its opposite, and Oana, through the art of combining opposites, manages to recreate the miracle of the great masterpiece called: "harmony of extremes". That is, transcendence through effort, by accepting the idea that limits are only points of transformation, in the version of a harmonious relationship between strength and fragility. Finally, it becomes evident that the principle of parallel ascensions is not only a law of nature, but a way of understanding all of existence. The extremes thus become not opposite points, but partners in the spiritual plane of becoming.

Oana will continue to participate in mountain running competitions, knowing that after every conquered mountain top, another one will follow, that every artistic moment lived is synonymous with the creative act in that it transcends the limits of the ordinary. Caught in this process of transformation, through which the physical becomes pure art, Oana's art of running through infinite mountain spaces, with that untamed grace, draws our attention to the fact that authenticity is born from overcoming limits, in support of the idea that "every step is a new creation". In the end, this is also a kind of art, to know yourself as the creator of your own destiny, proposing as signified for the essence of the masterpiece a living story carved in a painting of endless becoming.

Leadership manifests itself in the ability to recognize and orchestrate the dynamics of extremes, turning their tension into a source of continuous creation and evolution.

The principle of parallel ascensions applies when extremes meet continuously. This deep understanding reveals to us that in every climb to one extreme lies the promise of another climb, in a continuous spiral of becoming where opposites complement and transcend each other. Oana proves the mastery of this climb, keeping her promise that, always, to make art, you must manage to transform effort into grace, beyond the boundaries of the visible. Each step to the extreme becomes a mirror for another dimension of personal growth.

The Principle Of Parallel Worlds

On December 14, 2010

Let the people have access to the world you build, otherwise you'll never be able to integrate to their world.

Someone earlier made a remark that left well etched in my mind: "Nowadays, it requires two things: first, rich people need to know how poor people live, second, poor people must learn how wealthy people proceed."

These words spoken with great wisdom reveals a sad reality, but true - that there are great distances and communication barriers between people. They also show that worlds, poor people, as well as the rich people will always remain two parallel worlds until they will not find each other until they will not unite and will support each other with the utmost seriousness and with great spiritual joy.

Leadership: Do you have the pretension to enter and live in a dimension of eternal dominion, if you yourself cannot master the impulse of overestimating yourself?

Closed world of Captain Nemo. If you read "2000 Leagues under the Sea" by Jules Verne, you precisely remember about those three companions, Aronnax, Ned and Conseil, which the fate threw them on Captain Nemo's vessel. For ten months they have led an incredible life, sequestered in a huge submarine traveling with great speed, obeying all that time totally to the captain orders, who initially promised them freedom, but never kept his word.

While, initially Captain Nemo showed him very gracious and friendly, those three have realized very quickly that he was not interested at all about their fate. No mistaken. All three were considered puppets by Nemo that he managed the way he wanted. He never had listened them with interest, has not granted importance to all their requests and wishes, but kept them hostage, feeding their hopes of freedom only with empty promises.

Those three companions never knew where they were heading. Nemo was a commander who was not afraid of anything; he was a strange person, which scared you by inducing that terrible feeling of fear whenever he wanted. Seemed he subdued at all his human feelings - wanted to stop forever those three aboard the Nautilus, that is, indirectly, to submit to a real slavery. This was the golden rule of Captain Nemo: who enter Nautilus never have to leave it so that the secret of his life and his colossal wealth which he had gathered to never be revealed.

Over-estimation is the guilt of feeling stuck in a repetitive pattern of choosing the customization options of reality, from idealism to cynicism, for which the penalty of engaging in an unaccompanied and uninvited journey should be invented.

Two parallel worlds, two different perceptions. What's the winner? Captain Nemo was one of those scientists whose merits are not properly valued and that respond by their contempt to people's indifference. Nobody understood his thoughts; no one has access to them.

If you get to find some kind of humanity to such an individual, does not really mean you fully know him. For sure you're wrong about him. When you think you know him too well, what being he is, when you think you know his simplicity too well, the affection he wears you, his natural tenderness, you fall into the trap he spread you with great skill. Eventually you will find that, in fact, his world is a world that cannot be shared with anyone, a world in which access is limited to certain people - usually the same kind with him.

You have to understand the denials and stubborn of such a man, giving him absolute obedience, otherwise he will turn into a fierce enemy before whom you have no power. If you think your insistence could somehow change his decision on any proposal that you consider necessary for your future common than you're terribly wrong. Has no sense to change his intentions as has no use to stubborn to change the impossible. A true scientist cannot make team other than a true scholar, as a rich man usually finds friends only among rich people. To have access to the world of a man like Nemo, you must have power to build a Nautilus; otherwise you will remain only as a tolerated.

Leadership: Do you take refuge in the empire of a single world, provided you reveal yourself in a heavy story about the illusion of superiority?

One of the great illusions of leadership, of which you can be defeated by at any time, is to trust God as if trusting a consuming fire, strongly believing that He will reward you with the gratitude to be His equal. And one of the most terrible endeavors of not knowing yourself is to keep moving in one direction without hearing "I feel like stopping."

A men animated by his ideas and passions will always defend his own world empire. Captain Nemo, the very mysterious man, has not showed almost at all during the road, being overly busy with his scientific work. And these three companions were allowed to know only one part of the submarine. What is clear evidence that it was forbidden to have access to his hidden world - the real one.

Perhaps we should understand the mindset of Captain Nemo. After all he built his own submarine, about whose existence no one knew. People still lived in the firm belief that all the mysterious shipwrecks took place due to a giant whale. And freeing his hostages would be to disclose the secret and his entire work to be compromised.

Leadership: Can you create a connection with the people around you without rejecting your depth of judging them through the duality of revolt and resignation, assumed guilt and criminal instinct?

What relation existed between those three heroic souls and the soul of Captain Nemo? Absolutely nor. For two completely different worlds without a bridge, it will always reject. Instead of enjoying the underwater journey as they were promised, the three companions came to regret the time they spent in the submarine. And because they could not rely on the kindness of the captain, they used the first opportunity to flee. Only by a miracle those three managed to escape alive.

Captain Nemo finally failed. His scientific world full of richness collapsed. What is clear evidence the way he approached things, the way he looked to the world, how he developed his vision, especially how he related and communicated with people, was ineffective and counterproductive. Since, he could not integrate into the world of ordinary people, paid a high price.

Let the people have access to the world you build, otherwise you will not be able to integrate to their world and will be left. Or, even worse, you will pay a heavy price for your selfishness.

Before you behave like an all-royal king, make sure you want to wear the crown whose weight can crush you.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-parallel-worlds.html

The Principle Of Progressive Inequality

On August 07, 2023

The amount of privileges you grant yourself is inversely proportional to your commitment to progress and morality.

If you are passing through Copou and want to visit the "Casa Universitarilor din Iasi", this heritage building built around 1800 by Iordache Cantacuzino, recently rehabilitated and modernized, you will be greeted at the entrance by a very nice guard. He is only allowed inside the people who work in the university system. Exactly, it happened to me about two weeks ago when I just wanted to visit the new building. The gates were open. Two young men had entered in front of me. Nobody asked him anything.

I was stopped at the entrance, the security guard clearly explained to me, in a simple and direct way, that this newly restored building is actually an exclusive restaurant, but with very cheap food, to which only university students have access. And, approaching me easily, as a Christian approaches the altar, with humility and respect, the man told me that the two young men who entered in front of me were the sons of teachers, and for this reason they had free passage .

It was then that I found out that any dish at this exclusive restaurant costs about 3 times cheaper than anywhere else. For example, the price of a soup is approximately 6 ron, compared to a restaurant in Palas where the price of a soup starts from 18 ron.

So do you realize what's going on? This historic building, where all the people of Iasi used to go for a coffee, a place of culture, a space of the spirit where all the young and free generations used to confront their ideas, has now ended up being subordinated to a single institution, the UAIC heritage. Is it not the case that, from a moral point of view, no authority should prevent access to the knowledge and appreciation of our common past?

I left that place, as the painter leaves when he is disappointed by the colors that fail to express the emotions he feels.

Leadership: Can you widen the reception horizon of the image of "power" you create, remaining solidary to a cause that promotes the gain derived from an excessive generosity that maintains passivity?

A historical building can cause a broadening of the horizon of knowledge and interpretation of reality with the means of art, but the university students from Cuza succeeded in transforming a historical building into a bastion of privileges, ensuring only their entrance to an exclusive restaurant , with prices "chosen" just for them. These upstarts, completely devoid of the light of culture, did not understand the power of the following principle: "Privileges acquired through social status can inhibit commitment to the advancement of society and the observance of constructive ethics."

Knowledge and common sense do not make a good home together with upstarts. After they "arranged" ridiculously high salaries, trips abroad with Erasmus (the figures to support mobility for the purpose of learning), and all kinds of other benefits, look that the illustrious teachers, as insidious as the devil, extended their privilege area. This time, only they have the right of access to a historic restaurant, only they have the right to serve the choicest dishes at a price of nothing. All other residents of Iasi are asked to leave the building, possibly to look outside the gate.

In reality, however, it is not about the confirmation of any authentic vocation aimed at the promotion of Iasi values, but about the polyvalence of interests that, of course, will never find their confirmation in any innovative note to enrich the culture (made with great passion and thoroughness). These sneaky individuals, who have reached the leadership of the faculties, using the resources of the institution strictly for the benefit of the members of the "family", have neither the time nor the vocation of reflexivity to deepen the understanding of the following principle: "Abundance of privileges feeds inertia and erodes both progress as well as morality."

The more ignorant you are in the field of knowledge, the more prone you are to make subtle maneuvers in favor of yourself and to create unjustified advantages for yourself!

The total lack of commitment to morality and progress, thereby denying the common heritage of society, results from the excessive accumulation of privilege. This can be considered a regression or decadence, a reaction to the crisis of values, as society moves away from positive values instead of progressing and improving. If we think about it, the access allowed only to "family members" in this historical building, follows the Cosa Nostra model , because the faculty leaders have managed to transform a symbol of Iesian heritage into a bastion of their exclusive privileges.

Good, but who are actually the teachers at Cuza? Please check for yourself what I am telling you now. They are an extended family, an external unit of interests, anchored exclusively in materiality. Here all the teachers are relatives: husband and wife, children, neighbors, friends, cousins, cousins, nephews, i.e. an enormous system of "connections and relationships" guided exactly by the model of Al Capone who protected and promoted his family members in his organization .

And if Al Capone led a criminal empire dealing with alcohol smuggling, gambling and prostitution, here in Cuza University we find an empire of impostors who overnight became "intellectuals" who, creating privileges through their hierarchical position, succeed more and more to lead to the diminution of the contribution to progress and to the departure from edifying moral norms. In case you didn't know, in the last 30 years Cuza University has become a real business, thriving, profitable and dark, built on the backs of naive, good-paying students. All those who took over the leadership of the faculty, all from the first to the last, voluntarily entered the fertile ground of corruption.

Leadership: Can you direct your efforts to transform your authority into an effort to open up the investment space, aimed at the authenticity of an initiative of the "what you give, you get back" type?

In other words, Cuza University has become an octopus that operates without any scruples, leading to a decrease in effort towards progress and a departure from constructive moral behavior. Crowding into every corner of society, this La Piovra extends its tentacles in all directions, in all the cities of the country, through branches or connections with other faculties. Of course, the members of this large family do not understand aspects such as: "every success in professional activity is a step towards the realization of moral values".

How do they know such a thing? The more privileges they create for themselves, the less industrious and less willing they become to contribute to the advancement of science or to the observance of edifying moral norms. People who do not have knowledge always have materiality as their objective.

Let's see something else. Any book written by these "personalities" contains almost twice as many biographical sources as the number of pages in the entire book. You wonder if they managed to come up with even a single sentence without the "inspiration" provided by others. Even the title of the book should have a footnote. And if you ask any teacher what a blog or a website is, you will be totally amazed: 99% of teachers don't have a personal blog in the 21st century. They still haven't managed to say two words, from their minds, on a web page. They have no idea what change or technology is, they have no idea what is going on with their lives. They are all water and earth, from the highest to the lowest. So small and insignificant intellectually, and so powerless before the divine will.

Leadership: Is it possible that the manipulation of the perception of reality results in a controlled performance through the secret application of a "distancing effect" from the audience?

Okay, but you may be wondering what is corruption? Well, corruption is these games of interests, endless arrangements, tricks and scams that family members resort to in order to get their "portion of soup" at a reduced price, and without anyone else but them tasting the other gastronomic masterpieces of the master chef. And the soup always has a different, more sophisticated taste, when you order in as many luxury restaurants as possible, from different corners of the world, and especially when you don't have to pay anything. Everything is paid for by the university from the students' money. You know what I mean, right?

The man of many privileges is often the furthest from contributing to progress and morality. As proof, when I was a student, consulting the book of a certain teacher, in a footnote I found a weblink that referred to a work written in English from which whole pages were translated and copied word for word, yes even in the work They. Then I realized that the young lady translated entire pages from different books, gathered them into one work, and probably thus became a great teacher overnight. Total nonsense, isn't it? Exactly the type of Elena Ceausescu who, although she was illiterate, abused her husband's authority to put her name as "co-author" on the works made by others.

In fact, I believe that many other family members followed the same procedure to become teachers, and no one checked their papers. More than likely, if someone took the professors' papers to the "puricat", he would find more cases of plagiarism than he can fit in his thick cheek. Not to mention, the professors' PhD theses have completely disappeared from the face of the earth. No one knows what is written in those doctorates which, however, brought them a lot of benefits. And that's because the university's family is guided by the firm principle of obscurity: "Let no one find out, everything must remain hidden from the world."

Leadership: Does the privacy with which you secure your access to the exercise of power provide the opportunity to control how the public perceives a certain situation?

But the truth always comes out. Precisely these individuals, disguised under the prestige of the teaching profession, are none other than false teachers mentioned in the Bible, they are the traitors of the nation that Constantin Noica spoke of almost a century ago. And, the more privileges they manage to create, the more they will be inclined to commit abuses for the benefit of the "family". Everything for the family, and only for the family.

Perhaps, soon, all the museums in Iasi will come under the Cuza University, and will become "exclusive clubs" of the family. At the Sagrada Familia. And the other Romanians will no longer be able to visit them, even if these buildings are part of the national cultural heritage, but will be forced to look at them, as much as possible, from outside the closed gates.

This is the rewritten history of Romanian betrayal.

Yesterday afternoon, climbing the Copoului hill, an elderly man, about 67 years old, was pulling at the gate to enter the "Casa Universitarilor din Iasi". It was very hot outside. The man, a simple tourist who had just come from Tulcea, stopped to drink something cold at a nicely arranged terrace. Unfortunately, the lock with which the gate in front of the building was closed signaled an elitist restriction, suggesting an unjustified exclusivity, an intentional separation between the privileged and the rest of the world.

The lock is the sign that the people of Iasi, the university students, have gone on vacation. And when they are on holidays provided by the university, access to a building of great historical value is forbidden to the public. Even when they return from vacation, access to the general public will still be restricted.

It is important not to forget this injustice, to express our dissatisfaction and demand equal access to our historical heritage.

Quality leadership must be guided by the following principle: "Success based on moral values becomes a professional success only when knowledge does not become a tool to unjustifiably restrict the rights of others."

The Principle Of Progressive Inequality refers to the abuse committed by people lacking morality and culture, to obtain benefits for personal benefit. The principle can be formulated as follows: "The amount of privileges you grant yourself is inversely proportional to your commitment to progress and morality."

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-progressive-inequality.html

The Principle Of Rising Without Falling

On April 22, 2024

Whatever you choose to be in a moment of internalization is what elevates you to enlightenment.

At Sunday's competition, the half-marathon in Iaşi, I supported my sister, Oana Fântânaru, not only as a brother and supporter, but also as a witness to the world of which she is a part.

This requires looking beyond simple physical activity, since at every competition Oana shapes every movement in the image and likeness of a supreme art: the art of self-discipline and unwavering determination. Without limiting herself to running, Oana explores with every step a vast horizon of her passion, transmuting toil into inspiration for those who look at her, like a Van Gogh of the modern age who renders not on canvas, but in the chronicle of time itself, the essence of the human struggle with the limits of one's existence.

Sprinting and at the same time delicate, look how she outruns, with each skipped step, another runner on the route. And her running, as my eyes perceive it, through a kind of Aceratustin Ilhetinula Uriyaadys , the triumph of the spirit over the body, becomes a state of absence of the Ego, so that all that matters is pure movement and freedom.

With each step, the runner moves further away from his internal constraints. And Oana, who always lives in a world of continuous becoming, all the past unfolding in a present of action, she whom the breath of free energy reveals spiritually in the idea of the perfect fusion between elegance and potential, became the master of the union of the two opposites: physical strength and mental peace.

Leadership: Does your refusal to settle for the immediate turn every race into a quest for the sublime, given the emotional impact of a gradually unfolding work of art?

The mastery of uniting opposites reflects an advanced understanding of one's self. To put it bluntly, Oana has evolved from shy walks through the Copou park, easy and without ambitions, to the unleashed marathons of the present, every kilometer being traversed with that hungry thirst to overcome one's own shadows. It is an evolution that bears the imprint of a boundless will, of a spirit that refuses to be satisfied with the "immediate", as it always seeks to reach the full potential of an artist enlivened by the awareness of his sensitive nature.

Nor am I deluded into thinking that Oana only runs for the ephemeral medals of the competitions, small attentions of a momentary madness, memories of a blinding light that dawns in everyone's life. No, not really. In any case, running is for her a sanctuary, an ode to introspection, a continuous dialogue with her deepest self, along the lines of a spiritual awakening of the form: " Authentic values are not limited to external rewards, but to internal fulfillment uh ".

Each breath in the rhythm of her sprinting steps, raised like wings wrapped in light, is an answer to existential questions, each sweat is a tear of joy of self-discovery.

I think that maybe one day her running spirit will overcome her Ego, thus reaching an inner peace and the harmony that art embodies. Great, right? The build-up of intense emotions in a work of art can suggest a climax of catharsis, where built-up tension is released in a moment of profound clarification. I would never have been more moved to find Oana victorious than to see her transposed into a spiritual receptivity, which art calls "concentrated synaesthesia".

Leadership: For you, can "rarity in unity" reflect a vision that transcends the immediate, revealing a moment of catharsis that opens your horizons to a deeper meaning in life?

A rarity in unity invested with passionate conviction. In those moments of rare revival, when fatigue seems to weigh her every movement, I see her rushing forward, more and more, with that passion of the painter who sees his work taking shape, facing the obstacles of nature - the rain, the wind, the cold - with a ferocity of those who know that every step forward is a victory over personal limits, una dimostrazione di forza interiore che sfida le condizioni esterne .

My eyes follow his every step, measure his every movement, engulfed by the grandeur of a fragment from the book "The Arc de Triomphe" by Erich Maria Remarque:

"Her eyes sparkled like in the light of street lamps ; I could forget , lose myself in a mirage. I could feel his breath . It vibrated towards me , with an unseen , easy , ready admiration and full of confidence - a strange life , in an equally strange moment . Suddenly I could feel the angels . It went up and up , but it was more than that , it was life , a thousand times cursed and blessed , so many times lost and again this many times - with an hour before like a limited land , arid , rocky , without anything comforting - and now bubbling , bubbling as if from countless wells , Getting closer to the mysterious moment in which someone, who no longer believed in her power at all - was again the man from before , emerging from the midst of the waves on the shore of the ocean, white and shining . A question and an answer at the same time , all these were always rising and the storm gathered in her eyes ."

Leadership: Feeling the unseen vibration and admiration in someone else's breath, can you interpret this subtle connection as an ongoing dialogue with your inner universe?

There are certain things that awaken in us, slowly, silently, and we do not realize them unless we have the desire to push ourselves to the extreme, to burst into a wave of pure, healing energy, imposed as if by a universe that pushes us to our limits and forces us to leap beyond self-imposed barriers.

So is Oana in running, a meditation enthusiast in a pause of the unconquered spirit, the silence between two beats, the moment of pause between two jerky breaths, the most sincere and the most mysterious form of being, the gentle startle of eternity in time itself the world. And even more than that, it is a form of listening to oneself, which falls into the forms of an artist's communication with the brush, revealing the essence of the sensibility of creation through each step.

Running, with all its turmoil, has a gentle smile, especially for a voiceless swan flight, smoothly crossing a stormy sky. And you, Oana, have shown us all that we are the architects of our own moods, as we shape our destinies with the bare hands of will. You achieved an affective value: "resilience", you gave everything that an artist has the best and most sublime in himself: "the power of internalization". Somehow, in your feelings was born the force of the leap to the heights, which showed, in its fiery limits, its true measure.

Let's extract from you what is most precious: your work. Your painting evolves with you, transforming with each experience into a transparent medium through which the viewer is offered a story.

Leadership: Can some unusual fragments of life contribute to shaping the universal memory, transforming every moment lived into an eternal particle of the experience of artistic reception?

The much faster pulse calls for silence in the perimeter of the soul, where art, devoid of any tension, speaks in whispers about unlived emotions. I am still thinking about what to add to this conviction, so as to obtain a variety of Ismaotuss Apentaichter Unuselsica , a sliver of life shining in the universal memory. I would say it like this:

A flower moved to a new garden with the help of the brush, producing a unique shade called: "radiant orchid". In the case of this shade, the result is the same: a perfect weather.

Oana, create your whole life around this delicate shade, as a painter, penetrating the depth of colors, outlines his work of art on the inspiration provided by the surrounding nature. And when silence calls you in the breeze, don't interrupt it with words, but let yourself be carried by the suggestive wings of a unique perspective: " all that I choose to be in a moment of internalization, is what up to enlightenment ."

Just as a painter always prepares his canvas before starting a masterpiece, you too must prepare your mind and soul before setting out in search of a deep and meaningful experience. In art, as in running, the actual composition is as important as the naturalness that emerges from it.

In leadership, the experience of self authentically manifesting precedes the actual composition of the reality that drives you to action.

The Principle Of Rising Without Falling refers to the state attained through an effort whose spiritualizing effect transforms you into a harmonious force. It is so hard? Through every race and every training, Oana reminds us that limits are only constructions of the mind, and the horizons of art are infinitely expandable through the effort of authentic expression of a deep experience.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-rising-without-falling.html

The Principle Of Seeing Beyond Sight

On May 16, 2023

What you see inside of yourself is what others miss when they look outwards.

Each person tells, through images, but also through the power of the word skillfully used, a fragment of their life. Others, more open about their own inner world, inserting themselves inside a loop of reaction and control, manifest their emotions, thoughts and mood as if throwing themselves into an experimental delirium, a bringer of good luck in a magical story. The heart beats, the mind creates, the soul absorbs, and the body moves elegantly in the shape of a field daisy, in an eternal and superstitious play.

It happened after the half marathon competition. Party. Music, good mood. A lot of food. And dance. Of course, dance. But not everyone knows how to dance as gracefully, as lively as „Number 47". A pleasant warmth covers his whole body, his smiles as if he were in a mirage, always halfway between real and phantasmagorical, keeping his reference value called „Rebound Number". The elegance with which he moves, the note of atypicality he transmits around surpasses any voluptuousness of field butterflies, knowing that any beat of its wings can turn into a hurricane.

The man weighs about 98 kg, but no one notices his weight during the dance, so easily he undulates his body, his hips, in the gentle beat of the spring wind. He is not the winner of the contest, not by a long shot, but for me he is the laureate, the hero of the day, the genius, o ímpeto de uma exaltação continua e incansável. All the others vanished into oblivion, along with their medals. But he, the soul of the party, the symbol of life force, remains a crown of laurels for a long time, triumphant like a young god. And the colors of his superhero aura, poured out of his priceless treasury of elegance and grandeur, must shine like in a painting by Paolo Veronese.

Leadership: Can your vision exceed the limits of a horizon that does not belong to you, but belongs to the scenario that recovers the content of your own ideation?

He concentrates his creative imagination in a mirage from which he would never want to leave. Congratulations ! His glory was certainly given a special appreciation, with the same measure in which Alexandre Dumas described his key character in the novel „The Hand of Providence":

„It seems strange how much this man concerns me. He has for me the attraction of the unknown. I have never felt a more burning desire to penetrate the secrets of a soul. There is something about him that draws me in an invincible way. Perhaps it's just an appearance, maybe, as it has happened to me so many times, it's just a vision, but one that changed my life forever."

And what does this man look like? He sees himself as a winner, expressing his happiness through dance and music, even if the world doesn't know it. The dance is the state of grace of the conqueror who exceeds his limits, and no one suspects what is happening inside him. He feels victorious even though he didn't get on the podium, and continues to dance while everyone else has exhausted their energy and desire to be the center of attention.

Leadership: Can you describe an emotion capable of generating a moving image, so as to represent an attraction for immortalizing a moment that most of the time slips through everyone's fingers?

Here is the visual story that must be imagined by those who look at reality with different eyes. An ordinary man, one who goes completely unnoticed during the contest, suddenly becomes bright in front of all eyes around. It feels very good where thoughts overlap between floating and forgetting, between dreaming and rebirth, venturing into the ecstasy of a trance, into an abstract state of consciousness where all sounds and sensations merge. From this painting, the dawn of a healthy ease emerges.

His motion sensor can be guided by a desire to surpass himself, by an intensification of mental and physical abilities, or by the search for mystical ecstasy, existing in a colorful tableau that enlivens, becomes a vision, and takes shape in an extremely natural and expressive way. And how many nuances, how many infinitesimal differences you can't sift through when you propose to find a way out of anonymity, through a movement that opens the horizons, a form of interventionism in the almost unreal landscape of a day dedicated to escaping worries.

Leadership: Are you able to create a living picture that evolves in front of the viewers, in a moment of great emotional charge that has the great advantage of transmissibility?

„Be part of a living picture that evolves before your eyes", that's how the Man of the Day attitude was expressed, correlated with the persistence of a particular ease and improvisational spirit. His unexpected dance, winged with rhythm, with humor, with charm, was a moment in which they regenerated, young cells appeared and forced the measure into some normality, forced in a beneficial sense the renewal of his Miltiades blood. Or, maybe he found a new way to put his thoughts in order in creating an interior space, in choosing the color palette and an artistic background that make a painting a safe space of joy and satisfaction for the viewers.

He knows that life is a dream, a gift, a painting, and how beautiful it is seen depends only on him. It was for a certainty, a kind of battle flag, a kind of power instinct sprinkled with that invisible substance of time caught in a bag. Able to capture the intimate and living pulse of the event, his release having the great advantage of transmissibility, he immediately built a kind of image of superiority, or rather, the dance was a kind of confession in the image of his vocation to the world of fine arts . His dance remains the light of the eyes of those who watched it.

In short. Everything that my eyes caught today, the dance of the unknown man, seemed like a fragment from the novel „The New York Trilogy":

„The man was an inexhaustible space, a labyrinth of endless steps, and no matter how far he walked or how well he came to know his surroundings, he always remained with the impression that he had lost his way. That he had lost himself. He felt as if he would have left himself behind, and then, abandoning himself to fine, well-coordinated movements, and reducing himself to a seeing eye, he managed to escape the obligation to think, and this brought him, more than anything else , a certain peace, a healthy inner emptiness. Movement was the essence of things, the impulse by which he put one foot in front of the other, allowing himself to be carried by the movement of his own body."

In order to cultivate your vocation towards knowing the inner life of man, you must be able to see the interaction of the outside with him, without letting yourself be blindly carried away by the wave of his passion.

The Principle Of Seeing Beyond Sight captures the evolution of an activity of ascertaining a state of fact. I saw that man victorious, even if no one else knew how to see him victorious. And how do I see myself? Still a winner. Because leadership is a necessary exchange, through the penetration of the outside into the inside.

Nobody talks about the medalists who climbed the podium. The dust was chosen from their image. The success did not last more than a moment. But „Number 47" is alive, I can still see him dancing. He is the real winner, because you are reading about him now, you identified with him for a few moments, he remained in your soul. All the other participants in the race would be said to have never existed, no one talks about them. But you'll always remember „Number 47", even if you've never actually seen him.

To exist in people's souls without being seen by them, to be a winner without a medal. That's real magic! That's leadership !

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-seeing-beyond-sight.html

The Principle Of Selective Acceptance

On February 02, 2011

Accept the others in your life and you will discover your bright side.

He knew only one thing to do, but he did it better than anyone: to kill. Like any professional killer, Leon didn't belong anywhere and to anyone. He was a fugitive, a pretty clever one, in fact; one which didn't know how affection feels like; or loyalty, he had no background, goal or aspiration in his life, he had nothing. He only knew how to listen his adoptive father, Tony, a mobster who gave him all sorts of missions. But the more he enjoyed success in his job – the more he fulfilled, the more missions, the more he ran away farther, the less he accepted himself and the more he was cheerless, out of humor and indifferent to his life and his future.

As I mentioned in the previous article, Leon's Ivory Tower, from the moment Leon "adopted" Mathilda, his life took another turn. He was no more the lonely, solitary, devoid of feelings and desires, but he acquired a new personality. He became more open minded, sociable, communicative and even romantic, able to appreciate more the people and the things around him.

Leadership: Should the validation of your hidden feelings succeed the validation of the continuity of keeping a habit that limits you?

The boldness of discovering yourself is the vital force that assures your continuity in making decisions and acting in a spirit of harmonious integration into an existence that depends on affirmation of attachment and human care.

In the novel "Shantaram", the author Gregory David Roberts said a big word, which in Pashto means: "You're no man until you really and without constraint give your love to a child. And you're no good man until you win the sincere love of a child."

Leon found in Mathilda what he didn't find anywhere else. He found a bit of dreaming, a drop of love, a little peace of mind. The moments spent with the girl made his heart feel the state of fulfillment and unconditional love. His bright side woke up to life.

Without any constraint, opening his soul to this child, Leon went to Tony, the one who managed his money, and asked him to donate it to Mathilda, in case something ever happened to him. Here's the definite proof of his kindness. Here's the proof that anyone can change and become better, if that person is open and willing to accept the others in his life.

Leadership: Do you act according to a creed that announces its presence in a balance of stability in all the conditions of exploiting the experience of creating a new world?

The world to which you contribute to beautify with details of your hidden personality, without behaving by assuming the "suffering" of neglecting your power of authority, must be the result of a quantitative and qualitative balance between what defines and what inspires you.

You surely remember the famous story "Beauty and the Beast", don't you? Bell spent hour over hour reading to the Beast, teaching it how to properly eat, dance, etc. Slowly, the Beast got to resemble more and more with human beings. It learned what kindness, generosity, tenderness, humility and gratitude means. And, by falling in love with her, by her bright side, the spell was broken – The Beast turned into a very handsome and loving prince.

The impact that other people have on you is crucial. Leon, as the Beast, turned into another person, a better and more generous human being. He also managed to overpass his complexes – due to his cheerless nature and to his job. Thus, he felt that he really existed and that he can have feelings toward other people. He got to discover himself and his bright side. He assigned a new meaning to his life – in order to meet his bright side. (But if the Beast's transformation was complete. Leon's was only partial, as he remained a killer with... a good soul.)

Glory is the addiction to forming yourself as a spiritual, thinking, and moral being, in the favorable conditions of victory in the struggle with what you have ingrained within you.

The most important thing in your life is for you to discover that you can be a man with outstanding qualities and moral values, and not one with flaws and with no qualities. You must be optimistic and think positively. Do not let yourself be dominated by the chaos that flaws produce in your soul and your mind !

Accepting yourself is a positive element; it means discovering and always seeing the bright side of things. It means entering in harmony with your own "universe" and accepting the bright side of others' universe. It means living your life without manifesting any kind of antipathy toward anyone, even if you don't fully-agree with them.

The principle of selective acceptance refers to the acceptance of those bright sides in people that promote their development and progress.

Definitely, the old saying "know thyself and you will be able to meet the other" has a significance that many know, but few understand. It is essential for a leader to know the people he works with, to discover their bright sides and potential and to develop that desire of perpetual improvement.

In order to do that, he must firstly know himself. Of course, the leader's success also depends on other factors, such as his educational, cultural, IQ level, etc.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-selective-acceptance.html

The Principle Of Self Exclusion

On January 20, 2010

When a leader is undecided, his indecision will cause his own exclusion from the race.

An undecided person isn't fated to achieve excellence in leadership so easily. An exaltation, an impulse can blow the person up, like a rocket, beyond his own limits, but if he's not meant to reach the top of the pyramid and to settle himself to that particular level, if he lacks strong character features, such as self-confidence, volition or will, then his attempts will turn out to be, beyond doubt, doomed.

I realized this truth, that there are some who aren't meant to succeed in their attempts because of their indecision, after having watched the movie "Vertical limit (2000)". If you are going to watch it yourself, I'm sure you'll agree with me.

Tom McClaren, an exceptional alpinist, is appointed to lead an expedition on the K2 Mountain of the Himalayas. He has a great responsibility: he must lead the billionaire Elliot Vaughn and Annie, a famous alpinist, to the peak. At first, the weather was wonderful, the sun rose bright and shining, there was little wind. At a given point, Tom is contacted by the ground base and warned about the change of weather. He thinks, for a moment, to abandon his mission. But because there was a chance of 70% for the wind to change its direction and, especially, because of Annie's and Elliot's insistences, he decides to carry on climbing.

Leadership: Is your condemnation the consequence of the final confrontation between what you are committed to doing and what others do not know that you truly are?

When they reach 7800 meters, Tom is once again contacted by the ground base, but this time he's announced of a strong storm getting close to them and he's asked to immediately abandon the climb and go back. Tom seems to forebode a great catastrophe. But he hesitates to take a firm decision. Elliot challenges him to carry on with the climb; otherwise he would fall into contempt and would live his entire life ashamed. And Tom, being obedient, submitted to him.

The three carried on together with their journey. As expected, the storm rises and they get caught in a cave covered by an avalanche. Tom is severely wounded. After only a few hours, he falls ill, as Annie herself, because of pulmonary edema. with pulmonary edema. His only chance to survive was to inject himself dextrose. But there weren't enough shots. And Elliot knew that it wouldn't take much longer for him to fall ill, as well.

The following scene is memorable. Tom makes Elliot responsible for everything that has happened: "We wouldn't be here if it weren't for you". And then Elliot reminds him: "You were the leader, Tom".

In the end, Tom is killed by Elliot, the man who suggested to carry on climbing, but whom he should have never had to listen to.

Leadership is a situation of the "You or Them" type in which you will have the advantage, because you are the one who has the right to make compromises, because you are both the one who acts and the one who bears the action.

Failure at high altitude. Let's be honest and admit, Tom lacked in virtues of a leader. He should have lead, and Annie and Elliot should have followed him. Instead, things went backwards. Elliot and Annie, but especially Elliot, lead him in their direction and finally, unfortunately, towards death.

Actually, Tom's main mistake was indecision. He hesitated when he should have taken a firm attitude. Instead of listening to his instinct, instead of imposing his authority as a leader, he followed Elliot. And when a leader is undecided, his hesitation will cause his own exclusion from the race. This is what I called "The principle of self-exclusion".

Tom succeeded in sabotaging himself through his hesitation and indecision. As a leader, he was authorized and had the responsibility to lead Annie and Elliot to the top, to give them absolute confidence by guarding them against danger. He should have had the final word, he should have decided if they could carry on the journey or not, he should have decided the change. Only he was the one authorized to influence upon the ascent. But Tom didn't take his role seriously. He was indulgent, obeyed others and it didn't worth the while. He alone, through his hesitating and fragile attitude, through his feeling of shame and guilt, excluded himself from the race. Unfortunately, the weak and temperamental ones will always pay full price.

The quality of being in the lead comes in contrast to the risk of being eliminated by a player who has a profile similar to yours who has a high-ranking and knows to play remotely by the force of suggestions and emotions. By contrast, you will not be able to complete your proposed goals through obedience or affiliation, even if you gain ground against it. But only if you double your lost value, that is, if you increase your efforts to fit within the limits of a law expressing the general will.

The question you have to ask yourself before you start to ascend: are you the projection of a response force on an axis of immunity privileges or the projection of a state of mind beyond duty?

The vision, the delegation of authority or the charisma, remain only some interesting qualities. Many a time, they can do the trick, but the attitude is the one establishing the leader's tone. The one with a hesitating attitude, the one who lets himself being pushed around and being lead by whosoever, and who has the taste for persisting in this situation, cannot call himself a leader but rather a puppet. And puppets disappear quickly from the stage of life.

Conclusion: Becoming the leader of a group requires having obligations towards that particular group. And, as understood, decisional rights inside the group. At its turn, the group is dependent on the leader. Any kind of insubordination rising from the group must be sanctioned, because, otherwise, the leader can't fulfill his mission.

The lack of determination of the leader, his hesitating attitude, the decisional incapacity and the subordination to individual interests made against those coincident with the group, will lead him to his demise from this position, so to his exclusion because of his own faults or weaknesses.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-self-exclusion.html

The Principle Of Self-Understanding

On April 21, 2017

The way you contribute to understanding the reality that chains you, outlines the real world of perceptions about the value life inspires upon you.

For the first time, I understood that my own survival depended on the survival of the world, as the skill of a painter depends on his motivation for painting, knowing that the profound inequality between the sick and the healthy was the result of the multiplication of an original gene – that of evil.

An unprecedented lucidity in the analysis of reality, an adventure of the spirit in constant contact with the exploration of matter, the overwhelming explosion of a madness that naturally crossed the meanders of unnecessary self-giving, all seemed to spring from the depths of a life beyond my horizon.

Like any other mortal, just a little more favored by the hazard and the very occurrence of a mysterious phenomenon of faith in the plan of an unknown God, I constantly reformulate my convictions, reexamine the rules of an increasingly hostile environment – rules introduced into the structure of reality claiming the priority of an earlier application: "Stay Alive ! "

Leadership: Can you maintain a dominant position, combined with humanism and awareness of your own weaknesses, to open new horizons of knowledge and transcendence?

Immediately, the guiding force of deduction and prudence led me on an uninformed, harsh path, where everything seemed to be detached from the dark memory of the painter Edgar Freemantle of Duma Key. I still had a lot to suffer, to be patient and to learn until I would reach writer Todd Burpo's finding that "Heaven exists".

Obsessed with the pleasure of seeing, discovering new adventures, confidently turning into a dominant position for the sake of authentic humanism, which puts me in the position of a tormented artist between the inspiration of his genius and the dark despair of the mind entered into dialogue with God, who is one and the same with the defending of thoughts, I had begun to regard myself as a victory of life over death.

Was it a symptom of a psychotic state? Only the unexpected entrance into Dante's inferno opened up new horizons to transcendence, to new sensations, to new knowledge, especially since within my subconscious a basis of evil had already formed.

Leadership: Do you adopt an attitude of pushing reason towards forming the "New Man", pretending to be confident in a dominant position for the sake of the authentic of your own Self?

One of Humbert Humbert's narratives in the Lolita novel illustrates the same attitude that I approached, an attitude of pushing reason somewhere ...beyond..., based on a certain negative emotion that had to be consumed in some way.

"I sometimes dream that I tried to kill you. Do you know what's happening? For example, I am holding a rifle. I target an invisible enemy that watches me with interest. Oh, I pull the trigger, perfect, but the bullets fall soft, one after another, from the lousy mouth of the barrel. My only thought in those dreams was to hide my fiasco, for my enemy to not notice it, who slowly began to get angry."

Fidelity to yourself is determined by the value you give yourself when you have to accept your limitations in the fight against your imperfections and wanderings.

With intensity, within my essence were justified the aberrations, prejudices of a moral that favored the tendency to excess to adopt the sense of concealment of helplessness, the fault of my own failure on the red flame of the prestige of the finitude of an existence preceded by nothingness.

Then I would affirm: behold how much I can live if I push my quest for a limitless experience, a tragic question of recapping the reasons why I refuse any invitation to the color, and the answer I was afraid to find out. Or maybe I was too sentimental.

The one who gives himself a unique value of the type: "I cannot correct my spiritual outbursts" is closer to show himself delighted by the tense atmosphere of the dream than the one who gives himself a unique value of the type: "I feel capable of playing in the final."

The attitude that leads to leadership is often a replay of the final between what hurts you and what turns you into a dreamer, from which the consciousness of the spirit of unity emerges victorious.

Certainly, I was no longer a Michelangelo of my own life, having the opportunity to model my fate as I please. I was rather the inexpressive, loaded contour of an alter ego revolted against the failure to engage in a play of situational perspectives, both rational and irrational. I was a Humbert Humbert who defines himself through the coloring of a fallen world, bearing a burdensome role.

The authentic of your own Self that can revolutionize leadership is formed by the force of the responsibility to relate to your imperfections and mistakes, and in their shadow to discover yourself as a consciousness of value in relation to a "totally different" man.

Does your response to the demand of a hostile environment present a peculiarity of the limitations of access to the rationale of faith in a truth that frees you and gives you the chance of a new beginning?

The Principle Of Self-Understanding can be formulated as follows: The way in which you contribute to the understanding of reality that chains you, shapes the true world of perceptions of the value life inspires upon you.

To understand yourself is to fight with reality without creating setbacks for yourself.

 Note: World War Z

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-self-understanding.html

The Principle Of The Constant Of Being (II)

On August 23, 2012

Find the main and decisive factor of understanding your true nature, to manage to identify the primary element underlying the achievement of excellence.

Let me tell you something. Something that nobody knows. For a while, there was someone else in my life, someone supreme, noble and transforming. A perfect form of another person, a third entity, a part of my way to be, characterized by genuine, direct knowledge.An entity that wanted to be perfect, quietly sneaking, clandestine et irrévérencieux, in the small folder of my conscience, like destined to become a corner stone in building my future.

It was some kind of artificial manifestation of my own identity, a lump in my functional area, a strong pivot that had vaguely, deeply and fundamentally penetrated in me, firmly pushing me, with urge, beyond the limits of conventionality. I was in a reverse and revealing situation, but which raised some problems. Was it an attempt to overcome my own condition?

Everything was quite complicated. She wanted us to become friends, to substitute my every weakness, to melt our two forms of knowledge, to exist outside any relationship of subordination. Was it a refusal of reality?

Any deviation from her point of view would have been seen as a challenge to my own self, to the part that intrigued me. It was not enough to know who or what she was, when and why she would ally with me. I just needed to understand her purpose. And why she mattered. And what I needed to give up in her favor.

The power of creation consists of two elements – the power of your will to represent yourself as a character and the power to accept the relevance of your particularities.

I had nothing to feel guilty about, but that situation was very absurd. As if I had entered one of those overwhelming and terrible books, the influence of which softens human nature, turning me from a positive to a negative character, and vice versa, so mainly including me in the category of inconstant characters, who always disregard themselves, or worse, act as enemies, seldom as allies. For how can you reason with a force, if any cohabitation with it troubles you?

I tried to keep everything secret, like a man who often hides his true nature under a mask of appearance. I did not have to take too seriously my inclinations of "extreme left". However, I have the strange sensation that, if we had remained close, it would have been different. I do not know... in some way, I think we would have completed each other.

I started on the sure path of certainty. I did not allow anyone, any dominant force to complicate my existence. It followed another passage from "not being someone else", to "being who I am". I was evolving towards a constructive becoming. Actual reality was the most important thing.

I am myself, therefore I exist in the present. Everything else is utopia, even when it comes to the actual reality. I understood my feelings and my blockages. I fully accepted my character.

Commitment to effective leadership in times of change involves maintaining clarity of one's identity, avoiding the distortions that may arise under the pressure of circumstances.

So here, once again, for what the courage to risk the possibility of another scenario. The hypothesis of a possible future, of another judgment, of another source of "being" is very likable. In this case, of the art of becoming what you really are not, o lens through which your true identity manages to diminish its positive perception about itself.

Learning to lead effectively is a real challenge for leaders. Teaching others to lead effectively is an even greater challenge. But the most difficult part is to teach them how to manage and express their identity, fighting as much as possible to keep it unaltered.

Would you print a picture on a poor quality paper? Not managing appropriately your own identity is like printing a picture on a poor quality paper. Your true way of "being" comes out blurry, with faded or too rough, uniform or even unrealistic tints.

Being authentic means amplifying your human qualities, refusing to compromise your essence in favor of a superficial image.

Does "being" mean to be different or to remain constant with yourself? Here is a question at which I would really like to have an answer, especially from a "leadership creator". My unshaken belief is that a leader can build himself, can enhance his "Human" qualities, not just those needed to succeed in business, unless he rediscovers that essential part of his way of being – that rational act of existential engagement in the horizon of conscience and causality.

Or, in simpler words, he who refuses to be what he really is risks to enter in conflict with himself and to limit his potential. If you sink into a state of confusion and disorientation, in the journey towards "becoming", you will not be able to assume responsibility for the specific forms to setup the future you prepare for yourself. If you detach yourself from what characterizes you, you will not be able to maintain your "constancy of being".

"You yourself" is how you relate to the things that really matter when you accept your inner states as they are, without judging them, without giving them a name, without resisting them.

Do you start on the wide path of certainty, searching the constancy of being who you really are? How do you express your own identity? Do you evolve towards a constructive becoming? Is actual reality the most important thing that guides you? Do you include yourself mostly in the category of inconstant characters who always disregard themselves? Can you resonate with something that does not represent you?

To paraphrase the famous writer Alexandre Dumas: "We are making towards ideal, but before getting there, we have to traverse a dark forest, defended by monsters of ignorance and falsehood, an unknown region that only those who understood their emotions and blockages can brighten it up". Those who have fully accepted their character.

Leadership: Can you communicate the reason to exist through a mask of appearance that pleasantly surprises any expectation of who you are when you are just with your soul?

To become what you are. To remain constant with yourself, not to give up on something you believe in and submit yourself to a foreign influence, to another way of being. To find your identity, to refind yourself and to glorify your majesty.

True history, someone commented, is that of human progress. That is why I tend to put into question the foundation of leadership. I think leadership should have incorporated a feature to help man form, detach from his limits and reach his true potential.

Conquering your own identity would be for any man, leader or not, a great pride.

A leadership model that integrates personal development involves maintaining a balance between constancy and adaptability, without losing the essence of the self.

The principle of the constant of being highlights the need to find individuality. In leadership and others, each of us must find our own individuality, discover our own self, with all its positive and negative parts, and develop that part which represents us and, built with perseverance and tenacity, leads us to excellence.

We are the same and yet different. Each of us bears the stamp of a unique personality, has great ambitions and a different way to process his own self. Essential is to discover, cultivate and improve that part of us which represent us and has a constructive effect, so that can lead us toward excellence.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-the-constant-of-being-II.html

The Principle Of The Constant Of Being (III)

On August 28, 2012

Effectively direct your attention towards yourself, in order to discover those qualities and values that will favor your further development.

It seemed to me that just in one night, I made a leap over a decade: I rise high above my being. I felt a little betrayed by me, because I had broken my preservation instinct. However, in this hidden and reforming agitation of thoughts, of conflicting claims, I was crystallizing a new aspiration that could be beneficial to my existence.

Just as the first people that arrived in America believed that had found by chance the heaven on earth, the second Garden of Eden, I enjoyed immensely the thought that I had found by chance a door, a way to get out of a moral dilemma, la pénétration a l'intérieur d'une fenêtre du temps, that could condition my further development.

I wanted to penetrate the last resorts of the great mysteries of life, to understand the points, the mechanisms that maximized or minimized my existence in this world, to such an extent as to fertilize that "something" in my mind still imprecise. To find my place in this adventure of knowledge and guidance in an age, where the extraordinary competes with the incredible.

I understood that I can be someone else, that I can live both now and in the future, behind a well-tuned mask. Have I distorted my true personality? I think I was obsessed by the idea of an understanding, deep and endless, between me and what I could be. Maybe it was the only way to reveal myself, to make known my responsible and determined experience, as if based upon a secret that I was hiding for an eternity.

Leadership: Do you have to make a compromise between the understanding that you can be someone other than what you are and the manner to reveal yourself as a knowledge of an earlier experience?

I could not deny, with a kind of deep despair, which was obvious, and triggered in my subconscious a whole madness. Like an uncontrollably tidal wave, the secrets of an unprecedented rebirth overflowed around me, just as there are mysteries of good and evil. Life and deeds, my thoughts and my feelings were manifesting, I think, into an unexpected dimension, full of color, magic and in constant motion. I deliberately refused to see and understand the reality, the truth about who I was.

In fact, there was nothing serious, immoral, and wrong with me. It was unique only the stake put into play during the process, in which I resonated with my own Ego. As if I had plunged into a restricted area, into an empty space, undefined, in which I could create, as a correlation between my searches and the need to know myself, a new profile that would be used exclusively for emphasizing the contrast between the two characters, between essence and appearance. The prospect was overwhelming. And fascinating.

From certain points of view, I was afraid that I will never grow up. I felt abandoned me, in an attempt to add new meanings to my life. That brought an unique and shocking image over my whole way of being. I could not imagine that the line of communion between me and the one I could be, could stop at any time, and the immense effort of strengthening my ego to erode such as the riverbeds after a great flood.

Par excellence, I had to be what I always wanted to be, and not a betrayal which flourishes later in the thorns of searches. I had to understand the warnings of a transformation, of a new growth, of the inner revolution that could accelerate my becoming, and to become aware of its power. Only thus, I could understand myself, to figure out my mission, and my true inner motivations.

Leadership: Can you extract gold from the lessons of life to create yourself a relevant image on your entire way of being?

A forecast or a positive calculation of the probable trajectory that it is followed by your own development path, will stimulate more your involvement throughout the process of knowledge and adaptation to the new situations of leadership.

The thing that brings an unique and relevant image over your whole way of being, is the "gold" that you draw from the lessons of life. It is that level of maturity that comes from a greater knowledge and, which makes possible the completion of your own way of "To be" the continuous reference to your own values . It is the feeling of superiority towards yourself - that you are not whom you were, you understand things better, and you look from somewhere above and more correctly.

Leadership: Your evolution is consistent with the factors which act at rather profound and subtle level?

The maturing process is an important part of leadership. The line of communion between you and the one you could be may be interrupted at any time, and the immense effort of strengthening your ego will be useless, if your maturation does not evolve in a harmonious way. When your searches towards a perfect "becoming" and the need to know yourself intertwine, only then they will be outlined more clearly, little by little, your true qualities and values.

Effectively direct your attention towards yourself, in order to discover those qualities and values that will give a beneficial meaning to your further actions, and that will favor your subsequent development.

Certainly, it is not enough to want the development of a phenomenon in a certain direction, to understand the warnings of a transformation, of a new growth, for it to be achieved, especially if your evolution is not consistent with the factors, which act at rather a profound and subtle level.

The vertebra that unites Leadership with Personal Development

You can achieve a high degree of maturity, you can turn towards excellence when embarking on this adventure of knowledge and guidance, in a world where the extraordinary competes with the incredible. For each of us are being pushed, like the current of a river, into an area where the road is bordered by conflicting claims, by aspirations that do not meet fulfillment, ideas and goals that are unachievable in the rhythms of contemporary life.

The externalization of a false identity, the existence of a distorted perception of yourself, constitute just as many gates in your development. This thing distorts your true personality. And therefore, you will hide your true identity behind a mask. Just as the coal and diamond are made up of the same element, so leadership and personal development, which conditions your existence as a "Man" not just as a "Leader" are united by a single vertebra: the potential to be what you are in reality.

Do you feel that you abandon yourself in the attempt to add new meanings to your life? What is the factor that brings an unique image over your whole way of being? Do you understand the warnings of a transformation, of a new growth that can accelerate your "becoming"? Do you deliberately refuse to see and understand the reality, the truth about who you really are? Can you live both in the past and present, and especially in the future, behind a well-tuned mask? Is the only way to reveal yourself to be someone else? Have you unraveled your mission, and your true inner motivations?

The principle of the constant of being (III) stresses the idea of transformation, channeling your need to explore new sides of your personality.

To take aside the curtain of time, and to foresee your future is a desideratum pursued by all. However, only those who were able to know themselves, to develop the "native" of them, to follow the path of perfection in accordance with what they are, and what they can be, will manage to do this.

Karma is Karma. But it can be shaped in a positive sense and beneficial to us, through and by us in accordance with the current realities.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-the-constant-of-being-III.html

The Principle Of The Constant Of Being (iv)

On September 01, 2012

The way you evaluate the limits of your own world determines the result of your process of transformation.

I understood everything with a clarity that admitted no doubt, worrying like a threat for ages, like a somber prediction of the future. As if I would be revived, pierced by a divine inspiration, from an exhausting wandering, leading to damnation, which distorted the true sense of my own identity, channeling my present into a wrong direction.

In my tangled and unpredictable existence from that time, sprinkled with crumbs of feelings and confusing thoughts, it produced a profound change, une rupture de l'accord avec ma propre personnalité. A broken line that changed its direction randomly. I entered into the loop of a perpetual and tumultuous crisis of personality. Searches, betrayals, forgetfulness, retrievals, reflections, anxieties, without originating points, and without final moments. As if I had continued to live into an abandoned space, into an immature environment, insecure, quiet, drowned in ignorance.

Charged with all the burden of self-abandonment, unspoken, of a scheduled life, and entered into a chronicle of unfulfillment, I exposed myself to the danger of a blamable statute resurrection. I was not able to review and reflect on my plans while I was using my knowledge in inconsistent and unworkable ways.

Like a man brutally thrown into another world, whose landscape changes with every descent or ascension of his own aspirations, I converted into a victim of contradictions, of anarchy, of rational abysses, of my own vulnerabilities that tormented me terribly, incessantly. I hid of myself for fear of committing an act whose consequences I could not foresee.

Leadership: Do you self-examine yourself to prevent the exploitation of any existential loopholes, so as to ensure your conformity throughout the entire evolution cycle?

Only a secret code would be unraveled and cleared the cipher of all mysteries, which fall upon my being, like the waves of tsunamis that come one after another. It had to pass some time to banish the background images that consumed and turned myself into someone else, into a retrograde of the conformity of being present at a level where things are beyond words, and to restart my normal course, non-contradictory, of the positive thoughts.

I was standing like that hero unjustified by fate of Stephen Crane, on a strange realm, where was haunting bravery. It happened falls, but in the end, I went out to the surface, passing through all tests. I was there, where the black of contempt reigned for everything involving my own way of being, escaping with minor injuries on my conscience. The space between the continuous and interrupted line that united me of what I could become, filling with the fire of maturation, of self- retrieval.

A psychoanalyst might say that I was in search of a lost identity by two - in one, that exchanged blows like two boxers. I engaged in a fight with myself. I evolved into an interior and a superior linked through a symbolic instance of an absolute reality. A variety of separation of any real reference that kept distance from who I really was. A braiding all forms of exclusion of any individuality, any agreement with myself, which was becoming more and more solid, as a color that has its origins in the other colors.

Slowly, I came out to the surface of the stuffiness of dense and black clouds, which veiled me in the inopportune moment. Finally, I was able to understand what I pretended not to understand, and keep pace with the circumstances through which passed.

I had to fill that part of me that remained in the past, examining myself in terms of what I imagined I did not know about me.

Leadership: Do you Immerse in the too pronounced loop of a personality crisis to build your own identity?

You can further improve your leadership skills through a realistic approach of the human nature that has the potential to significantly change mentalities, to create continuity in your own decisions, to change the rule of the game regarding your own capacities and perspectives.

"Inside every older person is a younger person - wondering what the hell happened." Cora Harvey Armstrong once remarked.

Before training people, before changing destinies, before influencing changes, you must understand the lessons and realities of life. That sometimes are very hard, sometimes are doing tumbles, jumping freely in one place, or are throwing you on the strange realms, where the storms are haunting; disappear through your subconscious or unconscious, by suddenly bringing to light all sorts of irregularities. But that can teach you, guide, and inspire you in the process of your becoming.

The leadership direction is represented by that continuous line in your life, of the man who builds his own identity, without plunging into the too pronounced loop of a personality crisis that iterates forever. And for your identity not to depreciate, you must compose, and paint the correct portrait of the basic part of your being that constantly approaches you to whom you really are.

Have you entered into the loop of a perpetual and tumultuous personality crisis? Are you going against the need to turn yourself into a victim of contradictions? Are you channeling your present into a good direction, or you continue living in an abandoned place, drowned in ignorance?

A beautiful flower and highly appreciated does not grow on all roads, but it can dry anywhere if does not have optimal conditions of humidity, temperature and light. For your personality to be consistent with your true way of being, you must ensure to it the best conditions to develop normally. And for this purpose the number of votes that you give to your existence, must represent at least one third of the total resources, of the investments that you make for the formation of your own Ego.

A high tree, in which there are a lot of ripened fruit.

No matter how enthusiastic or necessary are your efforts to "retrieve" the true potential of a Man, not just a Leader, they must enroll in the horizon of objectivity in order to become possible and acceptable.

And an insufficiently broad horizon, which does not allow the evolution of any forms of cooperation between who you are and who you can become, for the purposes of confirmation and preserving the essential values that define you, is like a high tree in which there are lots of ripened fruits. You have to make a scale just as high as the tree in order to get to pick them all. This scale designates the compromise that you do for maintaining your constant of being.

Do not wander in inconsistent roles, which do not emphasize your qualities. Learn to distinguish between a horizon of the past and one of the present.

With what you fill the space between the continuous and interrupted line that connects you of the one you can become? Can you list at least three factors that force you to keep distance from who you really are? With what you fill that part of you that has remained in the past?

The way you evaluate the limits of your own world, determines the result of your process of transformation.

Conclusion: We are the living material, which has been shaped up to a certain age, and that is still shaped and finished by ourselves in order to become a true "work of art". However, this requires a good self-knowledge, a perspective vision of what we can become in accordance with a present and future reality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-the-constant-of-being-IV.html

The Principle Of The Constant Of Being (I)

On August 18, 2012

See things from the perspective of what you can be, acting in accordance with what you are.

I needed someone to know me, and yet to not know me. A witness of a great transition to a "something else" temporary imprecise. Someone to perceive me not as I was, but as I could be after a great transformation, a stormy night, une rencontre avec moi-même. To forget about me, then remember me. And conversely, as some kind of vice versa.

A judgment without knowledge? or A knowledge without judgment?

Darkness shrouded me with all its power, devastating and cold, like I was a seashell. I felt it almost like a giant ready to crush me, as a huge structure mentally imposing, a mystifying unit obstructing any compromise with reason, any motivation for appropriate participation in the great "becoming".

Leadership: Can you maintain a dominant position, combined with humanism and awareness of your own weaknesses, to open new horizons of knowledge and transcendence?

I was increasingly plunging in the enslaving abyss of oblivion, ignorance, misunderstanding of the past, deterioration of my own nature. I was condemning myself, like Chuck Noland in "Cast Away", putting my permanent mask of separation from any real landmark, which concurrently subjected me to a process of self-oblivion. As if I had received an order from Mephistopheles himself to destroy the entire world, starting with mine, because it revealed all that remained artificial in our relationship.

Like a living cell, my conscience was constantly struggling to exist, simply because its existence represented a reality that came out of the anodyne and anonymity. I deepened myself into a state of confusion and disorientation, at the bidding of a totalitarian utopia. I was ashamed of my glacial and unfeeling silence to the man I was and who had given me more than anyone, but who humiliated himself so much in the eyes of reality by the seeming indifference to his own self.

I took care to hide it all. The deepest breach of my existence was created by the desire to know if I had or not control over my own being. Only thus I managed to discover the most obscure mysteries of the good side that was in me, the highest peak of the art of creating new forms of understanding and impact on my way of being.

I felt the pure joy of refinding myself.

Leadership: What is the factor that can transform you into an "other", knowing that the desire to understand your own impact on life could lead to the highest level of self-knowledge?

Self-knowledge, the reason to be or the image of what you would like to be, are all reasons for a life full of responsibility, doubled by the awareness of the significance of your future actions as a leader.

You can make decisions that positively affect your leadership and your qualities only if you create new forms of understanding and impact on your way of being. Conversely, a self-knowledge which does not encourage you to abandon yourself to your nature, to your own mechanisms of "self-recovery and defense", which does not encourage you to exercise better your exceptional qualities or abilities, will have difficulties in keeping up with the leadership that you want.

Which is the factor that prevents you to get closer to who you really are? Do you let yourself shrouded in the consuming and cold darkness of an uncertain self-knowledge? Do you sink into a state of confusion and disorientation that makes you uncertain of what to expect from yourself? Do you submit yourself to a perpetual judgment without knowledge? Do you hit the flow of a judgment without knowledge?

The way you look at yourself resides in the knowledge you are remembering more and more after you have turned into someone else.

To increase your level of self-acceptance and motivation, you must discern reality and your own thoughts. If you do not personalize the path to yourself until you manage to unravel the darkest mysteries of the good side that characterizes you, you will not be able to significantly smooth the path to making the right decisions. Likewise, you will not be able to embrace the values that can guide your judgment and actions towards effects, not causes.

To a man conscious of the irreplaceable ability of his own model to be, confident in the inexhaustible depth of his own being and who guides his actions in this regard, the future will only reserve him the confirmation and amplification of these expectations, by developing new appropriate forms to express his Ego.

The principle of the constant of being highlights your way of being in those astounding situations, when you think that no one watches you, when you do not recognize your qualities.

Cogito ergo sum – you think, therefore you are and not just that. You must direct your thinking to yourself in order to discover those qualities that will give a benefic meaning to your future actions and will foster your further growth, making you "someone else" in the great mass of leaders.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-the-constant-of-being.html

The Principle Of The Spiritual Universe

On January 07, 2011

Everything that happens around you has an echo in your soul.

Edward Lewis was not only a handsome man, but also a very important one. And his greatest passion, which turned into a huge business and with which he had created a million-dollar empire, was that of buying companies in a financial impasse, breaking them down and selling them at a much higher price.

However, once arrived in Beverly Hills, things had to take an unexpected turn in his life. Needing a lady companion, he hires a prostitute, named Vivian Ward, a young woman with no future at first sight, but which seemed to meet the features necessary to him for achieving his goal, giving the fact that she was quite attractive. In return for 3.000 dollars, Vivian accepted Edward's proposal, carrying out her role, living with him in a luxury condo and accompanying him on his business meetings.

At some point, they have a discussion, whose substrate would change Edward's perception of himself. Edward told her about his father, the president of the third company he had taken over and which, out of hate for his father, had sold it piece by piece.

Vivian drew near to his ear and, wrapping him in a gentle and clear look, at the same time, asked him: "And that made you happy?"

Leadership: Are you ready to discover a version of the life that is happening NOW so that you represent the enhanced version of a prolonged and resounding echo in someone else's life?

Deep thoughts always find an echo into a big heart.

There are circumstances when the difficulty consists in the very answer. In the moment of silence which suddenly dropped, bitterness seized Edward's soul. Only then he realized what he actually was: a destroyer of worlds. For, he didn't build anything, but he liquidated companies, broke them down to pieces, selling them piece by piece. That means he ruined people's lives, deprived them of the fruit of their labor. The conclusion he reached alarmed and determined him to change the perception of himself and of his business.

The end of the movie "Pretty Woman" is unexpected. Edward Lewis has reconsidered his position concerning his offer to purchase Morse Industries. His interests have totally changed. Instead of buying and break it down, as he initially wanted, and as he proceeded with all other companies, Edward decided to help the manager of that company, for it not to get into a financial collapse, signing with him even a collaboration agreement.

Edward Lewis was not the same man as before. He realized that he can build something, not only to demolish and destroy.

Leadership: Is the relationship between what you are and your external action based on the ability to accept yourself as the equal of a passing victory or as an equal of a consciousness that confronts the dominant instinct?

Moral wounds may be hidden, but they never close. There is a constant battle between your facts and your thoughts. If the facts are one step ahead of your thoughts, then they win the battle, and you risk becoming a "destroyer of worlds".

Edward Lewis was a decent guy, well-educated, but entering a relationship with Vivian, a prostitute with no future, but special by the simplicity of seeing things, he realized that he had all the necessary resources to build something and to gain just as much without to dismember companies and ruin lives. He reached to this observation after that Vivian made the summary of his "occupation", that of a destroyer.

That strange, touching spark of "dignity" could change Edward's spiritual universe. Realizing that he can be better than that, he finally reoriented his business to something edifying.

Leadership is the mark of self-revelation that can only be achieved through a perfect union with a culture of life that emphasizes the validation of feelings of loss and self-blame, and not just obtaining colossal victories.

I will never forget the observation that once did the writer Alexandre Dumas: "Moral wounds have this peculiarity - they may be hidden, but they never close; always painful, always ready to bleed when touched, they remain fresh and open in the heart."

You can have no money or influence, but your intentions to be the best and the most edifying. Conversely, you can have power, but your intentions to be destructive. To keep your heart at peace and your conscience unalarmed at any time in your life, you must learn how to coordinate your thoughts with your acts. You must establish a direct relationship between your interests and subsequent consequences. Try to see, judging everything on your own, listening to your heart, if what you are doing it is both in your benefit and in the other ones. Remember that nothing is unchangeable, including intentions and thoughts that you have.

Conclusion: The human soul is a "mixture" of feelings made during his life, and, which largely govern one's actions. If this universe is dominated by feelings of hatred, revenge and resentment, then the consequences of your acts will be destructive.

Keeping your mood of rejecting the claim of building the "New Man" because you dare not recognize yourself as a happy man, praising yourself sometimes with what you are not, is actually destroying a world reflecting a level of consciousness sufficiently elevated to realize that behind each individual there is a divine spirit that should be worshiped.

The weight of leadership is man's ability to overcome a resistance measured by the amount of energy and mood with which he travels to the destination called: vanity.

Everything finds its echo into a big heart. We should often think who we are, what we want to do, what we will offer to those around us and reconsider our position.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-principle-of-the-spiritual-universe.html

The Prison Of Angels

On December 13, 2011

For people's perception about you to be correct, they need to feel your inner vibration.

A mistake. Only this it was needed for Vivian Ward, the beautiful lady companion, to leave the controversial businessman, Edward Lewis. After a short argue, but painful, Vivian tells him:

- I've never had anyone make me feel as cheap as you did today. If you were going to tell everybody I'm a hooker, why didn't you just let me wear my own clothes? I'm sorry I ever met you. I'm sorry I ever got into your stupid car ! I want my money. I want to get out of here !

After she uttered these words, Vivian went out of the room crying, but without taking the money. She stopped in front of the elevator, which seemed no coming. In her mind, it was like saying to her: "Oh, my dear friend, my lover, you are older, richer, but not wiser."

Leadership: Do you introduce into the world a subjective way of gaining access to its ultimate foundation, according to experience experienced at different levels of your being?

Vivian had the feeling that she had lost half of her being. For a few days, she was connected to Lewis by an invisible thread. However, the spell had broken off. He managed to fill with joy her whole existence, now he excluded from her anything else. Nevertheless, the poor consolation that she felt now it was strengthening her decision. She had to go, had to say goodbye to her dream of fulfilling her love, of finding that spiritual wealth that only the finest hearts crave.

He crossed the ocean of pain and reached the other shore. Lewis went after her. He was silent about a moment, hardly striving to find the answer. Did he forget it? Did he guess it? Then, he told her with that sincere cordiality which conquers all hearts, as if he would be focused on her aura, by using that power to meet her wishes:

- I'm sorry. I didn't mean it. I don't want you to go.

These words had the gift for calming Vivian outright, as if she did not have to carry that burden by alone. It was as if she had read his thoughts, guessing his true feelings.

-You hurt me. Don't do it again.

Introducing into the world a subjective way of gaining access to its ultimate grounds is to expand your personal power to the level of instinct to judge events and deeds that damage the dignity of others through their own misfortunes, fears, resentments or frustrations.

One of the ultimate groundworks of the world is the state of well-being obtained by cutting the conflict between the arbitrary image you make of others and the reality you experience when you give up on yourself, on selfishness, and any other negative feeling.

Leadership: Do you place yourself in front of a change of meaning in the lives of others, without being sure of the direction you have to go?

Just as a single drop of blood detains the entire genetic code of a being, so your emotional coefficient gives continuity to all the other constitutive elements of your leadership. Leadership is like a work of art that cannot be complete if the constituent element of the total expression is missing, or it is not fully realized.

Through the medium of your leadership, you reveal something of the nature of your own feelings. You are leading by the way you feel, by the way you relate to people, and by the way you care about their spiritual experiences and inner impulses.

Your leadership can be paradise or a prison, depending on how you are perceived by the other people, and depend on how you perceive your own being. Once you have gained the status of a leader, you are connecting to people by an invisible thread. However, the spell that is controlling their motivation it quickly breaks, if they feel the partial or total absence of your feelings.

Leadership: Can you translate into visual terms everything you get to know through the senses and emotions?

The direction you're going in can be distinguished by the image you take with you and is reflected in all that you accept or not in those around. To cultivate an image means to suggest a model of seeing, perceiving, and expressing man and the world, before transmitting a message of confirming your own desires.

And to paraphrase what Romanian writer, Cornel Ailincăi said: "To see is not merely an act of monochrome recording of your surroundings and neither an interrupted dazzling on the verge of revealing a meaning, but rather a penetration into an infinity of concealments and omissions that make up a story that you deliver along with the confirmation of your own inner foundation."

If you want to situate yourself in a strong position in the soul of people, you must prioritize the values according to their importance, but first you must guess, you have to try finding the answer about the main ingredient, which requires to be incorporated into the foundation that shapes your image. Your answer may fill people with joy their whole existence, or may exclude from it anything else.

Leadership: Are you blocking any way to escape from your inner space empire?

When I think of the process of establishment and improvement of relations, I remember a character from a famous novel, which was playing with a ladybug. He was putting it on the desk, and was building barriers from books around it. If the insect found a way to escape, he immediately moved one of the books to block it.

In the position of the ladybug has put by himself and the multibillionaire Edward Lewis from the movie "Pretty Woman (1990)". He lifted up barriers and walls in his own soul, being insensitive to his and of other people's feelings. He has barricaded by himself in an area where there is nothing more important than his own person. He transformed himself into a prisoner by the power of money that influenced the emotional part of him, and dictated his life.

Leadership is the image you are building about yourself from the act of looking at the particular things that participate in forming the reality of others.

The prison of angels symbolizes the negative tempt of your leadership, which occurs due to the disagreement between your true feelings and those negative aspects which substantially diminishes your credibility. It is a way of serving a sentence for violation of your emotional part, and lasts until you correct your own values and guidelines.

"The escape" of Edward Lewis from the small prison, which he had built by himself, occurred when he learned to penetrate the mysteries of human nature, when he chose to listen to the voice of his heart, when for the first time in his life, someone proved that money does not make him a model to be followed, or to be praised, on the contrary, it overshadowed all his qualities.

In your leadership position, you must judge with your soul, not only with your mind. Take advantage of every opportunity and leave wide open the "gates of soul" not to get into the "prison of angels".

Vivian has served as a model of feeling and thinking. She felt the inner vibration of Edward, she perceived correctly and in a positive way his true nature, forgave him and returned to him. She was a guide, a high-caliber player in his life, getting him out from the position of "offside" which he had never got it into account.

Do you have the power to signalize the offside position that others are not taking into account?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-prison-of-angels.html

The Prisoner Of A Prodigious Thinking

On August 31, 2014

Create an objective image of what you want to be without positioning yourself within a variable context of evolution located at the boundary between known and unknown.

I wasn't like one of those beings found within formulas of a reality without truth, without opening, with no turning back, full of contrasts, of which only Cyrano de Bergerac, in his journey towards the sun, in his boundless imagination, would have known. I wasn't like one of those Titans of Olympus either, endowed with the power to rule the universe. Yes, it seems incomprehensible. An invisible pride tied me, like in the spell of certain obscure solicitations of self-searching, of another facet of my personality.

I felt like something was following me, the faded shadow of my own weakness. No, it was something else, an attempt to build a unique identity, by refusing any imperfection, by denying any essence that could rise and exist higher than the subjective ego. Strange, I wasn't sure anymore that I was the character in the screening of my own life. But only a mechanism of interaction between two extremes, bounded and boundless. A small oscillating universe in which everything is variable, in which I cannot be certain even of the passing of time, in which there are no laws, in which reality no longer prevails. But only the imaginary.

I was well positioned in this dimension of polarities, such as the hero of a famous novel that oscillated without limits between the imaginary world of books and his own inner life, in which he was locked. Seconds didn't matter anymore, nothing could be weighed soberly, every atom of my being oriented itself towards a new frequency. This was my lining, my meaning from behind unanswered questions.

It's not a common saying, that man, before losing his personality, is overshadowed behind the naturally tailored fiction in the most successful of pages. Everything began to spin in my mind, slowly, as a back and forth of magical words from a book without end. Everything seemed unreal, beyond my powers of understanding. Inevitably, I was obsessed with the essence of who I was. I think I went mad with this obsession. I no longer knew if I could stay the same person or not, a part of a chapter from a book left unfinished.

Leadership: Do you analyze your position relating to what is superior to your own reality, giving life to new models of interpretation of your own existence which are never repeated?

In an attempt to give life to new models of interpretation of your own existence, which give consistency to the unseen side of the variety of roles, values and expectations, developing them and implementing them into a "new world", you must analyze your position related to what is superior to your own reality.

Meaning, you have to chart the coordinates of a deeper, more complex vision, beyond the material world, that can ensure the continuity of thinking based on a different manner of seeing things and understanding life. Subjectively and objectively. Imaginary and real. But without resorting to a horizon full of paradoxes.

The power of higher thinking, by forming new concepts of yourself, inserted into the magic formula "I am a completely different person", directs the vision towards a direction parallel to consciousness, by its virtue of self-multiplying and amplifying.

This is possible through the manifestation of discontent against the sterility of the present, or by cultivating a high ideal, self-imposed, which eliminates the shadowing effects, of the mask, of the inner reality, leaving room for possibilities of imagination to materialize.

When you feel that you don't belong to a certain place, when you feel that you're not strong enough to assume the role of a protector of an independent thinking, you come to project yourself into the future different from how you really are. Which suggests an approach to knowledge beyond the borders of reality, accepted as the foundation of personal development. A knowledge put under the hypothesis of the subjectivity of a sensitive reflection of reality, but that provides a better understanding of the self and personal motivations. In this case, man acquires additional value, positive and negative altogether, by accepting the dependency towards a different way of being, in a context harder to understand by backwards mentalities.

The only model of non-repeating interpretation of existence is closely related to the manifestation of a new reality from the position of consciousness of not distorting the beauty of the world seen through your own experiences. And what is superior to this reality, unable to materialize in a material form, corresponds to the attempt to build a distinct identity by denying any essence of a life of significance that might rise above the subjective Ego.

Leadership: Do you oscillate between two contradictions: the duty to accept the truth of what you are and the necessity to hide it?

Dream or reality? The main character of the novel "The Network of Thoughts" wondered if what he lived is a dream or on the contrary, real. But the one who asked the question was in fact the author, Herbert Frank, and its meaning doesn't seem to be another: isn't it true that such things should only happen in a dream?

Leadership is part of an evolutionary process that is increasingly difficult to predict, promoting harmony between thought, existence and reality which only embraces the peculiar, which is a unique representation of identity. In other words, a leader can oscillate between two opposites: the duty to accept the truth of what he is and the need to hide it, in case it is being overshadowed in the back of the pride of being more than he is.

In fact, every leader will be subjected to the test of "living" during the process of evolution, by means of the need of materializing things considered impalpable, idealistic or impractical. By exploiting the need of identity and by satisfying the need of personal reinvention.

From the perspective of the known and the unknown, which directly influences the reality on which you concentrate, a part of the leadership might be a kind of science of the relationships between the most diverse aspects of life and the hidden aspects of the personality that comes to light only through an opening to the fantastic, after many attempts to define the notion of "innovative thinking".

The Prisoner Of A Prodigious Thinking is the man that seeks to better know himself and generate a favorable becoming, through non-linear approaches of reality, through a sharp delineation of the implausible.

But only he who creates an objective picture of what he is, without positioning himself into a variable context of evolution (passing it through the sieve of the imaginary and structuring it in the sense of present ideologies), will be able to maintain identity coherence.

Also, seriously analyze the opposite of evolution, the creation that you yourself conceive and impose upon yourself: "To be someone else."

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-prisoner-of-a-prodigious-thinking.html

The Prisoners Of Time

On March 19, 2014

Enable the present through an "Update" command, to ensure unity between content and form in their tight cohesion and interdependence.

Anxious, but composed, General Wellington was horseback riding and remained there all day, keeping the same attitude, a bit higher up from the old mill at Mont Saint-Jean. Wellington showed cold heroism. It was raining with cannon balls. His sidekick Gordon fell at his feet. Lord Hill, showing him a shell mid-explosion, said to him: "Milord, what instructions and what orders are you giving us should you be killed?"

Wellington answered: *"Do as I do ! Hold them off until the last man standing ! "***

Leadership: Do you report your form of manifestation of the self in the content of time, at a point where the effects of excessive ambition overlap with the action of certain demands of the causes of events?

The leader is the important factor in the promotion of values and ideals, he is the change full of meanings and full of challenges (not promises), that others see. He is a sort of generator of possibilities of playing a key role in promoting a consciousness which awakens people from their dominant state of confusion and drowsiness, urging them to take action by adopting a firm attitude that highlights their most relevant qualities.

You will understand that in the evolution of leadership, certain events exist that are not taken seriously, which historians and experts either avoid or silence. Especially the pure present of human living, existent mostly in the state of awakening of the consciousness, which starts authenticity, marked by the rousing exhortation, to battle, to unity.

Only this present, enabled by an "Update" command, continues to represent you, urging you to think of what you can do better in order to grasp another peak of experience necessary to the consolidation of values and objectives that give sternness to leadership. Be responsible for those events that make a difference and transform attitudes.

What happens in the spiritual basics of this evolution, starting with the present, where we find in the seeds a great many forms of manifestation of the true self that successfully connects to the sphere of events, self-motivating itself and defeating its condition of captivity in a time that continuously dilates?

To obtain guaranteed performance, as a way of paying off moral obligations to your supporters, it is important to report your form of manifestation of the self to the contents of time, to that unseen unit that marks every step of your life, always, under any circumstances. Thus, to accept the meaning of existence as that which is, in essence, a work carried out on the battlefield of motivations, of fears and the perspective over the distribution of statuses. As a leader, you are the holder of a status which influences the status of all other people in the middle of events.

Leadership is the time you are giving yourself on a journey from which you may not return, but from which you learn an important lesson: better resist any opposition than despise your own chosen being as a model of decisive decision that changes the destiny for future generations.

The Prisoners of Time reproduce that reality acutely felt to which you must always find a counterweight in the face of uncertainty and, especially, of fatality, so as not to become its victim by the simple acceptance of the status of persona indefensos. Emphasize the necessity of being anchored in the ever changing present, depending on the requirements of daily events, in order to face an uncertain future.

 Note: Victor Hugo - Les Miserables (First Book - Waterloo);

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-prisoners-of-time.html

The Product Of An Evolution Beyond Ending

On August 01, 2013

Control the way in which you go through overdevelopment stages, without getting away from the well-determined guidelines of a stable functionality.

I had come to regret every moment that kept me away from myself, as in the case of an artist who only likes an art that starts from anxiety to reach serenity. No doubt seemed to exist about what was actually happening to me. Every effort vested in accepting or rejecting some hypotheses regarding the effect of producing avalanches of ideas and revelations became more and more troublesome. An obstacle that couldn't be by-passed, ensuring by contrast a better understanding of my defects and qualities.

For the innovator of an ever more complex and specialized language in a certain area of expertise, time wasn't a playfield anymore. But a carrousel of confusion and instability, which always turned around, faster and faster, either one way or the other. The body couldn't support anymore the weight of the expectations I had always created. My art seemed to have turned into a window overlooking a void of disappearance of the line, every aspect of the landscape that proposed novel concepts announcing an aesthetic formula drawn from a cone of shadow of the self, like falling into an insignificant abyss.

The focusing degree of through, of attention, seemed to be maintained at a low level. Strange. My art seemed to always symbolize something other than what I had originally planned, something of which I was rather frightened than amazed, because everything seemed limitless, but at the same time lifeless. The extent to which I was channeling my mental energy in the direction of an only type of activity had decreased until the minimum level of maintaining the creative force. The burning desire to escape routine, the desire for absolute change had become a priceless tool.

Art is a triumph of science. And science, heavy, triggered a full rebellion in my mind. The more discoveries I made, the more it restrained my relaxation field. The more I advanced deeper into the unknown, the more I floated away from the pure and simple joy of living. Unmistakably, the maximum effort came with an overload. Instead of allowing my mind to set itself free and reach a stage of relief, I was blocking the energy within me at its maximum development point.

Leadership: Can you transform the future of your creation into a new beginning of aesthetic argument by interpreting the constant phenomenon of perception of a "total truth" meant to bring your vision closer to the requirements of a new world?

My aspiration to reach the absolute creation ideal suddenly fell apart. As if I had lost my reason, as if o heavy hand, unseen and cold would have pushed me towards an unfriendly environment, towards unpleasant compromises. And this immovable force, using a certain brutality of its aces, generated a break of the agreement with myself.

What can give art a spiritual, essential, expressive nature by constantly seeking an ideal of order and clarity, established by a formula of beauty, is the constant phenomenon of perception of "total truth" meant to bring you closer to the world of dreams become reality. In my case, the only truth meant to bring my vision closer to the requirements of a new world (to be perceived as a fascinating expression of the transcendent, the existence of a consciousness that does not know doubt) was detached from the nightmare of the theory of chaos.

To me, the uncategorized chaos seemed endless. I wasn't decided. I wasn't ready to draw any conclusions. Maybe I could have compensated the past by venturing into a future with much more free time in order to focus on the things that really mattered. I had reached a point where my life was similar to that of a character from one of George R.R. Martin's novels. I intended to get closer to the end. And maybe this way I could have managed to guess and build the beginning.

Here I should quote the words of a famous banker, referring to the art of seeing everything as a whole: "The different elements of the printed drawing in the same place, on the face and on the back, form a whole image when the banknote is illuminated from the opposite side of the viewer."

Leadership: Can you move forward in the artistic field if you are spinning in the circle of a masterpiece that is not the reflection of an eternal idea, but that leaves its mark on the perception of your form of existence in the world?

Your development potential, that imperiously asks to be fulfilled and brought to light, is used in the actual plan of your existence, of fundamental values, of the mission and vision that you assume in the name of your own needs and interests. But especially in the name of your personality, perfectly integrated with functionality and perfection of the art to which you relate.

And this development potential is amplified only between the toleration limits, well established by life in relation to leadership. It sets a certain superior development and creation limit, by using information, and one stagnation and inertia limit.

Your aspiration for reaching the absolute creation ideal can suddenly crumble if you try to overstep your own limits. The effect won't be spectacular anymore, but contrary to your expectations.

Super-intense effort generates the end of passion. This is a consequence of overstepping a barrier or the maximum reachable limits. And in an era where information and innovation are generated and circulated at fast speed, it's high unlikely (if not impossible) to keep up with them. Any attempt to comprise and understand everything is meant to fail. Any mental overload generates contrary effects when the incomes are infinitesimal in comparison with the huge expenditures, and they will also have no practical finality.

In leadership, everything is built step by step. Development is achieved in time, then shaped and correlated with new scientific discoveries in order to reach a maximum possible productivity and efficiency level. Any attempt to reach beyond the maximum allowed by your own abilities can generate the lamentable ending.

The perception of your form of existence in the world is realized directly through art when you try to make a comparison between the great disappointments of creative efforts and the spontaneous revelations: the first one tests your determination and open your eyes, the others draw you a direction and make you feel like you belong to a unitary whole, not that you are chasing your own tail.

The well-defined benchmarks that measuring progress of leadership are given by the four primary aspects of art: the focus on the essentiality of an idea to be conveyed, the depth of feeling and what is not said in words or what cannot be explained rationally, the perspective that gives an overview of a new reality and the revelation of a world that refuses to die.

The Product Of An Evolution Beyond Ending is nothing else but the result of the efforts that are not always up to the level of expectations and can't hold a high development rhythm for man that aspires with all his heart to outdo himself. It appoints at the same time the transit towards a new beginning, towards a better direction, towards self-becoming within the frame of an ideal in life in agreement with the well-determined efforts of a new and stable functionality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-product-of-an-evolution-beyond-ending.html

The Progressive Transition From Static To Dynamic

On March 06, 2009

Promote your personal authentic values in order for your leadership model's definitive construction to be visible.

I have always liked the series of movies with the character „Zorro", lonely, isolated, rebel. In „The legend of Zorro (2005)", the wife of count Alejandro de la Vega, alias Zorro, is kidnapped and obliged, under threat, to collaborated as a spy with the government of the United States of America.

Overtaken by his deepest fear, desperate by the terrible idea that the life of his wife is in great danger, Alejandro de la Vega, alias Zorro, under disguise so that he wouldn't compromise himself, with the mask to hide is identity, starts off with a lot of heart and courage to follow the conspirators, wanting to save her – just like a dauntless warrior, firmly convinced that he could win in front of a challenge unseen before. With his comprehensive, bright and profound spirit, with his relentless and lively zeal, he rushed, not blindly, but charily on winding Transitions, unexpected and unknown, in order to unmask the most feared, the most bitter and most evil of his enemies: count Armand, the new lover of Elena, his wife.

Armand, dodgy like a fox and conceiving the trap the hunter has set, knows how to trick Zorro and, dodging justice, manages to insure his success by some clever combinations. But Zorro, this unusual man who guesses everything, gives as good as he gets and, following the Transition of events, concentrating all his skillfulness, power and intelligence, success by a clever plan to annihilate the plot. By keeping his determination to the end, but endangering bot his and his wife and child's lives, he finally succeeds, but only though a miracle, to attain his goals.

Leadership: Can you assert yourself as a unit of decision and action capable of changing the course of events in circumstances in which an injured person is unable to visually perceive the causative agent of a rescue intervention?

Never forget what I'm about to tell you now. It is not Zorro's show that is essential, but its psychology, which appears ever clearer exactly in the moments when he dedicates himself to a heroic purpose. His greatest merit is that has always seen first the inadmissible inadvertence between words and unethical facts, which contradicted any provisions foreseen by law. This obsession, continuously latent, to hide his identity and to show his value by following his inner calling to rise to the height of his high ideals became ever more acute in the most unexpected moments, exactly when people most needed help.

Zorro always appears as a unit of decision and action. He finds the necessary resources to maintaining and continuing the transformation process of his personal leadership by following his strong feeling of a higher respect and the highest consideration for the human being. Zorro first established what people wanted the most, and then he moved heaven and earth in order to impose himself directly in any situation.

Excellent results can be obtained very easily when the basic unit of your leadership that you practice is well established and very resistant. This fundamental unit involves the ability to decide the fact that a certain situation is under your attention and your control, developing the best strategy for attaining the proposed objectives, assuming responsibility for any failure.

Leadership: Do you fulfill the conditions of a positive self-image that allows a causal assessment around the reality that you impose as a verdict of the judgment of your own conscience, without it overlapping with the room for maneuver of your sensitivity?

Just like the kidney has a special role in the humoral adjustment of blood pressure, so your ability to integrate yourself in the lives of others, by transmitting your feelings and disposition, has a significant role in the adjustment and good development of your activities. It is deeply rooted in conception that the form of manifestation of the being that progressively becomes aware of itself can only be a closed unity, as demonstrated by that reality accepted and experienced through a mixture of emotional or moral coercion.

Of course, before analyzing the state of mind of a "savior", we must analyze the state of mind of the one who is trapped in the reality of an affected self, sensitive to context, as Elena was in the film. Her soul content referred to unfavorable circumstances that no one had elucidated, and her spiritual tendency was to redefine the space of her own sensibility, and the viewer who would have tried to penetrate the vibrant ensembles of this space would not have known exactly where they were.

Not getting involved in actions meant to prove your responsibility and showing off your skills is like living in a dark room from which apparently you can't get out of. The good news is that you can program the quantity of light coming in the house by transforming yourself in something better, freeing your inner resources for the exteriorization and understanding of personal intentions. The intensity with which you get involved in the development of your actions depends on the quantity of "light" with which you fuel your leadership – by adequately configuring your potential and the personal motivations, and the degree of promptness of the "activation" of your emotions.

Leadership has as a main determinant a form of manifestation of the being that progressively becomes aware of itself, in the light of a reality that has not been fully deciphered in all its consequences.

The Progressive Transition From Static To Dynamic has the role to signify "your awakening" by cultivating a sense of appurtenance to the community or to a group of people and by aligning to their expectations and needs.

Always, in order to accomplish something great and in order to maintain the good relationships with other people a supreme, irresistible and absolute authority is necessary. This authority must fulfill the following qualities: supremacy, wisdom, kindness and force. It's the same authority that Zorro always had. He promoted his authentic personal values (such as honesty, integrity, respect, communication or compassion), thus shaping the definitive construction of his leadership model.

Conclusion: The Transition from static to dynamic signifies to let go of that state of expecting something (even in the presence of great words) and to get to action, an action motivated by feelings of justice and fairness in favor of those in suffering.

Your value will increase if you do it relentlessly and without expecting the eternal gratefulness of people. Facts, not words are those that matter. They will express your personal values.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-progressive-path-from-static-to-dynamic.html

The Projection Of The Human Soul Floods The Geography Of The Whole Vision

On May 13, 2024

The ability to align personal sensibility with the essence of creation leads to the birth of a masterpiece that finds its eternity.

For three days I stayed at a guesthouse, somewhere in the mountains. A caring old woman, simple, modest, she found joy in her work, transforming the garden into an oasis of color and life. As a call from the bottom of the heart, "Heshthiss Uretharus", the old woman seemed to have received her inspirations directly from nature, directly from the mysterious soul of an image editor, making everything that is most precious for not forgetting, para facil recordação , to order itself in a story of the living, pure earth, consecrated with the steps of a fragile heart, laid bare between silent echoes.

Inspired by nature, such a garden can tell the story of the living earth, just as an artist creates art by living in the soul of a being permeated by divine grace. And if I deal with the theme of the "Euharistia" (the Mystery of Eternal Life), then the earth becomes a kind of altar of being, from which the artist elevates his creation.

I saw her admiring her flowers every day, it seemed to me that she gave each one a name, and she did it with the meaning and mystery of life transformed into a work of art, as if putting a polite "thank you" next to each one with a hint of blessing. The brush of her heart only put color on the canvas, a touch of reconciliation with herself and the world, a moment of silence between two lark trills, against the background of a: "I only feel what I see".

A look filled with the purest harmony opens its horizon only in front of pure simplicity. The small floral arrangements, additions of delicacy brought to life with a trembling hand, with a spirit of giving, delighted my eyes and brightened those days. Only in this spectacle of colors and forms, the interdependence of man and nature is accentuated, and the life of art becomes an extension of human life, integrated and part of nature.

Leadership: Is the calling of your heart a testament to an artistic vision that brings out the essence of the soul and offers it to the world?

The beautiful, an idea of emotional origin, has its roots in sensuality. The consecration of a reality recognized around, the emotion produced by beauty, are impregnated with sensoriality, a condition of the aesthetic life that elevates the spirit to the sublime of a useful life, to give you an ideal of beauty, identified with the very breath of "green". The old woman has something to show the world, unlike many "illuminators" of society, who, in their rush for titles and recognition, forgot to create, to feel, to truly live. She, with her simple hands, with her good soul, creates beauty every day, lovingly caring for the flowers she calls: "gifts of nature".

Art is the pure reflection of the soul in the visual geography of the world. The soul fruit of the old woman, reflected on a bright face, can be seen years from now. Christians enjoy its fruit. As much as she has, from her little labor, she shows it to the world. Creation is a blooming flower. It does not alienate. He doesn't dress in laurels with applause, nor does he stick in the front just for the sake of appearing in some exhibition, in some memory. That's all, he takes care of her in a corner of the garden. He lights it only with the spirit. Beauty expands by itself. The brush of the heart adds color to any look that meets it.

In a similar way, Alexandru Vlahuță wrote about the painter Nicolae Grigorescu:

"How early the painter understood this secret of life in the work of art ! He felt it . He activated it. He continued it. And if he had seen that things no one likes them , and no one understands them, how could he have done all this ? The commandment of the time? after an ancient calling , once , and again . Only the thought that he must do a thing keeps him from that otherwise, he would have done it with love. Many will never understand the life force , the ever-fresh soul of a painter's work."

Leadership: How might the soul's attunement to art manifest itself in delicate representations, finding aesthetic resonance in the simplicity of nature?

The pure soul is the treasure of the hand that cares for the earth. Man rises above himself when he recognizes his humanity. In this sense, the nature of his receptivity to beauty manifests itself through an empathetic association, a merging of meanings of perceptions conjugated in images. Certainly, the agreement that the soul gives to art is translated into ideal representations, non-imitative, vivid images, which, having a direct connection with nature, find aesthetic resonance in the souls of others. The projection of the human soul floods the geography of the entire landscape, and visual aesthetics becomes a vital reaction to natural beauty.

Any gardener, like any anonymous artist, reminds us that beauty is found in simple things, in everyday gestures, in the good soul of man. He teaches us that true art springs from love and passion, and creation is a form of communion with nature, first and foremost, and then with fellow human beings. From earth we were born, to earth we return. And the old woman from the guesthouse offered me a life lesson, a lesson about beauty, dedication and the joy of creating: "Dedicated work reflects the good soul of man."

So many secrets demand of art the imperishable garment of the earth cared for with soul. But the biggest secret, Alexandru Vlahuță also unravels it:

"The painter creates a typical world . His and everyone 's. This is the power of Art; and this is its secret. Everything flows. It stops them with its gaze, chooses their blade and pours them into eternal patterns. An addition to the living and ever new work of God. Therefore, whatever you feel , and whatever you feel - where you do n't move , put down the paddle : your work , being only sincerity , will grow and pour itself into the soul of others . It will live . Otherwise , you want to fulfill it , you kill him... "

The determination to create from the heart, without forcing perfection, is a form of self-personalization and recognition of one's own limits by overcoming them.

The projection of the human soul into the entire geography of vision occurs at the moment when art becomes a form of authentic communication of inner emotions and thoughts. It occurs when the creator transcends material barriers and expresses something profound and universal, with the power to touch the hearts and minds of those who view or experience his work. This projection transcends individual boundaries, connecting to humanity's shared experience and deep understanding of life in the bosom of nature.

Therefore, the "essence of creation" refers to the ability to align personal sensibility with nature, resulting in the birth of a work of art that reflects the depth of the soul and eternity. This implies an empathetic and authentic connection with the environment, where beauty and art are manifestations of a harmonious interaction between man and nature, rooted in sensitivity and emotion.

 Note: Alexandru, Vlahuta - Painter Nicolae Grigorescu, Tineretului Publishing House, 1969

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-projection-of-the-human-soul-floods-the-geography-of

The Promoter Of Formidableness

On October 29, 2009

Highlight your character traits, by finding those patterns, trends and contrasts, which integrate the full "picture" of your leadership.

The work of an artist, like that of a painter, is not that easy as one may think. It requires passion, talent, patience, a creative imagination, perspective and sense of color and shape. A painter is not just an artist that handles oil and moist colors. Besides, he is a fine observer that doesn't neglect details; and a good listener. He has a very educated taste. He gets inspired by every little scent, afterglow, sound and emotion, every song he listens to, every place he visits.

He enjoys the ability of bonding things apparently unimportant. Colorless. Senseless. When he contemplates them, he finds within the heart of beauty and zest. And the evanescent. The most important is the ability of exhausting the core, in order to serve it. To fit it to his own flat. Yes, that's right. When it comes to painting, we allude to a "sui generis" world that requires a chosen craft with a native affinity to beauty and creativity.

The deepest desire of a true artist is to paint something that has not been painted. He grinds alone, to dare to do what nobody else has not done before. He isn't satisfied with the old-line of colors and shapes; he's always on the pursuit of novelty.

Sometimes, he doesn't adventure himself into blabbing his ideas. Because, no matter how gifted he would be, he's always dissatisfied with himself and his paintings. Often, inspiration leaves him, the drawing refuses to take the shape that he wants to give it, the dust of his colors drains his throat, his hands keep shaking, his eyes are tearful of so many sleepless nights. However: formidable. Ultimately, he achieves to give life to a true work of art.

Leadership: What is the result of the relationship between the creation environment and the form of manifestation of your character character?

Almost any human character investigation will find a relationship between the form of manifestation and the living and creation environment, even in maximum difficulty circumstances. An environment considered under-privileged can't ensure the minimum requirements of shaping the character, in order to effectively valorize the "offer" of the will to continue on the road of self-overcoming, which forks in the coverage of the whole perceptive universe, in a superficial or pronounced way.

Improving your artistic experience, which stands behind the choice of creating something outstanding related to your attitude towards what you consider to be a great challenge, can determine a positive prolonged effect of intellectual development –the more creating the environment, the stronger it inspires and motivates.

The own inspiration language, which validates the experience, if accepted as an individual adaptation pattern in a specific culture, as model of an analysis of the present, it's closer to becoming a "helper" for the clarification of the ascension perspectives towards another existence level or purpose. This only if it's used in a favorable development environment, which facilitates the shaping of an understanding more or less different through a sum of own exclusive ideas.

"The Formidable" represents a point of maximum intellectual altitude, introducing through itself new reference values which you can reach only through your own strength, through an artistic sense that leaders discover gradually: the inclination towards research and experiment, in favor of surprising the novelty.

The promotion of the artistic experience, which advocates the assumption of the artist's condition as a genius, has as a primary element the opportunity of man to self-evaluate through the creation experienced through a personal experience. A living that cannot lack that instinctive knowledge that uses the unlimited field of subjective reasoning.

Just like an artist, the leader creates a world of his own.

Leadership is an art. And the one who leads people and motivates them to fulfill their duties in order to mount into their chosen career has to be an artist, a formidable artist, one that would astound everyone with his unusual qualities, his special virtues, his dazzling performances, and then to point them towards the direction chosen by himself. A clear direction, safe, fair, concordant with people's long-term interest.

It is strenuous to be in the forefront of people. You need to order all your values and to create your own path, your personal cosmogony, just like a painter, to create your own reality, to have it your way, but to leave the door open for others to enjoy it as well. You must formulate a new vision of the future, through which you express your desire to renovate that great something in others: the impulse to act through free expression of opinion, the impulse to work with more professionalism, to practice their job with greater enthusiasm to finally get to have a very high social status.

Just as the deepest desire of a true artist is to paint something that has not been painted, so the biggest desire of a leader is to highlight those traits of character that would contribute to the evolution of his leadership.

There's nothing more transcendent, but to get close to people, to motivate them to join your "world", to cause them to cling after your own personality and echoing your style, your mentality, your character traits to enliven something prodigious. Something that, if possible, would endure evanescence just like a painting. That is the meaning of being a formidable leader.

The essence of a formidable composition that turns art into a means of communicating your own feelings and experiences, expressed through the use of plastic language elements, requires a combination of several different worlds into one called "human beauty".

An imaginary world, a world of uninterrupted expression, a world of forms taking with them the subject of the work, a world of stories told through color and shape, a world of experiencing new experiences and a world of the man-symbol relationship seen through an original vision.

And, now, the bad news. You cannot invest little and win the big pot. You can only benefit if you accomplish your tasks with responsibility and passion, if you got the skills and, especially, if you are willing to invest more in your work. If you intend to lead a limited or extended team, without possessing those qualities that make them better, you will not be able to gain the team's solidarity, you will not be able to refer them to a common path in order to achieve the purposed goal.

The painter can create a masterpiece out of nothing because he knows how to reproduce "perfection" by reviewing his ideas, by learning new stuff, by mixing the colors in established proportions. He finds patterns, streams, contrasts.

Are you a master in your field? Can you find patterns, trends and contrasts that would complete the full "picture" of your leadership, which would polish your image and tint your qualities?

The complete picture of leadership includes the memory reference points of life experiences, transposed in a new format, customized through a universal language called: "Self Portrait".

The Promoter Of Formidableness is that man who turns vision into reality, combining deep knowledge of his field with the ability to inspire and guide others. He is the leader who, like the master painter, sees potential where others see only the blank canvas, and has the ability to orchestrate the talents and efforts of his team to create a collective masterpiece. This leader finds the perfect balance between discipline and creativity, between tradition and innovation, outlining a "Self Portrait" of leadership that reflects not only his own qualities, but also the aspirations and potential of the entire team.

In order to vivify something, you must be oriented towards people and their needs, you must have communication skills, to have a nice presence, entrepreneurship, and not at least, you must have the ability to build different action scenarios. You have to find those patterns, trends and contrasts of the action, of thought and behavior to motivate and help people to move easier.

You cannot become a formidable leader if you are not able to initiate and to support long-term positive changes among art.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-promoter-of-formidableness.html

The Promoter Of Future Science

On July 24, 2014

Transform your great innovations into a means of communication of thoughts and feelings, so that your knowledge serves as a benchmark to an immeasurable power.

He found formal innovation in the film application of a montage of attractions, this also being the method of making any film. Obsolete soon afterwards, this view Eisenstein had, has in any case significance in his creative biography, because the movie "The Strike" embryonically contains – and sometimes more than that – the great artistic innovations of later times. The ideas of Eisensteinian montage are found here in this film. The metaphoric role, associative to the montage is clear in this sequence, often quoted, in which the scenes representing the repression of the labor movement join images of slaughtering cattle in a slaughterhouse.

*Examples of this kind are abound in this film. Editing becomes a language, a means of communicating thoughts and feelings. Even abstractions can be expressed through editing, as shown in the example cited above. We therefore witness the first steps of discovering the role of editing and at the same time, the first step towards the intellectual film of later times.

Leadership: Can you outline a vision that will give a new image of the concept of the "mirror of the subject that represents their world" so as to change the course of action of a work that defies and overthrow the stylistic conventions of modernism?

That which you transmit and what others receive, brining into view the image of what you know in a practical way, depends on what you discover and fulfill in account of exceeding your own limits. Limits are akin to hammer strikes letting you know that you must rethink the way in which you combine the elements of creation that guarantee the achieving of top scientific results, mobilizing you towards leading your attributions of "innovator" to the end.

Great creators focus on establishing the type of knowledge that guides action in scientific approach, not just as a way to test their limits and high qualification in the field, but also as a means of communicating thoughts and feelings felt in an original way to deal with certain subjects. These subject may include worldviews or descriptions of a particular way of life, highlighted by an openness to scientific objectivity, having a mirror image that reconfigures reality.

We can talk about "a mirror of the subject that represents their world" where approaching a vision has as a first form of manifestation a form of communication of an information or a feeling the writer has in his own life. Here leadership gains an accent of subordination to ideas that confirm the influence of thought and especially of the sense of others, because the screenwriter MUST SHOW, NOT TELL, finding a way to train the public to adopt a certain state that illustrates a part of his personality.

A work that defies and overturns the stylistic conventions of modernism is the result of a vision able to maintain the artistic aura and acting autonomy in approaching a theme that rounds reality and gives it a more comprehensive meaning than science can offer.

In an accessible language, the screenwriter has to imprint upon his work that spiritual stage play that betrays with every movement a powerful eclectic, spectacular, comic or dramatic effect. The light of the story must have a powerful dramatic and spiritual role, that is to say, that explosion of excitement that the "deja-vu" phenomenon generates.

What a good stage director want to accomplish, by creating a montage of key elements of differentiation, gaining the form of a description and modeling language of scientific rationality, and its pragmatic integration into leadership, is that creative vision bringer of added value. A vision that is more higher than the qualities of the moment or of the power to create a variety of content and experiences.

The first steps of discovering the functions of editing are a relentless journey amid the landmarks of a proper science of observations and those of a science which mainly relies on the resources of ideas and innovative projects.

You can seal a partnership which works well between your authority as a promoter of science and the contributors to your direction of thought, only if in your art the reasoning of assuring the basis for the formulation of new standards of performance is reflected. These standards are meant to guarantee the fact that science assimilated and practiced after self-training models, will serve as a standard of manifestation, with discretion, of an immeasurable power. That power of changing your functioning parameters and direction along the evolutionary existence.

The director possesses some forms of reinforcement of a creation in relation to his being, a subject that is approached from different angles, from an artistic perspective that gives you the feeling of spiritual detachment to everything that is perishable and ephemeral.

Can you develop that part of the subject that determines the course of the action of a dramatic or epic work that reflects the objectivity of artistic vision?

The Promoter Of Future Science is the creative-leader who manages to transform his great innovations into a means of communicating thoughts and feelings. His knowledge can serve as a standard of manifestation of an immeasurable power only if he succeeds in modeling his rationality and integrating it pragmatically into leadership.

Science is the matter that comes to life after a simple rearrangement of resources of inspiration and creation, and it relates to leadership through both reason and pragmatism, but also through the feelings recorded in the subconscious in relation with the experience gathered in the field.

* Note: Ion Barna -Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-promoter-of-future-science.html

The Proof Of The Importance Of Collaboration

On April 06, 2009

Establish the "area" of influence to which it is measured your value, by integrating into your leadership those rules that you must consistently follow.

He wanted to achieve a higher level in the company and was fired.

The employee of an electricity company, was selected in a research program from where he obtained a capital of 10.000 Euro for the acquisition of some special equipment. Everything was good, but he did not consult with the manager about the types of equipment, because some of them needed auxiliary installation components, some didn't have the necessary capacity. And especially this employee wanted to be installed preferentially in his sector of activity, despite the necessities from other departments.

He was fired not so much for the incompetence with which he managed a large part of the funds, but rather for the attitude with which he approached the issue of collaboration that could have been devoid of divergencies.

Leadership: Does your personality have a vision of how to avoid an unwanted event in trying to transcend a life experience from a culpable state to one of acceptance?

When you analyze a topographic map in terms of relief, it is necessary first to see, which is the zero equipotential surface to which were measured the altitudes of the points.

When it comes to leadership, and to improve relations with other people, you must analyze those rules that you know that you can respect by yourself in a consistent manner, without deflecting from them. Moreover, for this it is necessary to determine which is the "area" of influence to which it is measured your value.

This area if it is not affected by any negative experience, by any false or disappointing indicators, can provide an adherence to your team, and can contribute significantly to your success and of your company. Otherwise, all your approaches will fail primarily because of the lack of credibility.

The „altitude" of your credibility is given by how consequent you are in compliance with the rules and principles laid down by the company. Another criterion of credibility is the vision of ways in which an unwanted event can be avoided in trying to transcend a life experience from a culpable state to one of acceptance.

How far are you willing to go with the costs of an action that does not accept the right to reply, except with some trace culpability? Do you represent some doubtful qualities?

Leadership: Does your personality extension provide a superior viewing experience that helps maximize your reference value delivered as a whole, with less wide angles than you would have wanted?

How do you entertain your area of influence? How do you win the trust of your colleagues and bosses? Are you disciplined in relation to them? Is it beneficial your presence in the company? What is the glue that binds you to them? Are you predictable? Can they count on you? Are you threatening to "abandon" by taking those decisions that contradict with the policies of the company/institution in which you work?

Managers are always looking for quality people who love their job, who work efficiently and who can bring significant benefits to their company. What kind of manager doesn't want employees who can think and act towards the desired development of the company, who are confident in their ability to take a decision and capable to take the initiative when it's case? Yes, that is right. All the managers are looking for multifunctional employees, serious and devoted to their company.

Nevertheless, being a professional and conscientious employee is not enough. You have to be a model for the other work colleagues, to inspire them to action in a constructive direction and to determine them to be efficient and productive in the work they do. You have to know what buttons to push in order to change the things that surround you so that they turn in the favorable direction for the company, but without exaggerating too much.

Your reference value can be delivered as a whole and can only be maximized by a changed image of yourself through an influence that prevents the emergence of negative attitudes and the imposition of strong values.

Leadership: Have you attributed yourself an attribute that represents you in a defining way, without taking into account that plus/minus error that the distance separating you from your "follower" provides?

Struggling hard to obtain better results so that you are seen and noticed by the manager is a good thing. But there are certain limits imposed in a company that you should never cross, like, for example, when you take a decision without consulting the managers, the compartment chief or with the colleagues. Doing everything after your own way, even if you think that is good for the company, could have the contrary effect you expected. First, you need to take note of the Code of Conduct and of the rules set by the company, and only afterwards to follow your rules - if you know to act correctly.

The fact of being individual, arrogant and stubborn, the lack of collaboration and un-subordination will provoke isolation, marginalizing and even firing those employees.

What from the start seemed to be a big joy turned into a horrible nightmare for the employee I was telling you about at first, who, in order to be noticed and to be above other colleagues took action in the name of the company without consulting the manager. It was a fatal mistake and the directors did very well firing him, because who makes everything after his head, risks leading the company in a wrong direction, maybe to bankruptcy, he is also a bad example for the other employees. In other words, in a company there are certain levels that need to be respected and rules that any employee has to respect.

The "follower" that always catches up to you is the mistake of believing that a certain situation will last forever, or to believe that others believe strongly in you.

Do not make the mistake of believing that getting some good results means you have exceptional qualities. Do not make the mistake of thinking that others will change for you. Do not make the mistake of believing that everything you say and do is a letter of law.

What would happen if all the employees would act as they likes despite all the rules that the company established? Almost sure the chaos appears sooner or later, and the relation between the employees and the managers would have to suffer. As I said before, in a company where does not exist a disciplined communication, an order of things, a hierarchy for employees to follow, the possibility to develop is very low.

In the big companies, but also in small and middle ones, the key to success is collaboration. You certainly met persons who are proud of their relation with their boss, colleagues but especially their clients. It is a kind of interior peace that each person, who is a part from a group, feels and he is respected by all for his credits. And this relation between employees, chiefs and clients is based, in the first place, on collaboration. Collaboration is the secret of success in any domain, in all the activities that we have to do.

Collaborating with your colleagues and especially with your chief is a very important factor and it constitutes the key element in the development of the company. Collaborating means you have to consult with your chiefs and colleagues about the decisions you want to take, not to do everything as you want to. A decision that you think is good and you take it without consulting the others, could be wrong and could put in danger the company.

Leadership is what you produce in an original way from the winnings that stop at you, without making the mistake of thinking that everything you say and do is a letter of law.

The lack of cooperation and especially the lack of communication of certain dates, sometimes essential, can put in danger the existence of the company or the work and the health of others. What would happen if in a laboratory of medical analysis, where certain test are made in different stages and days by different doctors, and they would not communicate with each others on the obtained results in different stages? With certainty, the final result would be far from the reality, the doctor could not give the efficient treatment or the given treatment, after this kind of analysis, would be useless or even risky.

What would happen if in a porcelain factory, an employee who observes that the composition of the porcelain is not right, would not communicate these things to the people who can solve this problem? You guessed. This means that the productivity would come down and the number of trashes would rise, and this would lead to material loss and even the loss of the company's prestige.

When we collaborate we align and we harmonize with a common purpose, our energies are headed to constructive directions. When it comes to a purpose we want to achieve or an idea we want to put it in practice, the best is to consult with our colleagues and chiefs before taking the final decision. This to be sure we do not make a mistake.

The influence you have in a group resembles a dove feather carried by the wind: it has an endless potential for expressivity only when it shows an action that will be completed by a specified time in the future.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-proof-of-the-importance-of-collaboration.html

The Prospecting Human's Disturbing Nightmare

On March 28, 2013

Show what you think power means, without slipping into a downward spiral.

"Wait ! One more thing, I would like you to congratulate our new manager who will hopefully solve things, Mr. Peter Bowland."

Everyone applauds. But, oh, what surprising turn for Laura Quinn ! What a fatality ! What a nightmare ! Unacceptable announcement ! What vain and delusive hope that is not seen, but which vibrates like a huge menacing and prophetic gong, beyond any measure. An unknown force kind of chains it up heavily to the pillory, in a confined, unusual, unconventional space. Rigid and disapproving, yet perfunctory, Laura shakes the hand of the one who was appointed manager in her place.

In this ravishing moment that never ceases to exert overwhelming pressure on Laura Quinn, one of the most memorable, but unbearable, experiences in her life is unveiled. This dignified form of existence whereby countless living cells breathe is changed into a very rigid and shockproof mechanism. A gentle creature, with all the feelings and aspirations that define it, turned into a single, strict, rigorous system, which is full of rules and procedures.

It is the first part of the complete defragmentation of a whole, a much more repulsive and difficult to undertake travel, as a result of a striking decision.

Life consecrated to an aspiration difficult to undertake, the excessive loss of confidence, the immeasurable pain caused by a whole series of frustrations, anger, failures and disappointments bring Laura Quinn to a negative point, awakening dormant napping bursts, an inward unprecedented impetus, the desire for final judgment and revenge on behalf of deeply felt injustice.

Henceforth, intrigue itself is born in a chess game with totally unknown rules. Taking away any freedom of speech, cutting man's hope for a bright future career, you only stimulate his hidden abilities against you.

Leadership: Can you express your feelings in remembrance of what you were, in contrast to what you have become, without distorting the image and profile of your personality?

If Jean Valjean, Victor Hugo's character, kept the silver candlesticks to always remember where he started from, Laura Quinn intensifies her endeavors for revenge in the most dangerous possible direction, while keeping at heart the pain of her conversion.

With a demonic seriousness and a truly monumental systematic prudence, Laura Quinn starts to implement her bold plan – wordless revenge, to the detriment of those who have caused her suffering. And so, powerless within range of the undiscovered queen, company's crowned heads begin to fall as pawns, one by one, in a torturing chess game without a draw.

Laura wins the battle. But the new light wherein she sees everything is no longer used as an energy growth promoter, as raw material production promoter for everything that once meant revenge. The new light that bathes her is obstructed by the memory of what it was, in contrast with what it has become. In principle, this poor, hungry inner strength reflects towards the being that reached maturity - by suffering.

As always after a sharp struggle with one's self, the character becomes a touchstone, a difficult to bear exodus. Leading light in accordance with the requirements of the soul, for the production of positive stimuli is done in this case by a high voltage discharge, through a single flash.

The fog has dissipated, thereby allowing a new rise. Something in Laura's soul has rekindled. Something inspired her to see beyond those impenetrable walls of marble that she built around her. The result exceeded all expectations: "It's a remarkable world out there..."

Leadership: Are you ready to enter the skin of a character that extends beyond the events that your understanding interprets as painful and meaningless?

Is there an unknown force that chains you up heavily to a pillory? What is the factor that produces it? Can you eliminate those failures of your existence that bring you to a negative point ? Does the desire of final judgment and revenge on behalf of deeply felt injustice burn inside you?

Building a reality equipped with the gear needed for change, with the materials necessary to a certain becoming, giving new guidelines, the promise of fruition through evolution and maturity - is the first step towards deliverance from bankruptcy. This is true for all leaders, no matter who they lead and what they achieve.

Professionally and individually, the counter-blow - actually a pretext to eliminate those responsible for the decisions taken against you - is a contentious issue and may sometimes be founded, as in Laura Quinn's case in "Flawless" (2007).

The intent to point the finger at one or more causes for poor leadership, the need to open your eyes to a new world where you find yourself, bring you in a position to play an unfailing role in the "movie" that stresses your skills. But this movie highlights the depreciation of your development spine. Slowly, you move away from your own being, from the real aim you need to hit in time.

Here we find one of the strongest stages of Man's becoming in the manifestation of his being disparagingly treated by another authority, subject to fantastic determination, under the rule of the need to control the adverse factors conditioning its decline, in order to integrate into the world she desires.

This means, in more popular terms, to expand beyond your value frame - to take advantage of the operating space where you have to implement another future, another strategy and a new style of play. This is the first part of the whole defragmentation process that defines you as human, a much more repulsive and difficult to undertake travel, as a result of a striking decision.

Leadership: You are compelled to blame social reality for the effect of your condition, without somewhat prejudicing that intelligence of life contained by the actor's ability to be fully in control of what he does?

Ovidiu Niculescu said at one point: "The actor is an athlete of emotions and he has to be prepared for everything. Personally, I did not look, maybe I was lucky here too, when I felt strongly in myself that I had to play a role, I played, studied, documented, worked, assumed, excited, transformed, empathized and publicly transmitted my emotions. Sometimes I succeeded, sometimes I did not, but man, and especially the actor, learns as he lives."

Being a leading actor in the dynamics of multiple causality (which mainly determines your conceptions of life, reducing your self-control level) often drives you away from the true meaning of leadership. At the crossroads of two stages, playing with class a repertoire different from everything that really characterizes you is an expensive whim, inspiring fragile future scenarios where you are just a figurant.

The professional speaker, John Euhrman, recognized this flaw: "This is when you slip into a downward spiral. To show what you think power means, you will demonstrate stubbornness and selfishness. But so you will change exactly the process that would have actually changed your mood."

Your natural mood, all that keeps you permanently afloat, will change if the operating space is reduced due to the presence of walls and fences that you consolidate yourself every day. And you stay closed, keeping yourself only for yourself, until maturity - the beginning of true reform - will occur; when, instead of accepting what you were, that new beneficial habitude will get installed.

Does your leadership accept the effect that appear outside of your sphere of retouching life events, without affecting your transition from the role of spectator to that of an actor? Does this transition change to a greater or lesser extent the proximate environment in which you live?

The Prospecting Human's Disturbing Nightmare highlights that unpredictable personality change and its result, that uncomfortable state of being that allows you to act particularly efficient for a short period of time, followed by a session of self-assessment that can lead to your maturity or degradation as human.

Examine yourself humbly before pointing your finger at others. See who you really are, see if you turn, in turn, into a second grade man. Can you plead "not guilty" at any time?

Your "resurrection", using some raw materials, such as revenge, hatred and punishment against those who did not support your efforts or did not take you for what you are worth, may be fragile. Finally, you can even be the most injured party.

If you want to rise above others and prove your true value, show what you think power means, without slipping into a downward spiral, without being subjected to personal or public opprobrium, namely without chaining up heavily to a pillory.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-prospecting-human-s-disturbing-nightmare.html

The Protagonist Of A World Determined By The Highest Point Of Illumination

On May 06, 2014

Experience leadership as a living science that continuously evolves, providing the necessary resources to achieve a multilateral vision of the world and life.

Their world fascinated me... of those who do not speak, found outside the perimeter of reality, to the extent in which they could assure their anonymity. They were the protagonists of a world determined by peak lighting, in the direction of the force vector that originated not from creation, but from a Creator that was compelled to constantly cross over, in a real rush, the field of depth of a phenomenal knowledge. Found in the difference and sum of the components' modules of a variable-structure derived from the great science of time.

Same as the world created by Terry Gilliam, I plunged into an imaginary universe, in which fireflies had names, and squirrels talked, the entire surrounding environment gained life, value and purpose. The only sense in which one could speak of a deep philosophy, organically linked to various existences, but especially linked to multilateralism work.

Simultaneously, I felt part of a unique, rigorous and profound metaphysical, which placed me in the center of a network of correspondences between heaven and earth, between the material point of constant energy and the material point of constant momentum.

Specifically, I was subjected to a strict duty: to daily compose an image that hastily crosses my sight, but imprints itself, forever. Rather, a comedy of words than a sense of belonging to an outside thinking, with a surplus of information and experiences. A whole of misunderstanding, as a paradox of evolution highlighted by a challenge that you may or may not accept.

If I were to paraphrase the Romanian writer, Al. Busuioceanu, I would say that my metaphysics, far from being an intellectual attitude, was more a confused mixture of intuitions and mystical beliefs that made me assign a metaphysic to the primitive which animates and anthropomorphizes the nature around it.

It was a metaphysic that I only assumed, easily experienced as a living science, which my intellectual preparedness would indulge to a certain degree, but one which I could not exploit nor make out entirely.

Leadership: Can you provide the resources necessary to achieve a vision of the world and life that sets goals beyond the boundary of a reality that is becoming more and more overwhelming as it is revealed in the description of a space of refuge in the imaginary?

A living science that is continually evolving is closely related to the thrill needed to construct new ways of expression that give reality a certain peculiarity, veracity and consistency through a very fanciful, but exciting and captivating explanation.

A field such as leadership, taking up the issue of creation, opening man in the face of a new reality by taking into account the need to manufacture a sustaining support of configuration and initialization options of an art characterized by a complex scientific fundamental, must provides an inexhaustible possibility to impose one's self as a source of inspiration for future generations.

Jules Verne's books had the gift of initiating people into the world of hidden thoughts, into the world of those mysteries beyond all comprehension, causing them to lay the foundations of advanced technologies, turning them into scientists. Likewise, leadership, adapted to the intentions of accessing a new fund of concepts, models and theories, representing from this point of view a true conceptual upgrade, but also a strictly personal realization, leads to an increase in scientific consumer trends, in favor of a perpetual evolution towards modernity and progress.

But for man to be able to demonstrate the creative potential of a development full of dynamism and quantitative and qualitative mutations, in the content and way of ensuring the resources necessary to achieve and implement a consistent vision of the world and life, which sets targets beyond the ordinary, he must become a Creator. Eager to ever cross over, in a real rush, the field of depth of a phenomenal knowledge. Which his intellectual preparedness will permit to a certain degree.

An imaginary refuge is a part of the universe's consciousness, being the only way to produce something new in the expectation of fulfilling and mastering something more, broader, from an undetermined, never-ending space.

Leadership: Can you find the source of your renewal in the context of a vision induced by a science of the totality of existence at the level of interpretation of a reality that takes place plenary in imaginative activity?

To create the possibility of an evolution adapted to the modern world, one has to find a particular item in a data structure, to apply that algorithm between the ideal and reality that has a unique scientific formula, based, if possible, on the a priori knowledge of the time which life, with its many details and nuances, delineates incessantly.

To see through that artificial building material, necessary to all creation, a mix of new factors of differentiating one's intellectual capabilities, without turning creation into a sort of modus operandi subjected to the rigorous logic of a reasoning that cannot create itself, defeated by the conclusion that: "Nothing can be changed at this point."

Leadership must be experienced as a living science that constantly evolves, raised to a fair understanding of the necessity of ensuring the balanced distribution of certain elements of anticipation and novelty, combining them perfectly in relation to life. In an area rigorously composed of analysis and facts that match with the patterns of a singular rule: "There is always room for other interpretations."

The preference to take refuge in an imaginary universe to coordinate all life expressed from the angle of receiving a reality that fascinates and raises questions about your purpose in the world. It can be conceptualized by referring to the science of expressing yourself through images, by resorting to comparisons and other figures of speech, through philosophical creation, through vision and literary expression.

You will become The Protagonist Of A World Determined By The Highest Point Of Illumination only when you will find value in the context of a vision induced by a science of the totality of existence, which includes both the positive and the negative, manifesting itself in forms of known and unknown that exist both within you and around you. And in which you have started to believe in.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-protagonist-of-a-world-determined-by-the-highest-poi

The Providers Of Placebo Solutions

On April 16, 2009

Learn to change the consumer's perception of the Brand you represent by adjusting product value ranging from the acceptance of innovation to the addiction effect of the image.

It's not easy to be a merchandiser for a new medicine.

Suppose you own a company producing drugs. Finally, the efforts of the researchers were materialised in a very efficient medicine in treating the bacterial infections. If everyone would realize the fact that this medicine gives indeed results, your company would make millions in sales. But now the big challenge expects for you: the most important step you have to do is to prove that this medicine is efficient that indeed comes in the help of the people and does not put people's life in danger.

Therefore, you have to prove in front of the people in this domain the efficiency of the medicine. The simplest way in this case is to test the medicine on a lot of infected animals. At the end of the tests, if the bacteria disappeared and the infected animals survived, you will receive the permission to test the medicine on human volunteers. If these results are also successful, after this medicine is approved you can sell it on the market. On the other hand, if the medicine is not efficient, means that you invested money and work in vain.

Leadership: Is it necessary to reconsider the role of "back-up" in the way you perceive innovation?

Permanently, leaders are trying to educate business in their benefit, using receptivity, vision and creativity in everything they try to prove through new functionality and development strategies approaches. Certainly, well-educated leaders in the business sector will generate a quality direction. It depends on them to choose their future success.

But it's not fair to be indifferent towards the technological progress, and here, leadership works as a "back-up" restorer, in case the results of your own business plans, intentions and efforts don't materialize in an immediate, received and acknowledged delivery. To this extent, back-up is a component of the decision-making progress that creates connections not so much with the tangible business objectives, but with those closer to efficiency and innovation capacity.

Innovation based on backup requires you to restart a business from the perspective of additional revenue that justifies the effort to keep the brand as the main option in the mind of the consumer and to increase the market share held.

As for leadership, subject to change, the role of "back-up" must be reconsidered in the way one perceives innovation, and rejects kitsch as an obvious necessity, when the imbalances imposed by the tendencies of "sale for sale's sake" are no longer isolated incidents, but universal challenges.

Leadership: Do you produce and deliver a product that stagnates at a dead end, rather than first outlining a premium consumer profile that is willing to pay extra for the operating conditions of the product?

The companies are formed and developed by leadership - but also due to it can regress and to decrease their performance. Only one element can accelerate or decelerate the processes of leadership's degradation – the quality on which is based, and the quality that it delivers.

A company that falls under the influence of a product which stagnates for a long time at a medium level, and has no-growth trends is like bankrupt. Such an operation - implementation of a model of leadership from the outside - can be completely ineffective.

A premium consumer who is willing to pay extra for the operating conditions of the product in question is usually a final agent who, with earned income and within their limits, seeks to meet their needs and desires without necessarily making a fair triage according to value principles, between what is credible and what is not, between approved brands and imitations (fakes).

Just as the forms of land degradation are rendered on the map either by different ways of combining the level curves, either by specific conventional signs accompanied by additional information in the form of letters or numbers - so the efficiency and the equity of leadership is rendered through a process of quality development, a process, which values the relationship between the contracting parties. This process must have a permanent character, and to allow the assessment of „erosion" trends of the implemented measures and strategies.

I also have to add that this transition towards a new model of leadership it is made under the influence of a triggering factor - confidence. Confidence is a kind of protection against all forms of exploitation if it is accompanied and with professional results.

Leadership: Can you differentiate between a product and a brand, assessing the consumer's ability to make a triage between the practical factor of the product and the image-promoting factor that always re-emerges into a unique impression?

Do you always appeal at companies that prove to have effective solutions? In any moment of crisis suddenly appear from nowhere on the market all sorts of consultant and expertise firms which sustain to have miracle solutions and concrete strategies of solving the problems. Taking advantage of the crisis and the black expectations of the managers regarding their companies' future, these "miracles" firms sometimes succeed so easy to sign contracts with a lot of companies which their performance level became smaller.

And, just like in the comedy movies, at the end you observe that the new solutions which have to be implemented are so funny and ridiculous, that almost make you laugh. Don't laugh because it's not for laughing. It is very possible that these placebo solutions, if they are implemented in the companies "easy to fool" will lead to bigger problems than they existed in the crisis, especially financial loss.

If the firms which produce medicines must prove first if the medicine is efficient before selling it, probably the most fair would be like consulting firms to prove first that the solutions they offer are really effectivet. When they pass through a serious financial crisis, companies need a simple solution, fast and reliable, that's why they cannot afford the luxury to invest huge amounts of money in consulting services which do not bring them so many advantages and do not assure the professional assistance at a high level.

As a general rule, before putting on market a product, the firms first have to prove the quality of the product, what it can do, where can be used, if it is compatible with the international standards, if it is advantageous economically etc. In the case of the consulting firms, things are not different, their experts have to win the trust and attention of the clients and to convince them that the solutions that offer are reliable, efficient and functional, and especially that they are in the limit of law.

Are you a placebo solution provider - that does not help with anything concrete, or a solution provider that really works?

In marketing, both the quality and the number of followers that are truly interested in your brand profile, both in terms of the use of a product and from the perspective of the future image attribute as an integral part of a series of identity and spiritual landmarks that do not generate self-sufficiency.

Conclusion: The most important thing which you have to count before signing a contract with a consulting firm is to ensure that it has a lot of experience in domain and that the solutions which are proposed are reliable and realistic.

Leadership is like a very expensive pill that is meant to remedy any damage at the company level. Nevertheless, before getting it, you should know what vitamins it contains, if it has a curative effect, and if it is really effective in fighting with the disease that you have to treat - as well as its consequences.

Decisive for the impact of your leadership is its content of "vitamins" and the way you administrate it.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-providers-of-placebo-solutions.html

The Pure Admissible Of A Vast Space Of Reflection (II)

On February 11, 2014

Adjust the particular power of an unknown dimension of your being while attempting to discover the greatness of the invisible mystery of your own universe of creation.

What exactly could I acquire through a distancing of myself under the influence of ideas gathered around a causative knowledge, but one that is inappropriate for the realm of representation, by initiating a suite of metaphors, comparisons, extreme consequences and other tools of expression?

I feel trapped in the shoes of a purely empirical ignorant that tries to fabricate material gold with but a few bits of alchemy. I could end up in a bedlam tacitly accepted by my own mind, in which now rules of logic exist. Rather only an ensemble of defective components or de-calibrated from the "default" settings.

I admit that while I am seeking a particular power of adjusting the unknown dimension of my being, backed by an intense pleasure coming from within the depths of a careful exploitation of a fixed means: reason. That reason that strives to know a different reason, rooted in a transcendent reality.

A start in life and an establishing of a contact with the universe of a context of personalized creation. A confrontation with the exclusive perspective, inspirational, of an ideal world. Whose voltage of penetration gradually rises with the automatic disconnection from the pure admissible of a vast space of thought, knowledge, reflection and recovery.

Leadership: Have you become mature enough to make the leap towards greater self-realization that you exist within a reality that reveals its contours in the bold dreams of its creator?

I remember the young man in the novel Perpetuum Mobile written by Artur Silveștri. For a lifetime he stood on the beach alone, writing without stopping. When he left the beach, he was already old. His books, of which he wanted to talk about, did not exist, or maybe they were different than they could ever have been, and they didn't get to exist.

But he had written all the time: where were they actually? And yet, if they were the books of someone else, from somewhere else in that world that he once had seen for a few hours, a day, for a while, in an age as indistinct as his life that perhaps he had just dreamed of and had woken up?

When you try to get to know yourself better from the point of view of living under the grinding of ideas gathered around a fictional reality, building a metaphysics of overcoming one's self through literary creation, making visual and revealing associations, you gain a certain skill in handling the clock of your own destiny. You're starting to include new images in your memory, as the painter does when he wants to complete the perfect painting with multi-layered bindings, each of these images giving him an original look, an unusual color effect.

Being inside a reality that reveals its outlines in the bold dreams of its creator, basically means to reconstitute different images and events that come to your mind from the point of view of an all-embracing a priori memory, but which brings all the sweet memory of a world, at one point existent, that continues to fascinate.

Leadership: Does your thinking belong to a reality that exists before and after your life, requiring it be experienced for the first time at the time of reading a book that always demands itself be finished?

Operating with maximum efficiency as an agent of valuing the background assets of personality, thinking, or rather that continuous tension of thought that expresses itself metaphorically or through images, captures all the variety of topics and eventually avoids the compositional monotony of a restricted perspective of approaching reality.

Are you looking for a particular power of adjusting the unknown dimension of your being, backed by an intense pleasure stemming from the depths of a careful exploitation of reason? What exactly could you achieve following a distancing of yourself under the influence of ideas gathered around causative inadequate knowledge of the area of representation of reality?

American philosopher William James, feeling confident enough of his own thinking, mentioned: "We are like islands in the sea, separated from the surface but connected through the seabed."

That's exactly what happens when we try to de-calibrate ourselves from the "default" settings of our minds. Little by little we transition from one thing to another, from one perspective to another, expanding our theories of the surrounding world. What was once just will slowly turn into something else.

And when we will become sufficiently mature in order to make the leap towards a greater self-realization, we will be able to reach the pinnacle of conception modification of leadership.

The reading of a book that always demands itself be finished is actually like the confession of some strange attachments to the reality of an image that is repeated in the context of an autonomous self-consciousness, characterized by a theoretical attitude that releases from the addictions of the rigor of saying "Yes" to a world that wants to be superior.

The Pure Admissible Of A Vast Space Of Reflection highlights man's relationship with his existential experience, back by an unlimited involvement in the attempt of discovering the greatness of the invisible mystery of his own universe of creation.

The leader who faces the exclusive, inspiration perspective of an ideal world, is both creator and artist, striving to expand their own theories, concepts and visions of their art. Here they are found, in the germ, many ideas that, by going beyond the state of a "grazing thought", wink to those about to follow him.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-pure-admissible-of-a-vast-space-of-reflection-II.html

The Pure Admissible Of A Vast Space Of Reflection (I)

On February 11, 2014

Start looking for the protecting originality of individual understanding, broadening your horizon of knowledge outside the normal context of your existence.

Does my dream from last night, fascinating me from beginning to end, tend to become a reality? I can't erase from my mind this new experience of navigating the unreal of an indefinite individuality, of an uncertain positivity of the type "ought-to-be", of something required and only subjectively imagined. But one that still gives off the beautiful impression of spaciousness, in seeking the protective originality of self-understanding.

A dream unexplored to its full extent. It concerned a desert island in the middle of an ocean connected to an impenetrable universe. And this island housed a splendid coral reef. A category of high vibration entities was constantly being created around this reef and a new formation of life was being radically reorganized.

I was pleased that I had come to be the sole owner of that coral reef that perfectly resembled a tiny human brain, divided into left and right hemispheres. But I could not have access to that new formation of life that could've offered me that feeling of spiritual fulfillment. I confess. This intrigued and incited me to maximum curiosity. But also to a sort of inner rebellion.

The dream is an insight into the literature of a world that does not decompose. And when I say this, I think of the type of conceptual evolution in Artur Silveștri'sprose, with particular reference to Perpetuum Mobile: "if they started from the line of surrealism in which you hardly decipher the thin border from which one crosses from the real to the unreal or into the imaginary, from the possible to something else, so too happens with the oneiric dimension of the what I have experienced."

Leadership: Are you confronted with the prospect of a forced landing in the area of awareness of a reality that is out of control, which reinforces the idea that you are the only one understood from all the illusions of this world?

Leadership, applied as a representation of a new space of processing knowledge, becomes the developer of a suite of revelations, reflections, experiences and awareness, to simulate the trajectory of accepting a vision that can become reality. And this vision is required to be, above anything else, remodeled. In no circumstance declared "dead" or "void" in relation to the attempt of exploring self-identity, self-consciousness and self-creativity.

Leadership, always evolving, even more completely formulating than any other science, new rules and perspectives, can lead to the actualization of advanced capacities and abilities.

Putting the size of your own existence in the omnipresent opening of consciousness expressed in the form of dynamic changing of intelligent impulses of escape from a narrow space of knowledge, you will be able to feel the real sensation of a new more focused experience of leading, bolder, more dynamic and more sophisticated.

Can you create a strong bridge between dream and reality, in an attempt to incarnate within consciousness an experience equivalent to the deepening and understanding of a new world, that takes shape precisely, concretely and inwardly? Trying to make of it more than an auxiliary of continuous diligence towards perfection, you'll be able to raise your own empire of judgement upon new structures of assuring the quality of leadership.

Leadership: Can you turn yourself into a narrator adhering to the world of narrated Ego, highlighting that creator's spectacular perspective of becoming eligible to access a side of alternative reality?

You have the chance to penetrate into a space / time of strange wealth, joining two worlds: a virtual and a material one, when what you imagine to be part of becomes an awareness of a better view of the need to have another experience you consider to be defining for your formation as a pathfinder of new paths to the literary landscape.

To face the prospect of a forced landing in the awareness zone of an uncontrolled reality means to approach the conflict that takes into account both the need to create results and the relations with the involved parties.

Life experience and the self, guided towards knowledge that doesn't wait for evolution to happen by itself, but rather causes inspiration, causes a real change in the attitude with which you approach every single part of the ensemble of elements that take part in the production of a new perspective.

The narrated Ego world aims to move from one world to another, giving rise to a cultural suggestion that triggers the image of a realistic story characterized by a main subject: "Transforming a dream into images."

The pure admissibility of a vast space of reflection highlights that maximum dimension that the personal Ego can attain within a space called "narrative" that favors and stimulates the imaginative force and exceptional innovation as a parallel state of lucidity grown around a subjective experience.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-pure-admissible-of-a-vast-space-of-reflection.html

Profitability Rating

On April 04, 2009

Ensure a higher profitability to your leadership, effectively elaborating your vision in accordance with who you really are.

In "Law of Influence" I told you about Martin Luther King Jr., the black Baptist reverend, who wanted with all his soul the fulfillment of biblical principles of life and freedom. He understood that Americans are the lucky ones that were born in that great land, and that there is no the same second nation on earth. Here's what he said in the speech with the occasion of the Great March on Washington, held on 28 August 1963:

" I have a dream that my four children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the colour of their skin but by the content of their character".

Here's a vision that became reality !

Leadership: Does the image associated with your vision have anything of the plasticity of a life experience that has been incorporated and transfigured into a set of shares capable of bringing you 65% dividends?

We are losing our breath when looking to the future. We are on top of a pyramid. However, looking up, here that precisely this peak, this direction very less approached by others, to which we raise our aspirations, this giant that fully captivates our inner world, allowing us to know better, to shape our character, to dedicate and focus ourselves on what it is important in achieving our goals - gives us that impressive profitability on which depends the value of our leadership, to those that aspire to a leadership status.

Are you at the top of a pyramid? In my opinion, if you are in a leading position, the only actions capable of bringing you 65% dividends are: ambition, rigor, openness and tolerance, focus, side vision, a reversal of self-perception and the world.

What do you have to gain from here? All right, you'll make an image of yourself for posterity, you'll learn to be a history for posterity. You will be one of those 1% of people who change something important in this world.

Leadership: Do conscious, persistent, and careful actions on the beliefs you accumulate in life experiences, mental flexibility, and a willingness to detach yourself from prejudice show you the true intention behind the image you create in the eyes of others?

The great Russian film director Sergei Eisenstein said:"The most important is to have the vision, conception. Then, to overmaster it, and to remain faithful to it. You must see and feel at what you think, to feel, and to overmaster your thoughts. You must be consistent, and to fix them in memory and in the senses. And you must do all this at the same time."

That is exactly what did Martin Luther King Jr., has developed a vision and remained faithful to it until the moment when it became reality. Despite all the pressures that have pressed on his shoulders, despite the heavy as lead moments that certainly would have cut off every trace of hope to other people, nobody and nothing could crush his impetus to the heights that he wanted to achieve.

It is time to look within you? The vision you create, they way you manage and respond of it, truly reflects who you are. The vision is a way of expression of your character and actions that get you closer to understanding the potential that you have. An intention, insufficiently based on a strong vision will remain unconvincing and uncertain for your future.

Leadership is that system of actions that leaves you a great freedom of choice in the construction of self-remembering experiences, from which you will be able to reveal new skills that you previously thought you did not have.

But don't try to manufacture an image or a biography that masks the things that don't benefit you. And don't try to amplify your "gains" (triumphs) to ensure an honor for posterity.

Profitability Rating is given to the quality of your leadership, only if your vision meets your own interior. The vision is a reflection of your own feelings and emotions it helps to improve your chances of reaching people's hearts without exerting any pressure on them.

Just as a cancer can cause severe brain damage and attack the body's immune system - so a narrow thinking, without a clear vision and a coherent set of values to unearth all the best in you, can weaken the immune system of your leadership.

However, it is also not enough to have the vision, but you must find and the means to materialize it. Furthermore, once materialized, can be said that you have reached the mountain's highest peak, called leadership. This represents the highest qualification for you. And, means that all the efforts that you have made to reach the top have been profitable.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-qualification-of-profitability.html

The Qualities Of The Painter In Leadership

On September 21, 2022

Learn to immortalize the reality observed by the careful eye of the artist, bringing to light the truly comprehensive elements of the "Differentiating Whole" from which the thinking behind the creation of the Work of Art is formed.

A fragment from the book "The life of an artist" written by Maurice Rheims, particularly caught my attention on this quiet September evening. It is about the qualities a painter needed to become extraordinary in the field of art. But just as well, these qualities can serve as a model for leaders everywhere who aspire to the condition of "exceptionalism", especially if we consider the eye full of infinite meanings that the converging lens of the self-image sees as defining future guidelines in defining the quality of the act of creation.

"In reality, there are few who have the qualities required of exceptionalism, attributed to artists. It is true that what degrades painting, making it descend to the lowliness of the most despicable jobs, is the great number of painters who have neither wit nor talent and sometimes even no common sense.

The origin of this great evil springs from the admission to painting schools of all kinds of children, without choice, without being examined and without being supervised for a time to be able to ascertain whether they were destined for this beautiful art by the necessary nature and talent, or sooner by a reckless inclination, or by the avarice of their parents, who push them towards painting as a profession that they think is perhaps a bit more profitable than others.

To be worthy of the name painter you must have the following qualities:

- Healthy mind.

- Docile nature, to take advantage of teachings and to accept without arrogance the advice of enlightened people.

- Noble heart, to prioritize glory and fame, but not riches.

- The sense of the sublime, to create quickly, to emit beautiful ideas and to treat subjects in a superior way that shows finesse, delicacy and work of value.

- Passion for reaching at least some degree of perfection, without getting bored with the studies that painting requires.

- Health, to withstand the spiritual effort that study requires.

- Youth, because painting requires a lot of experience and practice.

- Beauty, because pictures are always painted in the form of pictures, and because nature likes to produce what resembles itself.

- A good material condition, to have time to study and work in peace, without being disturbed by the horrifying and terrible image of poverty.

- Work, because theory does not make money without practice.

- Love for one's art. We never suffer in the work we love, and if we do happen to suffer, we revel in that suffering.

- To be under the guidance of a learned master, because everything depends on the beginnings and because usually, we adopt the master's way of working and form our taste after his."

Leadership: Do you give due recognition to the reality in which the moment of your transposition brings you back to a world of images that you can only really imagine when you experience it as an Alter-Ego?

The awareness of these qualities, through an identification of the Self with its reflection (Alter-Ego) can be received as a lesson about the things that the eye catches at the sight of things or situations meant to generate certain results. Here I refer to the value of a comprehensive approach to the phenomenon of mirroring in the status of the artist willing to create "art for art's sake". I am referring to the artist's ambition to give body to a thought, to imagine its anatomy until it becomes an object of admiration and a means of expressing feelings.

Of course, the reflective plane is chosen arbitrarily, because the specific Alter-Ego of the artist travels on the idea of reformulating or redefining an experience that the common man does not explicitly aim to ever have modified.

At the same time, this comprehensive approach to the phenomenon of mirroring in the status of the artist (of being present outside oneself, thus being in the alternative reality of a world transposed in brightly colored images) can usually be found not through facts or creative attitudes towards problems of life, but through the inclination of sight to capture those images associated with the idea of soul. In this way, I highlighted the quality called "the heart of art" which ignites with love for the whole creation, attaching itself to those who know how to see in the things around them more than a beautiful packaging, but a perfection in what concerns the representation of the symbolic form.

Announcing, however, a new vision with the means of expression of art, for an Alter-Ego initiated in the mysteries of painting, is a kind of intermediate instance between "seeing" and "remaining blind". Because regardless of what exactly shapes the mind, if the soul does not have a language full of meanings, if it does not shelter under the wings of the durable that feeling of the inner world, delicate, protective, steadfast, capable of perfectly and completely rendering the humane, then neither self-consciousness will be able to manifest through the inner power to transform the surrounding reality.

Leadership: Do you follow the faithful observance of the association between the "content of the exhibition" and the "visual representation" in the plan of art, especially when you intend to make a comparison between the reality you represent and the guarantee of a quality artistic act?

So, among the qualities of a knowledgeable person can be distinguished the ability to experiment, to observe the manifestations of the interference between the consciousness of the meaning of art (as an intellectual activity) and the outside world, so that the reality he represents is similar to the exposition of an artistic act.

Here I am referring to the habit of directly observing certain phenomena, the close connections between them, in favor of a possible parallel drawn between the perception from the outside (of other people) and the individual assumption of the effort to obtain a new and unique reality, able to excite. And if this reality oriented towards naturalness, towards objective clarity, causes the determined being to be set in motion, then we will notice that the most important experience a leader needs is to be aware of his unique individuality.

And only through a complex of circumstances, through some special qualities, from the totality of observations offered by the visual experience of an ordinary reality, the leader will be able to perfect his imagination, according to the chosen angle of view. For example, having a broader perspective on events, in the aspect of a correlation between the visual representation of a design and relating to a creative experience, is not the same as having a clearer perspective on each individual thing (as the main object of subjective appreciation).

Let me put it another way. The reality you represent is the result of observing the image you relate to. And the guarantee of a quality artistic act can often be gained by achieving some degree of perfection in terms of rendering reality in an affective-rational form towards an inspired theme (for example, a rural landscape that conveys the peasant atmosphere and folk spirit).

Leadership: Can you finalize your creation by highlighting new representations of various themes with the help of your transposition into another plane of reality, in another setting, in another time and space?

You need to know one more important thing. "The Differentiating Whole" aims at the comprehensive approach to the phenomenon of awareness of the distinguished Ego as a form of expression, not just as a spirit. For the beauty of art finds its expression both in its content and in its form. It is about an Ego observed by the attentive eye of an artist who knows how to highlight new representations of various themes with the help of its transposition into another plane of reality, in another setting, in another time and space.

The elements of the "Differentiating Whole" are some constructive stages of artistic creation. Among them are: the elementary act of transposing the image of an object in plan, according to the chosen viewing angle; the mental completion of an image that remained occult; the ability to capture and portray a theme from imagination alone; the reproduction of the image that you consider defining for the sensation of Deja Vu; awareness of otherness in a work of art; etc...

Another thing. The guarantee of a quality artistic act is given by the thinking behind the creative process that makes the things you design functional and durable, not just beautiful. At the same time, the guarantee of a quality artistic act, making it express simple feelings in an impulsive or naturalistic sense, can be constituted by the reality observed by the attentive eye of the artist – a reality that exists in the form of symbols-images which, if understood and thus discharged of their sacred potential, they will allow the expansion of consciousness.

Leadership presents itself as a form of intellectualism stemming from the ingenuity of a creation transposed into real experiences, in the context of producing and ensuring an image capable of fully rendering your individual features.

The Qualities Of The Painter In Leadership are necessary to bring to reality the idea that a consciousness that seeks to interpret itself metaphorically is the miracle of a creation that can at any time engage in explaining the connection between what remains unchanged in time and what arises as an enrichment of the concrete experience transposed into a surrealist vision.

The qualities of a painter always make room for honor at all levels of leadership.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-qualities-of-the-painter-in-leadership.html

The Quest

On May 06, 2016

Raise the stakes of modelling mentality that helps you fulfill a vision, by assuming the attitude of intervention in the course of things that follow a unique trajectory.

I finally had the opportunity to contribute, step by step, in the immediate vicinity of an explanation that didn't take the truths of science into account, to the birth, growth, and spread of the powerful need of showing a different side of things than the one known by the everyone. I wasn't doing anything other than merging within the mind many aspects of opposing meaning and reaching a conclusion I didn't know beforehand, from the same feverishness and excitement with which Gandhi sought to show a new way of action of his race and its religion on the basis of ancestral beliefs, formulating its ancient passivity.

Many imperfections were in the exposures of an image other than the real one, in the face of a theme that gathered and systematized as many references as possible, through the action of an intense flow of changes resulting from the influence of a state, a phenomenon or an event less usual, to which any argument seemed to find its purpose. In one way or another all these maintained the structure of an application of the type "Test di visione".

Obviously, I would get involved in a search that seemed to not have a purpose, like the gnostic seeking a divine reality, a kingdom in this world, which is only an illusory shadow of a fantasy, without finding a plausible explanation for all those observed that could trigger a real change.

As if I were guided by an axiomatic truth, a synthetic model of approaching a knowledge through a radical empiricism, based on the crossing from the peculiar to the general, from the simple to the complex, forcing continual reflections and analysis, to a continual explanation of the idea of quantity (0, infinite] from which had to be extracted the infinite in order to obtain a quantity with the maximum highest real number. Something like this was not possible, and this was precisely what I was trying to do: I would make the impossible possible.

Leadership: Does the ultimate goal of your knowledge aim at a greater mastery of the beliefs you represent at the level of reflection of a reality beyond itself?

My quest was in fact related to the progressive acquisition of an increasingly complex knowledge that would be a copy in accordance with the reality of an out of the ordinary world, in perpetual change and where innovative and revolutionary evolutions can take place. The beliefs I represented at the level of reflection of a reality beyond itself, constituting the supreme goal of my knowledge, had as a main stake a more sensitive and richer participation in the construction of a suspenseful, wonderful story.

Leadership is a way of approaching the knowledge that places the idea of process, change, and development in the center of the preoccupation of searching for a new reality, in the light of a revelation that needs to be manifested through things, facts, and happenings.

When Christopher Columbus discovered America, it actually led to the emergence of a new reality, extending the world beyond the boundaries known up to that time. When Albert Einstein formulated the theory of relativity, he demonstrated that the time and the distances of an event measured by two observers generally have different values, but they are always subject to the same physical laws. It was a point of view at least out of the ordinary, but perfectly suited to the evolution of reality.

The version of reality that you adhere to is given by the search for a higher knowledge through the direct experience of events, reinforced by the power to anticipate the effects of your decisions and the result obtained by applying them.

A specialist in emergency medicine from Florida, named Alfredo Alvarado, crated many years ago a method of distinguishing patients that could've had appendicitis from those whose pain probably had other causes. Thus, by using the score of Alvarado (Mantrels), doctors could identify those that had appendicitis and could be taken directly to the operating room, separating them from those suspected of appendicitis who needed to be watched.

Any change is an enhanced version of the findings you make vis-à-vis a reality that is completely "foreign" at first, but which proves more fascinating and more overwhelming than any darkness. The result of the experimentation of a continuous analysis and a careful observation, achieving in this way an engagement in a phenomenon of conductivity of the particular instances that define surrounding elements (with the prediction value of a significant event), is constituted in a sort of separation between harmony and chaos.

The result of this experimentation represents not only the stakes of a modelling of mentality, but also the modelling of the structure of correlations between the variables that influence the production of world phenomena.

Leadership: Do you feel compelled to find an explanation for the "quantity" idea from which you have to extract a well-defined value to get a real number?

Instead of looking forward to the fulfillment of a vision closely tied to the reality of life and the world, asking questions that cannot be ignored, maybe we should observe the way in which it was already fulfilled, adjusting with absolute precision those points of view that are not necessarily opposites, but rather complementary.

The idea of a "quantity" is attributed to particular things that participate to the formation of reality. While the real number represents the measure that each thing takes when you relate to a world depicted in terms of striking irregularities. To extract a well-defined value to obtain a real number, with that creative feverishness of finding the new, means to bring an extra argument concerning the behavior of things in the research and evaluation phase.

Leadership, being made up of that creative force that contributes to the popularization of certain ideas or opinions can have the advantage the possibility observing, step by step, from the immediate vicinity of an explanation that doesn't necessarily take into account the truths of science, various similarities and analogies with surrounding things in different experiences.

This process of observation doesn't take on the role of showing a different side of things or of the reality known by everyone, but that of spreading the powerful need to exercise the ability of initiating and refining a search.

Leadership related to the search for a new reality is equivalent to extending consciousness to a greater freedom of will and imagination, in order to accumulate a knowledge meant to give you the status of "colonizer" of a new world.

The Quest aims mainly to spreading awareness of an attitude of intervention in the course of things that follow a unique trajectory, from within an imaginary which must continually face reality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-quest.html

The Quintessence Of Haunting Thoughts

On August 04, 2013

Ensure a distinct individuality for yourself, redefining the force to evolve by exclusively relating to the type of thinking which makes the connection between cause and effect.

I didn't want anyone to know the thoughts and questions that where mixing in my head when I talked to myself. Some of them weren't fully cleaned of the solid residues of the points of view I had adopted in the past filled with compromises and capitulations. Which I thought I had fully left. It was a quiet monologue beyond the epistemological constraints of some truths which not even the highest science could discover.

This openness to answer to all the questions that I asked myself, the intense and strange amplitude of truths which occurred in the spheres of thoughts I listened on repeat, and towards which I often showed some restraint, had become an obsession. A magnificent obsession which entailed huge inner conflicts. O fixation I couldn't get rid of, but of which I could fully take advantage. An intense preoccupation towards the permanent elements of my existence, dissimulated behind the skepticism regarding the fortification of some new "interior design" tendencies.

To find unimagined answers and to understand certain reactions. To calculate the effects of these reactions by optimal balance relations, depending on profit and loss, wasn't such an easy duty. Because no matter if the reactions were directly ensued, or ensued through intermediary stages, the effects were always the same. And the value of effects could be determined experimentally only by indirect observation methods and could be established by calculation, applying the laws of the subconscious.

The power to master the world of thoughts is defined as the result of the comparison you make between a reality that struggles between "a watch over what makes you special" and a reality that forces you to "confront yourself".

It was a very demanding work, of self-knowledge and personal development. And if I hadn't let myself intimidated by the setbacks of the unorganized thoughts that kept cruising blindly though my mind, like blindfold strangers whose activity I couldn't understand at all, maybe I would have obtained the key towards a series of very important discoveries.

From my thoughts I extracted the quintessence that defined me, sublime, precise and focused by knowledge and ignorance, which could be recognized and accepted only gradually. That quintessence of messages sent by a creator to a critic. This way I imaged a certain individuality, which continuously redefined its force to evolve by relating exclusively to the present. But also by relating to the type of thinking which made the connection between causes and effects. To deny it, rather than admitting it?

I think Umberto Eco was considering a personality like mine when he wrote: "This special man must be placed above a vast labyrinth, at a very high point, where he can at the same time be able to comprehend the science and the main arts; to see at a glance the objects, his speculations, and the operations he can perform on these objects; to distinguish the general branches of human knowledge, the points that separate them or bring them together, and to sometimes glimpse even the secret ways that bring them back together. His thoughts are the crossing to a new science management model."

Leadership: Can you achieve a closeness with the expansion area of your personality beyond conventional barriers, so as to amplify an emotion over what dominates you through the force of thoughts?

Do you try to retrieve unimagined answers and to understand the reactions which lead to your transformation? Do you manifest an intense preoccupation towards the permanent elements of your existence? Do you let yourself intimidated by the setbacks of unorganized thoughts?

The conquest and gradual expansion of the advantage with a decisive character over your development, which can have a great influence over leadership, is the precise result of an inner "debate". What dominated me through the force of thoughts, turning into an emotion of the "I am more than I have become" type, could be put on the account of information that appeared in my mind and that required my attention to develop, as a kind of subtle force to relate to the vastness of a culture of inner freedom, to the science of overestimating myself through what I feel and understand about myself.

If you have in mind to condemn present and the thinking whose invitation to take over the negative or positive effects of producing a certain inferiority or superiority complex you accept, and if you don't take into account the connection between cause and effect, then you will deeply live in a mediocre existence.

The power to rule the world of thoughts is the answer of your conscience to the life situations you face daily, by reflecting on the disturbances of intellectual curiosity that characterize you.

The professional speaker, John Fuhrman, who often approached the subject "The acorn and the oak tree", said at a certain point: "If the result you get is important enough, then you will live a better life than you ever expected to." This is a version of a kind of unwritten law which states what your responsibility allows or doesn't allow when you try to exclusively relate to the type of thinking which connects causes and effects.

And the thing that can save you from a lapse to the other, fully achieving to trace equivalencies between thoughts and questions, natural for any open-minded person, is finding the quintessence that defines you, sublime, precise and focused, by knowledge and ignorance, which could be recognized and accepted only gradually.

If you forget what you want, if you forget who you are and what you want to be, then your leadership will dissipate, until it disappears. This is the consequence of accepting a numbing thinking, assimilated without previously evaluating the "boundary" that belongs to you, thus by willingly ignoring side effects.

Intellectual curiosity aims at your openness to everything you are in a context of the type "The thoughts that come bursting at times do not give me peace". Therefore, be careful in what direction your thoughts are directed and how they form reality from the background of your destiny.

Does your leadership respect the agreement by which it took upon itself to contribute to shaping or maintaining your individuality subject to an understanding of an existence that would seem too ordinary if it is not always haunted by other new facets?

It is certain that the present, but also the future which announces to be "uncomfortable" for the minds that disagree with self-knowledge and frequently fall in the trap of inner conflicts, is and will be devoid of the elements of a great personality. This category of individuals won't find an effective reflection of the sublime emitted by their existence.

And leadership opposite to tasteless thinking which distracts the attention from that intense preoccupation towards the permanent elements of your existence, won't be able to respect the agreement by which it took upon itself to contribute to shaping or maintaining individuality.

Performance comes by deepening the meaning you grant to your nature and existence, from the desire to go beyond the conventional barriers. If you want to achieve a closeness to that expansion area of your personality, beyond the conventional barriers, then ensure a distinct individuality for yourself, redefining your force to evolve by exclusively relating to the type of thinking which connects causes and effects.

Understanding an existence that would seem trivial if not always haunted by other new facets is anchored in a causal agent of inner tendency regarding the audacity to crave an emotional and intellectual fulfillment, but which is hard to decipher. This causal agent may be some external reality, a specific informational content (notions, data, exponentials, images), or it may suggest a certain finalization of ideas through a sudden change in the logical construction.

In leadership, two facets of existence must be considered: the desire to substitute for a mindset that does not exhaust its forms of expression and the obligation to treat reality as a form of remembrance of all that you are in an exercise of authenticity.

The Quintessence Of Haunting Thoughts springs from that burning wish of continuous self-perfecting, from a permanent evaluation of your evolution and leadership, marked by the elements of a stronger and stronger perfecting. From that able and adaptable wish to the inherent and permanent changes of the present and future.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-quintessence-of-haunting-thoughts.html

The Radiography Of A Widening Phenomenon

On July 25, 2018

Learn to see the horizons opened by your predecessors so that your mentality gains value in truth through its notoriety and expansion.

There are people capable of absorbing daily, as a sponge, a certain value from the great mysteries of science. Until one day when they themselves will be the language of the Great Science. As you change all the coordinates of a science, others grow old by so much ignorance, and they are seen in a tiny time bubble called vanity. Some have known to come to the altar of the Great Science from their youth, others are forced by old age to find that they have not even reached Its path.

I myself have found that the highest science is not acquired if you are attending any school or college. But only through dialogue with the immortals, with the ancients who have fed the wisdom of the visionary sensitivity of the artist who glances over the world just to find another facet of it. Being lucky to meet such a SOMEBODY, to take over all the knowledge accumulated in decades and centuries of existence, is like finding a diamond mine right in your yard. Take great care over what books you come across, because only some of them belong to the great elites of the truly high science philosophy.

Science is an all-encompassing search for hidden truths that urges you to think of a super-intelligence with a spiritual role in your life, being considered the highest elevation of capitalizing on an ideal of resemblance to the vital energy present throughout the universe.

At the crossroads of questions about the purpose of existence and of one's own being in the world, like a painful cry, with all your strengths, which crosses great distances, is the freedom of expression that the attitude of being subjective, visible and creative which adds the sum of knowledge about a particular research object.

Leadership: Are you motivated enough to become an extension of creative expression through other people without challenging the veracity of their views?

One of the most encouraging compliments came this morning from one of the leading advertising companies in Romania: "Nicu, your name will soon be heard around the world."

I felt as though I had been in intense dialogue with Francis Bacon, measuring myself with my former life, since from the beginning of time the sages have found that artists are always tempted to take a step forward when they are perceived by a differentiating and revaluating judgment under the form of unique intelligence. For the first time, I was perceived as a kind of strange force that can lead a whole world through my skill of handling words, with which I managed to play a grandiose spiritual role in the lives of others.

Still thinking about what people say about me, rather than what I think about them, I have come to the conclusion that a person who does not change the coordinates of a science from one day to another can never be called erudite. The whole matter of the universe is found in a grain of sand, but also in a cherry leaf or in the rose petals. Even in a breeze.

You cannot understand this if the science you consume through the beauty of your ideas does not interfere with the preciousness with which others treat it. If you feel that a universe or a parallel world interferes more and more with your reality in the context of an experience of rendering a new content of ideas and concepts, it fits into a space of pure ideality supported in fact by the judgments of the mind in excess of confidence in the visionary potential, means that you have been fertilized by the ideas of a Francis Bacon preoccupied with the hidden properties of things.

Let not a single day pass without doing at least ten things that can propel you forward toward the pyramid of knowledge. The ability to make progress faster and better than anyone is the vector that unites you with the performance that justifies leadership.

Leadership: Is the maximum measure of your knowledge grounded in the experiences of participating in a new stage of enhancing the relevance of the concept of "reorienting personal value" in a context such as associative connections?

The leadership you practice reveals more than what you are. It reflects your position in the face of the knowledge of the adaptive value you are studying, which you can embrace and sustain with fervor.

In connection with such a leadership – by the application of a method for recombination of the components of knowledge, the term "good taste" has taken root. This term therefore concerns the category of valuable products with positive effects on the education and culture of the artist who is able to increase the expression force of their extraordinary creative subjectivities.

A product focused primarily on the production of flat, absorbing, inadequate and un-adapted value-added structures, appears degenerate and harmful. Compared to such a lower-quality "product", superior leadership, which creates the essential conditions for progress, is part of the science category above all expectations.

I mention in passing, as an inevitable fact, that in a certain way you will try to explain the "pulse of a new source of inspiration" from a source of great credibility as a result of your research and that of others. And only in this way will science evolve, constantly reviewing the results of your research, overcoming the laughable situation when everything turns out to be confusing.

A context of associative connections type is based on input from other people in the personal development process, in the version of a comparison with a very sought-after product which costs nothing, but nor is it available to everyone. But only to those who can push it to a more complete state, significantly enhancing its quality and effectiveness.

The Radiography Of A Widening Phenomenon highlights the promising image of a certain decision-making autonomy from the perspective of means to expose your achievements and points of view on the necessity of assimilation of knowledge, exposed in the most appropriate way of experiencing the creation of the world again. Or rather, to experience the impossible and unlock your potential.

I will conclude this article with an observation by Francis Bacon:

"I see, my son, that many people do not ask their conscience or their duty, whether they communicate the discoveries that they have made while studying nature or keep them for themselves. Both damaging, but perhaps the lesser is the fault of those who, otherwise well-intentioned, do not have enough experience and do not know the art and the means to expose ideas in the most appropriate way."

The Real Needs Of Leadership

On December 27, 2008

Take the chance to be at the center of attention, so as to facilitate the process of promoting your highest values.

I read a news item on the internet yesterday morning. A reporter who was present at the scene of a serious accident wrote on a piece of paper the last words that the seriously injured girl murmured before she died. The reporter wrote in shock:

"Mom, I went out with my friends and went to a party. I remembered your words: Don't drink alcohol. You actually asked me because I had to drive. So I only drank sodas. I was proud of myself, Because I followed your advice. Compared to my other friends, I made the right choice. Your advice was correct. When the party was over, everyone took their cars, but without being able to drive safely... I, on the other hand, was sure I was conscious. Mom, I couldn't even begin to imagine what was about to happen. Now I'm lying on the asphalt and I hear the police officer talking... My blood is all over the asphalt and I'm trying my best not to cry. I hear the doctors saying I'm not going to make it...

I'm sure the other young man who was driving didn't realize how fast he was going... In conclusion, he decided to drink. And I have to die now... Why are they doing this, Mom? If I know they're going to destroy lives...? The pain I feel is like being stabbed by thousands of knives. Tell my sister not to be afraid and my father to be strong. Someone had to tell this young man that he should not drink alcohol if he was driving. Maybe if his parents had told him, as you told me, I would be alive now... My breathing is getting weaker... and I'm starting to get scared, mom ! These are my last moments and I am so desperate ! I would so much like to hug you and tell you that I love you... I love you so much, mother... Goodbye..."

These words touched a whole world, but first and foremost the reporter who wrote them. After this tragic event, the reporter started a tough campaign against driving under the influence of alcohol.

Leadership: Is it justified to take a very small chance to get out of a deadlock that is difficult to overcome, with the risk of not respecting the obligations imposed on you from the beginning?

Who has the balance of your power to choose between being or not being a man of influence, a man who makes change or prefers stagnation? Would you rather be just an indifferent witness to a serious accident whose consequences, even if they can affect the lives of others, do not change your whole being at all? Do you still maintain the same status in this situation? Or would you rather take a proactive approach to correcting and preventing events that overwhelm the whole world?

Leadership is not a strictly technical field, and the leader is not a robot that acts only on the basis of "software" created within the strict and precise limits of mathematics, physics and electronics. But it must also be loaded with feelings of empathy, and the leader must know how to express them in front of the people he leads, or cares for, respecting their feelings and experiences, because otherwise he will fail and will not be able to complete what he started.

What greatly diminishes the value of your own way of being, and what is detrimental to your lifestyle, is that inability to identify the real needs of leadership that you practice, and that you intend to raise to the highest possible level. Honor your obligations in such a way that from one end of your personality to the other no character traits are questioned, no feelings are planted or distributed at random.

Just as aging is a process that does not forgive anyone, so too a man who is unable to value his leadership — planting in the souls of others the joy of joining his path, is not forgiven by the fate of failure. Relating to others is an absolutely necessary process, without which you cannot move to a higher level.

Leadership: Are you able to change the background of the reality that fuels an event destined to mark you so that your character traits are not questioned?

What do you think is the factor that could significantly diminish the value of your own way of being? Do you honor your obligations so that your character traits are not called into question? How do you express your feelings in front of people? What is the unique quality needed by a leader that characterizes you? How do you contribute to the change process?

If there are certain momentary escapes from your will to help change things, if it fails your spirit to try to draw attention to a certain aspect, if the source of energy that fuels your self-belief amplification station (and can heal any wounds) ceases to function, then your potential for influence will drop sharply.

The general tendency in leadership is not towards differentiation or diversity, but rather towards homogeneity. You need to unite all those parts of you that define you, and bring them to a common denominator so that they can be accepted by everyone. These are the qualities that you must always show: the tendency to be appreciated, the need to be careful about who you trust, your potential ability to empathize with what others are projecting on you, the willingness to hear what is proposed you should listen to, the discernment to make informed choices, the ability to discern between different emotions.

Just as multicellular organisms arise from a single cell, the egg cell, so will your potential leader grow from that singular bond that is established between the parts that define you, guaranteeing you the right to impose yourself decisively in the process of changing things, actions you can change, to obtain common benefits.

Leadership: Are you focused on fulfilling your consent to hear what is being listened to, at a time when you need to approve of the highest meaning of a feeling that refuses to go beyond appearance?

A certain trend that is becoming more and more accentuated in some leaders is the temporary nature of the responsibility they assume, in continuous "crisis" I would say. Because they casually omit the essential, they go beyond what is essential to successful leadership without embarrassment: they forget their role, that's why they are replaced. Or, rather, others are the ones who manage to assume their responsibilities and set the tone for solidarity, replacing the former.

Ordinary people, and yet special in certain situations, people like the reporter who was present at the scene of the serious accident, and moved by the last words of the seriously injured girl, began a tough campaign against driving under the influence of alcohol.

This possibility to act openly, immediately, objectively, to everything that is really important for you, for others, in a spirit of solidarity, is grounded, supported by the existence of the agreement between your ego and the true values on which leadership is based. This possibility is open to all ordinary people.

If you do not send a message to others around you, as the reporter gave life to the message: "Do not drive under the influence of alcohol ! ", Then you will not be able to place yourself among the people truly inclined to the art of leadership. You will miss the opportunity, even if you are not a leader, to make others understand that human life must be ennobled by the highest ideal: to save other lives.

Leadership is the fulfillment of the consent to hear what you have to listen to, at a time when you need to value the challenge of seeing what you hear.

The Real Needs Of Leadership are: the spontaneity of feeling that is understood by thought, the consent to hear what you have to listen to, the discernment to make informed choices, the ability to discern between different emotions, the ability to provide answers to get out from any confusion, the superior capitalization of the function of feeling over that of thought, the attempt of feeling to become reason.

Do you act openly, firmly, on everything that is really important to other people? What are the true values on which your leadership is based? Is "solidarity" the most important feature of your leadership? Do you have the desire and the ability to increase your leadership potential? Do you have discussions with people to find out the answer to their problems? What are the obvious (or hidden) abilities of the person you want to select for change?

Man's highest values are empathy, emotional stability, adequate tolerance for failure, and the courage to not give up.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-real-needs-of-leadership.html

The Reality From The Human Underground World (II)

On June 15, 2012

Endow your leadership skills with the resources necessary for change, without losing contact with your Ego.

A deep mystery inhabited alien and sinister in the depths of my soul, attractive like a feeling. No one and nothing had the right to approach it. The thought of trying to conquer the unconquered territory, aroused in me the feeling that I had been released from the fiercest detention. I was boosted by a new challenge. I rebounded strongly with a throb of life energy and lease of life.

Magic, the highest line of the connection with a timeless space of a private eternity, enclosed by a dynamic reality, eternally alive, simultaneously spiritual and material fit easily in my life. Streams of images, hypostases, revelatory findings darted everywhere, like from a network with living water springs flowing constantly, and from which I could suffice my soul and aspirations.

The yellow flames of my indomitable will to understand in what way to highlight the light of a universal causality, purified by filter of the most severe judgments, were expanding rapidly around me. In every single thing that I touched or saw, in every outing that I did, I was discovering a new reality which made me more and more curious, a new continent, a fierce ground for exploration. As if I was dominated by a supreme form of energy, which propagates in every fiber of my being. I was completely under it, like a slave who obeys orders.

I felt that I can communicate at an energetic level, non-verbally, with all the things that came out on my way. The mirror, camera, the books, all that existed around me suddenly gain life, a new meaning, a new valence. Moreover, all that was particularly modern jumped to my aid. Thanks to technology, everything turned around, caught a new form, everything was running in new coordinates, facilitating the understanding and accepting the unknown in me.

Leadership: How long can you look at a photo by far?

To fail to keep in contact with yourself, so vital in leadership, is like continuing to look at a picture by far: you will fail to notice certain details that you could see up closely.

Just as in photo, in the sphere of psychological and spiritual dimension of man, a single thought, a single strain of moment could cause the formation of some definitive forms, of some representative snapshots just before the event itself starts.

Someone has well-noticed: in the realm of personal exploration, the true fertilization always occurs only by crossing an idea with experience. It was enough only the lightest impulse for the creative power to manifest, for my experience to enrich. Afterwards to discharge, just as passing an electric current, more intense, and deeper in all its magnitude.

I walked on the mountain road in front of me, the effort was growing, the progress slow, but steadily. Magic, the meeting place of the reality with the unreal, the highest peak of the art to create new forms of impact on human being, should be conquered. Controlled and defended. The work increased day by day and gathered more and more around me like a forest, overshadowing any perspective for me. Was it a commendable initiative? Was it a bit of happiness, or just a bunch of transient desires? A burning passion, an opportunity to evolve?

A beneficial effort, or just a waste of time?

The journey you take to deepen your self-knowledge is the picture that the photographer will never do, but which you "pay" for at every type of appearance in the world when you are facing replays, stop-frames and zooms.

And the quality of the self-image you create on this journey facilitates access to understanding the meaning of assimilation of life experience in generating a new dimension of openness to the new.

In a way I was like a man who prefers first to find love, maintaining it with the most ardent passion, and only after that to redundantly make money as not to somehow afflict the soul with the idea that the person next to him prefers him only for his money.

I wanted to climb up higher and higher on the ridge of science, to be able to cover first with the magic power all views that capture the human senses, that shakes the most fertile emotions. Afterwards, to maintain all the positive and negative emotions, up to the point where any unknown can be determined. However, without tormenting my mind, without making use of any form of forgery.

Leadership: Are you called to achieve that perfection that reveals the essence of what you have learned and experienced?

The famous Russian writer Leo Tolstoy wrote in his memoirs: "What it really concerns us is not the perfection reached by someone, but the way of striving to become perfect."

Top leaders feel particularly concerned by these words. They are called to attain, such like the sculptors that immortalize in bronze or stone human faces, that perfection that reveals the essence of what you have learned and lived.

The magic that triggers a "learning by feeling and by direct perception" experience is the application of the lessons learned during your becoming under a convention through which you commit yourself to give up what keeps you caught in the mirage of a false predestination to discover a new reality called "My World."

From "magic" to leadership, the leaders' road of development and improvement is long and hard. Between these moments of "creation" in loneliness, when the thin creek of manifesting their productive potential winds between the most lofty boulders of uncertainty, or the lack of a clear direction, is carried out an extremely difficult work, crucial for achieving excellence.

It all depends on how you manage to maintain these qualities, virtues, values, small arrangements of roles and behaviors, so that the "magic" to not be consumed or wasted in vain. Moreover, alongside, obviously and eminently, we are interested in your professional ethics, the level of knowledge, your condition of a "magician" in the light of his torch, of the inspiration, thought, communication, responsibility.

Listening to the guidance of life means to reach that height of manifestation of one's own individuality in order to realize the self.

The desire to deepen, to experience your own desires and feelings will help you identify the ultimate goal in life – to be useful, honorable, magnificent, to make the difference between what you experience at an inner level and what you experience at a level of learning experience accumulated along the way.

The reality of the human underground world brings into the field of attention the attempt of searching and finding some answers to the oldest question, not yet completely elucidated: "Who am I ?"

To understand the complexity of human being, to have an influence on those around you, first get to know yourself very well.

For a leader, it is imperative to know entering the inner and unknown world of the human being, to cross the border of appearances. For the man, this eternal unknown, which must be discovered, is unpredictable and may jeopardize voluntary or involuntary any... leadership.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-reality-from-the-human-underground-world-II.html

The Reality From The Human Underground World (I)

On June 04, 2012

Stimulate your psychological performances by relating to a fertile knowledge, populated by the most significant features of human being.

If this road has a beginning, then it must also have an end, I thought with a forced concession. But the end will not be soon, my conscience fervently repeated me. Because darkness was becoming clearer, the high tower of inspiration grabbed more and more energy resources.

I was prisoner in a windowless room, where I was building my characters just like a manufacturer of living puppets who knows how to ignite that miraculous spark, divine, life-giving, and who with the power of a single thought, can restore their senses, can disarrange their feelings just as the wind shakes the tree branches, can storm and flood them into a huge stream of energy.

Every little thread of feeling, every wave of emotion rose bold and clear at a single sign of my will. It seemed to me that I could adjust any change in the tirelessly, always exciting world, shaped by my many characters. I could assemble, unfold, repair with the finesse of a watchmaker the entire mechanism of their thought and sensitivity – which aroused my most vivid curiosity towards the essence of human nature !

Leadership: Does it stand within the center of your senses that quality of consciousness to go beyond the surface of appearances and to discern the direction of the movement of your own training?

I was a good observer, my mind automatically recorded everything so precise and thoroughly in everyday life, that after a brief analysis, I could adorn more and more with objective elements the parallel reality of the fascinating world of magic that, like love, gave sense to my existence.

If Ulysses returned alone from Hades, from the underworld of darkness, I was deepening more and more in the tumultuous area, full of ups and downs of the soul and human psyche. To discover, to understand the significance of those interdependent entities, but by some less common laws, by some well-thought principles to complete simultaneously my judgment and the depth of my feeling.

And, just as Ulysses was accompanied by a God, I was accompanied by the demon of knowledge, the main spokesman of all virtues, the great founder of the creative impulse in the accessible world of imagination.

The ability to feel is shaped by the onset of creative impulse in a closed space in which your senses are spoiled by the temptation to make a comparison between what is seen and what is preserved unseen.

My training started from the moment of acquiring observer quality and continued with identifying the value of the correlation moment of art with her creator. The reception of new ideas and concepts about their own Ego took the form of a life of originality centered on something lost or lasting, like a dream that carries imagination into exotic lands, marked by the fascination of the unknown and the magic of the world.

To penetrate deeper than psychologists into the human underworld. To grasp, as with fisherman's net, the mystery of my true nature by rebuilding those spiritual resources that are sooner dormant rather than the property of a reality that is but an appearance.

To throw the bait that produces the highest vibrations and to cling to the finest sensations and perceptions – this was my plan, the idea underlying the creation of another meaning of life, in the twilight world of the soul and reason of a character who is always being reinvented.

Leadership: Do you fulfill the condition that your situation in the context of a private life closure be given a form by which to perceive the quality of your own self that you have ignored?

Who could know better the secrets of the art of leadership than the man who, by a well-founded understanding of human nature, by following or rejecting all factors of influence, is located on a very high position of creation and maturity?

But often creation and maturity are constructions intended to be stationed in a "no signal" area where no one can contact you, but from which you can see everything from the height of your own experience of living and the height of your own imagination.

Would be gravely mistaken the one who would think to see in an isolated house, in a closed place, only an opportunity to escape from the present reality, because he misses the opportunity to establish his own fantastic world in the midst of an exercise of the type "learning by living deep in thought."

Just as a reader caught in the dramatic web of a novel, forced to take part in the turmoil of the characters, the leader is constantly caught in the process of creation of the art that implicitly makes room to the discovery or renewal of human feelings - starting from perceiving his own experiences and feelings. He stimulate his psychological performance by relating to a fertile knowledge, populated by those aspects of reality extracted from desert land of his own imaginary prisons.

Being isolated in a corner of the world is the content of a novel in which the author confesses himself in order to better decipher himself, facilitating a breakdown of the elements that make up his character.

Reality in the underground world of man designates the feelings, emotions, thoughts and aspirations that you integrate into your spiritual universe. To better understand human nature and to expand your horizons of perceiving moods, you must integrate into an isolated world from which to extract the most relevant lessons formed at the root of your being.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-reality-from-the-human-underground-world.html

The Reality Of The Dream That Goes All The Way

On April 29, 2016

Create yourself a new identity by grabbing a territory won in the battle with life: the madness of transposing yourself into a reality in which you are the dream.

I was afraid of the bold rush of reaching the line of a boundless horizon which had its meaning of a demonstration of a painting type traced firmly, a proof of finding a great spirit, beyond the subtle game of reason called faith. Thanks to a theme that concerns both the field of artistic creation and that of science, understanding the exigencies of a labyrinthine area fairly mysterious to ordinary human understanding, I began to search for something spiritualized: the truth beyond denial.

The words of my disturbing thoughts, completing themselves in the plane of uplifting ideas that took correspondence in the fact that the understanding of science and life must be founded through the manifestation of madness, wanted to keep me somewhere, at an uncommitted midway, leniently appreciative to the windmills that stood in my way. The thrill of madness was seductive and beautiful: a symbol of pleasures discovered through a perfection defined by the truths and things that replaced la verità effettuale.

Hamlet pretended to be insane to allow himself a greater liberty of action and expression, but at the same time better hiding his intentions. Let us remember with gratitude the magicians of Christopher Priest who interpenetrated their cover, unseen waves, energy, knowledge, and experiences by fusing with fantasy elements. Let us go along with Julio Murillo in search for the faraway Shangri-La, fleeing the death sentence, only to understand a meaningful secret, an existence left in silence forever.

And let us take heed of the madness that incessantly watches us, light as the late evening breeze, where only the shadows of some vague lights called "a then from a trace of reason" exist, announcing the eternal purgatory of "it could be worse."

Leadership: Are you mindful of what you add to your exploration experience of new forms of visual expression so that you can perfectly reproduce the beginning of a new world from the perspective of what it means to live "labyrinthine" life?

The greatest wisdom slowly approaches the greatest madness, merging through a prolonged sleep, repeating endlessly as in the play of light of a fantastic mirage, being easier to maintain through a boundless experience that resists the idea of waking up. The dream is not a distant goal, but rather a reality of madness.

When you try to connect to a lesser-known area, like entering a labyrinth with no escape, but so interestingly built that you would always want to go through it regardless of the traps that lie around you, practically you begin to think of yourself as the composition of a whole set of essential notions for interpretation or reception. In fact, living a labyrinthine life means getting deeper into the core of an enigma until you get fascinated with solving it, but so that you feel complete and not distracted by the world around you.

And I was but a tool of the mind to abandon a fictional construction more authentic and more consistent than life itself, on the circumference of an imaginary circle whose radius was equal to the eighteenth part of the height of a column called: the vigor of the interpretation of a shared experience that produces an innovative breath.

How does the creator avoid the madness that watches him incessantly, sensed alike an incense burned by a wizard? How does he avoid this enclosed space in which can be perceived all resonances of an appeal to the glory of an endless perspective, akin to the petals of decorative roses thrown on an alley full of living petals? Could it be possible for him to avoid the action of entering a Moebius loop so that he will not be infinitely rotated by a centrifugal and centripetal force in diametrically opposite directions?

He cannot. The projections of his mind are always competing to prove the reality of his world, of the dream that goes on forever. Will you venture with me?

Leadership: Can you contribute to the perpetuation of a dream present as an alternative reality in a painting of your double demarche to self-knowledge, without considering yourself the extended version of a restrictive world?

The disposition to be motivated by abstract ideas, the detachment from a reality without future is that of the visionary or the revealer of a thinking based on meanings who feels the emotions his dreams stir up.

Such a man honors leadership not only because he tries to give follow his inner needs in an okay way, trying consciously to open the buds of a philosophy or of a freedom of expression, akin to Gandhi or Martin Luther King. But rather through the fact that he discovers himself from a different perspective, that of an exile into a space interwoven with reality and fantasy.

This wise old saying will always stand: You must lose yourself before you find yourself. Yes, to lose yourself in the space of a dream, in the clear and mobile outlines the upward vision of a titan evokes upon your life, in a version of the type "Reaction after state". The titan is your alternative to knowing yourself at a higher level, who teaches you in what way you must change your way of approaching a new perspective, by reconfiguring your disposition towards the feeling that you are reconnected to a different world.

The construction of a new reality begins the moment the embodiment of a dream becomes possible. You can redefine yourself from the perspective of what you are when you dream or from the perspective of what you are when you wake up.

The picture of your double approach to self-knowledge is completed by the "madness" you face in your attempt to accede to an understanding of existence in relation to the chance of experiencing your dream in reality. And to consider yourself as an extended version of a restrained world is to prolong insanity until you turn it into an element of interiority in the form of exteriority that even if your moral compass does not approve it, the creative impetus supports it.

Leadership: Can you mirror yourself in a higher consciousness of the form of a strait that always opens to a winding road without focusing on the essential points of existence that is exercised as a relative constraint?

If life has its own ascent, and the world around has its own private space, then the reality you shape alone, through a so-called passing or transformation into another person, can become a dominating feeling that fully crosses the threshold of the challenge.

And the greatest challenge the mind identifies as a broad matter of consummation, always relevant to the phenomena over which experience cannot instruct you on, is that of shaping yourself and believing in a higher consciousness – but in the shape of a strait.

The strait is a narrow area of connection between two large continents, one that is characterized through a great diversity of phenomena, the other that is emptied and divided as you try to establish a lasting bond.

The one who is committed to personal development through the process of exploring the dream, through the transformation of reason into a meandering road, into a "wandering" of the moment that can give him somewhat of a win, he risks never coming out of this strait.

You are your own creator of dreams, but also the one who crushes you, depending on the diameter of the strait in which you fit. And the essential points of existence exerted as a relative constraint towards this strait are: the concrete of a tough reality and the subjectivity of a consciousness chained in its own retreats.

The entire creative effort of man is directed towards producing an un-contradictory reality, a work of the mind that will be a landmark for a successful existential journey, in the spell of obscure solicitations of the Self that stands out in contrast with the "Alter-Ego" in a process of shaping identity.

If you want to go all the way to your dream, first think that any enigma is a challenge, a small madness, and you have to decide to say "Challenge Accepted".

The Reality Of The Dream That Goes All The Way belongs to the brilliant minds that dictate eventually and definitely. Minds that do not accept being existences silenced forever, many times perceived as a meaningful secret that no reason can penetrate.

Leadership is the ideal chance of following the formation of a new identity, through a final separation from the truths and things that replace la verità effettuale, by grabbing a territory won in the battle with life: the madness of transposing yourself into a reality in which you are the dream.

Will you be able to fight the idea of waking up?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-reality-of-the-dream-that-goes-all-the-way.html

The Realm In Which We Never Get On Time (II)

On January 25, 2013

Transform your identity into a form of self-revelation, ensuring a perfect integration of your ideals into the reality that characterizes you.

An escape from an enclosed space is apparently impossible, especially for the man who feel condemned to an absolute exile. The harsh reality become a comfortable couch of a ravaged ego, lonely, comforted only by the weak wind of change. The appearance of sheriff Ed Tom Bell was never so strange and so unrecognizable. He was obviously consumed by an inexplicable inner turmoil, like a sealed container with a content been under pressure.

He would have liked to tell the old man next to him: "Old age is a complicated realm, darker than dusk. One day, we will go together there, where no one will disturb us."

The call of another world is heard from the shadows, it is the inevitability of death, but first of all the fate of the dying flirts with the poetry of disintegration and loneliness. Ed Tom Bell`s inadaptability to an implacable reality has created a disorientation that hurt like a dagger plunged into an open wound. An unconditional acceptance of yourself, a sphere, a proper world, that had no major interests or genuine plans for the future.

He had something into his soul, a hint of regret that he wanted to hide. It seemed that he realized long ago about the relativity of human values, about the fragility of beliefs that limit the man, positioning the new foundations in relation to some established reasonable approaches.

He was not open to unexpected changes. His life was not running as he wanted, but in the pace of a monometer that was functioning according to strict laws. The reality was in conflict with his nature. In the last hour, it still could be observed that discipline and that soldierly spirit, who made the dualism of his life, both of them pushed up to a sublime heroism.

The wave sleeps, quiet. Among the ruffles, by a gentle wind pulled, are floating fondly the last remnants of what was once a man. *****

Leadership: Can you re-value the significance that you attribute to life through an unconditional acceptance of your own person, without becoming the cumulus of all experiences experienced at a time of reflection?

The man, who puts unconditionally into the service of an existence that is proven to be full of uncertainties, spied in some places by nonsense, in the framework of a dominant orientation towards the end, it may not establish poignancy vales over the fruition of a deep thinking. Be Careful. The thinking that cancels itself, the thinking that misunderstands itself, it cannot perform objectively within the facts, but it feeds with the representation of an "episodical" character of the situational existence.

Such kind of thinking, confronted by the adaptation to a life that is fulfilled by the acceptance of suffering and discontent, continually relates only to what the worst could happen in present and future. And the significance that you attribute to the life and the orientation that you give to the knowledge based on experience represents the two fundamental components of the development process that provides leadership a full and permanent support.

The leadership that proves its relevance in ignoring or treating this life experience dominated by prejudices, superstitions and constraints, evolves only through a process of complex reasoning and pleading until self-conviction of the need for change. But not of the guilt for misunderstanding the determinations which give to the happenings a touch of causality.

The transition from a closed and conservative mentality to one of "anticipate and improve" is done by linking the analysis of the causes of the phenomenon of "guilt of failed situations in life" with the rigorous and well-defined definition of a new variable of jubilation: "free your consciousness of passions".

Identity is a form of self-revelation, established under the sign of the questions "Who am I?" and "Who can I be?" that can cause a deflection of the direction of life. And leadership is closely related to the integration of the efforts to improve the quality of life. The need for self-acceptance correlated with the self-image lies behind all our decisions and actions, and their understanding could have a major impact in optimizing the interpretation that we assign to the results obtained by perceiving the reality from the angle of a mind that seeks measure and balance in everything.

A large number of needs, apparently distinct may create confusion, while managing them can be exhausting in a certain existential plan. The factor that you should follow when you are preparing to make the leap towards the great evolution of your own self, in the context of the life combining with the vision, it is called "The Awakening of Mind".

Well, the awakening of mind is partially the diary of searching the meaning of life and partially an exploration of the fundamentals of defining the identity that feels besieged by the limits of a resignation due to the depletion of your own ideals. And the leadership it is not formed only as a prestigious form of moral force, but as an evidence of the ideal towards which you ascend, continually requiring to be satisfied by an act of assumed willingness - to rebuild your own self and the world around you.

The unconditional acceptance of one's own person is in the form of the cause that you serve from the point of view of a withdrawal in yourself, from which you have to pass a more intense concern for the imposition of solid living principles from which you cannot abdicate in any situation.

The Realm In Which We Never Get On Time renders the particularity of the reality called "life" put into the sign of doubt. Only responding to the content of "who I am" or "how I am", you will be able to enclose your attitude and personality traits into the area of leadership which extends over accepting the circumstances that brought you up to a certain point. Many times this point is called "Abandon".

 Note: "No Country for Old Men (2007)"

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-realm-in-which-we-never-get-on-time-II.html

The Realm In Which We Never Get On Time (I)

On January 25, 2013

Give yourself the possibility of a rigorous and fair self-assessment, by making the retrospective analysis of your own limitations, constraints, searches and expectations.

Two old men were sitting face to face. One of them was Sheriff Ed Tom Bell. Who would better analyze this right, clear and fair conscience, at that moment when all the memories were overflowing, when all the strains, exhausting and barren, were manifesting in the form of some reserves, and would have told with a shadow of doubt: "What would happened with him?"

Everything that was allowed by society, determined him to submerge or to get stuck even harder in their own world, more and more rigid. His words were circling around the destiny, the dramatic confusion that precedes a change of direction: "I feel overwhelmed. I always imagined that when I will get old, God will come into my life. And He did not come. It's not His fault. In His place, I would have the same opinion about me, just as Him."

Lacking in vitality, without appeal, Ed Tom Bell, was standing in the same indifference, which was shown by the knight Gaudin de Sainte-Croix, when he saw himself face to face with the fatality – the unexpected arrest, which, as like hell, was swallowing any hope of life in him.

An exhaustive wandering, which led him to damnation. Everything in him was questioned. He was expecting to all the worst. And he was caught and "arrested" in that tragic brawl between past and present, suspended in a state of acceptance of the inevitable. Did he expect to get into another realm, where there was not so much evil, so much passion, so much vanity?

But patience, why so much hurry? Redemption always asks for pending. Before the heaven is hell that keeps you prisoner, like a powerful wizard, in your own life, hostile to you. And this wizard who commands the spirit, more threatening than ever, had a plan, to what it concerned the old Ed Tom Bell. *

Leadership: How do you fulfill your role of supporting the expression of emotions from significant life experiences as well as their control and inhibition in terms of perceiving a reality that exceeds you and from which you cannot escape?

Are you open to unexpected changes? Is it everything within you questioned? Are you caught in that brawl between past and present, suspended into a state of acceptance of the inevitable? Are you falling prey to some inner worry? Does your existence stand under the sign of a general disorientation? Is your life running in the pace of a monometer, functioning according to strict laws?

A leader can be built in years. However just as well, he can be destroyed in an instant. When the wonderful and rewarding journey comes to an end, when in the upper stage of his existence, the reason, feeling, belief, passion - the rudders and the sails of the destiny's ship, sailing adrift, no longer provides security. He has to perform his role through a strange symmetry of the reversibility of his events, his deeds and his intentions, that is, to prove a permanent Deja Vu that can have another ending.

Refusing to get anchored into reality, refusing to accept a certainty dictated by your own thinking and by an objective reasoning, the flagrant denial of your own being, determines the appearance of an existential crisis, by imposing a radical change and deep of content, not of surface. The reality to which you have to pay close attention to and watch with the utmost responsibility is like a book that you cannot open at any page with the intent to understand it fully, but must go through every statement from its entire content that is dedicated to a different area of representing the world and its laws.

Leadership comes today, tomorrow passes, or is not it? Depending on the reasonable price, established by your existence. A subtle deviation from the direction of movement under the influence of the lack of firmness in decision-making and action is proof of insecurity in the face of a reality that surpasses you and you can not escape it.

Leadership: Do you address the problem of reality seen as a sum of negative perceptions about the quality of life, so that it is a question of distorting actions and events that have taken place through a change of self-image at the level of subjective evaluation of the values that represent you?

Usually, when the black part of your existence hits you, it makes it eagerly and fiercely, like a machine that cuts the trees mercilessly, and makes it decisively and relentless forever. You are forced to accept the situation, no matter how you are amazed, and intrigued.

When will you understand that the leadership's future does not belong to a ripped and a throbbing existence? The leadership is nurtured by the alchemy of an existence in equilibrium, authentic, victorious, through a constant struggle, in order to increase performances, through the value's measure that you bring to the world, applying the knowledge gained in everyday life hypostasis.

Life is a quick consumption of youth or an aggravated prolongation of old age, depending on the doubts and mistakes you suffer when your system of values is overthrown. In leadership, it is needed a new fundamental approach that would have a strong moral and sentimental dimension, not a false metamorphosis through which you lose yourself. The leadership does not support the slow, clumsy and painful process of forming a new personality.

In vain, you push your limits up to a sublime heroism if you give up in front of the complex reality, worrying, disappointing, poor in noble ore. Especially if the essence of your nature, in the conflict with the reality, is characterized more and more by cowardice and weakness in the strength of your wisdom. Changing your self-image at the level of subjective evaluation of the values you represent occurs when you treat the idea of immutable fatality with the carelessness of a man swept away by the swiftness of time.

Your leadership will also be deprived of essence and strength, if your existence will flow in the pace of a monometer that functions after strict laws.

Leadership: Can you transform an important moment of your life into an unforgettable experience that perfectly complements the visual content of unrealistic imagery that urges you to limit your horizons?

The leadership is not negotiable and not for giving appointments. It is ephemeral, changeable, demountable, repetitive, floating, silt collector, measurable, adaptable, with key or remote control - depends on the way you behave, understand, and treat it, especially if you manage to adapt to the tandem "You" and "Him".

Do you feel watched from behind? Are too soft the steps which count the crumbs of your shadow on the ground? Are you stumbling over? The fear of the stalker paralyzes halfway your hunted being?

No, you cannot get rid of the stalker than confronting him directly, with conviction, with the evidence and arguments, with the dignity's lightsaber. Turn bravely your head. Who is it? Regress? Stagnation? Helplessness? Fall? Damnation? Monotony? Loneliness? Barriers represented by the different way of living and by the fragile beliefs that places you on opposite sides? Or the cruel reality that caught you up?

If you are not able to always bring an extra value to your experiences, if you cannot add new horizons to your life, and you feel only the cross of the impotence, if you can no longer repeat the steps which took you forward towards success, if your professional existence can no longer create and manage a substantial portfolio of achievements, and yet, you continue to plead for a fantastic ideal, it means to commit a crime. It means you dare to defy the reason, and to give yourself up to a fairy of a moment that can be called madness or vain illusion.

Do you take a fair fight. But one that is already lost?

The self-image is the opinion you form of yourself at that time when you have accumulated your life experiences, thus becoming wiser, when you feel that everything is falling under the spectrum of loneliness.

The Realm In Which We Never Get On Time marks the beginning of the end, is the sign of self-depreciation, misfit to the new environment, more complex and more alarmingly.

Just as a in a good detective novel there is no sentence, no meaningless word, even so in a leadership, in which the performance has a critical role, there may be no agreement, no interim with those, whose existence submerges or gets stuck even harder in derisory and insignificantly, in the deep mire of erosion.

Give yourself the possibility of a rigorous and fair self-assessment, by making the retrospective analysis of your own limitations, constraints, searches and expectations.

* Note: "No Country for Old Men (2007)"

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-realm-in-which-we-never-get-on-time.html

The Reconstruction Of A Personality Reflected In Its Double

On August 04, 2021

Be able to understand your mind and feelings through the eyes of an artist who feeds on the sap of creation.

If I enjoyed reading and rereading one book during school and high school, Wilhelm Hauff's "Fairy Tales", it was because this book was the only source of knowledge from which I learned everything I knew. Absolutely everything I know. About symbols, mysteries and spirituality. And no one else knew how to see among its ranks, what my soul managed to see behind what unites one world with another: the virtue of penetrating all the things that exist and that happen with them.

Sometimes I go back to this wonderful book of fairy tales, forgetting all the other books, and I find myself reinvented under the baton of the same Wilhelm Hauff, who made me become one with himself. And if I had something important to say, in a single masterpiece of self-reflection, I could only say it in the same way that Wilhelm Hauff did:

"I'm just a poor young man forced to make his way around the world with his pen. I belong to everyone, I belong to myself, but I don't belong to any school... I don't feel above me any master or teacher to whom I owe obedience, apart from the eternal laws of good and beauty, towards which I tend, even so, in an imperfect manner.

I may not be able to keep my form away from the influence of time, but my spirit will remain negoethean, netieckean, neschlegelean and real."

Leadership: Is the object of your creation a well-documented existence, mediated by the creative self in deep solidarity with that consciousness of a reality that has not been fully deciphered in all its consequences?

At great value were the simple phrases, but full of double meanings, personifications and metaphors, which allowed the consciousness of the artist in me to perceive the miraculous creation of a work of art, equivalent to the study of a form of infinity that springs from the consciousness of the omniscient Creator. Let us not forget, at the same time, that each hidden meaning that Wilhelm Hauff shapes in his work is based on the repetition of a word, a figure of speech based on polysemy and homonymy.

I think I was dealing with the master of a realistic narrative art, but bearing the imprint of diversity and universality of the myth that absorbs those abstract relationships between realities, acting with unaltered spontaneity to develop the technique of an art that highlights the great strengths of true plastic poetry. Indeed, it is not about poetry, but about a poetic writing that hides, like the language of painting, a certain causal phenomenon, a cause-effect relationship, but also a phenomenon of overturning the usual view of reality.

On the same plane of overturning the usual conceptions about reality, all the creative effervescence of the artists takes place. This allowed me to reach that consciousness of a reality that exists beyond appearances, a fact that in any fairy tale pivots between candor and disguise, between rarity, choices and interactions, between characters and their own consciousness (embodied as a judge).

Every work of art must have a connecting structure between what is shown and what is hidden.

In short, the consequences of reality reflected in Wilhelm Hauff's work can only be seen in an image in which you both acknowledge your weaknesses and strengths, in which you openly manifest your talents, admit your imperfections, and admire your greatness.

And leadership can be the object of an exceptional personal creation if and only if the reality you build through your thoughts, beliefs, moods and deeds becomes the beginning of a spiritual journey: eternity, infinity, unity, wholeness, continuation of cycles of rebirth and renewal.

The design of a state of mind whose scope is much wider than the area of intellectual functions can be attributed to any great creation. And the unexpected finding that enlivens the horizon of artistic expression through symbols and allegories, glimpsed through allusions and references to various landmarks, starts from the fact that beyond the threshold of common reality there is an invisible bridge between two worlds, between heaven and earth.

The brilliant creator of the work of art reacts just like the ordinary man when he finds himself in front of a lightly loaded painting and whose subject is unfamiliar to him: he is amazed by the admiration at the sight of worldly and secular splendor.

The Reconstruction Of A Personality Reflected In Its Double suggests the closeness between an artist and his creation, even when the viewer's eyes are surprised by the resemblance between "what is seen at first sight" and "what is hidden in sight".

The eyes of a true artist always see a symbol where others see only a banality or confusion. Are you able to see similarities where others only see differences? Are you able to link events creatively based on observing meaningful connections?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-reconstruction-of-a-personality-reflected-in-its-double.

The Red Of A Rose Lost In The World Of Art

On August 21, 2019

The symbolic value of a creation is the memory of the image from which the meaning and philosophy of the Ego (responsible for receiving the message of nature), determined to continually amaze through the diversity of the topics addressed, is drawn up.

I chose my favorite rose, Double-Delight. It is no more above its brothers than by the memory of a happy expectation, the dream of an entire artistic orientation whose only element of expression has been, for thousands of years, the gaze on the beautiful, the cursive image content, supported by rich and living colors, as only a painter could have traversed through a powerful emotion amplifier.

Its symbolic meaning is found only in a painting, the masterpiece of a mind that continually develops different roles, joints, sayings and interpretations, meant to put the expression of an instant emotion in superiority.

This is how the rose flower opens slowly, gracefully, without noise, as a wonderful combination of richness and beauty rarely encountered, revealing a fabulous color and aromatic palette, as a sign of appreciation for an artistic moment dedicated to the pure, majestic nature that is brimming with life. Appreciation of an unconscious beauty, the hidden message of a rose can be noticed in a fragment of "Dialogue about painting" by Lodovico Dolce:

Leadership: How does the impact between what you expect to find in yourself from an artistic point of view and what you present to the world arise from the similarity with the phrase "Value distinction"?

After all, I think I am what a rose thinks around a consecrated artist: it would benefit me greatly to produce a beautiful impression, to share a little story, a satisfaction of an aesthetic order, with someone who understands me. As a kind of investment of intelligence, sensitivity, passion and fantasy in the wonderful gesture of nature to express itself freely. Yes, that is how it is. Art requires a great power of penetration into the private life of every creation of nature.

The rose is the impact between what I expect to find in my artistic plane and what I present to the world through the filter of the similarity with the phrase "Value distinction". Because beauty always has a cost, a value concept that follows that of popularizing art and culture, representing itself through a direct relationship of a subjective experience with the objective world.

The impact of importing a fragment of reality in a unique and personal way, in the case of music, occurs through the prism of the description that they give to the alternative reality from which an immediate reward stimulus is born: the act of being "desirable", the act of considering myself important.

Especially since, very often, with elegance and the tact of a gentleman, I create a certain disposition to understand and to compare an old view with a new one, as a kind of obsession for something wonderful and uplifting. I induce a state of conformity with the miracle of a protective presence, as if taken from a fairytale, so that the attitude I adopt in front of a relatively difficult image to perceive for an ordinary man becomes for me the habit of a creative activity that will make me think of the refinement of those ladies in the Eastern world.

Artistically, everything has to be real, tangible in a poetic sense, even the illusion of living the part of a sensible male which saves a princess from a possible tragic fate – to display their beauty to saturation. Therefore, the cost of rendering an artistic image of rare beauty is given by the effort to capture something that never dies, as a moment of high emotional intensity, representing an indicator of efficiency in the case of producing color tones, dark or bright, in an exploration of the subjective reality with the source in the visual reception.

In the field of art, the cost has as a substitute the induction of the impression of living, the direct living of transferable feelings and the consideration of the suggestion of "the wonder of nature that is not only outside man, but also within him".

The true appreciation of art is given by the artist's effort to achieve something grand through reduced participation in social life, but in such a way that the feelings conveyed in his work, through colors, figures of speech and artistic images are interpreted as a confirmation of his inestimable value.

I imagine that there are quite a few painters able to recreate an experience not wasted by time by associating with everything that happens around us, with things that are distant, deformed, detached from personal experience. But I am not like them. I am dreaming of a stranger who looks at the personification of a concrete impression with fresh eyes, of a feeling of fullness, of a princely elegance to which I am connected at that moment of ecstasy in which it is seen that nature is satisfied with my choice, as its spiritual friend.

Because I always demand to see the humanization of nature up close, by the idea of "untouched paradise", what on the canvas seems unusually familiar, so unlimited, indispensable in life. No wonder that whenever talking about roses I consider a single aspect: the similarity with the Creator's qualities. And, like any artist of great value, I came to realize this great truth: "I only feel alone among people, and only in the midst of nature do I feel free from any compulsion."

The cost of creating an unparalleled creation, as an expression of inner purity and beauty, is based on an evaluation of the very impact of colors on the human psyche, on emotions, on perceptions and ideas about life. The massive and perpetual infiltration of emotion across the entire surface of a painting necessarily requires a happy combination of features between the creator and his creation, based on the principle of color separation in small touches that release from the landscape of the work the technical or thematic restrictions.

My style is unmistakable, is it not?

The value of a creation is given by the image you keep in mind of a reality that does not promise you an interactive experience and a memorable event, until you take the risk of being part of its plasticity.

The Red Of A Rose Lost In The World Of Art is the color from which you extract all the information necessary for expression in terms of "landmarks of interpretation of a free reality", that is, nature appearing as an independent in a specially created artistic environment to give the vision a deep empathy, a sensation of sensuality, a new perspective of beauty.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-red-of-a-rose-lost-in-the-world-of-art.html

The Reduction Of The Ego To The Level Of The Gaze We Have On The Real

On August 09, 2021

What you see in your mind is based on everything you perceived as another step toward a deeper level of understanding of your self.

I went to the "Hit The Egg" running competition in Vatra Dornei on Saturday. I would go one more time, even though immediately after the competition I said I would never go again. The first 10 km was a total madness, because the madness sometimes has a price called *"Altitude 1600 meters",*meaning a 10 km steep climb. And as most of the competitors climbed the steep hill single file, with small, close steps, and I, trying to keep up with the best, gave free rein to my imagination, daring for a moment to rewrite the rules of an adventurous climb.

The first gesture of the manifestation of imagination is to capture the intangible of a reality based on some indisputable facts, but still far too external in terms of the true meaning of things. What I mean is that, at that moment, my thoughts were inspiring me to rediscover my own self as a director able to control very well what is happening, to be able to lead the change in the direction of a total novelty, facing an unforgettable challenge.

In the film that was unfolding in my mind, I was trying to see if, where people cannot generate technical revolutions of knowledge, a certain tension is born that can install a state of moment that evaporates in a short time. Just as the painter offers the audience a perspective on reality determined not only by his own vision, but also by the artistic current, so the director can build a perspective that condemns or praises the hero depending on what "hurts" him more: the inability to reconcile with failure.

Leadership: Does the way in which you conceive the image of interpreting a factual reality arise from the possibility of interpreting a situation in which the role play is the spontaneous expression of a true story?

My imagination got so far that I saw myself as the main actor in a film in which the action was flat between real and fabulous, all the competitors climbing without knowing what awaits them at the top and, at the same time, without knowing that they have everything handy for fun. And such a main actor, playing his special role, knows how to shine, he knows how to suggest the natural meaning of his character even when it comes to something as seemingly uncontrollable as the feeling of unreality.

In other words, the film that my imagination developed reached the essence of the existence of a competing version of truth that is meant to be literally a revelation of the nature of a being's reality that becomes invisible due to the absolute and infinite character of space from the eternity of time. In fact, my presence in the symbolic space of the imagination seemed to be conceived more as a "full", as a concretization of a stage image, than as a "void" attributed to a figurative depth.

And that's how I became a director, not by finding the right angles of filming, but by rendering the spectacle of a steep climb through a different angle of receptivity, through the prism of an imagination that rewrites reality through the witness effect, in terms of certain fulminating experiences or sudden conditioning, to make it correspond to the emotions experienced by a story character.

Leadership: Can you relate to the visual experience from an authorial height perspective that can help you discover the added value that can change the perception of your own person in terms of interaction with others?

The role I played in my own film, inspired by reality, was that of awakening all my senses, telling me that I should not take and consume a variety of moments just by looking, but trying to combine a captivating story with another, hidden sense, of memories, of living legends, of secret thoughts, of sensational-smelling images, of nostalgia for a lifetime.

Of course, the imaginary is the suffering of a separation from reality, but at the same time it indicates a change in perception about what a world that is guided by the principle "what you see in your mind (not directly with your eyes) is based on everything you perceived as another step towards a deeper level of understanding of your self ".

And this fact is associated with the emergence of a point of view expressed by John Fowles in the well-known novel "Daniel Martin":

"I had this experience before, but it was not repeated with the same intensity. It's very strange, like an interruption of time. Time ceases to exist for a short time. You feel that you're neither the one, the modern archaeologist, who painted the fresco. If you are something, you are the painting itself. Forgive me for having to express myself through metaphor, I can't find other words. You exist, but not in time. You've always been there. Without its past and future. The data from history, chronology, are screens like the ones we were talking about just now."

There are competing versions of the truth expressed by John Fowles, but the most important thing is that anything we experience, we experience through the very way we look at things in an attempt to become one with them, in a reality whose acceptance and understanding anchors us in an ambivalent space: of creation and alterity.

The part of the added value that can change the perception of your own person at the level of interaction with others is given by your ability to experience certain situations in terms of how you control the experience of reality, so that it acquires a special meaning in your mind, but also in the minds of those around you.

So the added value coincides with the director's imagination. It refers to that ability that only you can show at a time when no one expects, that is, when reality mirrors the film that you made in your head.

The Reduction Of The Ego To The Level Of The Gaze We Have On The Real can be correlated with the experience of knowing reality through the prism of an intellect that intuits wholes and can see particularities in their necessity.

Just as an artist can achieve through a small and insignificant drawing something more important than another in a great painting, so too could I exist in a reality in which there is no boundary between figurative and symbolic, or rather in a life story in which I no longer know who the really important character is: the one in the movie or the real one?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-reduction-of-the-ego-to-the-level-of-the-gaze-we-hav

The Reflection Of Identity In Monumentality

On October 11, 2015

Get close to the understanding and reality of a model of inspiration, showing it in all of its complexity.

The first images of the film are born. The initial idea is that of "rehabilitating" this czar reviled for his cruelty by all of his enemies, but ultimately animated by a single, gigantic passion: creating the unity of Russia. The monumental figure asked to be painted with the means of the monumental. A man whose enigmatic and frightening gestures are explained only through his titanic effort of creating the Russian State around Moscow.

But director Sergei Eisenstein doesn't want to absolve Ivan, to show the Terrible or the Gentle. He only wishes to decipher the meaning, the significance of his actions. What is after is not an exterior greatness, and through this, a false one. The monumental is a game of expression of the character and his actions. It will get him close to the understanding and sensitivity of the modern spectator, showing him in all of its complexity.

"This frightening and appealing figure, terrible and charming, tragic in the fullest sense of the world, will become understandable for the modern man when we will think of the battle taking place in Ivan's soul, implacably facing the enemies of the homeland..."

This is the idea from where the director begins his eternal theme: the struggle for unity. *****

Leadership: Can you obtain a certain estimate of the value of self-experience, by integrating and shaping a new identity in your own creation in a creation projected around a unitary and monumental vision?

The identity of an artist is characterized by the effort to create the image of an ideal world, by the much wider extension of the field of use of the term "monumental", with reference to the dream and the only power to give life to a work at the higher level of the culture, under the impulse of a subject, an action, an unfolding of events in time and space.

You should also learn how to be an artist. First, identify the visual elements that create the impression of monumentality, which determine and represent an interesting figure, then try to match the flats so that you build an image full of dynamism and diversity of your culture.

The result of the challenge of fitting the image of something unique, from the perspective of self-experience that prevails in what defines you when you reflect yourself in the meaning and scope of an exceptional creation, can be significant if the process of developing a theme is permanently supported by the references to a grandiose moment from the development of a model of inspiration.

A unitary and monumental vision, promoted to the status of a work of art is closely linked to the optimization of the experience of searching for elements of comparison between things and events, ventured in the combination of artistic language elements.

Leadership, thanks to the contribution of a subject of study, with the possibility of being experimentally investigated, can achieve a level of high science if the suggestive effects of the relationships between aspects full of meaning of a coherent whole and the complexity of a set of actions corresponding to an identity in certain moments are permanently evaluated.

Romanian aesthetician, Victor Ernest Mașek, once wrote: "One of the most important lights cast by the structuralist conception of the unitary work is the very demonstration of the fact that the structural elements of a whole intertwine and condition themselves, being reflected in one another."

If these elements are merged into a single moment of impact, based on the analysis of a complete information and not necessarily on personal experience, then the value of creation will evolve towards the status of work, born out of the unique resorts of your own assessment.

You become rich in what concerns the processing of information, possibly distorted or incorrect, only if you get close to the understanding and reality of a model in which you reflect your greatness, showing it in all of its complexity.

He was not wrong the one who said that the complexity of a model of inspiration can be reminiscent to an act of creation. Because by promoting a powerful solidarity between the content of creation and the qualitative aspects of a concrete situation, based on a priori knowledge conforming to an experimental model of inspiration, you can obtain a certain estimation of the value of self-experience.

Leadership builds the unity of an image that demands to be immortalized in time through the value given to the vision from which the complexity of a grand existence proceeds in which you (the director) reserve your right to be a hero.

The Reflection Of Identity In Monumentality highlights the feeling of belonging to a model of inspiration, by ensuring the visibility of that side of the Ego that is manifested in a specific context.

You will be able to give creation a new shape of you explore your identity through a display of your own means of expression, through self-observation and by reflecting on the meaning of a fact that captures the complexity of a set of actions that correspond to an identity at certain times.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-reflection-of-identity-in-monumentality.html

The Reflection Of My Gaze Towards Higher Things

On June 12, 2022

What you see in yourself is what the eye captures in a symbolic image with the effect of creating depth in your existence.

I look at the sky, sky-blue in color, after my mind has soaked in the smile of the sun. I know I have to make a change in everything, I suspect this, my conscience demands this and my soul commands me, but not before I am one with the sky, not before I enjoy its color. A kind of calm, bright and patient, lingers before my eyes that can't get enough of the sky-blue color, so much do they deepen in contemplation, admiring the abode of God's kingdom.

Before I found myself as a confidant of a color that, as far as I can see, could evoke a new reality through meaningful metaphors, I remembered that all the faith that a true artist demonstrates boils down to the victory of light, springing from an Ossetonevah(the enveloping brightness of a candid, soft, pure real). As I draw more, everything becomes more fascinating. As the drawing is the rhythm of the painting, so the sky-blue color, suggesting self-expression and wisdom, can accelerate the pace with which I contemplate an unseen beauty, as I believe it is to be lived, without feeling any pain.

To not see the vague shadows around me, to see only the signs of time interspersed with the visual of a zone of relaxation and comfort, where the mind and soul, as much as they can complement each other, be part of the tones or shades of the same color. And maybe this way I will convince myself of the real meaning of a combinatorics from the universe of artistic creation that makes possible the ascent of the soul from matter to the spiritual world.

Where do I have the power to conceive and contrast two poses of the same human type, the artist and his muse, in a creative adventure of great coherence, so that I keep in my soul the peace that the beauty of a color gives to relax the atmosphere?

Leadership: Can your creation appeal through an inner content that resonates with "living achieved by similarity" and that can only be kept alive through the external representation of a relative reality?

Justifiably, if I were a color, and I would describe myself by means of the sky-blue hue, with seen and unseen connections between earth and above, then between above and higher above, just to suggest to the artist's spirit where and in what sense to activate the relationship with God, then I should sensitize the matter that surrounds me, whose vibration brings me happiness and a high state of mind.

May my life be as bright and open as the color is. And if I am satisfied with myself, it is because I am satisfied with that aspect of a color described with a name like "sky-blue". Therefore, the matter that determines the color of the eyes on a clear day, the natural substance present in humans in different proportions and concentrations, the substance that becomes form, related to the pleasant sensation that a well-colored painting can leave me with, is the real seen with other eyes, it is the horizon of the inner that passes the sight through faith.

Rising in the realm of light, matter (the higher potency of form) is a space of reflection about the world, about myself. It is the reflection of my gaze towards higher things, and, at the same time, it is the reflection of my gaze inward, towards my self, valid through the visual comparison of the color of the sky with the ideal side of things that truly fulfill me in the search for the truth and the meaning of creation. Naturally, I mirror myself in the sky-blue color as the artist mirrors himself in the work of art and in the soul of his contemplator.

Leadership: In your view, can the essence of the formation of the status of a creator be a given of looking towards the snapshots that accompany a thing that can be seen, but which does not have an effect of creating the depth of an image?

Sky-Blue. Of course, you have the merit of communicating to me that inner experience that the artist often imprints on his static natures, with fragrant flowers that exude a gentle tranquility. With surprise and elegance, you move calmly and neutrally under my gaze, always in a different form, with the help of stylistic figures. But at the same time, no matter how wide your horizon is and no matter how immense the diversity, no matter how much you open my mind and soul, I will think about you the same thing that the writer Alexandru Vlahuță thought about the work of the Romanian painter Nicolae Grigorescu:

"So harmonious are the colors on the canvases of the artist. You dream, you think in front of them. The smallest things whisper to you words of deep evocative power. In his flowers there is tenderness and the moist breath of life, they smile with their radiance of moment and with something of the glance of human eyes. You expect them to shake. You expect to see them withered, dead in a few moments—so much tenderness, so much fresh light trembles in each petal. You think, admiring them: how pure the artist's soul must be, so that, passing through them, to enter eternity, these momentary flowers would not have lost any of their temporal charm."

My dear color. A joy of your serene shade accompanies my soul in everything that I am writing now under the sign of art, under the seal of the word. If ever I shall be reflected into the eyes of the blue sky, into the theme of the flowers of the field, or into the clear waters of the rivers, and if I gain a share of the universe's access to beauty, then I shall see my own beauty represented in a figure full of expression which has not lost any of its charm.

Leadership mirrors that image of unity and stability which reveals deeper qualities of being when compared to a creator whose massive Ego is tempered by spirit.

The Reflection Of My Gaze Towards Higher Things can only be interpreted by making a journey into the world of colors, where the sky blue gives brightness to the space where my artist spirit can roam freely and enjoy the wonder of creation.

That says it all. The color clearly reflects the feeling of self-satisfaction on which the whole picture of my personality is built. As for the clear sky, I hope it always smiles at me !

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-reflection-of-my-gaze-towards-higher-things.html

The Relationship Between Myself And The Parallel Universe

On June 16, 2013

Give shape and substance to your current reality without reaching an change in limits that can affect your functional structure.

I had the painful feeling of belonging to a parallel time zone, set according to the vision of a director that had removed the word "barriers" from his vocabulary. My own past intertwined with my future – the condition of real existence of a mysterious character, somewhat fantastic, who favored the ascendant trajectory of my evolution. And this evolution was in certain ways placed under a lack of consensus between more of my own opinions, which contradicted and excluded each other.

It was just a habit of mine to transpose myself in a different time, different Universe, in the middle of other places; in that invincible virtual reality that overcomes the sensational. Unbothered by any disturbing factors, I was crossing a white, continuous space that at the same time was ever-changing and hard to understand. A sign of fake science? Here lay the greatest mystery of art? And the white spaces between two support points were, for me, like a brain death, but also like a resurrection of the soul. I had the feeling that I could see and live everything, long before the inevitable happened.

I isolated myself completely from one world, only to enter in another. The result of this imaginative process made me guilty in front of a respective court of justice: the impossible. I was trapped in the illusion area. The degree of incorporation in the coordinate system of a new location where I was venturing, reached beyond any limits, it reached the absurd. That raised a justified fear in me: "how long will I maintain myself on this line of judgment that I have tried to map out here? When will I detach from it?

The mastery of leadership is seen when you have all the strengths of a game that others can not play.

I didn't fully understand why some spaces attracted me so much, a quick vibration with a high pitch, and the quintessence of an experience that raises an absolute delight. But the need to come back and to station in these incomprehensible places, inaccurately laid out on the map of ordinary minds, in just a few moment's time, it was one of those primordial ones. And without satisfying it, I could not be happy. But this journey into the unknown and unexplored lands couldn't have lasted forever.

Surely I was experiencing the same feeling as one of John Fowles' characters when he had bought the farm, Thorncombe. The need to have that place, to fully possess it came somehow from the depths of my subconscious; all the other consciously reasonable reasons were on a secondary plan.

Simultaneously, the resistance and obedience in front of a more likely metaphysical authority gave shape and substance to my current reality. But I could no longer keep up with the updates of my perspectives in light of a surreal world. I was overloaded with a substance that didn't work with limits. As fast as possible, I had to deactivate this attraction field and renounce this échange de limites that could have seriously affected the structured called "Myself".

The game I played was a kind of combination between the hiding of one's own world that has reached its limits and the experiencing of novelty from the perspective of faith in an ideal of authenticity understood as a penetration into a reality that omits its temporary dimension (being questioned).

Leadership: Are you aware that the option of inventing yourself as a fictional work is the first step towards defeating an Ego who would want to grow unchecked, at all times, and also in terms of an unknown reality?

Do you hide from the world and close yourself in another? Do you have the feeling you can see and live everything long before the inevitable happened? How long can you stand the journey into the unknown and unexplored lands?

I don't think it's necessary to research the real direction of leadership through the analysis of this positive variable that brings a maximum contribution to the foundamenting of what could become a paradigm of thought. But I believe I can reach a syntesis of the principles of acknowledgement, that have resulted from an analysis of only one existential chapter, that has at its core the rethinking of structure and the way of funtioning of an individual subject to his own reason.

The beloning of the individual to his own identity, the only one able to stir up decisive arguments for a new direction, all the diverse, multiple and complex aspects of ageing, all the worries, troubles, contradictions, hopes and dreams – are summed up in a secondary analisys that centers on the actual plan of his existance.

And this plan has to be referential and applicable in all that is related to his person, in all the patterns of his thinking in order for leadership to become more important on the process of his becoming, thus favoring the ascendant trajectory of his evolution.

The universe that you carefully build in your imagination is a consequence of the experiences gained by the desperation to escape from the harsh reality of a present that leads nowhere and amplifies disappointment.

Here, the question that the international expert John Maxwell once uttered is very welcome: "Do you enter a realm and linger there?" This entrance into an area that's not centered on immediate reality can ensure a psychical confort, like a stimulent to reach further and further into the secret of creation. But if you linger there for too long you risk not to be able to detach yourself from it.

Your evolution will be better or worse based on the position that you occupy in relation to the referent, but also in relation to the way in which you stay coonected with yourself in the attempt to overcome your limits. It's also based on how you expand your perception of the reality. Because the attempt to place yourself on a higher way of "being", that forces you to withdraw in the imaginary and creative, it's not a warranty that you'll obtain a developed superiority, forcing you to turn against your values and reason-accepted truths.

Leadership is also the alternative succesion of moves that you do in order to reach a higher understanding level of who you truly are. To fall in the abyss of thoughts and imagination can mea an outstreched hand while you take the basic step towards a more wholesome understanding of life and your place in the world. But it can also facilitate your estrangement from the reality accepted by yourself and the majority.

Who you really are is reflected in the reality you experience within a fiction that represents the future from the perspective of what others cannot see.

The Relationship between Myself and the Parallel Universe is based on the compromise between two entities: Ego and Alter-Ego. The first one asks you to remain within the limits of unanimously accepted normality, while the other one asks you to breach into an unexplored space.

If you don't want leadership to explose you to the attacks of mediocrity, then give shape and substance to your current reality, without reaching an change in limits that can affect your functional structure.

But do not forget ! If you keep yourself in a "parallel world", unaccepted and misunderstood by your contemporaries you can be taken for inappropriate in a normal society.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-relationship-between-myself-and-the-parallel-universe.

The Relentless Darkness Of The Mind Beyond Us

On May 04, 2013

Keep your character intact in disorienting life events, so that your vulnerability won't manifest at its highest.

Two Oxford ex-colleagues have dinner, but only a un diner d'affaire, and that's all. Harold Reynolds and Laura Quinn. Unfortunately, Reynolds can't offer Laura a job at the company where he works, because of a conflict of interests, he claims. But thus, with no harmful intentions, he rips in one movement the petals of one of the most sensitive chrysanthemum.

In this moment of terrible and disarming disdain, the poor woman is overcome by anger, reprobation and fear. Instantaneously, in the melting pot of her temper all those beneficial, optimist and refreshing thoughts she had put her hopes in, are melted and reduced up to a minimum. All her life essence, condensed in a moment of maximum intensity, sore by the shivers it senses, burning like a torch showing the way through darkness, strays away from morality.

It seems that Laura falls into a prolonged darkness of the mind beyond her, turning her into something evil, making her rebel, consuming her with an extraordinary power, devouring her until her last living drop, crashing her whole ethical scaffold. A moment of weakness nobody can understand, aside from the person living it, the main character of this very spontaneous happening of her being.

Just as the speed of a chemical reaction grows based on temperature, so does the flutter of her functional system, the temper that ignites fast, destabilizing any positive normal action, leads Laura towards the land of evil. Something erupts from within her with that impetuousness of a bloodthirsty animal, something inherent to any conscience, a desperation that is about to transform itself into a fiasco that might cost her dearly.

Leadership: Is your character determined to play the determining role of vulnerability representation through an act of opposition to adverse circumstances, by adopting a psycho-emotional approach based on the belief that "tomorrow will be the same as today"?

Laura can't keep her character intact, she becomes vulnerable. The boldness and determination defining her being build their momentum, turning into a diabolic scheme, a plan for absurd, uncalculated vengeance and passionate desire.

She feels that her entire being is crossed by a vehement tension: "To kill him ! To kill the bastard ! ", she mumbles involuntarily in the somber colors of the aggressiveness of her scorned Ego. The concentration of toxic substances which participate to the mental reaction is very big, it doesn't vary, in theory, on the contrary, it triples. Her level of aggressiveness reaches high levels.

This woman, who just seconds ago was the kindest of all humans, who wouldn't have killed a fly, loses her mind. The shaky, feverish hand searches instinctively for something with which to hit her opponent. To grab a knife, a fork, it doesn't matter what, provided it is metal, sharp and hard, lethal from the very first blow. To suddenly drive it through him, deeper, harder, more satisfying.

Leadership: Does the test of your character aim to convey to the world a more suggestive image of the aspect of "a life trapped in the cycle of the most intense experiences", so as to avoid that trap of reasonable assumption that what does not kill you makes you stronger?

But Reynolds doesn't suspect anything. Just as Peyrade, a Balzac character laid more carpets on the floors of his apartment so that the downstairs neighbors wouldn't hear any noise. Reynolds seems to have covered his heart with many protective layers, that are hard to shatter, so that it can tick in peace, without any fears. He keeps looking at Laura with insouciance, like a system that can't generate energy, that isn't able to fight back under any circumstance.

- May I ? the waiter intervenes. A savior moment. Thus forced, the woman's hand retreats slowly, beaten by the unpredictable, yet uncertain. Molecular clashes take place within Laura during the recombination of free radicals – uncertainty, fear, vulnerability – configuring a new apparently functional, yet fragile and unstable structure.

On the conscience walls, light is pouring at places. Weakness vibrates like jaws into mirrors. Temporarily, Laura is filled with a soothing peace, fully confirmed by those ancient words: "My eternal guardian, the heart, keeps watch."

The character of a man who experiences doubt in the midst of life's storms resembles a used laptop: it is inexpensive to maintain, but will not be able to meet all the conditions to cope with more demanding "games".

The fragility that encompasses human nature under the conditions imposed by the needs of a game of the type "I will show them, but... only for money", is the sum of the deepest experiences that you can reveal to yourself in a kind of silent solemnity, when you fail to assume the greatness of working with a changing world.

The relentless darkness of the mind beyond us signals that precarious state of being, which devours man until his last breath. A moment of weakness that no one can understand, except the person experiencing it, a desperation about to transform into a total fiasco.

If you want your leadership to be considered the most valuable result of your ascension process, then keep your character intact in disorienting life events, so that your vulnerability won't manifest at its highest.

 Note: Flawless (2007)

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-relentless-darkness-of-the-mind-beyond-us.html

The Relentless Torture Of The Unknown

On Iunie 31, 2010

Hide well your anxieties and frustrations, in order not to induce the same state to your team.

On September 20, 1519, Fernando Magellan's has been departed from the shore. Only God knows through how many passed this sobresaliente, the anonymous soldier, in order to procure all the things necessary to initiate this difficult mission, whose duration has not been determined.

It is etter the sad truth than the eternal doubt. For months, Magellan's fleet headed to an unknown point on the map. He often deviated from the established track. He sometimes rotated in a circle. However, there was no trace of any strait. The members of the five boats became increasingly worried, especially that Magellan was more and more quiet, cool and distant.

Before starting this journey, Magellan came into possession of an inaccurate map of the famous cosmographer Martin Behaim, which indicated the place where the strait was supposed to be. However, it was only then, after nearly a year of navigation adrift, afloat, he realized that he fell victim of a terrible confusion. That moment, of the truth, was the worst for Magellan's heart. How fake proved to be his route. The data from that map and that report were completely wrong, fanciful. He went in the search of an illusion. The strait was certainly not there where it was indicated on the map.

Are you navigating adrift ? Is your enthusiasm for success a waste of time? Can you afford to overlook the reality?

Leadership: Are you the slave of your own word?

He gave his word, he swore that he would find the strait, but now he doubted of himself. His troubled mind kept telling him that, and his fervent heart kept repeating it to him, that he will never be able to accomplish his mission. Day and night, Magellan was tortured by the thought of guilt, and also by the thought that his crew, who was agonizing of cold, hunger, fatigue and hardship would start a revolt. What will he tell people, what excuse will he invent to support his guiltlessness? To continue his journey, by still claiming that he will achieve his purpose, after all this time when they found nothing, would be a foolishness. Because only a man who does not realize his folly can claim that he can accomplish things beyond his powers.

For people was not difficult to read on the Magellan's face what it was happening in his heart. Because this man, so passionate at first, so confident in the success of the mission that he alone chose and assumed, was increasingly depressed. He kept feeling the need to be alone.

Your attitude, coupled with the atmosphere from your team can encourage people to great achievements? Your performances generate their momentum towards achieving the pursued goals? Do you have to create momentum before asking them to change themselves? Do you always put in readiness all the necessary resources for their proper operation?

When the unknown dramatically makes its appearance, restlessness takes possession of the human soul

It is a real torture, a real hell to run for years after something and not to find it. Magellan knew that his fleet was drifting, that it was lost, lost in the unknown. His sharp senses and his instinct were increasingly sensing the danger. The unknown he balked to explore stopped attracting him, did no longer impress him, but started to frighten him, threaten and intimidate him. The unknown invaded his whole being and forced him to discourage himself, to feel anxious and helpless. Magellan was on the verge to give up to the pressure exerted by the members of his crew.

Are the results that you obtain stimulating your confidence? Are they stimulating the collegiality among the members of your team? What change you must perform in order to create a better climate?

Only danger reveals a man's hidden qualities

The Australian writer, Stefan Zweig, the author of the famous biography of Magellan, has stated a great truth: "One never gets to know a person's character better than by watching his behavior during decisive moments."

Magellan has not left the clock to peacefully follow his path. In a way, God protected him, giving him the strength to overcome that emotional leap. Though overshadowed by a deep sadness, he did not let himself downed.

Everybody bows with resignation before a persevering man. Magellan managed to hold in his crew, he kept down a revolt, and after he sailed adrift for a long time, he eventually managed to find the strait that nowadays still bears his name. He proved who he is, the material he's cut from - a hard, very resistant material. His inner confidence and firmness did not give him up in times of need, but erupted when he had more need of them.

Conclusion: The great "unknown" which occurs unexpectedly even in the life of a leader, should not have devastating effects upon him, especially when there is a strong motivation, especially when working with people becomes difficult. A leader must hide well his anxieties and his frustrations in order not to induce the same state to the team. On the contrary, a "pro-active", but tempered attitude is indicated, together with sharing the real situation.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-relentless-torture-of-the-unknown.html

The Resounding Innovation Of The Art Creator

On July 09, 2014

Seek a new approach for the concept of authority, relying upon a solid form of demonstrating what your science can offer to the world.

Director Eisenstein's innovations, achieve in the film "The Old and The New" don't stop at the visual and auditory image, which were not hitherto attained. We will not enumerate them now, but we must still remember the perfection of the discovery, whose name was given by him, of montage in frame: mise-en-cadre. Composition in depth – a frame in which both the foreground of action as well as those in the background are clear and simultaneously and coordinated play dramatic roles – is devised in "The Old and The new."

The necessity of the emergence of such a movement within the frame is born from the essence of harmonic montage. Although we find emotive sources in those childhood impressions in regards to Poe, in his love for Degas, in readings of Pushkin, Gogol, Dostoevsky. All converged toward the need and possibility of simultaneously keeping under the fire of observation the different levels of the event.

*In "The Old and The New" this took on a precise shape, the idea is exploited and will be carried forward in the Mexican film and especially in "Ivan". But it must be stated once again that the resounding innovation in the means of artistic expression, used after a decade and a half by Wyler and then by Orson Welles, we find long before in the creation and theoretical writings of Eisenstein. **

Do your scientific discoveries have the role of increasing the resistance of leadership in the conditions of a limitation of the quality of results obtained through visual image?

Any approach of the concept of authority, relying on a solid form of demonstrating what science can offer to the world, amplifies the experience of creation and places the leader-artist in the middle of the frame of obtaining a new value by accessing the models and formulas of multiplying the "new". Therefore, the discoveries of his science, ever more consistent, have the role of increasing the resistance of leadership in the conditions of a limitation of the quality of results.

The emblematic value that gives depth to the composition of your work is given by the way you describe an event that has already happened, so that the image you present to the world gathers all its possible consequences on a new theory of knowledge, on a new topic with aesthetic importance or onto a new reality.

And the quality of the results obtained through the visual image is found in the focus of the event, when you have to catch a new hypostasis of your artistic creativity, one coordinated by "featuring" type roles meant to support the promotion of the vision of a convenient world.

Discovering is a creative process that begins with what has been understood as a set of separate events, and ends in surprise, as an expression of the artistic experiences that, together, shape the characters and open the appetite for art.

In leadership, the completion of discovery, amid a multitude of measures and actions of achieving an artistic masterpiece, does not stop with the creative means transposed into practice, which may have never been achieved by anyone else.

Perfection establishes equality between three values, using the proportions of the demands of a new role and of a new authority in the field: a value obtained from a certain percentage of the total of that which you convey, a value falling within an interval of extended uncertainty of forecasts and a value that is lost when calling for a procedure of applying what the science you've appropriated reveals.

If the idea of authority is exploited and carried out through science, then personal creation will have a better-defined form and more accessible to be applied in a field such as leadership. And to achieve a quality leadership that permits the construction of your own authority, respecting the proportion of the elements of forming a new style, it is necessary for innovation to ensure a degree of control for the entire dimension of scientific complexity.

Leadership resistance is given by the visual image and the emotional sources that contribute to the making of a creation that does not cease to amaze through diversity, innovative technology, artistic language, its breadth, the power to present life in its complexity, but above all, by its hidden depth.

The Resounding Innovation Of The Art Creator highlights that way of improving performance, by optimizing the campaign of applying the discoveries in the field of leadership. The individualized approach of innovations among productions of art, which combines the power of creation with the attraction for all that means "special constructions", is absolutely necessary to give continuity to the relationship between vision, composition, improvisation, interpretation and effect.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-resounding-innovation-of-the-art-creator.html

The Restrictive Area Of Contrasts

On January 26, 2014

Test the truth value of what defines you, so you distance yourself from the doubtful identity that limits you.

I know myself, but in relation to what I am or what I am not? An intoxicating glow flickers with a frail flame in the consciousness lamp, like a dying world, because it is born. Created through a superior effort to understand the true version of the Man who owns the truth. Composed, in its turn, of an indefinite lot of small truths, narrow access ways to the great mystery of a galaxy difficult to access, at points of discontinuity of the existential paths that maintain a constant potential difference between the never-ending Self and the deceitful Alter-Ego.

On the way to establishing the first stages of my artistic approach, because art associated with visual expression is my only source of spiritual development, I have learned a lot about what I want to be and about what others think of me as compared to the ability to exploit the lessons of creative and reflective thinking.

Leadership: To what extent do you manage to transform extreme events into your own artistic language, making "misfit" a unique form of expression?

I myself became the expression of an unparalleled art, a very refined, suggestive and different language construction of what the world generally considers to be the formula of a new dominant intellectual structure, succeeding in exalting expression at the level of mastery through the view beyond time. The doubtful identity that limits me is directly correlated with my inability to feel "whole" in a world overwhelmed by extreme events in which I never feel adapted.

The strong man always struggles with the fear of becoming more than he can endure. Art is not just a journey to discovering a new meaning given to existence, events or some inner troubles, but it is also a great class improvisation that you practice by referring to a mountain that you have to conquer. Masutatsu Oyama, one of the greatest fighters of all time, permanently kept in his conscience only one thought: "I'm afraid to fight. I'm afraid to be defeated and lose. However, I am always looking for a new opponent."

Leadership: How can the effects of your winning attitude be justified when the object of your thinking becomes the extension of a self-righteous self-image that does not follow criteria other than those provided by the succession of inner troubles?

Truths that worry Man always compose an evolving world, which is intense and strong in its feelings, as if torn from the unreal sphere of strong opposition, more consistent and intelligent, invariably taking him to another level of its understanding and development.

The effects of your winning attitude can be justified as a departure from a concentric universe when the object of your thinking becomes the extension of a powerful self-image – by having the courage and the virtue of confessing the permanence of the empirically established truths, or even of those forged by imagination from the amazement of the tricky character of a pretentious art.

Undoubtedly, something in me capitulates, withdraws in the disturbing corner of contrasts that threaten my stability, telling me that I should rather escape from that meeting time with the deceitful Alter-Ego. To distance myself from the identity subject to a continuous and progressive stretching of restrictions, which render the extent to which I am subject to limitations. And look at myself from its outskirts.

Leadership: How can your art, like a refined construction of language, reflect vision beyond time, even when questionable identity prevents you from feeling "whole"?

Vulnerable. I am locked in a speed of light at the level of dark thoughts overlapped by another image, a loaned form of some self-cancellation repetitive causes, that reality flatly refuses to accept. Where my reason stores its unrevealed content of contrasts, its hidden meanings, moving from static to dynamic and vice versa, there is the validation of my being that facilitates the meeting with the subconscious - the only one who can order and harmonize everything within me.

In a steady state, when my thoughts are directed towards the destiny of a new being, reborn under the impulse of becoming, there must be continuity between the diluted essence of my diligent nature and the unrewarding appearance of a reality having a finite representation.

Leadership: Are you the adept of that predetermined way of constructing a refined language that provides steadfastness in everything that life means – with its experiences so designed by experience that it can be translated into art without losing its original quality?

The man who ignores its "content" will never be able to properly calculate, in terms of validity of the adopted directions, its exposure to very low or very high temperatures of reality. And leadership, firstly following the cases of bringing man together with the art of knowing himself, is reflected in the way he relates to who he really is when he is surrounded by what is not.

With respect to everything that defines you in relation with who you really are, Anthony Silard, CEO of Global Leadership Institute, said: "If you want to succeed in putting yourself first in life, get out of your own path."

Leadership: Can fighting the fear of becoming "more than you can handle" be seen as the ultimate art form, where every doubt becomes a new dimension of expression of acceptance of the unknown within?

This avoidance of your number one enemy, the self that often draws you farther and farther from the way of your real nature, can be the double deviation of the spine that limits the essential characteristics - those parts of your personality that wants to develop in order to achieve its fullest. Depending on their degree of development, the aspirations and achievements increase, from the lower to the higher needs (need for social consideration, membership, and self-esteem).

Do you know yourself in relation to what you are or what you are not?

The truths you fathom about yourself belong to that evolving world, strong in its feelings and reactions, which, hitting the negative Alter-Ego strong opposition, achieve the performance to prove your own value, well rooted in reality. This reality must be placed at the service of leadership.

Your experiences designed by experience can be translated into art without losing their original quality when they fall under the endeavor to singularize a single creative law – the authenticity of a true vision of life.

The Restrictive Area Of Contrasts designates that area of interference between what you are and what you want to be, under the action of the artistic endeavor that you use to achieve a new vision of the world and of life. Of course, your personality develops and improves the whole life, but it cannot be reconfigured in disagreement with what kind of native you are. And the greater this discrepancy is, the lower the leadership value.

It's hard, but you absolutely need to know yourself, synchronizing with what you are and with the external reality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-restrictive-area-of-contrasts.html

The Result Of An Experiment Called Myself

On February 06, 2014

Be your own analysis model for strengthening leadership, so that you gain a deeper understanding of what you are.

I was sentenced to my own resources of self-knowledge that gave consistency to the scientific discoveries that had an increasing relevance for the field of leadership. Nobody saved me from the compromising madness that I myself had created, from the dilemmas in which I struggled mightily, falling into sleepless nights. And they were of such nature that they always demanded a new answer.

I had become my own model of analysis, the main topic of a crucial experiment called the event, one of the "Open your mind" type. A point of separation from the outside world. Involuntarily, I would ignore the prohibitions that my conscience purposefully imposed upon me, as if under the command of a robot, so that it would test my faith manifested around new intellectual approaches. Uninterrupted, I felt that I was living the captivating experience of a dreamer, surrounded only by own ideas.

The only difficulty was that the most innovative trends of utilizing knowledge concerning the operating principles of a restricted and very complex area, would not always align with the principles unanimously accepted by other researchers in the field. Access to my inner space was difficulty because it put into play, in a completely natural way, the eternal story of the Man who seeks the mystery of Creation.

This prompted me to understand a phenomenon as important as the announcement of discovering a planet similar to Earth that would change the way in which humanity would perceive its place within the Universe. Namely that, through self-knowledge of a higher level, followed by a rotation of the view point and an enhancement of perception, it can give life to a completely scientific and metaphorical art, which is becoming increasingly real.

Leadership: Does your perception of yourself in a space of creation, reflection and dreaming give you the foundation of a thought-sharing experience designed to guarantee you a higher level of evolution?

It was a sustainable exploitation of the Man within me. I needed a sure landmark that would keep me from getting lost, a thread to guide me through this maze of self-knowledge which does not break. Basically, I was trying to make of myself a "Creation" with which to overcome myself, to be proud of, to identify with in a space of mystical or scientific revelations.

I cannot pretend that I have gained a proper, rigorous understanding of my own autonomy. For this adventure across the territory of my own individuality was characterized by an unusual alliance between the substantive elements of the path of knowledge and functional elements of a science without constraints.

Their union constituted an increasingly active pressure, a minimum dose of absolute, the imprecise basis of an experience of duality of thought that made me categorize myself, systematically, as a close of a complex reality. Or a true copy thereof.

Creation is the result of a process of self-mastery that begins with "Open your mind" in search of a deeper and higher knowledge, and continues with "I am what I am" in the direction of the open (and unlimited) horizons of virtue and wisdom.

Leadership: Is the whole approach of asserting your thinking based on an inexhaustible source of self-knowledge evaluated by the free manifestation of a revelation experienced through the "Public-Private" duality?

The prolonged usage of a system of arranging the development preferences used in the process of self-knowledge, with the opportunity to establish a harmonic proportion between leadership and intellectual creation, interconnected to everyday life, influences the conduct of relations between what you are, what you do and what you get from your experiences.

You can take advantage of them by getting directly involved in the finding of new "ideas-answers", so as to feel the pulse of the productivity zone expanded towards the vicinity of the borders of performance and accepting its objective values into complex shapes. Leadership can self-destruct if the representation of the agreement between your own resources of knowledge and the effective adjustment of yourself, during the length of your continuous efforts of inward research with the purpose of improved performance, does not meet its own analysis model that supports the idea of extended autonomy.

Public-Private duality occurs when the potential of your self to relate to a higher knowledge comes into contact with the potential of other people to express in unison the logic of a thought that is not prepared to recognize the merits and importance of the Creation in which you manifest yourself.

Leadership: Do you manifest your determination in leading an "Open your mind" type of campaign at the level of what the Higher Self can communicate to you, in order to extend your knowledge to a Macro-Universe level?

Only through a higher level of self-knowledge, integrated into the aspects of leadership, can it give life to an art that proves itself as being completely scientific, metaphoric, that can become real. Only through a sustainable exploitation of the Man within you will you be able to find that sure landmark that will keep you from getting lost in that area in which you have no chance in expanding and perfecting your intellectual creation.

The most important and noblest conquest of man is the Self, without challenging experience and training value gained over time. Can you find that durable thread to guide you through the great labyrinth of self-knowledge? Do you manifest your determination in leading an "Open your mind" type of campaign?

You will never be able to appreciate leadership until you realize, creating a crescendo of stimulating type patience, that the entire approach of confirming creative thought has at its basis an inexhaustible source of knowledge and self-knowledge that can fuel that "switch", that doesn't jam at the first sign of a power outage, with sufficient energy. An energy of unknown nature hitherto.

The switch that connects only to the storage device of the basics of science, acting as a receiver, from the local network content of information and ideas that you manage at a mental level, offers the possibility of managing the entire flow of production of the rules you follow in everything you do. Without jamming, this switch offers the innovation and improvement of the quality of leadership a long warranty period before the "expiry" of the normal duration of use, equipping yourself with new performances.

To extend your knowledge at the level of the Macro-Universe means to train your Self to manifest itself fully through Creation, so that it itself becomes visible in the archetypal image of the totality of which you are surrounded.

The Result Of An Experiment Called Myself designates that process of knowledge into the smallest of details, of your own "Self", of clarifying the aspects concerning who you are, what you want to be and in which direction you're headed.

Man may lose his raison d'etre if he fails to comply to his inner space, which is the source and foundation of that experience, increasingly deeper and clearer in its entirety, which gives meaning and identity to his personality.

To alchemists, the idea of inner space, which shelters the creative energy, is often symbolized by the image of the circle circumscribed to the point. Or by the image of a temple.

You will not be able to penetrate the mysteries of the science of leadership if you fail to discover the treasures hidden within this temple. Within whose walls is kept, through an exceptional combination, that lapidis fortuno that vibrates and resonates with power and greatness.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-result-of-an-experiment-called-myself.html

The Revealing Law Of The Magician (II)

On November 14, 2012

The way you shape your perceptions regarding the objective reality, determines the way you approach leadership.

The thing that was troubling me more than anything was the mystery. The mystery of any unknown, of any creation, of any existence, of any human being. The force of a fiery call, truly dangerous by the very effect that it produced, and which was opposing any idea inoculated by others. I wanted to pierce the mystery of knowledge and to undeniable accept it, regardless of cost.

Like a brave man, who throws himself into the sea during a storm from an excess of adrenaline, I plunged into researches regarding the existence and the characteristics that defined the mystery. Through the darkest paths of the unknown, I was wandering just to calm my soul, the most coveted desire. The answer to my searches, chaining me with its broad wings around a reality artificially fabricated, did not somehow partake of that states, on which I was better to remain silent?

How much blind I was ! Like someone took my mind. An increasingly violent reaction against the old patterns and prejudices. Was I doing well by continuing to simply spread ideas unchecked by others, to let switched on nonstop the inspirational accelerator, looking for new challenges? For it was a blindness that was not coming from the optical device, but the other one, more terrible, that ask questions, seek answers, which causes the brain to unconsciously absorb all the information just as the sea takes with it the little piles of sand.

Nothing was left behind, but a great void, the science that could not find the reason of being. The blindness, wandering, darkness of mind due to the knowledge accumulation and clarifying the mysteries. As a result, it was woven ceaselessly, without my knowledge, my own identity. One that reflected an image that was not consistent with the reality that I knew, but with the richness of an ineffable mystery, of revelation. Of a confrontation, pretty brutal with something, of which I could not disaccustom.

Leadership: Can you finish the image of a personality predestined towards the enigma to a maximum effect so as to broaden the meaning of the concept of your artistic work?

The magician lived a destiny as tangled as one of the Great Alchemist Bötger who, endeavoring to produce gold discovered on this occasion the porcelain – a thousand times more important. And at one and at the other, the basic idea only made to send a strong inner impulse, a perseverance which excluded any kind of compromise.

It was an essence in him that changed less frequently than it was expected. A truth that was hiding a mystery, an excuse, an intricate game, a chain of revelations, in the pace of some intense palpitations. Bearing in them the impulse of the extraordinary discoveries that led him to a theory, a symbol, a "milestone" with broad meanings.

And, so the magician has outlined in his own style the famous "Ace" of magic, the much controversial "Hocus-Pocus".

Leadership: Are you able to create a memorable visual experience by calling on the reason to provide a more advantageous alternative to represent the mystery of a new discovery?

Before trying to conceive an idea about a magician, try to make an accurate assessment of yourself from the perspective of a treasure discoverer that presents his successes in the form of enigmas. You actually prove them that you are capable of provoking the appearance of the object or the designated fact, but at the same time you have to define this miracle. You cannot make a breakthrough without covering it with the thick veil of your creative power.

The show of magic must be a movie about yourself, carried out mostly of the individual characteristics of your structure's most important elements, which would really surprise you. A movie, which would give identity and meaning to your existence with that dynamic and valuable theme, with those sequences, repetitions, effects, synchronized by the tone of question "Who I Am".

To understand the leadership, the durable firmament of which are suspended like some lamps your strengths and weaknesses, it means to penetrate the mystery of a knowledge that builds the real, and to accept it undeniable, regardless of the cost. It means, sometimes to wander like a fugitive through the darkest paths of the unknown, in the search of that "magical jewel" by means of which to free your resources and to reinvent your mission of "to be".

Leadership: Can you achieve that "Hocus-Pocus" that shakes the essence of your personality without feeling trapped in the spell of a miracle that simply takes possession of you?

The famous actress, Oana Pellea, put the point on "I" in terms of her evolution, by saying: "I do not know greater voluptuousness than this process self-searching, in the attempt to know me, of self-overcoming."

And you, as a potential leader, as a man of success, you are in a permanent process of self-searching. Like a funny game, as if lacking rules, in which you have, or you do not have luck, and in which you have to surprise yourself. Being forced to play it to the end.

Your searches, this come-and-go that resurrects you, renews you, and raises you up where it is hard to reach, but which just as well tries to confuse you and even to exhaust you mentally, are underpinning your personal development and your leadership.

Just as the avid reader accepts the text as a game where he encounters himself, in which he identifies during the reading with certain characters, so the man who persists in the search of self-knowing, eventually reaches to accept more easily the character from his life's fairy tale.

That essence in him, which changes less frequently than it is expected, finally solidifies and materializes into another way of being. As if watering his whole world with a mysterious fluid that penetrates his whole body, in a closed circuit, thereby restoring the harmony disturbed by the misperceptions of reality.

Magic is the product of a reality camouflaged by the seductive aesthetic of an impenetrable wonder.

The Revealing Law Of The Magician refers to the way to accomplish a miracle whose discovery depends on the essence of what it means to live a life of passion and authenticity.

Do you regularly make an accurate assessment of yourself? Can you materialize the essence of your personality in a different way of being? Is your personality hiding a truth, a mystery, an excuse of not applying a major change? Can you accomplish that "Hocus-Pocus" that would draw out of the shadow the essence of your personality?

The way you shape your perceptions regarding the objective reality, determines the way you approach leadership.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-revealing-law-of-the-magician-II.html

The Revealing Law Of The Magician (III)

On Noiembrie 15, 2012

Learn to share your secrets with the likes of other people, directly associating the results of your work with the attentive attitude and gratitude for the value of life.

I had a great thought in my life, or better said the thought owned me. It possessed me entirely with the power of an unknown force, discreetly expressed, which would remain throughout my evolution. An idea, a cliché to which I devoted all my life, time, troubles, questions, all my ups and downs, all those revealing moments that threw me like into another dimension, where the time and space were taking another value.

And this thought, with all its additions, with all those nuggets of consciousness that preceded it, gave me the opportunity to explore the inner surface of a mountain without climbing it, an experience about which I did not know how difficult it is. The tendency towards originality at all costs, the desire to "stylize" myself beyond the human limits, of the imaginable, led me towards a secret world.

To search, to penetrate like a relentless researcher the mystery of that Perpetuum Mobile, of the force that sets in motion the entire human potential, the flame that can be constantly maintained burning steadily and lively. To push the limits of the leadership somewhere beyond the limit of the unimaginable, but without destroying the healthy principles on which has been constituted the "Man" within me. To continue slipping various aspects and findings in a show where the laws of nature are becoming hard to hide, and kneading some little assurances against any disagreements that might arise from it.

Magic, the great soul event, a deep call to the proximity to the center of revelations beyond the purely artistic act, in turn extremely captivating, was an increase in the need to express myself through the power of the act of creation in order to influence the reality of my own illusion of life.

Leadership: Does your motivation to get an authentic picture appears as a different dimension of experiencing life or as a dimension of a way of being by virtue of which you possess singular features?

When you become acquainted with a science that takes the form of the ability to turn something into something else, against the laws known and accepted unanimously by the rest of the world, you form a broader impression of the change produced according to your own will. Once formed, this impression cannot easily change.

However, will is not proof of your endowment with the skills needed to participate more actively in the spheres of social life or in the high spheres of leadership. Therefore, magic is not necessarily a guarantee of success, but it can certainly become an integral part of life, your own work, your own thinking.

As part of an effort to explore the lessons of an unforgettable experience with perspectives and revelations backed by alternative thinking, people try to enjoy the value the magician creates and leaves behind. That is why I think it is important – both for their own realization and for their well-being – that they should cultivate an image of a "perfect man" who does not conceal fear of rejection but rather feeds its position of excellence with new spicy details and new desires to live, as a victory over life and its own limits.

Your image in the world is reflected by how you live your life according to the mechanisms of the so-called mysteries of magic and its various manifestations of strength that test originality and inspiration.

The magic and the image left behind, drawn up by a long list of attempts to present facts from a higher reality, are related to the interior that the magician reveals through the exterior that can be controlled by the power to give life to a complex range of states and feelings.

But, equally, an appropriate attitude, essential to revealing the interior, is the beauty of the most sincere feelings. However, most often, the magician's image is based only on the hidden features of his personality. That's why I decided to address in all my writings both dimensions of man: a dimension of the person by virtue of which he possesses singular features and a dimension of consciousness much deeper than thinking.

One of the great mysteries of magic has the "Challenging of Authority" ticking option. The famous sorcerer Oberon Zell-Ravenheart specifies the following warning in his grimoire:

"As an apprentice, you have to constantly ask yourself "why" something is accomplished and "why" this particular thing is done in a certain way. Understanding "why" leads to a better understanding of the causes. In fact, what will protect you against the artificiality created by the great illusionists is the ability to ask why a certain thing is asked and expected of you. You must always be able to say "NO" when someone gives you a task that you know is contrary to your interest. The ability to ask questions will protect you from those who will want to manipulate you."

Leadership is the image you need to get from yourself in the context of a high degree of assurance of "unity in diversity", without falling into the trap of forcing your limits to completing a new vision of reality.

The Revealing Law Of The Magician stands in knowledge, but especially in power and inner freedom, values and experiences that relate his entire career path.

A magician knows that leadership is learned from the way it shares its secrets with the meanings of others, directly associating the results of its work with the attentive attitude and gratitude towards the value of life.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-revealing-law-of-the-magician-III.html

The Revealing Law Of The Magician (I)

On November 04, 2012

Push the leadership beyond the limit of the "unimaginable" without destroying the healthy principles on which has been constituted the "Man" within you.

Nobody knew his true identity and true intentions. The magician was the type of person, who would go far enough to protect his secrets. His practices - a mosaic of subtleties and depths.

In his brain was a kind of dark come and go, a break between past, present and future. Unnatural memories, strange visions, fugitive images, interpretations from where some more realistic, others more fantastic, inner commands, prototypes of some new beginnings or endings. All kinds of changes that reflected or redirected the "whole" of the man. Roles, masks that always composed another presence, strange appearances of some characters, each of it having also its antipode.

All were floating, mixing and intercrossing awry, losing their forms, growing then beyond measure, then suddenly perishing like some scattered thoughts in the distant dark.

Suddenly, in the middle of the stage, the magician made some strange signs, as if he would have sent some mysterious messages. The spectators watched him with a boundless curiosity. He perceived their reaction long before making his magic number.

For he saw in the depth of the human psyche, until the last ramifications of their feeling, there where all their desires and expectations were brewing. He could penetrate the depths of the people's thinking, until the assimilation of their perceptions and emotions, with the same speed as the blood crosses the veins on its way to the heart. Everything on the stage was running according to his will.

The world of the spectators was located beneath his world. As if he created it. One is the magic number that will do the trick.

Do you owe leadership with an "illusion" that changes the rational and emotional structure of other people by associating with the role of an artist who is amazed at how well he plays his role?

Many times, only the most experienced leaders can have access to the vital resources that sets in action the motivational, mental and emotional system of the "Man". The interventions in this complicated system of beliefs, in this unitary whole of emotions, values and principles, usually require a "local anesthetic" in the sensitive area that is ticking. Or, even a complete reassembly of the components that make it work, at great risk of course.

Leadership is that act of magic that can transform people's reasoning and experiences into a new measure of the continuity of a limit of creation that few can overcome. The creation aims at restoring the image of a fabulous world, at the limit between dream and reality, which then confirms your appearance in a leading role at the border between life and death. If you want to be an act of creation that everyone can applaud to, in relation to something tempting and fascinating, you must help organize your escape from an imaginary parallel space, but at the same time, one very close to the perspective of reality.

Important is the maintenance of a secret fire, of a living torch. Finding a fuel to feed it, through a mosaic of subtleties and depths, to make people partakers at the show which introduces the concept of "all-in-one-show" uniting their commitment around a substantial attitude towards the present reality.

Leadership: Are you the prisoner of a world which you can hardly perceive, by the fact that you accept to express yourself in a way that is not your own, but it makes you feel superior?

A very important part of the leadership's self-evaluation process is the study of the "Man" within you. To step into the big world, into the great unknown of your entire Ego, who can inspire you in the creation of a genuine alternative of increasing the influence, is like the elevator door that opens only for a while, then closes without allowing the entry of somebody else.

A kind of force of attraction between the contrasting poles of your own personality that support, or on the contrary, restrict your development. A transition from "to be" to "not to be" that keeps you trapped in your own prison of the mind, transforming you into a slave of your own perceptions, ideas, clichés, to which you devoted all your life and time.

If you want to raise your leadership to the rank of "magic" if you want to handle it very well, then you must learn to deal with it: to catch the elevator at the right time, and to push the button, which controls the ascent to the top floor, but without stopping between the floors. This button must have a special security, and not to cause a blocking. Nothing should keep you captive in the space between real and imaginary, between the limits and the man, where the leadership cannot manifest itself free.

Leadership: Can you turn your splendor into a powerful source of magic that communicates to others the lucidity of not becoming its servant?

Splendor is the reason that helps you trust yourself when trying to successfully contribute to completing a bet with yourself: that you are able to adopt the position of a conqueror and stay that way for a long time. Splendor cannot be achieved through a simple game of hiding to the extreme, it cannot be attributed only to a rich imagination, but it can be induced by the multitude of accords that make up a story, through the many scenes that make up and revolutionizes the idea of metamorphosis.

Magic has to be a testimony to your splendor, a revelation of a profound and unpredictable feeling, a revelation of a surprise benefit at the end of an adventure, but at the same time it must be a rapprochement of progressively revealed truth called: "I am a part of you ! "

Can you explore the inner surface of a mountain without climbing it? Are you looking forward to push the leadership somewhere beyond the limit of the unimaginable? From what you knead the little assurances against any disagreements that might arise from the Man - Leader relationship? Are you getting lost in your own prison? Are you getting lost in a space, where the reality gradually departs of the leadership's science? Are you trying to create from leadership a world that would be situated beneath your world?

Being an exceptional magician means dedicating your entire life to an idea that defies the boundaries of the unanimously accepted understanding, placing all your knowledge in a unique setting that gives you the opportunity to more leisurely and intensely enjoy the stupefaction of the spectators who do not know what to believe anymore.

Conclusion: A leader is a model, which in his turn generates models. For having a great power of influence on other people, you must first be recognized as a role model. You must possess that ability not to deviate from the healthy and positive principles, on which was constituted your Ego, but also that skill to predict people's reactions to the actions undertaken by you.

No, it is not magic and not even illusion; it is a hard work, permanent, first of all, with yourself.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-revealing-law-of-the-magician.html

The Rich Treasures Of Hidden Truths

On January 01, 2014

Enhance the value of leadership, using the others' realities as a starting point towards the positive shaping of your personality.

Tormented by his own creative activity, Eisenstein didn't pay any attention to the horrible living conditions. He was twenty years old and had an enormous appetite for work, a burning passion for art. He endured the piercing cold without as much as a care, preoccupied by his creation. He endured hunger, sometimes even forgetting about it. One day, director Eisenstein coming from a rehearsal for "The Mexican", had left his piece of black bread on the electrical panel in the theatre.

*Alexandrov, the newest addition to the group, was hungry and he threw himself at the bread and started to eat. When Eisenstein noticed, he picked on a horrible fight with him. Then Alexandrov managed to explain to him that he hadn't eaten in two days. Then, Eisenstein, who managed to eat the previous day, gave him the rest of the bread. This way they started a very close friendship that would last over ten years.

Leadership: Can you frame your daily experience in a virtuous exercise that contrasts strongly with the neutral background of a creative work that resists the ruin of memory?

One of the functions of art is that it aligns the meaning of an optimal deployment of important events of life with the magic of memory that nothing can erase from the image of a process of relationship with those closest to it. Art is not only found in the information provided in a painting of great value, nor in the passion with which the director deals with the most difficult scenes, but is found in the way you relate to a present that feeds a lot on the flashiest memories.

An artist increases the value of his creation using the realities of others as a starting point for the positive modeling of his own personality. He puts his experience in a virtuous exercise, penetrated by a certain impetus of new forms of thinking in relation to the immediate reality.

This means that the deepest source of his abundance of ideas and the fundamental condition of his practical character is that particular form of collective identity, conditioned by the reaction of other people to situations that cause within him particular, contradictory feelings, permanently changing the way of seeing the world.

An art born in a situation that tests the resistance to change and the degree of acceptance of others as well as the need to become more flexible and adaptable is distinguished by the development of the ability to look at the emotional needs of his peers, and not only his own. The most inspirational art is often a reproduction of an event that leads to a deviation from the predictions originally developed, and can be conceived as a cohesive phenomenon, a notion of transition from static to dynamic, which excludes exclusion.

Leadership: Can you release your art from the empire of interests foreign to it, a process following which you will change the meaning of what you are able to build on your own?

A quote taken from a web page sounds like this: "Don't judge people by their appearance, but try to reach deeper in their heart, because only what's in there matters. You could discover around you people that, at first sight, don't inspire too much trust. But if you gave yourself time to know them better, you'd find infinite resources of unconditional love and sincere friendship within them."

Oh well, this second reality doesn't contain a unique purpose in itself, with a truth that must be understood in all its clarity. Lastly, it manifests not only as a means to rise to the most elegant of behaviors, en route to attaining an accomplished of personality, but more likely as an instrument which helps you fulfill a particularly positive part: releasing art from the influence of interests that are foreign to it.

This foreign interest in art is reflected in some kind blind search around those same eternal and dreadfully boring subjects, in a hesitation to understand the images relevant for the realization and argumentation of innovative ideas. If what happens in your life cannot be exploited in a particular way of using the means of expression, then everything that represents you will not meet the criteria of sure and delicate reasoning of a genius artist.

The guarantee of creative activity is revealed by the revelation of a friendship marked by an unexpected event that cannot be fully controlled. Everything strongly connected with leadership leans on the shoulders of this art, that becomes with help of the objective attributes of the reality you have become aware of, the nucleus of independent development of a new vision of originality.

The value of your personality is like a support wrapped in an insulating jacket, first it must resist the pressure exerted by exposure to external conditions, and then it must remain untouchable in its composition and at the same time it must be understood in its whole. The personal value gains "mobility" when it uses, in a positive and responsible manner, all its weapons on you, and it uses them for your own good when necessary.

Virtuosity is the artist's quality to see the emergence of an atypical situation, with a sense of deja-vu, which occurs in the context of a changing world, a situation marked by the prolongation of a reality that always opens up farther way from the limited horizons of the ordinary.

The Rich Treasures Of Hidden Truths agree with everything that resonates in man's conscience as long as it feels fulfilled, interested in accomplishing some radical changes, impossible to reach without a confirmation of its value from the others.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-rich-treasures-of-hidden-truths.html

The Right Hand Of The Hegemon

On January 12, 2010

Build a very strong personality for people to unconditionally align to your beliefs, ideals and actions, putting you in the position of an eagle that determines its hatchlings to look at the sun and demand that they not be blinded by its light.

A brave man, named Dorieus, presented before Dionysius, the ship captain of Phocaea. Dorieus was an extraordinary warrior, who could face four or even five soldiers at once and score a victory. Fearless, he always launched forth in the battle only for the sake of fighting. He was a feared fighter. But he did not have leadership skills. That is why he insisted to serve Dionysius, in order to fight against the Persians.

Dionysius asked him:

- Why do you offer yourself to serve me, a poor captain, who does not even have a gold bracelet on his hand, who fights only for the glory of his city and his own?

Dorieus knew that Dionysius was a fierce and severe man, who often forced his crew to row to exhaustion and who, hypnotized by his own ambition, was ready to fight to the last soldier. He replied:

- If I ask you to receive me in your crew, I do it only to respect my principles of fighting. Paid or unpaid, I would rather fight on a boat with rowers who comply with the orders of their captain than on one where the crew select or reject its captain wherever the wind may blow. I think you are the only appropriate captain for a naval battle with the Persians.

Leadership: Are you sincere in formulating an application to join an order that can be honored in any circumstance, but receiving extended support in a form that does not follow the pattern of approaching a difficult reality set out in a background matter?

Dorieus, the most skilled and feared fighter of that time, was able to foresee who would win and who would lose in the battle with the Persians. He immediately realized that Dionysius was a very ambitious man by nature, who knew how to use the force of his united crew and how to engage in a battle. He would not have tried to join him if he had been a coward without strength and a firm determination and, especially, if he had not had an enlightened mind.

Can you "push" the entire force of people to the square of your leadership? Invincibility, as well as vulnerability of a crew depends on its captain. Dionysius, in his turn, was such a brave captain, that he would have given his life for any of his men, even if he was very strict with them and often forced them to work until exhaustion.

He was the kind of leader who never says to people: "I hope I will win this battle", but on a tone of abiding certainty: "We will win this battle". He was so sure of his victory, of his leadership skills, that he inspired courage and trust to everyone, inspiring that impressive force that people need to consider themselves insurmountable.

The formulation of an application to join an order that can be honored in any circumstances is usually given extended support in a form that does not follow the model of dealing with a difficult reality set out in a background matter: behavior, content or idea, should not become the object of others' negotiation.

Leadership: Do you find your recognition that makes you feel completely and drastically superior by expressing your belief that what can happen to you is unequivocally directed towards providing conditions for achieving any of the limits of a "defense proportionate to the attack"?

The fate of a battle does not depend on the people's numbers, but on their qualities. True powerful people always want to come out winners or to join the winner's sect. Dorieus was such a man. He wanted to fight against the Persians – his archenemies, but he needed a driving force.

So he allied Dionysius, immediately becoming his right hand. Together, they fought in several battles, always acting in tandem. Dionysius was a great navigator, an excellent captain and the driving force supplying the necessary energy for success, but not at all a fantastic fighter like Dorieus. In his turn, Dorieus, through his exceptional fighting qualities, was Dionysius' pillar and his solid foundation, giving him an additional safety reason to fight the Persians, helping them to endure and prevail.

No leader, no matter how skilled, brave and well organized, would be able to carry out his plans without an aid and a reliable right hand by his side, ready to intervene when situations gets difficult, who would step in to fill up the gaps and add value.

Consequently, he who wants to rise more above people and achieve his goals will have to seek a right hand to follow him willingly and always be there for him, especially when going on beaten paths.

In negotiation, reaching any of the limits of a "defense proportionate to the attack" is to establish from the beginning all the details of a benevolent affiliation, but so that you are perceived by those who follow you as "the Bad Man" in case of total disobedience.

Conclusion: A leader must always appoint an assistant or a stand-in-man for when he is temporarily absent or unable to exercise his powers (currently, this requirement is specified in various regulations and laws).

This stand-in-man should be chosen to continue the leader's strategy or policy, but at the same time, they both must have converging interests. If differences emerge between them, they will cause the destabilization of the team and alteration of their cohesion.

Therefore, a leader has absolute need of a "right hand" and under no circumstances of a "left leg" to throw him difficulties in the way.

 Note: Mika Waltari - Turms, Kuolematon, editura Polirom, 2002.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-right-hand-of-the-hegemon.html

The Right Man At The Right Place

On March 25, 2009

Increase your personal value, by showing a genuine concern towards your potential to make things work.

It is told that the manager of an oil company was faced once with a major difficulty, requiring an urgent solution. The company had to invest 3.5 billion dollars for starting a refinery that not long ago was devastated by a huge earthquake. For he could not go personally, the manager had to appeal to a reliable person that would negotiate with the banks in his absence for obtaining a loan.

He immediately contacted by telephone the only employee he trusted, and told him: "I need you for a very important job. It is a task for which few are suitable, but you were made for it. You will do whatever I say and you will not put questions ! "

The negotiation was successful because that employee followed precisely the manager's indications. Not long after, he was placed in the position of assistant manager.

Leadership: Are your capabilities complemented by the practical verifiability approach in terms of establishing a closeness to an image that represents you through a superior experience of connecting to an inevitable conformism?

Even if the respective employee did not have any experience in negotiation, the manager appealed to his help because he had very much confidence in him. The manager intuited very well who is the most suitable person for that task, and he was not wrong. By the choice made, he proved that not always the employees who occupy some positions or who have a certain experience are the best placed to meet the requirements for the fulfillment of certain tasks.

An inevitable conformism is a step forward due to the trust bestowed upon you by someone in support of a cause that was never yours to begin with.

When the leader entrusts certain tasks to an employee, he has the responsibility to follow them up and to accomplish them. The most competent leaders intuit which are their employees' skills and what they are they capable to do, that is why, in order to obtain excellent results they choose ably the persons capable of solving the most important problems. In some situations, it is possible that an employee from a medium position to face certain tasks better than one who holds a senior position.

The abilities of the respective employee had the endorsement of practical verifiability. His potential of acting and to succeed, which generated the manager's confidence, represented his own "signature" that validated his value. Some of the qualities, which made him admirable, were: honesty, integrity, ability to listen, ability to count on him and conscientiousness. His "signature" had a solid reputation and matched the character searched by the manager.

You could also support your image through a "signature" to be distinguished by something fundamental - such as, competence, professionalism and responsibility. This signature reveals your personality, the list of your character traits, and highlights your practical skills of action, not the theoretical ones. Your progress to the top starts from this signature that is for many an unattainable argument, and namely, the verifiability. In other words, your performance will be verified by others for not being questioned.

Leadership: Can you offer a convincing demonstration of continuity in estimating the value that others appreciate without revealing the basic component of the difference between what defines you permanently and what defines you when you dress a certain way?

The managers cannot ignore an employee who is always active, dedicated, enthusiast, which involves himself with the whole being in the work he makes, and who is always ready, at any time, to amend his efforts for the good of the company. Conversely, they search these kind of people who are willing and able to complete their work tasks in due time, regardless of the volume of work. (These employees who always put things in motion are the best seen in the company, and often they are the highest paid.)

Hence, for career advancement it is necessary to win the trust of the manager, and the easiest way for this, is to show that you are able to accomplish the work tasks of which you are responsible. If you will always be the right man at the right place, you will have a lot of chances to grow in the eyes of the manager, who will undoubtedly appeal to you more often. It will not take long until you will be advanced into a leading position.

Just as originality was always recognized among the main notes of art, so your potential to be brilliant will be recognized by everyone, especially by the top people, only if your practical skills match their requirements and can be used in different situations. The basic component of the difference between what defines you permanently and what defines you when you dress a certain way is the consistency of the impeccable image claim you resonate with at any time.

Are your practical skills meeting the demands of the top people on what you can do without being pushed back?

The Right Man At The Right Place highlights the concordance between two entities that, although belonging to different levels of experience and skill, need close cooperation to move forward.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-right-man-at-the-right-place.html

The Road To Hell (II)

On December 11, 2018

Learn to appreciate the art of an unparalleled existential image that you become what I suggested you experience through my emotions.

We were headed aimlessly on the endless paths of an ever-accelerating world, preoccupied with the transfiguration of reality and a new reflection on the meaning of life. Not only the existence of the fleeting and fugitive was handing me wherever I went, in an almost fictitious collage, because it seemed to me a hallucination of memory that did NOT overwhelm the reconstruction of the energy and freedom fragments that had almost fled from my soul. But, at the same time, my fears, the obsessive ideas someone is experiencing in a "trip of horror", were crossing my path.

A life earned from a judgement of the self is like a machine that never stops, in order to reach some energy consumption parameters that should be framed in individual values such as: the spirit of a challenger. Everything seemed to be borrowed from one of Borges' fantasies: my story was the symbol of who I was, as I lived at maximum intensity a life that was nothing but a spiritual torture of a piece of hell.

Leadership: Are you ready to set the axis of your destiny that is seen "reversed" in the mirror, in the complexity of intrigue and adventure in a complicated existential scenario that seems endless?

In my moments of driving dementia, hell only exists as a consequence of any instantaneous act, only if we are aware of the deviation of the direction and of the speed from the observance of some road norms. Nothing was in my way. With an autumn-like flared imagination, worthy of an artist who changes reality a bit when looking to link the present to the past, I stubbornly insisted to repeat a dream that seemed more than real, seeming to materialize constantly and irrepressibly.

The dream of offering myself up to unmeasured ambitions, having the character of the occasional adventures of the wandering knights in medieval productions, was a response to the evolution of safety. From the outward appearance of the action trajectory, that is to say, after the chain of events and circumstances flowing one after the other, everything seemed to happen under the magic impact of a conjunctive euphoria.

The mirage that always shines on the horizon is the intersection of art with the experiment. The art of looking at life differently and the experiment of believing yourself to be God. I stepped on red. I totally lost my sense of direction. The axis of my destiny, which was seen "reversed" in the mirror of my immeasurable ego, could be defined by exerting a new explosive action, combined with adrenaline, which succeeded in stopping when I violated the law.

The only existential scenario that seems to be endless is finding your own authenticity in the way you do priority things when you feel the need to test your limits.

I saw a woman on the side of the road with a face I knew as mine, reflected in the window. Thus, the road was no longer a temptation to escape from a quiet life, an increase in the speed with which you invade the feeling of HIGH, the feeling of dilating a moment of full vitality necessary in response to a foolish idea placed in a timeless universe and without limits.

In fact, the situation I was in was best described by Marguerite Yourcenar in "The Memoirs of Hadrian": "I was admitting in this back and forth the movement of the gear of the immense machine I was pivoting for. I felt a moment of excitement at the sight of this lonely form, the flaming passage burning in the chest of the man in the midst of a world full of dangers."

The woman walked to the front window and leaned very slowly. A terrible tension paralyzed me in the shadow of thinking that I would get more involved in a game full of uncertainties. Her marvelous face was seen as a deviation from optical realism, in the chiaroscuro of that misty autumn evening, as if through a magic of the most insignificant gesture, through a distortion of perceptions of the world, in the complexity of intrigue and adventure, a complicated existential, tempting and rarely encountered scenario.

Just when the heart beats disturbed my bare silence, the masterpiece of this unique presence was remarked by the excellence of the virtue of subordinating to the desire to like maximally, to indulge in a moment of savor, emotion, mystery. It seemed to be dominated by an immutable law by the infallible method of leading the temptation of those who penetrate into its visual perimeter. She seemed to want to enchant me with a magical incantation, suggesting the endlessness to the highest degree of the artistic creation to which a painter gives the vibration of the time lived with the dreamed one.

Leadership: What is the equivalent of the nuance of meaning you choose to fit into a life experience amplified by the intensity of emotion that someone has transmitted to you in a particular circumstance?

The equivalent of the nuance of meaning I chose to fit the life experience amplified by the intensity of emotion the mysterious being conveyed to me is the enlivening that never left me, the pride of always belonging to a fleeting moment.

In other words, the whole situation seemed a sort of rebellion of the confusion over a supposition of mutual acceptance between two similar beings with one goal: to not miss the occasion of an escape from everyday numbness, feeling the need to find what really matters for the exercise of life.

The road becomes a mystery of an uncertain present, a mystery of a soul that loves art and lives in its fullness due to the flavor with which somebody delights their senses, especially the savor with which they tell of their adventures. The road begins to be traced as an extensive symbolic way that makes it different from the reality of a no-perspective existence, from where my role to enter the field of vision of a high-vibrating being, and actually understand what it conveys, not only what distinguishes it from the rest of the world.

Judging by the way in which every existence divides the fate with the power of expression of a visionary mystic, making me a creator looking for compensation in the universe of continuous struggles with speed changes, flashing, turns and red crossings, with judgments and momentum impulses, I would say that I was sensitive to heroic attitude, to aspiration to great deeds, to the will to escape from everyday reality.

Leadership: Are you able to judge your own life from the perspective of an unexpected stall, with the help of the desire to be what you feel you are in a defining moment of someone else's life?

Only the unexpected encounter with a man of the present moment, a mysterious character dominated by the sound echoes of some future time, can change something from the fragments of an intensely lived, but incoherent life through the exercise of intuition.

Reader. On your journey through the wilderness, from desert to fountain, you turned to the highway to hell. On the move, you have seen the intensity of a stimulus dependent on other truths in the world as if found in obvious contradiction with the logic of creation revealed in the logic of existence, being predestined to the transition from fictional to real, from general to particular. Which gives you some sense of repetition of a dream event.

And if you were stopped in infernal traffic and you noticed the face of a beautiful woman reflected in the window, it means you depend on the feeling of a deja-vu that whispers that you did not waste your time reading these lines. I became You, or like Borges says: "You have become what I have suggested to you to experience through my emotions."

The unintentional stop in a space you do not know is the certain proof of a successful visual artist who knows how to recognize the possibility of escaping the banal, monotony, the routine of life, the impasse generated by the "absurd" on the path to a direction that can always be doubted.

Do you know how to appreciate the art of an unparalleled existential image?

The Road To Hell is the journey you make from imaginary to emotion, from revelation to reason, depending on the mirage of the sensational phenomenon of the transition from virtual to real, and vice versa.

 Note: Chris Rea - The Road To Hell

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-road-to-hell-II.html

The Road To Hell (I)

On November 29, 2018

The way you treat what happens in your life has as a consequence your condition from the moment immediately following the occurrence of a change of reality that no one recognizes.

Sometimes I think of myself as a world trapped between the past moment of a lost life, full of things that eternity does not recall, and the intuitive activation of a hopeful dream that repeats itself constantly without my realizing what, without seeing its spiritual significance. The only work of art that honors my sublime journey on a rainy autumn evening is the result of experiences equivalent to prayer before the great events of an ephemeral existence.

A world that comes, a world that leaves, two images superimposed in a noisy real are imagined from the high point of the occasional adventurer, meant to express a categorical rupture between the last conclusions before a final tour of the speed records and the value of an initiation in the intrigue of a concentrated narrative along a fictional present. The magical breath of the present moment is the movement of the steering wheel towards the outside of the turn and the push of the throttle in suitable doses.

A poetic delusion or a passing dream? With responsibility, I have to embrace any part of the events that I am attempting with or without the Lord's permission, as if I were subordinate to a generous game of fantasy that dispensed with the conformism of a seated, quiet and plain world. I travel further to an undefined and intangible horizon, due to a dream centered on reflections on life and art, on a path of pure reason, but which begins with an unclear question: "why me specifically, in a place called the Lost World"?

Undoubtedly, however, I have the evidence of the privileged streetlight experience, frequent changes in speeds, which help me know the true structure of the most important things in a lifetime displayed in the mirrors of the immediate reality.

Leadership: Do you have the ability to experience contradictory states and to experience high-engagement experiences within a narrative that is being disintegrated under the pressure of a reality that looks above what an ordinary mind can do with the comfortable world of symbols?

The car is not a mere means of locomotion, but the expression of the power of representing a more vivid, more alert, more evolved, more disturbing reality, trying to test a time of a life filled with adrenaline, enabling a belonging to a complex mental structure. When you find yourself in a strange world and try to dampen its means of making you a prisoner, it would be useful to remind yourself of the idea that the artist must paint what he sees in a continuous movement to capture the world in which the narrative seems to continue life itself.

The Road To Hell captures the melancholy of the predestination of an insider who does not dare rise against his fatal destiny, the continuing pain of man in the face of a hostile world, in his uneasiness pendulating between doubts and certainties. At the same time, through any intersection, the road can mark the struggle for a great symbol of faith, an attempt to get out of the maze of so many contradictory states.

On the trunk of aspiration, a whole pathos linked to a utopian initiative of change, an escape from a used-up time and space, the branches of fearless sensibility, woven into the will of a moment of abandonment, stimulating germs of uncertainty in front of a dark horizon. Finally, there is the freedom beyond the barriers of the present moment.

Leadership: Can you identify that differentiating element that inspires your state from the moment you make a change in the story of reality you have never said before?

The cause of any contest with yourself in a time of no one is the run from a life and a world that you no longer see the point of. Beyond any reasonable doubt, my escape in one way or another, the way I go from one world to another, always generating a new atmosphere filled with lost human figures, falls into the nerve of the most vehemently unleashed affections and passions.

Everything seems to have started from the thoughts of a mind desperate for strong sensations, from a change of depth produced in an overflow of lyrical accords, but in which the deepest nostalgia of the beginning and the end of a story with a police intrigue reigns, you feel constantly in a state of alert.

My life is not a composition that gives the impression that it is pursuing an imaginary story, but it is the suspenseful imaginary story itself that mingles with the troubled story of the real present. The fantasy that binds me to the reality of a concrete experience belongs to the excitement to start bold actions, the determination to start on unpredictable paths.

A differentiating element that inspires my state from the moment of a change in the story of the reality I have never said before is the feeling of "high" that does not require salvation, being explained as a break from the past and as an incursion into a possible imaginary of all possibilities.

Leadership: Can you fully assume the degree of uncertainty in front of an impetus that depends on past experience in managing life situations without becoming a prisoner of consciousness that strives to reason before fantasy?

Whoever dares to pass in my place would have been entitled to experience an unpredictable abundance of situations in which the deformation or overstimulation of a fragment of the most palpable reality applies, looking at everything from the point of view of the emotions that you are experiencing only in the face of an unexpected decision. Somehow, I seem to experience the same situation that Humbert Humbert passed from the novel "Lolita":

So I turned, passing on the left side of the road, checked my mood and found it good. I had the pleasant feeling of an inner dissolution, with diffuse tactile elements, amplified by the thought that, going on the opposite lane, I was fantastically approaching the elimination of the basic laws of physics. In a way, it was a metaphysical anxiety. I was going forward on the eccentric face of the mirror, quiet, dreamlike, no more than twenty miles an hour. Traffic was low. The cars passing me would brutally honk. The automobiles that were coming towards me were hesitant, turned suddenly and cried with terror. I soon found out that I was approaching populated areas. I ran a red light, what a feeling !

What opposes the present experience is the feeling of a wandering around a single axis that is seen in the "reverse" mirror, being accessed following a judgment of the self. You have the feeling that you are part of a tougher, more chilly, tense life scenario, which is remarkable by reliving a state of complete freedom in decision-making. But at the same time, you are in the prison of a consciousness that gives a moral imprint to any act of will.

The consciousness that strives to palce reason before fantasy is that part of you coming from outside of you, connected to certain situations that have marked you deeply through a fascinating journey in time, but that cannot be changed – because it finds its projection in the present reality.

Leadership is based on the following meaningful message: if no one knows your reality from which you are making the fantasy of the strongest emotions, then no one can ask for an account of how thinking influences your life.

The Road To Hell refers to the propensity for the compromise of reporting to a present of uncertainty, presented in the form of a fantasy that is aimed at experiencing emotions full of force and enthusiasm that put you in the context of a changing world.

 Note: Chris Rea - The Road To Hell

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-road-to-hell.html

The Road To True Performance

On March 09, 2009

Reveal to people the nature of your own self, without faking the most sincere emotions which you want to express.

At the end of the movie „Meet Joe Black (1998)", Susan Parrish, daughter of billionaire Willian Parrish, reaches the bridge which connected with her father's property, where she once again meets Joe Black.

Looking at Joe with piercing eyes, trying to collect the most profound and mysterious core of his personality, Susan remembers how she met him: "The coffee house...", she said with a gentle voice.

What prevailed at Joe was his conscience perceptible by his senses, internalized in his soul and recognized with the mind. He replies to Susan:

- Forgive me for saying this, but I never forgot... You told me you liked me.

- No... Susan responds with her eyes almost in tears, sensing his true feelings... I said that I liked you so much...

Is your leadership more guided by the visual impact of the image you seek to capture as being "unique and sensational" through the soul's extraordinary property of feeling a strong emotion?

A man without a sense of self, a man where no trace of spirit is found, a man who hasn't developed his emotional part so as to bring others into his sphere of influence will never be able to facilitate their transformation. The emotional connection between Joe and Susan was made only by the sequence of spiritual, vivid, intense and extremely pure "colors". He folded to her feelings, subordinated his entire emotional beauty to her own sensibility and was precisely enough not to betray the quality and nature of this sensitivity, making her to accept him in her life for eternity.

Entering the hidden corners of the human character, realizing its true value and emphasizing its good side is a quality rarely seen in leadership, even in the greatest leaders. Susan transmitted to Joe Black, with a deep sincerity, what she really felt for him, thus revealing the nature of her own being, her own "self" – like an emotional release. Here is the evidence of a spiritual consistency on which the connection between people builds.

Leadership is sometimes similar to fireworks, without vital substance and inner balance – they storm briefly, charm and fascinate everyone, transforming the moment in a vivid and glamorous memory, and then they fade. This kind of leadership doesn't last because these leaders turn their backs on people's true spiritual feelings, and therefore they fail to penetrate the essence of their personality.

Leadership: Does the area that corresponds to the image you attach to through strong emotions actually illustrate how your personal experience is the best life lesson?

In order to understand reality, to realize the true face of people, their true value, don't establish your leadership in an emotional perseverance with no resonance, but seek moderately their key-qualities, the composition of their beings, the bright and acceptable parts on which they constructed their emotional and affective intelligence, through the feelings that they hold and subtly transmit.

Just as the Internet is an extension of the general revolution generated by the emergence of electricity and computers, which determines profound changes and transformations in our everyday lives – so your power of relating to people is an extension of your art of adapting to the real values which they build their lives on – as a natural consequence of a superior capacity of understanding of their inner structure, resulting in profound transformations during their existence.

In terms of leadership, the best life lesson is this: "The image you feel most attracted to is the image your Ego has attached to in an attempt to change for the better."

The Road To True Performance always starts from the verb "to feel". If you aren't receptive to people's feelings, then they will never follow your example. Relating to the real spiritual feelings of people is the only way to understand them in the deepest core of their personality. True performance is knowing how to make yourself seen, know how to make yourself heard, know how to make yourself understood through an image that arouses strong emotions.

The road to true performance is correlated with the leader's ability to penetrate the core of things, including the essence of human personality, appreciating what doesn't work and what doesn't fit with the objective analysis of causes and effects.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-road-to-true-performance.html

The Role Of Leadership In A Representation Of Personality

On March 21, 2008

Try to understand your own self and the direction you want to follow in your development, without overshadowing the model of vision you represent.

In his study "Le maitre-probleme de l'Esthetique", the French esthetician Victor Basch highlights the importance of contemplation as a starting point for aesthetic research. One of the arguments he makes is a methodical argument: "It is extremely difficult to penetrate the artist's soul, the deep (and even mysterious for him) source from which the creative instinct springs. The second argument is that the artist himself, before creating, contemplated, and delighted one's self."

Therefore, what is leadership? I would say that leadership is the expression of that creative instinct that flows into the continuity of a vision with ideational support. Without art, we could not talk about leadership, because art is the measure of testing the vision that becomes more real than reality.

Or the idea of relating to those around you can be seen as a competition with yourself, not with them. No one can gain a high level of influence if he does not establish lasting relationships with those around him. But first of all, you have to understand your own self and the direction you want to follow in your development, and not somehow overshadow the model of vision you represent.

Your personality must be defined as that of a man of great character, made for brilliant and memorable roles. So you need to be able to mobilize people using all your skills, using all the resources of your mind and soul. If your attempt to compose a role that does not suit you fails, then immediately offer to give up the role and hand it over to someone else.

It is therefore worth emphasizing the importance of self-assessment, including the degree of compliance with one's own standards, as well as the importance of success in handling for the benefit of the masses.

Leadership: Does the specificity of your self become significant and very subtle by the way you relate to a reality that harmonizes and protects your personality, or that inhibits and diminishes its value?

The source of perfection springs from the self of the leader nurtured by education, moral and professional standards, his skills developed over time, but also the ability to suggest and influence the masses in order to obtain results beneficial to all. Making a "pact with the devil" denotes a moral instability, a shaky construction of character, a serious deviation from the notions of justice and legality. All this will destabilize the whole life of a man who cannot find mitigating circumstances either in obtaining material benefits or in apparent social ascension.

The sweet source of perfection is meant to set the stage for an almost uninterrupted evolution of the leader who follows a leadership model based on ethics, honesty and responsibility.

If by the actions you take, if by the decisions you make you lose the trust of those who follow you, then the relationship can be permanently damaged, in the blink of an eye. Thus, any of your tendencies toward perfection will be annihilated. Leadership expert John Maxwell was right when he said: "To get to a higher level, a lot of things have to be done, but sometimes it takes one wrong thing for a person to go on a downslope."

I believe that one of the causes that hinders the qualitative progress of leadership, which hinders the leader's audacity to express high ideals, diminishing his desire to strive for perfection, is his conformity to the preferences of that category of individuals who do not want or cannot show solidarity and indulge in a state of inertia. These kinds of individuals, even worse, try to corrupt you, manipulate you, persuade you to align with their own beliefs, interests and values. If you want to climb the ladder to performance, then strive to combat any harmful factors, arguments, thoughts, actions that run counter to your goals and the ethical principles on which your opinions or ideas are based – which, incidentally, you represent.

Leadership: Can you change the outcome of the impact you have on other people's lives through a self-effort to manifest itself as a long-term individual performance effect?

However, a leader must be an initiated man, with a certain training in understanding and appreciating life, and with an indisputable sense of justice and outstanding moral qualities. This is not to say that you have to create your own style that addresses a small circle of initiates. But you need to focus your efforts on improving your leadership skills more towards those who are more likely to maintain your mood and interest. They must have the same beliefs as you. And for this, it is necessary to channel your efforts in order to combine your charisma with your dynamic personality in order to be able to win them on your side and especially to express your ideas in a way that everyone can understand.

Are you perceived as a long-term partner? Many leaders are showing a growing concern for achieving results, putting less value on the human side. They seek to simply push people in the desired direction, forcing them directly or indirectly to align with their own beliefs and values. But they do not understand that in order to change people you have to intervene in their behavior, in their thinking and especially in the process of forming their feelings. People feel who you are, and if they do not perceive you as a person capable of expressing genuine feelings of care and compassion, as a long-term partner, but as a master, then a spiritual connection will never be created between you and them.

Your personal and professional accomplishments are the result of the impact you have on other people's lives. Just as failures are the best teachers and are real springboards to great successes, so too can the people around you be the best teachers, real springboards to great successes if you let them contribute to the formation of your personality and to developing your leadership skills.

Leadership: Do you show that you have the presence of mind in the decisions you make under the pressure of an advantageous self-image, but which has no real coverage in the area of action of other people?

A leader who does not base his efforts and initiatives on his power to empathize with other people will never be able to maintain his position – he is like a racing driver in the competition of a lifetime, whose car runs out of fuel. Once you have built relationships with people and moved to a higher level of performance, never give up or neglect those relationships.

As a leader, you must embark on a journey of satisfaction: the journey to your true worth. Look at yourself with your own soul, then shape your potential according to your own beliefs, criteria, and ideas. Seek to be as you see yourself. Give voice to reality through what you are, what you think, what you feel and what you want. Have you convinced yourself yet that everything is based on leadership?

Perfection is hard to achieve, but its source lies in the people and the leader, in the principles generated by leadership, in respecting the ethics and legality unanimously accepted by society at a given time.

Can you make decisions even if others disagree with you? Do you fight until the end for a just cause? How do you make yourself visible to others, do you have a presence of mind? Can you make decisions despite uncertainties and pressures? Do you base your efforts and initiatives on your ability to empathize with others? Do you think that the people around you can be your teachers at certain times? What have you learned from them so far?

Leadership seeks to form a self-image that conforms to reality, but one which emphasizes the true value of the vision from which the instinct of the individual's effort to change people's perception of reality proceeds.

The Role Of Leadership In A Representation Of Personality is to build bridges to new horizons of self-knowledge, from which develop the skills necessary for better adaptation to situations in professional life.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-role-of-leadership-in-a-representation-of-personality.ht

The Rule Of Clockmaker

On November 16, 2011

Remove the negative characteristics of people, by adjusting their behavior after those convictions and values which they appreciate, yet overlooking them.

Vivian Ward, the lady companion of the controversial businessman, Edward Lewis, never walked through such "places" - not the most insignificant trace, not even the frailest sign does not showed that she was really interested in ever going to the opera. She, a prostitute without future, without horizons, introduced to the new world, coming into contact with another kind of culture, with another kind of thinking. And yet, here they are together, in a central lodge, watching the show of the opera "Madame Butterfly".

However, something is happening. Suddenly, everything changes in her life. For a moment, she looks in herself. She, which had never known tenderness and affection, which had not known that pleasure which exists in a relationship - and that translates into love, never tasting the full joy that you receive in the exchange for your own dedication. She, with a huge ambition and strength had always kept in a shadow her spiritual powers, which always failed to honor her responsibilities towards her own heart, towards her deepest feelings.

She, which with an enviable tenacity never kept herself led by anyone, never sat tight, never being enticed by the attractive temptation of love - the secret of a lasting relationship, always hindering on time her temptation of fidelity, being absorbed only by the desire for money. She, this so beautiful creation, who endured so long her torment, by alone, which closed somewhere in herself all sorrows and all interior storms, having the power not ever externalizing herself – here, that for the first time in life, she reveals her true character.

She tries to stop the tears that invade her, but they run, unhindered, slipping gently on her cheeks - revealing her true inner glow.

Leadership: Do you feel indebted to the future to try your chance to increase the importance of your attitude towards reality, depending on the ambiguous meaning of the image you build in your imaginary universe?

An imaginary universe is a sort of memory of pain and unfulfilled dreams that exclude any kind of compromise. But this memory can be modified by the consciousness that facilitates the reception of external messages, arriving on the "sensitive waves" of the intensity with which you feel a spiritual and intellectual connection.

The ambiguous meaning of the image you build in your imaginary universe is about gaining a spiritual victory that takes you away from the mastery of the ordinary ones that give birth to passions that happen to you. Meaning can also be focused in completely unexpected points, such as stopping in front of a place with wide open doors, where you can observe the spectacular phenomenon of the "living" without being able to touch its abundance.

I remember an interesting remark of Jules Verne: "There are two distinct forces in us: that of the soul and that of the body, that is a movement and a regulator. The soul is the principle of life: that is, then, the movement. Whether it is produced by a weight, by a spring, or by an immaterial influence, it is none the less in the heart."

Leadership: Must you learn to give meaning to all things and situations that surround you, depending on the value of "WAITING FOR AN HONEST BEGINNING" introduced in the results of the functioning of a storing mechanism called "CACHE"?

In leadership, everything increases and decreases depending on your ability to make necessary changes in the hearts of those around you. Edward Lewis, from the movie "Pretty Woman (1990)", has learned well the role of "clockmaker", by adjusting with great precision that link between these two distinct forces: that of the soul and that of the body. By taking Vivian to the Opera, which brought to the fore a love story, he managed to reveal from her spiritual baggage that emotional dose that made her more sentient towards her own person. It was as if she had set the time after her heart rate.

Just as a skilled clockmaker is able to adjust the most delicate parts of the most finest clocks, so you, as a leader must be able to notice what goes wrong with people, and to adjust their behavior after those values that they appreciate, yet overlooking them; to try to fully combat their system of convictions, strong, but inefficient, by bringing forward the emotional dose that is buried in them.

Edward Lewis has followed more consistently than anyone the revealing, beyond appearances, of the inner truth, visible to her only by the broad and deep understanding, by empathy, of her most intimate feelings and experiences. How do you repair a clock dear to your soul?

Can you look inside people? Can you see those few wheels, of the many that keep in motion the gear of their great system of convictions? Have you understood how does it work the forces combining their thinking with their sensing? Can you sense the intimate connection that exists between the way in which they express their attitudes and the way they manage their emotions? Do you know what parts you have to adjust that to awaken in them the lost or forgotten feelings?

CACHE is the memory that connects you with others when a widening of consciousness occurs over the whole experience of your return to the state of a being dominated by unfulfilled desires.

You can always have a "clean" run in the background of consciousness a new example of being at the same time: a source of life and inspiration.

The rule of clockmaker: "There's no way to fix an expensive clock with a hammer."

In your relationship with people, you must follow the same rule, a little bit changed: "There's no way to fix a man's soul if you do not protect all that is delicate and fragile at him, in some way, if you fail to bring forward his true feelings, or worse, if you estrange from them."

Just as a clockmaker must choose the wheels he needs in order to start an older clock, or for making a new clock, so you must step into the territory of the human soul, by listening to their inner arrangements, and to replace all the unmaintained inner wheels, which impedes their optimal functioning. You become valued on the extent of your skill.

Are you able to put in relation all the wheels and mechanisms necessary for an effective functioning? Are you as skilled as a clockmaker master?

Remove the negative characteristics of people, by adjusting their behavior after those convictions and values which they appreciate, yet overlooking them.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-rule-of-clockmaker.html

The Ruling Law

On March 23, 2010

In order to rule, you must be at the head.

Only in a decisive moment, when a man needs to put to use all the resources of his being, can the extraordinary traits hidden within him can be seen. It is only when one thought, one idea, one reason obsesses the mind of a man lead by powerful feelings, experiences and emotions towards someone, something, it is only then that it bursts in him that extraordinary thirst to make miracles, that unsuspected courage to take over and show everyone what he is capable of. Most certainly, every man, even the simplest one, actually has a talent, which only if he gets the chance will he able to show it.

Jake Sully, the main character in the movie "Avatar (2009)", a paralyzed war veteran, is brought to the planet Pandora. He must fight in order to find his place on the luxuriant planet, to win the trust of the native Na'vi people and, then, by diplomacy, convince them to evacuate a certain area, which hid the richest deposit of unobtanium.

The burden of suffering can only be healed with the balm of happiness. Jake, as soon as he steps in the new world completely changed, driving a body called avatar, falls in love with Neytiri, a native, who comes to his aid, saves him from dangers, accompanies him and gives him guidance. At the same time, in the three months he spent with her clan, he goes through experiences he never had. He gets attached to the Na'vi people, to their habits, and starts to appreciate more and more this world.

Leadership: Does your way of separating yourself from the outside world belong to an existence that makes you stay true in the intimate game of other people's lives?

The three months go by, and because Jake didn't succeed in convincing the Na'vi people to leave their territory, the humans commenced the enforcement procedures. In that decisive moment, he has a decision to make, for whom should he fight? And, because he gives great care to the natives' needs, he makes his choice: the Na'vi. Thus, he destroys, he removes or abandons all aspects of his former life. He only knows one feeling: the love for Neytiri, the nearness towards the Omaticaya clan. That is why he joins their fight to defend their sacred land.

Just like a man who puts his hand in a pitfall full of honey, Jake knows right from the start what to expect if he is to join the Na'vi. But, being aware that nothing can be left to chance, with the determination of the man whom nobody and nothing can abate from the purpose of his life, he takes the road with no return.

True leadership is the total dedication of one's own being to the power to manifest yourself consciously of your true spiritual nature in a scene where you differentiate yourself from everything you are for a world that focuses primarily on the battle.

Self-confident, proving to be firm, having a dynamic, active attitude, radiating youth and strength, he manages to attract all the admiration of the Na'vi people or, I would rather say, it's entire gratitude. And, raising desire in their hearts, making their hearts give birth to an unsuspected hope, they fight with courage and determination and, in the end, using the advantage given by the field and by applying an excellent tactical plan, they win. And Jake becomes the leader of the clan.

„Only for you and my people do I wish to live"

Every fantasy contains a drop of reality. In order to lead, you have to be some kind of Jake Sully. Nowadays, as well as in the future, those who will be elected to rule a country will be those who will fight in the name of the values of their communities and will never give up, those who will stand by their people for a better life, for a well defined noble purpose. An extraordinary man, a true leader always has the ability to serve others and help them with all his powers.

Leadership: Are you prepared to take the big step into a present that selectively "appropriates" the past thoughts of a being who does not reject its origins nor its becoming?

The one who doesn't have the ability to express his vision so that he can make the people to act in its spirit doesn't deserve to lead them. The one who doesn't declare himself ready to do anything and doesn't succeed in giving the people the energy to accomplish some impossible goals, the one who hesitates in making important decisions when it is imperviously necessary to do it and doesn't have the ability to make others believe in themselves and in success is not meant to experience success in leadership.

Only he who shows an authentic preoccupation towards people, making them enthusiastic about what they do, who is not afraid to roll up his sleeves and get dirty, always emphasizing on finding solutions and staying unyielding in his will, only he will be able to complete the mission he commits to.

The mentality of a leader is that of a winner, of someone who completely rejects the possibility of a defeat, not leaving for himself any way to retreat and dedicating himself full heartedly to the proposed goal. With an open mind, determined and brave, he takes over, making those around him act and go further, only further, towards a better future.

Leadership occurs when your mentality changes from a conflict position to a position where it can form an alliance that functions and maintains itself in a positive territory.

It takes a lot skills to lead a group, a community of people. Everything about you must inspire trust in achieving your grand plan. And if you are not persistent, brave, tenacious, extremely interested by the accomplishments, dominant and trusting, it means that you don't have the ability to lead them.

In order to rule, you must be at the head.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-ruling-law.html

The Rustle Of An Artist's Mind Embodied In A Beautiful Body Of Nature

On May 22, 2020

Art is the creator's means of constituting himself in a vision which the eye calls "comparison".

It was something spiritual, mystical, difficult to understand by the world around me, because everything around me fell into the category of things accessible only to the brave, to those able to be part of a fiction such as: "All the characters and deeds present in this work are fictional, and all the protagonists are pages full of gratitude from a history of treating nature with the respect that a Creator of beauty deserves."

Probably because of this, I was constantly drawn to nature, with an irresistible power over everything that was noble and worthy of artistic admiration, engaging in an increasingly comprehensive debate about the origin of a Creation that claims the term "Perfection" in the level of characters and roles called to interpret the subject of flowers in a surprisingly different way. The metamorphosis of flowers into people, and the dream of flowers continued in the ascension of a living vision, unfolded only in my head, as an unreal, fictitious, flowing world, capable of influencing only the events in the world of an artist who looks at himself as in a mirror which encloses in it the spirits of nature.

Facing the sun, I closed my eyes slowly, with emotion, with that smile of dominating satisfaction in the corner of my mouth that seemed to want to denote that duality of the true artist, whose inspiration comes from a space that is only his. Or, perhaps, in another way, I was suffering from that condition of the artist who has reached the age of the wise old age of dreaming at the heights that expression through art offers, taking the freedom to dream of what is hidden beyond which cannot be penetrated with the eye.

Basically, I felt like in an escapade of the artist in the middle of nature, where everything seemed extracted from an excerpt from "On the spider's web of memory", by Cella Serghi:
"The modern painting that I didn't know, or, for convenience, I refused to understand, started with a strange force now and it was taking me with it to another universe, it was imposing a different reality on me."

Leadership: Does the effort to spiritualize a world reduced to an association between images and words tend to reveal what is essential in your soul, as a landmark of what is common to creation passed through the filter of a refined sensibility?

I looked at everything around me with different eyes, as an admirer of visionary worlds captured in impressive chromatic metamorphoses. Roses, their fragile leaves, I was trying to gather their spring fragrance in an extremely refined and elegant unitary whole, in an agreement between earth and sun. And behold, the rose, with its green leaves, full of dew, hears me as if I were a part of the soul of nature, as if I existed through someone else, a kind of reincarnation of a soul from another life.

Are my thoughts not equivalent to the power of art to bring back to life a sensitive world, almost forgotten by those of us who struggle in the whirlwind of overcrowded cities?

The gaze leads the soul to the greatness of nature. In fact, the rose believes that I am part of nature's great plan, that I am the unseen voice of nature. From the meticulous observations I have very skillfully extracted a generous testimony of the wonders of nature, a declaration of life that will move an entire world, through which I try to get closer to the masterpiece of the artist, to his inner rustle. Maybe that's why I think I'm worthy only of the attention of a painter who sensitively analyzes each element of nature before personifying it in a dream character, revealing a deep mystery that touches the sense of amazement and admiration in that dance of the balance between beauty and form.

Yes, I strongly admit, I am the possessor of a mysterious inner universe, a being who knows how to experience everything intensely, facing general apathy, the creator of a universe suspended between dream and reality, considering that everything in art must have at the same time explosive force and sensitivity, like when you sit and admire a panoramic landscape. Or like when you get lost in the depths of the starry sky waiting, at any moment, for a very bright shooting star to fulfill your last wish: to be able to feel the bustle of life on the surface of things that cannot be seen, that will not pass, rather than on things that are seen and that are fleeting.

Leadership: Can the extent and depth of the reality in which you live generate an echo in a world where everything unites and identifies with the sublime act of an instant creation?

In the end, even their thoughts, feelings, confrontation, feel the need for paint, brush, everything the artist needs to be able to express himself in front of an easel and a white canvas on which nature imprints its soul; emotional, sensitive, memorable. You hear your heartbeat when you feel the vibe of vivid colors, the irresistible energy of emotionally printed symbols in a moment of a successful, almost photographic artistic snapshot. Get your hands on the true passion of a Universe Creator, with a delicate finish of refined features and expression, on the glossy surface of a crystal canvas, part of a representation of the Tayana constellation built to the rhythm of Yakuro's music.

I cannot get used to the banal, I am not content to be just a man, I tend to be a creator of great purity of soul, invested with the power to penetrate the heart of nature. Not even my special rose, with its delicate leaves, will not change, will not confess in a much larger ensemble of creation, unless we exist through each other, I as an artist always surrounded by beauty who daily discovers a dose of artistic experience, and he as an expression of a singular creative consciousness. Maybe you'll believe me, maybe not, but I'm definitely right.

The charm of the rose, which always orients its leaves towards the light, allows me to understand that an artist can be an exceptional creator only if he expresses himself simpler, freer, more natural, through the beauties of nature. Perhaps the rose itself reveals part of the substance of its own soul in relation to a creator accustomed to the pictorial technique of representing sensible appearances, from the perspective of revealing his inner life that sets the tone of infinite freedom, of interactions with nature in a spiritual or poetic way.

The sublime act of an instant creation values the thoughts and feelings manifested by an artist who puts in new agreements the purity of a harmony with himself, which he translates into the rustle of a rare emotion in the sphere of personification of a nature that constantly asks man to string and assert one's instincts, especially the instinct of metamorphosis.

The Rustle Of An Artist's Mind Embodied In A Beautiful Body Of Nature is sometimes subdued in literary imaginations, sensitive aesthetics, of pure fantasy, where any resemblance becomes a new form of union between the Creator and the High Spirit, in the silence of an unforgettable moment, stirred by the warmth of trembling words that seem to say:

Nothing is more uninhabitable than that "yourself" in a place where you are always blessed: in the midst of nature.

The rose, which I often perceive as the best option to improve my image, imposes itself as a means of human, spiritual, artistic transformation, especially if I take into account the words of the Romanian aesthetician Liviu Rusu:

"The artist, truly creative, penetrates so deeply into his being, that he reveals the roots of existence itself and thus perceives what binds us more closely to the earth. The spirituality he discovers is an earthly spirituality, because what he reveals to us is not a world above us, but an inner dynamism, which animates the most intimate mysteries of our soul, the original background of our kind."

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-rustle-of-an-artists-mind-embodied-in-a-beautiful-bod

The Sadness Of An Angel Who Has Lost Heaven

On December 10, 2010

Rise above the other people, setting a well-founded agreement between the joy of your life and of them.

Somewhere deep inside your heart his dream was still alive - he wanted to become a writer. But his life brought more than a nightmare. He failed in a terrible way. For although he wrote much, never managed to sell anything, not even one filler. Left without money, he committed for insurance agent. But as much and as many hours he worked, was always plunged in debts. And like any man plunged to his neck in debts, hiding from reality has found relief in drink. That prompted his wife to take their daughter and leave him. Thus, he remained alone.

An angel abandoned by God. From heaven to hell is only one step, a step that any angel can make if he lacks faith. So it happened that in a cold winter morning, surrounded by fears, doubts and pain, poor man, lying in one of the worst parts of the city of Cleveland, without overcoat, shivering with cold and hungry, he saw through the window of a pawn shop a gun. "This weapon will end all my problems" he said bitterly. He was going to buy that gun, some bullets and in the room where he lives, to pull the trigger.

Useless, worthless, hopeless, he waited with his heart rushing in the chest, a signal. Something whispered to his heart to stay away from that store. He listened to his inner voice and started to walk in the rain until he reached the steps of a public library. He joined. Pleasant warmth embraced him. Walking through the aisles of books came to that section of motivational books found in all libraries. He put his hand on the wonderful book "Success through a positive Attitude" written by W. Clement Stone, and started reading it. Since that day, his life has changed.

Leadership: Do you experience a final state in the evolution of a liberating self-seeking by assuming a suffering produced as a result of coming closer to spiritual things?

The open gate to heaven. The one that I just told you lived 73 years and became a legend. His books still sell like hot cakes. It has been written about him in almost all magazines worldwide. Many have revered his success. Many are following him even now and will follow in the future his tips and lessons. You may have heard of this man who, surprisingly, found a turning point in his life the gate "to Heaven" - in a city library in Cleveland. Or maybe you have heard about his famous book: "The most famous vendor in the world". His name is Og Mandino.

Og Mandino is the personification of a special moment in the evolution of a healing of unhappiness, soul wounds, anxiety or depression, through the contribution of the psyche that can make a leap from doubt to hope, from mistrust to certainty about the effectiveness of a "divine" in personal experience, in daily actions and decisions, in particularly difficult and complicated situations.

To put all your hope in a divine intervention is synonymous with fighting against acts directed against life. It is as if you were blind, you do not see and appreciate the qualities of everything that comes from the other direction of all that you encounter in life than when you reach the boundary between warmth and cold, between the material world and the spiritual world, that is when you're about to give up.

Renunciation is the act of separating yourself from the experience of self-seeking during the search for answers and questions in which are specified the admissible limits of the relationship between what you assume is the unseen but understood part of the story and what you assume is the reality that dominates you by reducing it to a tiny universe.

Many years ago I read, with the same joy that I love to read all the personal development books, the book of Og Mandino, entitled "Secrets of happiness and success" in which he told with liveliness his life - from failure to success. And what I understand of it, in all its sections, in terms of Og Mandino, prior success is not happiness, but happiness precedes success. First you need to take control of your life, on the events that can influence you, and to start from the premise that everything will be fine. Then, your path to success will open by itself.

Does your leadership manage to achieve the great performance of creating a bridge between the world of individual perception and the world of shared experience?

Valuable people, whose certain face of life proved to them that they are above their own limits, above everything they predominantly think, vote for a certain way of self-governing and self-motivation, that sometimes lasts so few, but triggers new horizons, new beginnings.

Any moral, emotional and existential handicap situations generate among those of us who have a leading potential, complex reasoning shapes, unified through a validation impulse for a remarkable change in direction. A point of maximum intensity, that one touched, has the formidable capacity to produce, first handedly a kind of "induced resistance", then a kind of contrary reaction, propelling that person towards a life with more meaning.

Leadership, with the same power a beautiful story touches us, manages the great performance to create a bridge between the world of individual perception and the world of shared experience, together with man's attempt to reinvent himself by appealing to an integrated "emblem": compliance.

By explaining the causes of later success (unexpectedly), due to the continuity of performing through improving the capacity to change what can't be accepted, there are defined a number of positions that take into account the individuality, maturation and the psycho-emotional approach.

A position of the type "I've got nothing to hide" through which you communicate your absence of the possibility to determine the concrete impact of your beliefs about life. Or an analytical position – the experience in processing your own emotions, identifying situations which can trigger a protection behavior from other people or from a higher entity (God).

The approach about the process of personal reinvention claims that success occurs due to the high level of an individual's capacity to understand a situation through his own beliefs. This winner's position had and still has supporters among the people that try to discover their call and to put to use their vocation, although its implications on a social, moral and pedagogical approach can be extremely inequitable.

Leadership: Do you start getting closer to what "a personal mission" means when nothing in your life satisfies you anymore?

I think I can be taken seriously when I say that this is one of the best definitions of leadership I ever dared to formulate: leadership is an agreement between happiness and the happiness of other people. You may be a man of influence, but do not ever get happiness. But if you get happiness, then you can have a powerful influence. Since everyone likes happy people, isn't it? What model of strong values you can give to people who follow you, if you're unhappy? Who will dare to choose you as a mentor, if you are not an example of a man who loves his life with passion?

When you enter into relationships with people they expect from you to raise morale and to induce optimism. If you look tired and bored with the sorrows of life, all your efforts will fade. You will be like that king who, after through his front, at every moment passed a lot of people and he heard their troubles, beyond met, fell fatigue and actually got to wonder what people do want from him.

On Mrs. Liliana Constantinescu's blog is written: "The consequences of interrupting the connection with divinity represents vitality consumption, which, in time, is transferred in the physical plane, upon the physical body. The modern man has developed very horizontally (focusing on the fulfillment of basic needs), forgetting that by his nature he is a creator, and thus, is an active part of their own realities, so he is both the initiator and the producer of his own suffering."

Just as the earth is continually degraded by pollution and overheating, so do your leadership will degrade if you do not have the power to control the circumstances, to fight with the vices and maintain on the surface your spirit and attitude of an enthusiastic and full of energy person.

You cannot progress in leadership if you lose your "heaven".

Heaven symbolizes a point of approach to yourself from the type of philosophy that can intelligently orientate you in every moment of life to the kind of atmosphere that makes you want to act for "the greater good" – which is fundamentally part of your nature: spirituality.

Self-satisfaction is what you gain when spirituality becomes as important as materiality, even if it is under the gesture of giving or receiving undue support.

The sadness of an angel who has lost heaven designates that state of deep depression that soften your defense wall around the heart and makes you vulnerable to life (in the stress and worry), and also in front of other people. Do everything possible to win because if it hits you, if it penetrates deep into your soul and wins the battle with you, it could not be banished so easily.

Your strength as a leader lies in the ability to always look ahead, regardless of circumstances and to have the vision of the future, a future as bright and as good. But if "you lose the heaven" if you raise the white flag of sadness and renunciation, then you will not ever be able to get high above other people.

Conclusion: A leader overwhelmed by sadness and sorrow induces the same collective mindset that leads him. He is like an angel who has lost the heaven and consequently will lose his followers who have elected him. Conversely, when the leader is optimistic and full of life, will always raise the moral tone of the team, creating optimum conditions for the development of great atitude. Positive thinking will have beneficial results, while its opposite will destabilize and destroy everything.

You will not be able to play an important role in people's lives, if you do not first discover the joy of life.

The Sands Of Time

On February 15, 2011

Devote your life to the sublime, for your leadership to come to life and withstand time.

I need to tell you again about an interesting scene from the movie "Price of Persia (2010)". Dastan, Prince of Persia, together with Tamina, Princess of Alamut, reach the Hourglass Chamber, buried deep in the Earth. They had to stop by all means Nizam, the brother of the deceased Persian king, Sharaman, to turn back time.

Nizam and Dastan violently fight and, because of the earthquake that occurred and of the sand that crumbled, Dastan slips on the rocks, but he manages to catch one edge of it. Meanwhile, Tamina encounters with Nizam and makes one last attempt to convince him to give up his diabolical plan. Instead, Nizam, who couldn't get out of his head his lifetime obsession – to become the most powerful man in Persia, catches her from her shoulders and throws her in the abysm that opened around them.

Dastan manages to catch Tamina by her hand. He felt deep inside his heart that he could only live through her. Looking in his eyes with a heartbreaking tenderness, utterly pained because she felt her end near and understanding the storm that was shaking her lover's heart, tells him the last words before letting go of his hand:

- Dastan, stop Nizam. If the glass breaks, the world will die with it ! I love you !

Every one of her words pierced Dastan's heart. Her eyes expressed something sweet: it was the love she felt for him and her desire for life.

- No ! Dastan cried, watching her beloved crashing into the deep abysm. The strong suffering, sprung from the depths of his heart, increased his strength and desire of presenting Nizam to fulfill his plan. With his heart clenched of pain and full of rage, he gathered all his courage and strength, climbed back the rock and rushed to Nizam.

Finally, Dastan managed to turn back time, to defeat Nizam and bring Tamina back to life, proving his supreme love for her.

Leadership: You character traits correspond to the rising force of the significance assigned to the struggle with your own limits in an attempt to fill satisfactorily a time which otherwise would be empty?

Fighting with your own limits can have a meaning of time management depending on how you relate to the great challenge of living and assimilating your existence as much as possible or, why not, lose it. Time can be perceived as a wall that bounces in front of you or as a continuation of a book which should be read several times to grasp all its nuances.

When we talk about leadership, we do not strictly refer to the art of getting ahead, but we also refer to a reality based on effects – which are exclusively for noble purposes, do not remain in the shadows and become unidentifiable. Leadership, in whose composition is found the fine sand of true values, shouldn't present a strong degree of wear if regularly polished with thick layers of faith.

This ability to achieve good through the consciousness of supreme sacrifice, stands in front of all available resources for the completion in time of the edifice he built his qualities on. An empty time is the result of a meaningless life that does not singularize the reading of a book told by extraordinary people.

Leadership: Can you constitute yourself as a reality that contains all time and space itself, or as an escape from a reality that compels you to endure the major test of your story?

It is assumed that the means of raising the edifice of leadership always reabsorb in the achieved goal. The barriers that draw boundaries for all those individuals that might at some point work great, acting on instinctive impulses, can be overcome only with the agreement of clean conscience.

This consciousness determines their manifestation, giving rise to a new form of "being", the sum of those traits of character corresponding to the rising force of significance that they give to the battle with their own limits. Meaning when they feel the need to prove their ownership to someone or something, risking their own freedom and life.

But, especially, they must employ a larger dose of thoughtfulness and confidence in strengthening the foundations of the building not to collapse before finished. Therefore, their own judgments, stemming from a perspective that shines like a torch in the immense darkness of the present, must be permanently maintained to high levels. The proper understanding of the present can lead to a better assessment of the past, but also to a different view of the future.

The major test of Dastan's story was not the overriding requirement of consciousness of being guided far beyond its present limits, but by the opening of consciousness of not being affected by emotions in the radical way in which this happens in a usual brain.

Leadership: Do you attribute wrong values to aspects of the outside world by evaluating your capacities in relation to the moments of time cancelled by your ability to manage the essence of the mortal condition?

Everything that surrounds you and limits you and doesn't in any way allow you to move forward, depends on compromise values underlying the experience of living in a parallel reality, accessing the reversibility of time.

When you try to fight everything that is bad, when the dearest person next to you leaves, when you fall and you think you cannot get up, you become the prisoner of an upside-down world: death is intense, familiar, close, while life is increasingly alien.

The mortal condition sets in at that moment when you think life is useless. Thus, you start assigning the wrong values to the many aspects of the external world, such as maximizing the negative effects on the relationship between people and their attempts, constantly refreshing the truth that no one lives forever.

Your ability to build a better present and future, to make your life more beautiful and to produce a significant change in the world, begins to collapse and have "limitations" to the fullness of simple and fleeting pleasures.

Leadership is not an eternal, unshakable edifice, which you can add stone over stone of glory, but it is rather a living organism that evolves passing through several stages. And just as the sand of time unceasingly flows in the hourglass of life - so can you, as a leader, continually increase your personal value, by imposing your vision and by initiating a leadership based on moral values and principles well established, such as solidarity and cohesion.

The attempt to pierce time is the backdrop of everything that the human being experiences from the beginning of life to the end of it, on which we must project the teaching of faith and the fulfillment of great deeds.

Leadership can be built on a solid foundation, on empathy, on true friendship, on mutual understanding and affection between individuals, on feelings of deep appreciation and gratitude. Or it can tear down and turn into a heap of sand if you use it arbitrary, without keeping in mind its limits, the golden principles that, as a leader, you must follow. Principles such as "don't use your power in the wrong way in order to meet your personal pride."

If you are a fanatic follower of the philosophy "Everybody must bow before me", then you won't be able to control people's high expectations, and therefore you will fail.

The remarkable secret of a successful leader consist in creating a warm harmony between what he feels, what he thinks and the way he acts. Just as love shows the harmony between two beings that complete themselves and get along well especially on an emotional level - so your leadership shows the degree of closeness to other people and can rise to the highest degree of perfection if you develop the abilities to understand their sufferings, motivations and aspirations.

The timeline you need to build for it to be used only at accessing a higher consciousness reflects what you gather in a life that does not go to waste.

The Sands of Time represents a metaphorical way to convey an indisputable truth: everything changes, including leadership, which can rise to the challenge only in time, as it develops, or it can crumble like a castle of sand if it hasn't got a stable foundation and a suitable binder.

Take a stand in front of time if you want the value of your leadership to grow. Devote your life to the sublime, for your leadership to come alive and last in time. Establish yourself some ideals and values that are not contrary to professional ethics and integrity. Devote your life to the development of a new vision, of a new way of painting a leadership, based on unity, stability, truth, empathy and trust.

Gather all your courage and all the power of your heart in order to show your appreciation and attachment to those around you, and thus your leadership will come to life and last in time.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sands-of-time.html

The Science Of Being A Science

On February 14, 2020

Ask yourself what you have done for science, if you want to know how useful you have been to the progress of the world.

There are two kinds of connoisseurs.

Those who have understood the depths of the Great Knowledge, succeeding in expressing its essence in a pure metaphysical language, that is, perceived only by those initiated in the field (a very small number of individuals).

And those who have understood how to enhance the essence of the Great Knowledge through simple formulations that emanate a kind of spiritual warmth, with a strong dose of inspiration, as when continuously listening to a rhythmic, cheerful, or sensual melody, without memorizing its lyrics. Such a work touches your soul.

However, the true connoisseur is the one who combines elegant, simple, and soulful, both ways of approaching the Great Knowledge – making it not only accessible, but especially noble.

And then we have the "smart" ones, those who have understood everything, but all their lives have created absolutely nothing in the name of Science (perhaps waiting for others to do the work for them). They are the most useless for the world and its progress. The fact that you present yourself in front of the world as all-knowing, does not mean that science is moving in one direction or another.

Here, it is good to remember what Romanian aesthetician Liviu Rusu said: "They were great men in all fields, less gifted. But they managed to be huge, became "geniuses" (as might be said) through qualities of which no one speaks kindly when their absence is felt. Everyone had that strong craft consciousness, which starts by learning to execute the parts flawlessly before fussing over a large whole. They took time to do it, because the success of the details, of the accessories, gave them more pleasure than the effects of a shining whole."

Leadership: Does the pattern of your knowledge of the world follow the inter-conditioning between content and form, between ideas and the crystallized form of creation loaded with multiple and unexpected meanings?

In fact, everything that happens in this world depends on one factor: science. Scientists are the only ones moving something colossal, forever pushing Sisyphus' huge rock. Without them, there would be no power, no progress.

While politicians seek to steal from each other a bigger bone, while ordinary people mind their own business. This is what concerns the scientists: "The dominance of the forces and spirits of nature presupposes the highest moral perfection, the highest spirituality."

An example. Here is the opinion of the famous French physician Gérard Anaclet Vincent Encausse on what it means to assume the impact and the record of science:

"The power of man is almost nil besides that of electricity, steam or atom. But, opposing them, by certain combinations, forces as strong as they are, man concentrates them, stores them, forces them to transport or to shatter them, to reduce to a few seconds the distances they would otherwise have to travel in a few months."

At the same time, this is the true spirituality that Prospero (Shakespeare's character) shows when he bends the matter and the laws of the earth to his own will. Basically, he is the embodiment of the scientist, the only one capable of ascending to the status of God. He is the key that opens the gates of mystery: "As in heaven, so on earth."

Leadership: Does your experience of assimilating subtle knowledge rise to the level of knowledge assimilated through creative experience that opens the gates of mystery: "As in heaven, so on earth"?

I tend to believe that Great Knowledge belongs to angels, or to those who know how to live forever. In fact, I would say that this "Solomon's Palace" can be experienced in the same direct way in which you experience what is tied to Creation and Creator, putting in the foreground of your achievements the experience of a miracle: to achieve something that no one else has ever achieved. And the famous words "As in heaven, so on earth" are subject to one meaning: everything has a double of itself.

By striving to rationalize your intuitive experience on the differences between idea and object, between object and form, between idea and language, between ideas and its sensitive manifestation, or between feeling and artistic image, you will be able to reach a common denominator: to consider it is useful to approach a new perspective on the nature of things in competition with their usual order.

Thus, you come to understand metaphysics. Which, in Leonardo da Vinci's simple vision, is based on the following suggestion: "If you look at a wall studded with stains and made from a mixture of gravel, and if you have to invent a certain view, you will discover on this wall similarities with various countries, with their mountains, with rivers, rocks, trees, moors, deep valleys, hills of various aspects, you will see live battles and movements of figures and other strange occurrences of cheeks, costumes and thousands of other things which you will bring to a good and integral form."

The great aim of leadership is to change the human being from the status of meticulous connoisseur of small things to the status of Demiurge, by exposing another perspective on the differences and similarities between things, phenomena and states.

The Science Of Being A Science positions itself according to the human experience of translating any aspect of things around it into a living language, which denotes effective communication with the universe, or with God. The depth that the chosen knowledge symbolizes, starting from each minor element of information, amplified by the resonance with which it is endowed in another plane, must be contained in the feeling of the one who uses the figurative language of the "apostles".

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-science-of-being-a-science.html

The Science of One Man (VS) The Science of the Whole World

On March 10, 2012

Train your mind to think in terms of vision, by the fact that everything about yourself can be accepted as valuable only after you have changed "divinely" by the strength of maintaining the path you have taken in life.

It is said that in a city where all the sciences were taught, lived a handsome and diligent young man. And, at least nothing was missing from the happiness of his life, he was imagined by the desire to know as much as possible. Or, it was revealed to him one day, from the story of a traveling merchant, that in a very distant land lived a scholar who was the holiest man in all of Islam and who alone had so much book science, so much wisdom, and as much grace as all the scholars of the age put together. And he learns that this teacher, with all his fame, was only a blacksmith, a job that his father and grandfather had had before him.

Hearing these words, the young man took his bag and his stick and left his city at once. And he walked for 40 days and 40 nights, and after many dangers and toils he appeared before the blacksmith.

Finding out that the young man wanted to acquire the great science, the blacksmith put the rope from bellows of the smithy in his hand and told him to pull. And the student listens. One day, one month, one year, without saying a word, the young man stretched the rope of the bellows again and again. But one day, the young man opened his mouth and asked the master to tell him how the Great Science could be obtained.

The blacksmith just said, "Shut up and keep pulling the rope." And so, another 5 years passed. Then, on a far too grueling day, the pupil dropped the blacksmith's rope and begged the master to tell him the secret of the Great Science.

*- My son ! you can return to your country and your home, with all the knowledge of the world and life in your heart. For you have acquired it all, acquiring the virtue of patience ! **

Leadership: Can you develop an attitude worthy of a superior man, without performing several repetitions of your previous states and experiences?

Every day you discover a little secret that intervenes in the formation and development of thought, which added to other little secrets contributes to the manufacture of the Philosopher's Stone. But to reach such a skill you need at least ten years of practice, 16 hours full of trials and limits that you have to overcome, day by day.

And you must be lucky enough to meet at the right time an alchemist, a brilliant scientist who knows how to do – like no one else – experiments in chemistry and biochemistry in the laboratory. And if this alchemist is above all a painter full of vision and message, you can say that you are really lucky.

The science of one man is more useful to you than the science of the whole world ! In fact, the use of a man in the middle of this world depends on the science with which he continues to put his dreams on paper, making these dreams a lever for achieving performance in a field of activity. And such a lever that enriches your soul, learning a certain maturity in thinking, a certain attitude towards the important tasks of life, is that virtue called "patience" by which you observe all your things and deeds according to a certain rule, according to a certain measure, then you manage to give them a social connotation.

There would be something else. To understand that saying: "As in heaven, so on earth", you must first explore the mysteries of the universe, and then operate yourself on the pattern of infinity that wants to suggest one thing, namely, that there is a resemblance between what you are and what you should be, or between what you are as a human being and what drives you to evolve spiritually and scientifically.

Science, according to the individual's will to understand the impenetrable, is updated according to the model of the artist who set out to interpret optical sensations through chromatic equivalences – they are not the literal imitation of a natural thing, but its symbol. And the artist is only the one who, through the sensations of knowledge received from the self, not necessarily from the external world, manages to release the visual information from clichés and to twist it in the flow of a personal utterance. Because the world around you is just a picture you can't polish if the warmest colors aren't always present in your life.

The spiritual aspect of a coherent view of life is that which you must make a priority, so that you do not have to waste years to reach it.

The Science Of One Man (VS) The Science Of The Whole World provides an opportunity for a comparison between what you are able to learn only from yourself and what you are able to learn about yourself by interacting with the rest of the world. If you have time, try to list 5 things you could turn into priorities so that you don't have to lose 10 years to reach them. And if you can't list 5 things, then think of at least one thing you can change about yourself so that it becomes the foundation for the rest of your life.

 Note: One Thousand and One Nights (The Parable of the True Science of Life), Hyperion Publishing House, 1993.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-science-of-one-man-vs-the-science-of-the-whole-worl

The Science Of The Eternal Man Comprised Between Birth And Death

On January 08, 2014

Apply all the teachings of the science you serve and represent, in order to guide your value in a direction useful to your becoming.

The great Estonian scientist, Karl Baer, trying so hard to break the secrets of how chicken eggs are developed, was able to establish in the end the basis of a new science – compared embryology of the vertebrates. Basically, the study of embryos allowed the taxonomy of animal similarities.

As for myself, a man eager to climb the great pyramid of science and set the base for a new approach on leadership, I was interested in the way in which the scientist elaborated the new animal taxonomy. He discovered the most important thing: he showed that the embryo follows his own development way for each type of animals.

The echo of his theories was an innovation benchmark for me, serving at the same time as a unifying connection between two somehow different mentalities. And his way to apply the teachings and truths discovered along the research opened the horizon of my becoming as a man who rivals with the limits imposed by the framework of an unfulfilled scientific development.

The art of leadership is to keep the balance between opposing forces, fine-tuning each action according to the controllable context.

The pleasant incursion in the world of science, stimulating curiosity and personal becoming, ensuring the achievement of a certain cultural and ideological distinction, turned, on such a short notice, into a multitude of interesting reflections, theories and plausible considerations connected to leading. I was so tempted to understand the depiction of the compounds identification elements that favor a certain chemistry of the individuality, it was so exciting to handle the threads of some many contradicting hypotheses that support the human model.

Only so I could figure out what lies beyond my own person: the measured value and pragmatic orientation. These two characteristics gave me the necessary tools to understand the interaction between science and metaphysics, in favor of unique approaches in leadership.

Leadership: Do you agree to enter into an endless free fall, under the pretext of pursuing an ideal of great prestige and visibility in the field of science that goes beyond the narrow frame of your experience of being an observer?

We often step blindly through the labyrinth of uncertainty looking for answers to the question: "Where to?", guiding ourselves after some considerations regarding what is allowed for us search and too little after those considerations regarding what is useful for analyzing ourselves and for self-knowledge. The science of the man eternally caught between birth and life is left crossed by the total effort, by all the acts of will, by all the commitments to penetrate the mysteries of a complex, noble and beautiful profession, that is to say, a powerful form of thought, belonging to others, but possessed by everyone as a constantly increasing self-discipline, in a certain direction.

Instead of raising our culture and thinking level from this compromising slum of the self-unknown, we dwell deeper and deeper in what is called the quarantine of decent waiting. We are enveloped by a cloak of inner rottenness instead of showing a giant enthusiasm for searching, updating and saving those ideated virtues, which are rightly cherished by human society. The virtue of being a finished work of the scientist, a confession about the greatness of creation.

While old men stopped achieving notable results a long long time ago, young people lose their enthusiasm to appropriate science that is the capacity which makes possible the achievement of some additional "incomes" with a personal value. It's obvious that many aren't able to achieve a connection between cognitive performance and superior results, relevant for the leadership field. They can't see to what extent they're able to overachieve by following other scientists course for the purpose of establishing new ways of depicting the world and knowledge.

This means to start an endless free fall, in an extreme decline, reaching the natural extension of the stage called apathy, which erases a significant quantity of those previous productivity gains of resources allotted to improving skills, in compliance with the requests of great leadership.

Leadership: How much does it cost to build a bridge over the "abyss" that emerges between involution and science, in association with a "self with a high degree of personalization" who demands the right to assert their authenticity?

In order to enable that inner look that thwarts the traps on involution and functional inactivity, analyzing all those hypotheses, calculations, experiments, theories selected in order to better endure in front of all the attraction tendencies of the thinking model which honors science, the road to a tiny part of individual development should be cleared.

The road to the inability to see the new interface for the map called "plan of opening and reorganization of the individual stage" should be cleared, following an own evolutionary professional assertion path. I can't realize how this thing could change without assimilating the necessary knowledge to identify and analyze some new aspects of the information-substance interaction, some new knowledge resources, shaping arguments regarding the opportunity of expanding some new scientific concepts and fields of research.

Leadership is what you create under the weight of a "myself" conceived by recomposing the image of science from fragments of the teachings and truths discovered by others during their interventions throughout the world.

Do you remember Turms, the hero of the novel "The Etruscan" by Mika Waltari? He often tried to understand his being, listening to his thoughts and inner calling. Uncertain about his values, qualities and skills, he asked the wise priests to teach him what he has to knows in order to reach accomplishment. They answered to him: "Science is in yourself. Not in us."

An incursion in the world of science can be exceedingly pleasant only if it stimulates curiosity and personal becoming, ensuring a certain ideological and cultural distinction. It has to turn into something interesting, tangible, for the future, useful and accessible to the leadership you will apply in a permanent listening to yourself. To your thoughts and prejudices, to your value, to the image you create about yourself.

What costs in order to build a bridge above the "abyss" between involution and science is the connection and expense you set with the commitment to continuously improve the performances, ensuring the continuity of scientific research in the direction set by your field of activity. If you want to place yourself at the stage of "scholar" in terms of the way of consolidating the relation with excellence, apply all the teachings of the science you serve and represent in order to guide your value in a direction that is useful to your becoming.

"A myself with a high degree of personalization" can claim the right to assert its authenticity if the motivation to serve science is equal to the motivation to defend a noble cause.

Also, this "myself" must demonstrate its dignity to live under the umbrella of a glorious name of that whose resonance is recorded in the way opens his horizons in the face of a diversified and complex reality.

The Science of the Eternal Man comprised between Birth and Death aims at that free commitment to know, to learn, to overcome yourself so that you conquer the highest peaks of performance. It's a way that implies a constant commitment, aiming towards a new ideal that could place you in the category of top candidates to the award called: accomplishment.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-science-of-the-eternal-man-comprised-between-birth-a

The Seagull's Gaze

On September 24, 2021

In art, man represents nothing for himself, but only in relation to a point that nature creates through similarity and contiguity.

A seagull floats smoothly on the sea water, somewhere offshore. The small waves do not bother him, the heat does not bring him down. On the one hand it is seen as a work of nature, on the other hand as a symbol of freedom, the flight of the soul and the fullness of life. After all, his life is no different from other seagulls, only he is the only one who attracts attention with one interesting thing: he seems to be able to win everyone's attention.

But the question is: what does he see when he looks at the beach?

He sees some points moving randomly, completely autonomous individuals, unlimited in number. He sees people as lost, if not renegades. These points are separated between two realities: a mathematical one, a visionary one. And if we refer to points, then the human world can be intuited as a world of birds.

I think that man can be a species and can be one with the seagull, because it is also a point seen from a distance, from the sea, unlimited by the constraint of space and time. And the reality of the seagull can extend to the sight of points isolated from it, but close in the distance, which enter as something independent in its finite universe.

Leadership: Are you able to produce a creation as long as you position your self in the plane of the approach-magnification effect, or the more you chain the finitude into infinity?

It is here that art necessarily acquires the character of a perspective revealed as a distance between certain points, on a flat image plane. For this reason, the additions of color and light, being a direct cause of artistic creations, happened to open a vast perspective of understanding the effect of zooming-in and zooming-out. And what do we do next with this perspective? Well, we turn it into a painting technique.

The purpose of this technique is to capture the side of a representative figure in which the successions of points will eventually appear as a whole.

The seagull can lend to nature a manifestation of man or his sight, only if the distance between the points is considered the absolute identity between the universal and the particular. The more the seagull is seen as an autonomous universe, the more organic the artist is, being able to chain more the finiteness of infinity.

Great artists know how to combine at will the distance between an arbitrary side and its opposite side. They also know that often the opposites are in the same relationship in which nature and freedom are, emphasizing the idea of "absolute", intuited in the phenomenon or in relation to the individual. In art, man represents nothing for himself, but only in relation to a point that nature creates through similarity and contiguity.

To position your self in the plane of the approach-magnification effect means to immortalize a scene from the vast expanses of the distant – in relation to the particular, so that what you are going to reveal in art has a unitary, synthetic and individual character.

The Seagull's Gaze approaches the artist's gaze, because both of them mirror the space of an alterity that stages a certain identity meant to reflect – as a distinctive mark – "the unity that constitutes the embodiment of infinity in the finite".

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-seagulls-gaze.html

The Search Algorithm For Endless Knowledge

On January 30, 2014

Brush up on your decisive elements that stimulate your scientific progress so as to overcome the limits of imperfect knowledge.

The answer was missing altogether. Or rather, it existed, but it was very confusing, because something else was always put aside. A meaning that accumulated continually, an updating of impossible interpretations, developed by a number of experimental formulations. Was it another step towards an infinite multiplication of the incalculable? For I seemed to be in a space-time gap that no one could fill even with a word.

To ensure an appropriate degree of illumination of the meanings, interwoven in the right combination, I first had to weigh my views in the middle of a crowded intersection, full of assumptions, conclusions and various contents of symbols, invaded by some sequences of overtones which composed raw matter.

In this case, "the significant", which highlighted the differences and similarities between a mathematical reasoning, a philosophical speculation and a scientific fact, left room for the interpretation of those arrangements situated between two fixed coordinates. The first, oriented towards the origin of the axis of accessing the relative, the other, oriented towards the evolution of novelty that stretched over to an abstract level.

Leadership: Do you have a number of reasons to highlight the essence of thinking centered on your role in the content of representing a sui-generis world, putting it in the equation of the terms of "transparency that still has a shadow"?

Eliminating the improper versions of processing the factors that entered the equation of balancing meanings, with the possibility of choosing the algorithm used, I could have, obviously with a great dose of acceptance of what comes from the dark bosom of a burning mystery, observed that which was not yet known.

If I tried to heat up in a retort a mixture of sulfuric acid and calcium fluoride, waiting for the resulting hydrofluoric acid to pass into a vapor state, I could have easily penetrated beyond those walls of misunderstanding that tirelessly surrounded the obscure formulations and interpretive norms of a symbolism of deep originality. By first I had to learn to wield without precaution the particular chemical substances.

Chemistry is closely related to alchemy. And alchemy treats matter and helps you overcome the limits of perceivable knowledge, through experiments that are based on accelerated collisions between meanings and conclusions, on the basis of admissible truths.

The term "transparency that still has a shadow" applies to the embodiment of the mind that transgresses the boundary between the usual and the oneiric, exploiting a waiting horizon shortened to the maximum without having a real basis, but from which emerge: emotion, revelation, creation elements, opposition between transcendence and limitation, etc.

Can your style of leadership successfully merge two extremes without opting for any of them for a knowledge that, at the same time, always remains subjective?

Through leadership, subject to a multitude of laws and approaches that determine its effectiveness, a new way of exploiting knowledge can be understood, between the ideas and hypotheses emitted over time, with the purpose of producing a formula through which approaching a more deliberate reasoning can be made possible. This reasoning supports those points of view that contribute to the understanding of new major directions of progress.

But first you must really feel capable and determined to subject yourself to a rigorous edification of the intellectual progression. Even the most meager of thinking has its momentum. Only if it is stabilized between some fixed coordinates rejecting the multiplicity of interpretations and assumes no possibility of error.

Knowledge always remains subjective as long as it crosses the borders of a palpable reality, changing and suddenly becoming unpredictable, imposing itself with all the evidence in a hermetic delusion that you find not just as a constant of life, but also as a constant of the whole world.

Strengthening the flow of intellectual stimuli produces a whole range of forms derived from basic knowledge. At which level the used style can successfully merge two extremes: a science that cannot be conquered and a science that can be persistently re-experienced until the moment in which you become aware of the vastness of resources and of your own intellectual capacities.

Leadership can successfully merge two extremes: the rigor of reasoning that gives such brilliant results to what we call the "fullness of faith" and the rigor of knowledge resulting from the ways in which the lessons learned from the experiences of life are gathered and analyzed.

The intellectual approach that raises you to a different level of understanding of the importance of achieving perfection corresponds to the answers you give to the question:

How can you reduce the confusion about what you should do to give a significant impetus to attitude toward existence, as a totality of mental processes that outline a totally different picture of reality?

The Search Algorithm For Endless Knowledge runs in response to an attempt of exceeding your necessary support of performance. But this algorithm does not describe the steps to be taken in order to produce in a finite time, new achievements and approaches in leadership. But calls upon himself each and every time you try to open the way to new perspectives of understanding sets of notions for accession to higher evolutionary levels.

If you don't try to develop your ability to grasp what constitutes raw matter, this algorithm will stop or will not be applied properly.

Are you crossed by that continuous concern of knowing ever changing realities, by acquiring a science of leadership in any circumstance, so as to become a role model worth following?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-search-algorithm-for-endless-knowledge.html

The Secret Is Elsewhere

On March 06, 2012

Learn to transform the performance of your activities into a refined art that contributes with a meaning of great value in the perimeter of a knowledge capable of reconstructing the reality of the present time.

Sometimes I look at what kind of training is provided by the community of speakers, trainers, coaches, mentors or consultants in Romania (mainly). It is not difficult for the eye to observe a resemblance between all these specialists in the field of motivational discourses, especially if we take into account the fact that everything one says ends up being said by the other.

The first thing to come up at such courses is the variant of subject that seems to be repeated indefinitely, with only a few differences of approach:

1. "How to achieve your goals" or "From goal to result".

2: "How to sell more profitably" or "From sale to prosperity".

3: "How to make money from... anything" or "From idea to money".

4: "Trainer of trainers course".

When I see such titles of subjects, I simply feel like retiring to a limited space from which everything has been removed, it has such a zero point that I feel like everything is being emptied within me. Only the clean breath and the scent of the flowers in the garden keep me alive.

Instead of these trainers "specialized in the field" I would try not to repeat myself, but I would come up with something new. There are so many new things to discover or cultivate that never find their energy catalyst, that never let you forget that you are more than you think you are. And some people have forgotten the law of great knowledge which says that "something that is often repeated is something already commonplace."

Leadership: Is the creation to which you dedicate yourself with enthusiasm in relation to the factual material the beginning of a way of thinking that can become the new beginning of the "Renaissance in One"?

The secret of success in any field lies elsewhere... in broadening the horizon of interpretation and application of knowledge. New and good ideas come from those who are in no hurry to prove their worth, except through an acute need to turn knowledge into a continuous process of creation, close to a kind of thinking that is the beginning of a way of thinking that can become the new beginning of the "Renaissance in One".

And here I am referring to a kind of creation whose fulcrum is art and a therapy for the soul, a science of nourishing various minds with a penchant for spirituality (which many have abandoned).

Renaissance in One, I see it as a special and delicate, defining thing in a unique creation that promotes the idea of an association between the aesthetics of visual arts and the aesthetics of the written word, full of meanings, referring to the old symbolism of Fulcanelli.

And this idea, presented in a form that is as organized and as objective as possible, must have the force to determine the student to say: "Yes, this is what I want". Somehow, your science must lead people to autonomy, self-determination, self-confidence, a high level of professionalism, pro-activity, to the ability to explore and change their conditions of manifestation.

You need to know something else. The true promoters of progress are lucky to always meet when they are most needed, and to form a formidable team. But first everyone must prove that their ideas are an indispensable condition for progress. Gradually, a circle of vital forces will be formed that will contribute to the position of each one on the first place in the ranking of the most valuable Brands.

Every day you become more and more aware of your value and all you have to do is think about how it can be measured (first of all) in words, in the most credible way. Obviously, there are many situations where ideas will not be fully accepted, so you need to revitalize them, give them a different shade or highlight their natural "symbol" look – and always do that with the thought in mind that when you change a man's suit, you actually change his personality.

If you share this same philosophy with me, I am waiting for you to join my team !

Leadership is the condition of manifesting the power of creation in the subtle plane of a knowledge that needs only a practical value in order to be appreciated as a keystone of the vision of the type: "anything is possible".

The Secret Is Elsewhere than where you leave your personal mark. In fact, the secret is to promote the knowledge you deserve to be useful to a generation that crosses the bridge from one level of consciousness (to which only artists rise) to another (to which only people thirsty for perfection rise).

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-secret-is-elsewhere.html

The Secret Language Of Leadership (II)

On February 18, 2011

Familiarize your soul with the knowledge of the presence of the hidden, teaching it to know the invisible reality after crossing visible things.

What a transformation ! Do you remember the end of the movie? The manager changed his attitude after Vivian advanced his transformation from a prostitute attitude to a lady attitude. This time, he expressed gratitude and pride, being seized by that sincere and total admiration for Vivian, considering her one of the most interesting persons that he had ever met.

The manager kissed her hand with that delicate caution with which you touch something fragile and, looking in her eyes full of a sincere admiration, he addressed her with a warm voice, a gentle and even affectionate tone and with a trace of sorrow in his heart:

- Vivian, it was a pleasure meeting you. Come and visit us sometimes. And, furthermore, he puts at her disposal the hotel's limo to take her wherever she wants.

Just as the Church has the duty to save people's souls - so quality leadership aims to transform leaders in better men. The surest and most effective way to determine others to stop considering you a person with authority and an unfriendly being is to express yourself in accordance with their own feelings. Letting the others to adjust to your presence and your leadership, many of them will change their attitude and mentality.

Leadership: Do you dare give a new dimension to the concept of "Quality" through the originality of expressing your position towards the revealing means of producing an expression called "Reset Value"?

The manager eventually fell in love with her. He showed an expression of happiness so perfect and so pure, being deeply pleased of meeting her. In a way, he even felt bad that he didn't communicate more with her during her stay there.

The manager perceived the true essence of everything that was good in Vivian and learned about her true desires. He realized what kind of person she was, how her true nature was, what her aspirations were; he sensed what her intentions were – those of changing her life, and thus he got to reconsider his attitude toward her. He loved her more than he loved any other client.

The best thing you can do for your leadership is to cover it with feeling. You tend to keep away everyone you interact with? If so, then you risk getting hurt in your own pride, as the hotel manager.

If people receive from you a certain kind of acceptance, they will give you a little more confidence. Be open to their offer to remove the dense darkness of your soul, and thus you will be spared by much trouble and misunderstandings.

The quality you want someone to have is equivalent to the value you give yourself in the conditions of a form of revealing fragments of pure sincerity, those grains of reality that reveal the unconscious source of thoughts expressed differently with generosity.

The value of resetting the someone's profile, only to the extent in which you find what in what limits is his influencing possible through suggestion and to what extent can be exerted the suggestions that exert negative influences, coincides with its attempts to overcome the limits imposed by the stereotypes of "rebellious youngster" (a tributary of materialistic thinking that has at its core living in the middle of the world, of the whole).

Leadership: Do you carefully consider the factors favoring the occurrence of suggestive situations and inducing the suggested answer?

To get out of ambiguous situations, when you can't find out anything about the hidden things of the man before you, you have to often opt for momentary alternatives that do not meet the requirements of relating to a consistent system of references. Such an alternative has the objective to correctly identify the match between the human profile and its attributions, between empathy and objectivity, or between its context of life and its context of performance.

For example, by analyzing the activity and attitude of a person from the perspective of personal experience, which may favor the emergence of an unmet need of authority, we find that the hidden thing has nothing wrong within itself, but requires a certain mental and spiritual mood that facilitates a certain type of communication achieved through gestures, facial expressions, habits, reactions, replies, tendencies, etc.

The hidden detail that no one notices at first in a man, since it requires an in-depth analysis of temperament, character, culture, age, etc., can be reconstituted from his consumption of frustrations or favors. What exactly does he ask of you so that you will not disregard his pride, opinions, values or needs? What exactly are you able to give him so that he will never want anything more?

The factors favoring the occurrence of suggestive situations, where you use a suggestion-like behavior, assuming an initiative, an advice, an observation, are represented by how the individual is exposed to experiences experienced through joy, not through troubles.

While the induction of a suggested response, as an expression of impact on the human psyche, depends relatively on how interested the individual was in knowing his purpose and role in life. This answer is in fact an acknowledgment of sentimental / social failure, or an acknowledgement of the greatness of preserving within the soul only that which was beautiful and worthy to be cherished.

Man must be examined from the viewpoint of the considerations according to which the more realistic the relationship between the meaning that he gives to his life and the role he assumes in his relationship with others, the more the image of himself is clearer.

The secret language of leadership designates the way you react to other's feelings and needs, to whatever happens around you and to the way you relate to others.

Express your positivism and trust toward everyone. Use a personal manner in which to disclose to people – through the way you communicate with them and how you relate to their needs and feelings. The secret language of leadership reflects your attention to the motivations of those around you.

The way you perceive people, the way you accept them around you, the way you « choose » them and the way you talk to them establish the dimension of your leadership. You will be able to differentiate yourself from other leaders only if you listen to people and leave time to change them.

Conclusion: As a leader, you must know people's feelings, needs and aspirations. Therefore, you must be close to them, especially in critical moments, and give them the opportunity to change.

Assess properly the feelings of others, for the dimension of your leadership to grow.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-secret-language-of-leadership-II.html

The Secret Language Of Leadership (I)

On February 18, 2011

Assess properly the feelings of others, for the dimension of your leadership to grow.

The first step in the most favorable direction for leadership is to reconsider your attitude and opinion toward other people. Leaving time pass, you will certainly form a very different picture of those surrounding you. I'll refer once more to the movie "Pretty Woman (1990)" to emphasize better this aspect.

The Regent Beverly Wilshire hotel. At one point, between the manager Barney Thomson and Vivian Ward, the lady companion of the controversial businessman, Edward Lewis, there is a discussion. Concerning the manager, he was very determined to expel Vivian from the hotel as soon as possible, because she, being a prostitute, could affect the hotel's reputation.

Being an educated man, with a sortable character, the manager tells Vivian in a subtle way, but using a soldierly tone, that he will make an exception to the rule and accept her in his hotel, due to the presence of Mr. Lewis, who was an important customer. But when Mr. Lewis would leave, she would become unwelcomed there.

Because she wasn't a woman recognized in that "sophisticated" world of luxury and wealth, Vivian nodded, once more pained that someone scorned her. She had been warned ! Well warned ! Thus, she had to obey.

Predictions didn't become true. Vivian's stay for a week in that luxurious hotel didn't cause any unpleasant incidents, controversy or inconvenience. On the contrary, it was a great blow especially to the manager's pride and frigidity. For she had a genuine will that drew strength from her own aspirations to show that she can be someone else, she can rise above her condition – that of a prostitute, and she can become a "lady". She succeeded in being noticed by everyone, being considered one of the most beautiful, elegant and mannered women in that hotel.

Leadership: Can you find your motivation to be someone else in the case of an image that is commonly attributed to the meaning of "rigorous experiencing of life"?

If we are to examine the space of human representativeness in which there is an obligation to raise the individual to the rank of a "tolerated subject", concurrent with an unlimited source of heat called soul, and if we seek the balance between predictability, malleability, and responsibility, then we certainly will not be able to perceive the symmetry between value and price.

An image that is currently attributed to the meaning of "rigorous experiencing of life", has as a unique element of analysis that intensification of the contrast between appearance and essence, that is, between what you are in danger of losing and what you are able to gain.

The man whose merits and honor are avoided, tastes from the bitterness of life as intensely as the painter capturing someone's attention by presenting his self-portrait: with humility and rebellion.

Can we equate the significance we are trying to give to what happens to us, causing a painful affective discharge, with the meaning we attribute to the stories behind our image, which eludes social reality? Can we try to see people as objects we are surrounded by, stemming from the field of an unconventional design?

If we look at people as rare objects, often possessing useful value and at the same time aesthetic value, analyzing the role of our combinatorial capacity in the process of creating a successful model, we will be able to compose the beautiful or the sublime in the extent to which they belong to the category of values that go beyond the field of aesthetics. And the aesthetic, as someone said, we have no right to make it absolute, but to dwell on it in the tension of maintaining certain moral, ethical principles that serve the truth to high standards.

Leadership: Can you approach the meaning of a certain action of human behavior by investigating the motivation from which it originates?

A science-derived formula that does not relate to the beauty you can admire and study for an extended period of time without getting tired of it, is the following: "Observe what you do not know and do not refuse knowledge". It is not about that hard to perceive beauty, which only brings special thanks if you observe it from a critical perspective, but rather one of knowledge behind the image you give to the world that starts with complete doubt regarding everything.

People are not objects that can be found in almost all interiors, with the same practical status and with the same ability to "like". Which, when we get bored of them, when their price is low, we can change for something else.

We are a bunch of reflections that can clarify our existence in a mysterious world, full of increasingly subtle and persistent colors, which checks the exact configuration of our own version of beauty: inner or outer.

The question we need ask ourselves comes from an internet user: "Do we have the strength to look at the configuration of our own subjectivity and to uncover, from underneath the ashes of doubt and mistrust, the seeds of values once dear to us, but insufficiently expressed?"

Subjectivity is just an attempt to give personal experience a meaning that will console your pride. And the insufficiently expressed values relate to what you decide to do and the end result you want to achieve in the conditions of a double form of risk: the need to express your stance on the negative outcomes of your life and the need to defend your principles under the conditions of a lack of interest.

Leadership focuses on how you use reality so that others' perceptions of you are identical to your reactions to their attitude.

The Secret Language of Leadership relates to the connection that is created between the perception of the reality that guides the actions of man and the things seen through emotions, uniting distinct elements of identity under certain discursive conditions. These elements can be rearticulated differently under certain circumstances of producing an impact at a level of consciousness.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-secret-language-of-leadership.html

The Secret Nature Of Thoth

On Februaty 10, 2009

The resonance between primordial divinity and self-consciousness shapes the contours of timeless reality in an effort to open a new perspective on the origins of one's existence.

Ibebi was silent. Silence settles between them, barely disturbed by the puff of breath. Then Ibebi said:

- Now, tell me what you know about the creation of the world according to the teaching in this temple of Thoth.

- Once again, I can only tell you what I read in the first book of Thoth, Cheops answered. In the beginning, everything was in Thoth, he was confused with the eight mysterious primordial divinities.

- Who were these mysterious gods? asked Ibebi.

- These gods were four, but they had in them the two aspects, male and female, only their union being creative. And these unintelligible beings were called Nun, its feminine form being Naunet. The second couple was Huh and Hauhet, the third, Kuk and Kauket, the fourth, Amon and Amaunet. That is why the creator god was able to say about himself: "I am One who becomes Two; I am Two who becomes Four; I am Four who becomes Eight"; they are the One who protects the Eight, for these divinities are but emanations of his nature.

Leadership: In the idea that "I am One becoming Two, I am Two becoming Four", how do you perceive the relationship between symmetry and the expansion of self-consciousness in your view of the origin of reality?

- These Eight do not constitute the essence of Thoth, are they not connected to him very closely, so that he creates them from his own substance, that is, he makes them come out of him by the power of the word or, more precisely, by his will?

- So it seems. For Nun and Naunet are two aspects of the unorganized primordial world, of the chaos that, through union, will give birth to the organized world. But it is written that Huh and Hauhet are the waters, and I do not know what I must understand by that. Could it be the waters of the divine river that comes out of the womb and fertilizes the Earth?

- No, because only much later did the waters of the Earth and the waters of the sky come to life. You will learn their nature later. But keep going.

- Kuk and Kauket mean the infinite space immersed in darkness, before the creation of light.

Leadership: Do you find that a repeating cycle of deities can be a visual landmark for understanding the ways reality folds on different levels of your own consciousness?

- Isn't it in this limitless space that the creation of the sensible world will take place?

- Of course.

- Because, without this space, nothing can have extension and everything is reduced to a tiny point. You do not believe?

Cheops agreed with a movement of his head. Then he asked:

- But I don't know what to say about Amon and Amaunet. Why is this divine couple hidden? If it is hidden, it cannot appear to our sight, and why, if it is, does it not manifest itself?

- This is precisely the part of the mystery, that which is hidden from the curiosity of mortals. He learns that all these aspects of the universe, which lie at the basis of its totality, are in Thoth, they constitute the secret nature of Thoth.

Your perspective on creation, seen through the lens of discovering divinity, influences how your visual perception takes shape and relevance in your consciousness.

The secret nature of Thoth is aimed at those aspects of the universe, which lie at the basis of the totality of a new understanding of oneself, which can transform you into a much richer spiritual man, able to concentrate greater power in his hands.

Have you ever thought that interpreting these emanations of the divine nature might reveal to you new kinds of exposure to the relationship between the finite and the infinite?

 Note: Rachet, Guy - Cheops and the Ibis conjuration , Lucman Publishing House, 2003.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-secret-nature-of-thoth.html

The Secret Of A Diachronic And Current Discovery

On October 29, 2010

Before you represent the progress of the world, learn to understand what it means to accept yourself in a world that does not accept your vision.

Here is how the wonderful book "Robur the Conqueror" written by Jules Verne ends, and what we have to learn from this character:

- Citizens of the United States, my experience is over and I can share with you my opinion from now on: I think we should never rush things, not even when it comes to progress. Science must not take precedence over morals. I stand for evolution, rather than revolutions. In a word, everything should be done when its time is due. It would mean arriving too soon today to overcome so many conflicting interests. Nations are not yet ripe enough to achieve a union.

Thus, I leave, taking with me the secret of my discovery. But this secret will not be lost to humanity. The world will acquire it on the day when it will be enlightened enough to benefit from it and wise enough not to abuse it. Citizens of the United States, farewell !

And now the question remains: Who is Robur? Will it ever be known? It is known right now. Robur is science as it will be in years to come, maybe even tomorrow. It is the sure reserve of the future. But what happens to Robur the Conqueror? Will he ever show himself as he promised?

Nonsense ! He will come to reveal the secret of a discovery capable of changing the social and political conditions of mankind.

Leadership: Can you strengthen the connection between science and faith by reflecting your predestination that comes from the vicinity of an exceptional destiny that assumes a history, and which can also be rewritten?

What I call progress, or the genesis of a people, is defined by reference to the relationship between tradition and innovation, between influence and creative assimilation, being interpreted from another perspective, that of a possible correspondence between the internalization of a valid creative experience and the joy of reaching a hard to conquer certainty.

And if progress is difficult to achieve, by reference to a tradition that signifies the acquisition of a new spiritual life, meaning if true faith is a human contribution to the development of science, enriching it with a complex conceptual-practical analysis of the pros and cons of various inventions and technologies, then Robur the Conqueror proved a remarkable prediction: when people become aware of the importance of moving from one stage of development to another, only then will they be able to claim a better life.

The reader will strengthen their diachronic (evolutionary) unity conscience and current Faith, noting how unitary science was and remained over time, if you understand that the true legacy of Divinity is the driving force behind the progress that has the capacity to resist and oppose the degradation of this world.

In fact, the need for the act of creation that links science to true faith, in order to achieve sustainable development, through correspondence with the valorization of innovation based on information and knowledge, qualifies as an attempt to influence the perspective of seeing into the future. While the possible certainties of science, the awareness of those forces at the center of the cultivation of Divinity, have as a starting point valid experiences of interpretation of the phenomena and events of the surrounding world that allow to increase their intelligibility and control.

To be predestined to an exceptional destiny that assumes a history, and which can also be rewritten, means to be aware of the importance of testing other people before you to push the world faster towards evolution. Indeed, it is desirable to follow evolution and progress, and that means to depend on the evolution and progress of a society full of attractive and hallucinatory information.

Leadership is the consequence of a story that involves aligning an entire society to the standards of vision and competence of a few unique people who knew how to say "YES" to an extraordinary vision, when everyone else said "NO".

The Secret Of A Diachronic And Current Discovery will be found only in the analysis of the accelerated progress of science and technology, which I propose as an intuitive assertion of intellectual functions. For the man who embraces science is a thinker who has refused to be part of a herd that follows clerics outside of time, in this way analyzing trends and essential phenomena in today's society, and who can enter the "Divine Mind" after transcending human limitations.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-secret-of-a-diachronic-and-current-discovery.html

The Secret Of Nature

On July 04, 2023

What you see is what you want to say about yourself in an image that represents you by imprinting it on the soul of the world.

The sea is spectacular, especially when the sun's rays give it a special glow, in which case I focus on seeing only one part of an enchanting picture: the isolated spot of a beach in a Danny Boyle film, which resembles a paradise of nature, of a special natural beauty.

There is a life here, a fulfillment of the soul, a discreet presence accessible in the form of my own sense of self-acceptance, which sees, which lives fully, which says something with its gaze full of grace and meanings, correlated with the ambition to represent in color any moment in the plane of reality. When the sun rises, it makes this place so charming that the image of this place, its imprint on my soul, is more than a string of recognizable objects. I feel as if I entered a neutral present, forgotten by time, and came out someone else, more inclined towards the artistic field, under the brush of an impressionist painter who transforms any view into a story.

Sensitivity to sunlight occurs when too much light enters my eyes, or when what I see exceeds the expectations of the artist in me, specifying that any manifestation of beauty has as its basic premise the intuitive way of rendering a discourse with nature, passing at any moment from the plane of reality to that of fiction.

Leadership: Can the image you relate your vision to have an echo in the form of a sense of additional "presence" merging with you?

Indeed, the eye is metaphorically dominated by the light that the retina absorbs, like a radio frequency signal, and the emission is taken up by a translucent color pattern, which cannot be drawn anyway, but metaphysically, that is, soulfully, divinely, without producing any real physical effect. Repeated by multiplication, the sight is influenced by the artist during the creative process, which makes each part of it a unique expression of the imagination of the eye that captures the mystical-metaphysical space from a simple visual work (photo, painting), from a timeless present.

Nature is an animated presence, merging with my life, becoming part of me, having an echo in time in the form of a feeling of additional, animated "presence". Not for nothing, something from off repeats to me even now:

"Nicu, learn to paint with the soul, with the sense of sight, with the warmth that the light gives off. And paint for a world that is not dominated by finality, emitting the suggestion of another world, which disappears and reappears, but in a different way, namely stronger, so that you feel more energetic, more enlivened by the sap of nature."

Leadership: Can your creation be the result of a feeling that synthesizes emotion and image, considering an abstract visual medium that explores the infinite possibilities of the form that the appreciation of "beauty" takes?

In this sense, the eye must configure luminous images with the help of connection structures between the real and the imaginary that lead the gaze from a perspective foreground - to a high horizon, using various cosmological elements of the world (water, air, fire, earth). It's a natural process that happens when I like what I see more than what reality shows me concretely.

In this way, the image is not much clearer, more airy or metaphorical, but it seems touched by a higher echo, an inexhaustible delirium through which the dialogue between me and divinity manifests, Umatahn Ytualarripha Rifeshazna, the enlightenment of the mind through divine grace.

The sea, itself a pearl in God's eyes, symbolizing life full of passions, represents a long lesson of observation, a succession of dreams, a series of collisions with the future, not the sum of what I have been, but of what I have learned to be. In this case, my eyes, well trained to see, have as the primary source of producing an artistic vision the determination of the angle of perception between the action plane and the visual axis, these two being determined as active elements of the composition, such as light accents, shadows, the game of sparkles.

Indeed, I am a special artist, because I have understood one important thing: what I see is exactly what I am trying to say about myself in an image that represents me by imprinting it in the soul of the world. I am a true artist who has allowed himself to use a new process to represent mental states, instead of stimulating the development of painting through illusionistic means, always finding a similarity between image and emotion, between the real object and its lively content.

Leadership: Can you reproduce in an image the feeling experienced from a contemplation of the immediacy around, through a mutual determinism between the beauty of nature and a revealing vision?

Hans Christian Andersen told about the wise King Solomon, who understood the speech of non-speaking creatures, that he heard their songs and discussions, but this did not make him smarter, at least on that point. He had discovered the hidden forces of plants and metals, forces capable of removing disease, removing death, but not abolishing it. In all that was created and within reach, King Solomon sought to discover the light that would unlock the secret of eternal life, but he did not find it, while the Book of Truth lay before him as if it contained only pages unwritten. Christianity showed him in the Bible the comforting word about an eternal life, but he would have wanted to find it in his own book. And nothing was visible in it...

The same thing happened to me: looking at the sea with expressive eyes, sometimes with nostalgia, but always with eyes that sparkle because of the sun's rays reflected in it, I tried to recognize the secret of nature Apsicumusia Anonimenry Eschetars Aoshijas. But, unlike King Solomon, I discovered the meaning of these words and, thus, managed to reproduce the essence of the secret of nature through a single guiding idea: "choose any thing around, and try to make it as beautiful as possible".

And here, on the horizon, another guiding idea takes shape: "try to capture and preserve the ephemeral beauty of things, transforming them into something eternal". In each flower, from the petals to the final product, a part of the artist's soul can be found. He sees the beauty of his soul in every flower, in every petal, and through his art, this beauty is preserved forever. In each flower, the artist creates the effect of a larger or fuller flower, more mysterious or rarer.

Therefore, the secret of nature is closely related to the gratitude that the snapshot of a unique, inexhaustible moment left me, to the need to capture in a dream image everything that comes from the heart, unbroken by the noise of the world. And the great treasure of the teaching, here it is expressed by me like this: "As the sun dwells in the sky, so in my soul dwells the affinity, the native call that gives life to the cloth, in the form and in the exact shade of the colors that gradually conquer all souls."

As for leadership, I will raise to the level of reflection that activity of reproducing an image either during its repeated perception (recognition from memory) or based on some ideas about it, so as to reconstruct the authentic profile of a visionary who manages to create the unexpected drawing inspiration from the work of nature.

Only a visionary genius can think outside the "box".

The Secret Of Nature is the result of a reflection on the wonders of nature, as they prevail in the interaction between image and spirit, against the background of a sensibility that cannot be virtualized in temporary "surpluses" (as are objects subject to perishability).

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-secret-of-nature.html

The Secret Workshop Of Leadership

On March 31, 2012

Ensure your means of refining your traits of character and of using them in your favor, by focusing your decisions in the direction of your feelings and your most profound experiences.

The beginning of the movie "The Devil's Advocate (1997)". Kevin Lomax, a very ambitious young lawyer, manages to acquit his very wealthy client - sentenced for double rape. Immediately after this success, he is recruited by the famous law firm "Milton, Chadwick Waters". And from here to Hell was not a long way. His wife dies, his mother too, and his friends mysteriously disappear. His life falls apart. The guilt was none other than his foster father, John Milton, which in the end of the movie, suggests to join him, and to "serve" the sin. However, Kevin, overwhelmed by the memory of his wife, commits the unexpected gesture: suicide, ending the pact with the devil.

Then the act is rewound. The camera is moving towards Kevin, entering the courtroom, astounded, where he had to defend the respective culprit accused of rape. His eyes meet his wife's, Mary, and remained nailed as a magnetic force, of her serenity and purity. Penetrated deep inside by a mysterious joy, he approaches her.

Furthermore, the two charming heads, one pale and surrounded by the magic of the blessed seeing again, the other one rosy, soft and smiling, approached with grace and hook their lips and thoughts - as if two drops of vivid essence would be met, and became one whole. Kevin's heart seemed to emanate the same words that the Count La Mole has addressed once to Queen Margot: "I need you as I need air, and the light of the day."

His face, full of the joy of very deep feelings, mirrored one thought: "I love you, Mary ! " - And these expensive words, these words for all the dialects of the earth chose the most undulating vowels and the most pleasing to the ear consonants - were really eloquent for the way he sustained his plea. In fact, Kevin has decided to no longer represent his client, thus refusing to decay morally.

Leadership: Have you tried to test your ability to feel in a context that constrains you, but gives you the opportunity to reveal yourself to the world altogether?

Any significant change of the sense of your existence is generally supported and maintained by the evolution of your leadership. The modification of your own status by undermining the basic values and principles (which it is imperative to follow in order to get those personality traits accepted by the others) - can affect your level of conscience, belief, by inducing quite burdensome spiritual and mental states. Which if persist over time, can create discomfort at the psychological and emotional level.

Such a discomfort, caused by the transition to an altruistic life, which generates love, to a self-centered existence, has overwhelmed the young lawyer Kevin Lomax once he deviated from the moral values that he embodied. He represents a significant example of the human kind, who has not completely lost his honor, and indebted to his inner nature, and especially, surrounded by the feelings that he cherished for the loved one, has found the salvation of his own self, unfortunately, through suicide.

Often, the courage to reveal yourself to the world as your soul asks for, by accentuating the tendency to judge yourself harshly for the mistakes made or as a result of remembering an experience of the type: "the lesson of death that brings life" or, by an effort of the consciousness of discerning between truth and falsehood, between good and evil, stands out when you have to push your limits to an unavoidable end.

Leadership is a tool for attaining a sense of attitude to the job you take, having the power to turn a result of a long process of consciousness into a tip of the spear for the renewal of one's own being.

Important in the evolution of your leadership is not only your interior and knowledge, but also the cycle of emotions and events that you produce - the whole "production" of emotions, aspirations, tendencies and inner emancipation in a given time. It must be added another important dimension to this: that you live your "work".

Your entire lifestyle combined with the adopted leadership style conditions the "work of conversion" to yourself.

To experience the "mirroring" means to follow the tendency towards unity between the image of the perception of a slip into sin and the content of the faith that assures you the victory of values in front of the world and destiny.

Kevin Lomax has renounced to the position that he owned in the most powerful law firm in the world, thus succeeding finally to return to his original status, fair and honest, on which relied on his existence - marriage with Mary, the relationship with his mother and his friends. He had the power to reassess his Ego and to highlight his character traits, too late indeed, intensifying the perception of his own self in relation to the Ego of those whom he loved, especially of Mary.

You, future leader, how would you proceed? Would you abandon the position that you have in order to strengthen the relationships with the loved ones, or you would continue to overcome your condition, really trying to be more - and to risk being failed in the most important area of your being - the consciousness?

Leadership: Can you go for hours in the shadow of a tower, without being able to overcome it?

Give a chance to your leadership for becoming a strong point of your life, by maintaining a longer time your moral and emotional integrity. However, for this you must penetrate the inner world of the other people, to read their deepest feelings, to try to approach them morally and emotionally.

Your attitude full of attention, especially for those who are part of your life, your ability to adapt to their spiritual needs is the key to the entire completion process of your own Ego. For rising to the level of your leadership, you must receive the approval of your own Ego to strengthen and to reinforce yourself emotionally. Therefore, include in your conscience, in your deep down those positive, constructive, and well polished thoughts, and do not let anyone and anything to ever darken them.

During physical exercise, the heart must provide a greater blood supply to the various organs and especially to the muscular system.

So and you, in order to evolve to a high level of awareness of the duties of the foundations of one's own faith and to listen to the often-silent cry that rises from the heart, you have to add an extra spiritual balance to the relationship between what is just (fairness) and what is rational (the good).

By not being concerned about the changing of your own way of being is like going for minutes on end in the shadow of a very high tower, without being able to overcome it. The tower is the projection of your own conscience, and the shadow is that constant part of you that follows you everywhere. If you want to climb the leadership ladder, learn to overcome yourself, to overcome any doubt that you have about your own self – by strengthening your spiritual and moral values, and showing much strength of character.

The consciousness that guides you in life on the right path is the equivalent of your chances of turning back time by rememorating feelings, memories, thoughts, feelings, but also through the "regaining" of the soul lsot through a form of guilt and despair.

The secret workshop of the leadership is the place where it is polished and cultivated your system of moral norms and behavior, gathered over time, that you have to put in value in any situation in order to remove all that is good of you and of the other people. And, always, to keep them in appropriate conditions so that they would never degrade and never lose their brightness.

Ensure your means of refining your traits of character and of using them in your favor, by focusing your decisions in the direction of your feelings and your most profound experiences. Enhance your ability to perceive the emotions of others and, according to them, to ensure a high intake of positive energy and to give a new meaning to your life.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-secret-workshop-of-leadership.html

The Seed Of Success

On August 25, 2010

Establish a closer relationship with people by expressing your highest appreciation for their contribution to your transformation.

The Romanian comedy actor Puiu Călinescu was invited a long time ago to the television show "Profesioniștii". The director of the show, Eugenia Vodă, asked him if he remembers a more special moment in his acting life that really marked him. Puiu Călinescu answered in a warm and pleasant tone:

- I remember a show I played at hospital no. 9. I entertained patients and doctors. And I will not forget, a simple woman came to me and said: "Mr. Puiu. Thank you for everything you have done for me. If you come to us twice a week, I'm not taking any medicine."

And then Puiu Călinescu told the presenter: "This for me was... better than an Oscar, better than an artist of the people... I felt like a surgeon doing a surgery and saving a life..."

How do you establish a closer connection with people: through a show meant to impress, or through an "emotional content" capable of promoting values such as: "must you always believe that you are experiencing something much more special than you think"?

The concept of relational intelligence has preoccupied me for a long time and for this reason I will dwell more on it in this article. Because, as someone rightly points out, we are born as a result of a relationship, we develop in a system of relationships and we are constantly in a relationship, so I think it is important to discover and cultivate the resources necessary for healthy relationships.

Developing your leadership should start with establishing relationships and working with people, but this can be more easily accomplished through a display, a revelation of those qualities and traits that make you unique – something that helps you impose yourself in their minds and souls. These qualities and traits that determine your attitude towards other people, as well as their attitude towards you, are the most relevant for your recognition, for your ascension, generating that tiny spark that brings you closer to excellence.

Are you in a position to stand up for the good of the people? Leadership is therefore conditioned by the selection of those qualities and traits that give you added value, expanding your own universe, making you better understand the reality of your own thoughts and feelings, your own values, your own orientations and trends in people.

Leadership: Can you prove your spiritual nobility only by the way you value the content of your personality, as a recognition of the truth on which your spiritual power rests?

Let us remember the actor Puiu Călinescu, whose whole existence was filled with the feeling of good done to others, when the poor sick woman evaluated his nobility of soul and strengthened his conviction that nothing is higher than man, that nothing better satisfies the thirst for self-knowledge than the way you value the content of your own personality. This is the best medicine that anyone can give you, as a revival of your whole feeling, a recognition of the truth on which your spiritual power rests.

All your qualities, in order to be appreciated and supported by other people, must be doubled by the position of defender of their good. What is your basic need? Defining your path as clearly as possible in life – initiating those facts, those processes that come to support them, or minimizing your development potential by acting only for the purpose of "maintaining" and maximizing your own benefits?

Nobility is the seed of your success; it allows you to initiate those actions that guarantee the achievement of leadership performance standards based on sound principles. And as I have said so many times, nobility can only be discovered through interaction, as a result of the way you are treated or the way you treat others. By spicing up people's lives with as much warmth as possible, by striving to give them a new breath of life, a new inner radiance, you will be able to better develop that area with growth potential called: interaction.

Leadership has as its first characterization the boundless nobility that you can discover only through interaction, as a result of the way you are treated or the way you treat others.

Nobility, as someone wrote on "cristiantube.net", you do not recognize until you notice the superiority, generosity, warmth and kindness that make the content of the answer received. And when, instead, that person does not ask you for anything, then you feel overwhelmed and indebted to be able to somehow pay for it, all that remains is to appreciate the quality and charm of its character.

"After such an experience, you become better, the world seems to be beautified by the wealth discovered, perception on relating changes and you start to want to have that character trait and imprint it on others. And, behaving with nobility towards others, you highlight wonderful treasures deeply embedded in your God-designed genetic code."

What are those qualities and traits that give you added value? Do you care about equipping your leadership with those benefits that are beneficial to others? Is your leadership based on sound principles? Do you spice up people's lives with as much warmth as possible?

The highest appreciation for people's contribution to your transformation is related to that attitude, a superior moral trait that you show when no one applauds you, when no one believes in you.

The Seed Of Success can be found very well in this quote: "Most precious are those noble deeds which remain unknown."

The meeting of actor Puiu Călinescu with the hospital patients, strengthened his conviction that the only way to reach his full potential as a man of influence, as a human being destined to offer a large amount of affection, is to propel people to a higher level of faith and spiritual development, helping them to attain an ideal state of existence. This is the belief behind the change of any leader.

Do you feel the need to support the spiritual rebirth of people?

A permanent research of the self allows self-knowledge and logically, through reasoning you can find methods to remove the negative aspects that are a brake on personal development. Through this process of self-knowledge, you will be able to get to know others. Therefore, the most important thing is to see one's soul through the soul, and to know others' souls through that of your own – this is true knowledge (which consists in first knowing one's self, and others afterwards).

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-seed-of-success.html

The Self Improvement Principle

On June 17, 2010

You cannot outrun others if you don't outrun yourself.

Yesterday, I called on one of my best friends, Andrei, who is a very good dentist. He shook my hand warmly, letting me know that he was very happy to see me. We hadn't seen each other for a few months, and I must admit that I was also very happy to see him again.

On one of the walls in his room, there was an old saying hanging: "Seek to be the best". This caught my attention and really made me curious.

I thought that could be an opportunity from which I could learn more interesting and useful things. I asked him:

- Andrei, this is the first time I see that saying framed on your wall. What does it mean for you?

He seemed to be prepared for this question. He arranged some papers on his desk, and then he looked at me smiling and answered me:

- Nicu, what you see there, on the wall, is, actually, the motto I guided my entire life after. It is the motto which helped me build a promising career, outrun all my other colleagues and get to the level I am at right now. It is the motto which always helped me to be energetic and very ambitious.

I studied very hard at school, I saved my allowance and I ensured a place at the University of Medicine. Over the years, I improved my knowledge, my skills, and, as the years passed, I climbed a higher step compared to the previous year. I had to pass a lot of exams in order to prove my exceptional knowledge and skills and in order to be the best in my school every year. I made considerable efforts in order to finish my studies and, then, to qualify as a specialist physician. And now, as you well know, my dental cabinet is always full of patients. I am proud to have wanted to be the best, I am proud to have become a very good specialist.

Leadership: Does your value content extend over multiple content requests?

You cannot be above other people if you don't accomplish more than they do. This is what my friend, Andrei, taught me yesterday. His unquenched thirst to outrun his colleagues and be the best he could be were just as strong as his inability to give up his dreams. Seeking to aim as high as possible, learning and practicing day by day, Andrei outran all his colleagues and made himself a career to be envied. In other words, he applied the principle of self-improvement: "You cannot outrun others it you don't outrun yourself."

Andrei is a special man, with many qualities, which helped him become the type of doctor which many patients want for themselves. But he got to this performance through continuous improvement, by gaining a vast experience, by gaining new competences. In other words, being interested in his trade, he pushed the limits of improvement. Now, Andrei is a specialist devoted to the job of dentist. And the fact that he has a rich experience and the knowledge necessary in order to give you the best possible treatments helps him and gives him credibility in his relationship with people.

Content requests, based exclusively on the option of tagging yourself with a "price" driven by aspirations towards performance, encompass the effort to express yourself through your work and to identify yourself with it, beyond the tendency to believe yourself to be better than others. Just as beauty is the content of art, so too is the form of giving yourself an attitude of engagement accelerated by cultivating a sense of a work well-done.

Leadership is the price you give yourself with utmost care and respect when you are genuine in what you feel, in what you do, in what you want to represent you.

In order to win, you must always aim higher. Our life is a competition in which we have to exceed certain limits with other competitors. But it is essential to know what we want, where we want to go and how to get there, on what ways, to the end line, when we grow up. And once we get there, we have to be able to say we are pleased of what we have accomplished. That means that we must have a life plan, a career plan, in order to get where we proposed ourselves, by passing many obstacles, because self-improvement is in tight connection with the existence of a career plan.

Like any other plan, the career plan also has several stages, and you propose to accomplish something in every stage. Realizing more than you have proposed yourself is self-improvement, meaning a full involvement in your work, continuous improvement and using your entire lucrative potential. And then, you must verify your professional status by various methods specific to competitions such as exams, competitions, etc. In such moments of evaluation, you can find out where you are in comparison to other competitors and what you must do further on.

Authenticity is the indisputable content of the sublime in which the "miracle" of the persistence of personal lifelong training is preserved.

Just like in medicine, when you get from the level of intern to being a specialist, and then primary physician, and then doctor (making advancements based on some tough evaluations, and not all the doctors can resist), there are such improvement stages in any field.

The question is why doesn't everybody exceed these limits, and only some manage to get further? There are several answers: either because the individual set his standards to a lower level, either because he didn't self-evaluate correctly, or he lacked enough interest.

P.S. When there is no will for self-improvement and, therefore, the will to exceed others, there is no room for performance. The individual who does not resist competitions or avoids them, can never be winner. And this means he limited himself, means that he is happy with mediocrity.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-self-improvement-principle.html

The Sensitive Feeling From The Moment Facts Are Produced

On April 02, 2009

Trust yourself and consider any life experience as an opportunity to get to know yourself better and learn to behave like a person with unlimited possibilities for self-reflection.

Observe what happens to you when what doesn't have to happen happens. And here's why I say this, because anything I say, in any which way, I still can't figure out how I forgot my phone in a taxi last night. Everything took me by surprise.

Thus, trying to close my eyes around 00:30, a strange feeling came to my mind, related to something I had become accustomed to, but which I did not feel close to. A feeling of that obscure, like a leaden veil that is placed over your heart, that when you try to comprehend a piece of a different reality, to undertake it with an iron will, without knowing where you should be headed to endure it before accepting it.

The question that really bothers me is not how I lost the phone, had it accidentally fell out of my pocket, had I accidentally put it in the back seat of the taxi, maybe I was too tired, I don't know. But I'm very curious to know why what shouldn't have happened happened and why didn't I expect it to happen. How can I resist such a phenomenon in the future so that it does not become the occasion of my nocturnal thoughts?

A true leader does not try to control the uncontrollable, but maintains mental clarity, accepting events at their pace, without resisting, trying to show acceptance of the consciousness of what was before the occurrence of the event.

The feeling forces me to look for the boundary between positive and negative, however, by taking a break from feeling, I still have to manage not to destroy the strong individuality of my self-reflection instinct. In the future, so that I am not overwhelmed by too much anxiety or grief, I will try to convince my self of a certain truth whenever the outside cannot be controlled.

I will try to recognize myself as a proof of assuming the conscience of who I was before the event took place. Because beyond what I feel, beyond the way I react, is the way I appreciate my deeds. That is, if I still can't take it before events, at least to greet them with fascination and curiosity, to see how crazy is the tendency to cling to my own inability to let life flow "by itself".

Leadership: Can you recognize that you have proof of the consciousness of who you were before an event with a major impact on a cause that deserves every second of attention?

We will take the concept of "loss through oblivion" of an object in the sense of a world in which the reward is offered exclusively to those who do not account for their feelings about a particular process, its benefits or problems. The feeling of these people is that faculty of the soul which perceives or knows the value of material things. These people do not pay full attention to things because they are prisoners of other feelings, stronger, directed to other areas of interest, to other topics of sensation.

In my research regarding the spirit of these individuals captured by all sorts of thoughts, states, and emotions, at different key moments in life, I could describe a specific mechanism that I consider a characteristic of the unconscious. The important process revealed by this temporary phenomenon which includes: forgetfulness, mood swings, ignorance, disregard, glossing over, must be attributed not to any particular approach, but to all activities of the unconscious, the interest given to another aspect of life quality, namely focusing attention on another area of interest.

It is not at all necessary to admit the existence of an activity specific to the spirit of adventure and the desire to place your existence under the sign of high and significant values such as: honesty, efficiency, flexibility. But it matters how you use them, how they are prepared in the unconscious, to reflect your feelings. Remember that the feelings you have about the object of your thoughts may reveal another aspect of the theme: "the wave of life goes on, slipping easily, stopping at a crossroads".

Leadership: Can you resist the rules of destiny that you must follow if you do not want to go through awkward or ambiguous situations?

The cause I neglected and the one that deserves every second of attention was not ignorance, lack of knowledge or ill will, as I might be tempted to believe at first glance. Rather, the really important cause was the lack of one's own finding, the inability to assess the factual situation in the chapter "be in line with the tendency to be present in a place in which you do not see yourself taking part."

Because being present in a place with which I am unfamiliar, in which I have nothing in common with the people around me, and in which the world does not know me, can favor a kind of self-forgetfulness that states an inexplicable passivity. And what exactly masks passivity, other than a form of circumvention of certain aspects that are difficult to accept?

The first rule of destiny that you must respect if you do not want to go through uncomfortable or ambiguous situations is to know well the path you are following. The second rule is to know and differentiate your emotions from the passion that pushes you to do certain things, regardless of the risks. The third rule is to know the causes of your problems, to know the causes of an unforeseen event and to act to remove them. The fourth rule is to reconcile with the inevitable mistakes you make in your path, that is, not to let the mistakes bring you down, but to motivate you to better know yourself.

The pain of losing a job can be overwhelming, especially if it is an important thing about the meaning of life that do not gas you than when the power to discover mysteriously value of what is lost, but none of emotions that experiment Yorkers is not unusual or wrong in this case. Through the emotions and feelings you experience in moments of inattention, you learn to think independently of the rest of the world, you learn to value what really matters: the challenge of knowing yourself better.

The ability to "read" each life experience as an open book allows for better understanding and adaptation to changing circumstances.

The Sensitive Feeling From The Moment Facts Are Produced highlights the only thing that arouses your curiosity: the desire to better know yourself.

You will not be able to mask the lack of an absolutely necessary object in your life, but you will be able to favor yourself to find an explanation for this experience. In your present, you need to know every experience of life as an open book, you will immediately recognize the elements that tell you if you are good enough to gain a new perspective on life.

You must not accept that the world is a relaxed environment that you are familiar with and where you cannot be disturbed, because there will certainly be small discrepancies between what you expect to happen and what will happen to you without your will.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sensitive-feeling-from-the-moment-facts-are-produced

The Shadow

On June 22, 2016

Recognize yourself within your shadow, without feeling oppressed by its dominion.

Whenever I read my writings, with the incomparable measure of Michelangelo satisfied by David, through the power of the reason that bows in the face of sensitivity, I am pushed by a strange force in a frenzy of mutual possession. Between the feeling of safety and that of seizure and control of another world, in a broader universe.

The resorting to space and time, that only the victory of a certain ideal, of a certain "next level" in thinking can bring, slipping in small details in the most authentic of expressions denoting not only beautiful things, but rather my admiration for the pure values that hold within them true knowledge, is an extreme measure. Which claims to prolong my horizons.

Between matter and non-matter, which the fabrication and collapse of a world always pretend something other than that something spread up until now, a sort of cooperation between two transposed matrixes, having the same rank, one of the affirmation of the positive nature of alteration, and the other of the subjection of my negative nature, there exists a tension, a certain ration and a certain temperature.

Everything lights up in a surprising incandescence, similar to the fire that once heated, is hard to extinguish. Each line, each word, each expression is a part of me, measured through the power of possession of an abstract force that goes beyond me through a saving connection with what seems so different in me.

Leadership: How do you see yourself in association with a "Myself" marked by a high degree of customization of the 100% revealing image that asks for its right to assert sovereignty in the double of a reality that goes beyond the immediate?

A man heads off in search of himself. Passing through Regent's Park, he is greeted by a shadow, his shadow. After a long conversation, like between two equal parts, identical or similar, like between two creations obtained from the same matter, which can be easily confused for one another, the shadow suddenly disappears. Take it from where it's not. Desperate, the man heads off in search of the shadow, for it appears to be the half of himself that interests him most. Having reached a quieter corner, somewhere at the edge of the park, the shadow suddenly reappeared. Then, the man recognized himself.

The idea to write, spreading between phrases projections of my spiritual states, stated and uttered only by comparison with a man who heads off in search of himself, seemed to me so natural and so fitting to my status of a researcher, that I find it hard to believe needs suggesting. A 100% revealing image is the result of viewing a life experience experienced in reading a book signed "Myself", from which you choose only that fragment that contains the force of penetration into the depth of the character that has never been heard, that character that allows you to truly adjust your performance of the individuality that is not affected by finitude.

Thus, I can project what no one else has and dared not do before me, a unique thing for the scientific study of the human impossible: that of recognizing myself in my shadow, without feeling myself oppressed by its dominion. This, from a necessity of straying from myself and going closer to what I seek if I would go a little farther from the initially established set point.

Leadership: Do you battle the victory of a "next level" that involves the reality of the fact that you might not have the courage to jump over your shadow?

One of the elements that make up the essence of your being, in correlation with the leadership that participates in all signals of changing horizons of meaning that you accept as an obligation in the extension of the freedom of consciousness and choice of the path to follow in life, is the necessity of getting close to what you seek if you would go a little farther from the initially established set point.

The shadow represents the process of self-discovery, resulting from that search that gains a grand character through the fact that it proposes as a new ideal of existence your union with your double, through the force of revelation of a different reality. The shadow is that part of you, measured through the power of possession of an abstract force that surpasses you through a saving connection with what seems to be so different in you.

In this case, you are not what you think you are when you focus on what you lack in order to be fulfilled. It is rather what happens to you when you focus on what you seek to catch up to: that part of you that comes from outside of you and manages to convince you of your authenticity.

What comes from outside of you, always remaining in the perimeter of consciousness, is the sensation of a closeness to something you believe in, very present in certain situations, unable to be ignored, which makes you think, attracts you through the very elements of meaning that define your existence and help you move forward through the "hopscotch" of your evolution.

The double of a reality that surpasses the immediate is associated with maximizing the impact of the rare image, belonging to a screenwriter who impresses each time with the power to transform into the character he plays in real life.

Each change of direction, each "a little farther" you achieve towards discovering the pure values that hold within them true knowledge, without condemning the failure of certain events or the contest of unfavorable circumstances that can affect your course, brings you close to a self that is determined to not let itself be defeated by encountered difficulties.

To battle the victory of a "next level" in painting an evolution that has the search for an Alter-Ego in the foreground, ceaselessly working to conquer a truth of which you know nothing about yet, is more an attitude of the one who understood that only by willingly exaggerating his image, the importance of his identity, can acquire a certain power. The power of rising above what you are not.

The power of being someone else has as its main stake the support of the individuality that responds in a metaphysical world, by the fact that what motivates you is the attainment of a unique experience, above the reality of the finite existence.

The Shadow is the strong reaction of a man in perpetual search for himself, who applies to himself the law according to which you can only penetrate the mysteries of the inner world if you confuse yourself with a different reality, with a new image, with a different role, with a different personality... or even with the Universe and its elements.

But without persisting in a state of illusion, in a confusing situation.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-shadow.html

The Shining Star And The Common Mortal

On April 06, 2014

Meet the requirement of science of contributing to promoting an imaginative understanding, reconfiguring those components of your training that are impressed upon the path of becoming.

I didn't know what to believe. A riddle was there that I couldn't explain, in the likes of a utopia that provokes a real dispute between heaven and earth, between a shining star and a common mortal. It send the whole game of defining the requirements necessary to operate thought processes towards the formulation of ideas otherwise justifiable or even redoubtable as ideals to follow.

Ideas that, as the owner of an irrepressible aspiration towards the purity and liberty of wisdom would claim, an artist of the fleeting world, it do not spring from reality, but rather under the effect of an imaginative permutation of the points of interaction of a complex phenomenon, variable with the investigated factor. Ideas resulting from the small explosions of the "scientific hydrogen" that burns, but doesn't maintain the flame. I was like an illusionist who conceals his identity in the game of meanings and non-meanings of a captivating magic that includes its challenges in scientific canons, just to survive in a complex world.

The flame was more of a personal experience, a consultation with myself, a direct challenge brought to the unknown from the known, to the existent from the non-existent. Victor Hugo said it better regarding this burning flame:

"The genius, who rather guesses than learns, extracts, for each paper, the general laws from the natural order of things, the special ones from the isolated whole of the subject it deals with. Not after the methods of the chemist that lights the oven, blows from the bellows, heats up the crucible, analyses and destroys. But like the bee that flies with its golden wings, sits on each and every flower and steals its honey without causing its casing to lose its luster, without causing the petals to lose their scent."

Leadership: Does your training process prevail under the infinite variety of imaginative permutations extracted from a double perspective which suggests a new style of integrating knowledge into a genius program?

The forming process of genius predominates under an infinite variety of imaginative permutations extracted from a dual perspective: of the facts beyond the boundaries of determinism leading to knowledge and evidence of the relevance of the personal value of the court to an object called "Word".

Genius is the quality of the product obtained by combining ideas that can structure a simple plan or one developed through dialogue with an unseen partner that is only available in the version of a lesson of conversation about "Sorry seems the hardest word". Thus, genius depends on the instance of an object called "Word", which, if placed in a particular order, in a precise plan of projection of vision marked by historical, social and cultural circumstances, can reveal a truth that has a plenary aim over Knowledge and concerns everyone.

I would like to think that a man can form as a leader in the spirit of genius when everything around him gets the significance of access to a new level of understanding and control over the promotion of a new model of approach to reality. All you know is in fact an overview of the small things that you gather with the help of imagination in a single form of expression, art, language, before a plan that cuts the coordinates of a unitary concept at the points of accumulation and support of an area of wide interest.

Leadership is the genius with which you treat anything, any activity any situation, adjacent to the feeling that you could move mountains to get a new version of your own being and a high popularization of the science you have mastered.

The place in which leadership takes shape, no matter how original or vigorous its ramifications for knowledge and discovery might be, of different lengths and powers, under the infinite variety of imaginative ideas and permutations, is where you are, where no one would expect it. At the intersection between genius and virtuosity, between darkness and light, between heaven and earth, between exceptional and ridiculous.

Leadership is a negotiation between two parts that are interested in price, one ready to accept what is offered, the other ready to give what is asked. The first is set under the individual, possessing an infinite ambiguity. The second under the general and unambiguity. The price being that complex part of the process of thinking that modifies the structure of personality, paid in the present and aimed towards the future, as a reaction of the explosion of knowledge which from a scientific treatment point of view, proves the hand of a master, a touch of genius.

Leadership: Can you ensure your status as a "New Man" formed according to the criteria of genius in the light of ways to approach ideas that can be perceived as different mechanisms of interpretation of the reality that the experience of defining the Great Science offers you?

In the newly formed leader over the criteria of genius, sometimes going down the slippery slope of disorder and internal conflicts that inhibit his efforts of defending and strengthening his "brightness", we will find plenty of that type of burning fuel, with a tendency of transformation, that flame that contributes to the harmonization of powers ceded by science in order to develop individual models of "price" that can adapt to the pressing demands of becoming.

Genius is based on the aspiration for purity of form, the art of showing the organic life of matter and transfiguring it, guessing rather than learning those coordinates of the supporting points that, with the momentum of the heart and the preference for observation, can, together personal experience, instill new ideals in the promising earth of the future. A consultation with yourself, a direct challenge brought to the unknown from the known, it is the only obligation you have to leadership towards the possibility of creating and maintaining the connection between interior unity and exterior reality.

The representations you generate about reality, necessary for the operation of thought processes in the formulation of innovative ideas, serve to increase the chances of reaching a higher level in understanding and mastering the determinants of future development. The Great Science is the path you traverse from idea to action and from action to reward in terms of achieving a high ideal of spiritual nature.

The basic components of your training that stand in the path of becoming a "New Man" can be the following: generating those spiritual experiences that remain unchanged in the faculty of the mind of analytical representation of reality and having those experiences of deepening knowledge in an advanced form.

The Shining Star And The Common Mortal designates the connection between the exceptional and the ridiculous, generating unique values in leadership through a sort of common language, but increasingly complex, which modifies our interactions with the world and the representations we have of reality.

If you want leadership to develop towards infinite knowledge, meet the request of the science of contributing to the promotion of an imaginative understanding, reconfiguring those components of your formation that are impressed in the path of becoming.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-shining-star-and-the-common-mortal.html

The Show Must Go On

On July 28, 2015

Learn to turn leadership into an abstract science, allowing yourself the liberty of believing in something beyond human powers.

The thought led me to realizations in which imagination and the freedom of believing in something beyond human powers, captured in the unique dimension of the surreal, made themselves felt in full in all sorts of combinations. Moreover, a wide range of accomplishments, only able to be categorized in a logic of going through a form of expression through the creative filter, by combining the spaces beyond the curtain of reality, was called simply "composition."

And, behold, the developer of art showcases his ability of anticipating a disturbing reality. Being someone else, he continues to see where all others tire of trying to seek. Peerless, we can distinguish him as being dressed as an actor above a pile of extras, in the position of a king of creation. As if he feels a deep calling among the masks, mirrors, makeup, various costumes, colors, concepts, development lines, all of them taking the shape of "empty spaces / abandoned places", later included in a single existential idea: "Whatever happens, I'll leave it all to chance."

Blessed with a Divinis Influxibus Ex Alto, the genius sees himself clothed not only with the garbs of art, but with the color of an elevated reason, served by a noble consciousness, which like a mysterious treasure, located in the center of subjective light, brings him the satisfaction of the fiction that gives the illusion of the seen living life "Behind the curtain, in the pantomime."

Leadership: Does the individuality you give to Creation relate to it an external determination beyond you, receptive only to the formation of an authentic aesthetic vision?

Basically, Freddie Mercury, this maximum percentage of imagination, behaves like a painter who arranges from a cohesive unity the various elements he has at hand in order to clearly communicate his emotional message: "The show must go on." It is not about the experience of the soul to be trapped in the mirror of an inaccessible world, elementary to reaching a connection with the symbols of the cabalistic creation taken over in the great masterpieces of Impressionism, if so could be called those games of substitution of the Ego through its different roles, but rather, it is about scrutinizing the depths of an idea and the temptations to push boundaries, in the permanent search for alterity.

Now begins the primordial, where the forces of the highest inspiration are engaged. And I see myself surprised by the impression of the whole that results from unification of the scientific side with a dark and infinite torment: I still exist. But, how? Through what not just anyone can see, through what I create and through what I am in this second, or third, dimension of reality. "I have to find the will to carry on... with the show."

I would have no clear reason to feel intimidated in the face of tis art of genius. In the splendor reflected by genius, where everything takes on accents and noble ties, the fluidization of the blood of the scientific whole can be felt, as if trying to restore the architecture of the visible world sprayed by too direct perceptions of impressionism.

Like a conqueror of universes who sees the dance of stars in any reminiscence of the world – whose elements he arranges in almost lucid relationships, I was about to behave in front of art as if I had voluntarily entered death, a place equal with the abode of divinity, so that afterwards I could be revived as a master of the unknown. "Inside in the dark I'm aching to be free."

Yet, a thought still bothers: "Does anybody know what we are living for? I guess I'm learning..."

Leadership: Can you become an effect of "the power of future projection and anticipation" in the case of the forces of art exerted between the tides of content changes?

I urge you to watch the music video for "The Show Must Go On". If you watch closely, fascinated, spellbound by the spectacle full of effects of a revolutionary spirit, you can sense art in everything found on a physical plane. But performed in the endless waltz of thoughts to which a certain space is attributed – deserted or crowded – depends in what equation of science you introduce suggestiveness and double message.

Leadership, extracted from the surrounding environment based on facts and their consequences, can aim at the large area of their applicability on a medium and long term, but filtered through the curiosity of knowledge, through all sorts of combinations. Basically, leadership involves the exercising of the power of creation gained from the experience of integrating and using the highest of inspirational forces.

Through what not just anyone can see, through what you believe and through what you are in that dimension of reality that we call "extended consciousness", you basically approach the process of stimulus-reaction, directing your role as an existential explorer towards the maximum potential of an agent of change. This is what it means to be an artist.

And, in order to get to consider yourself an effect of the "power of future projection and anticipation" by the presumed content of an artistic culture located beyond the curtain of time, in a direct connection with the imaginary universe of a world thought of in symbolic terms, in a realm of infinite associations, you must first let your spirit lead to ideas that are beyond what ordinary reason can sense.

The necessity of using the science imposed by the artistic dimension of an unparalleled work has as a reference pivot the power to continue to develop the color of an elevated reason capable of justifying your character as a reformer, with the risk of exceeding the possibilities of understanding of the crowd.

If you find yourself surprised by the impression of the whole resulting from uniting the scientific side with a dark and infinite torment: I still exist, it means that you have yet to reach that level of art that leaves behind the old approaches of virtue – translated through the acts of desire and feeling. It means that you haven't added to the dominant trait of your character the innovative component, but unbearable, disclosed through "Inside in the dark I'm aching to be free."

Continue to see beyond, where everyone else tires to try and find answer within them and outside of them. And even if in everything you discover something empty remains, hidden, you must have the power to continue to develop the coloring of a higher reason that will justify your reforming character, with the risk of exceeding the crowd's possibilities of understanding: "The Show Must Go On."

You will be able to turn leadership into an abstract art if you become an effect in the case of the forces of art exerted between the tides of content changes, aiming at those combinations between certainties and uncertainties, between your own sources of producing innovation and sources borrowed from the process of a thinking that turns reality into a type of show – a "dream world."

The founder of analytical psychology, Carl Gustav Jung, highlights the driving force of this show in a game of interpretations and harmonization of the being with the dynamic, eternally new nature of the symbol:"When the spirit undertakes the exploration of a symbol, he is led to ideas that lie beyond what our reason can sense and, precisely because there are countless things that lie beyond the bounds of human understanding, we constantly use symbolic terms to present concepts that we can neither define nor fully understand."

The work of interpreting a masterpiece such as "The Show Must Go On" aims to explore a symbol of change, escape from reality, acceptance of the future in the dynamics of endless associations of video and audio techniques, through an imperative of the universe: "I can't even die. It would ruin my image."

The Show Must Go On is the fundamental concept of an artistic composition where unity and diversity are chained on the principle of conincidentia oppositorum, but at the same time, surpassing the indicative lines of a self eager to live in the present, in a single world, in a single reality.

 Note: Divinis Influxibus Ex Alto = Divine inspirations from on high;

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-show-must-go-on.html

The Sight Of An Old Man Seeking Its Revelation

On September 16, 2022

What you see in an image, which is always concrete and individualized, depends on what you see in yourself in a way contrary to time.

All that I see around me, the sea, the waves, the sand, the small shells, the beach bathed in the rays of the summer sun, is only embodied with such realism in the wisdom of an old man who, clearly feeling nature as a kind of eternal force, alive and universal, recognizes its smallness in front of the greatness of a road that leads to the unknown. Beyond the comparison of some mystical influences from the stylistics of an image particularly imprinted in my imagination, which seems to hide something, the absence and the absent, me with myself and in me, lies the uncertainty of standing still in a time of not forgetting.

The sun, perhaps the most beautiful stationary figure in illuminati symbolism, you could say is a hiker who, coming from afar, exhausted by fatigue, stops in front of an oasis to cool his soul. Only the sea removes the excess heat of the sun, while on me, like a material burden, presses the noir of an internalized time, lived in the parallel universe of nostalgia, dreaming and tenderness.

The wisdom of the old man is continuously shown in this scenario of nostalgia, in a perpetual search for new shapes and colors intended to complete as perfectly as possible the decoration scheme of an image that has passed the test of time. And if I tried to decorate the code of time again with unforgettable memories, the old man would only have to go in search of the perfection of the picture dictated by the quality of the image passed through the continuous color test, so as to perpetuate the emotions generated by that dreaming, continuous and innocent, which still enriches his reality.

Leadership: Is the image with which you test your life memory visible from the outside of a creation that loves its creator so much that it absorbs him within it?

I still can't quite figure out if the sharp vision, open to the beautiful, so eager to encompass the horizon, is conveniently supported by the relationship between the reception of a double face of the imaginary and the reception of a work of art in a given space. One thing is certain: up there, in the clearness of the sky, where time flows according to other patterns, not a single cloud seems bloodied by the metamorphoses of the real in which old age bends to something of human passions, like reeds in the wind.

In his notes about a painter, the painter Henri Matisse, on the threshold of old age, specified: "Composition is the art of arranging in a decorative manner the various elements, at the command of the painter, in order for him to express his feelings."

I agree with him. Looking at the seascape, as it is given by the beauty of nature, I more easily develop my art towards the mastery of a style that moves somewhat away from the universalist tendencies of modernist abstraction. Even despite the limitations imposed by the language of sight, or even sensing the deathless state of things, the old artist will not be able to free himself from the burden of comparison, which involves bringing the 4 components of the painting (color, tone, line, shape) at the stage of geometrized appearances, bearing accentuated symbols. This even if in art the illusion is a creation of the union of the 4 fundamental components which, in turn, can have as a neutral correspondent the 4 zodiac signs: earth, water, fire and air.

Leadership: Are you ready to make the leap from the visual-static image you show to the world, to that realistic stage in your existence where you encounter the contrast between appearance and essence?

Still making references to art, beyond the comparison of artistic influences, I remember a sequence from a beautiful book by Eric-Emmanuel Schmitt. The old artist convinces a desperate young man, on the verge of suicide, to restore his existence on one condition: to transform it into a work of art. After all, he has nothing to lose but freedom. The old man turned to the young man. He held out his hand, lighting up his face, and his wrinkles disappeared into a smile, to once again form the face of a young man with delicate features. Before long, with his new identity as a living statue, Adam became more famous than Gioconda.

The only way to be someone else in art is to perceive the sea as a being that lives fully, although you only know its image from unclear or at least inconclusive vestiges.

Of course, when I look at the expanse of the sea, enveloped by its soft and salty whispers, especially when the waves polish the stones making them smooth and silky to the touch, I realize that the last cycle of human life does not end with that moment of peace in full storm, but with a sad discovery: I could have been more than I was.

You can feel this painful emotion on the old man's face, not only looking at the sea as a possibility to relax the mind, but associating it with the end of youth, seeing it as a limit of the decline of responsibility, a border beyond which you don't want to cross, a gap beyond which you can expect either disaster or salvation.

Leadership connects to the age of great symbolic routes: you start from the place where you feel yourself, real and present, and end up taking the place of an image of illusion accentuated by the contrast between the space of absolute freedom and the constraints of a memory that far exceeds your own existence.

The sea, the peaceful place of nostalgia, but burdened with memories, is an impulse to return, to return to yourself at least for a temporary eternity. She easily finds her correspondence with personalities from the art world who wanted to capture in their creation the space of "youth without old age". Not to mention that the expanse of the sea from which sadness rises, captured in the painting by the distant shadow of a lost boat, or anchored at sea, often captures an age beyond which life is a little different.

The Sight Of An Old Man Seeking Its Revelation is an emotional magnifying glass that you use without realizing the effects of an overdose of reality, when you create in yourself the image of the desired one.

If you want to be someone else, first you have to meet the old man whose image can be perceived as a metaphor for the sea: you have to feel as if you were an island on which there is a ruined castle. To restore his splendor you must draw him more beautiful than ever, depicting him as a dream, as an optical illusion, even if the reality is that his time is over.

You have to recognize your fragility in leadership, looking at the reality in front. Old age is a sandcastle that can only be blown away by a breeze. Or, as Jimi Hendrix said: "All castles built in the sand fall into the sea eventually."

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sight-of-an-old-man-seeking-its-revelation.html

The Sight Of Eyes Reconsidering Their Gaze

On August 02, 2021

The biggest mistake of an artist is to try to catch up with that "very late", rigid and taciturn, which cancels out any aesthetic expressiveness.

I ran the 15 km race yesterday, in fact it was about 17 km. And I ran, sometimes I stopped, I looked around, I admired the landscapes that the sun always fills with the warmth of a fairytale world. I think that the sun loves the mountains, communicates with nature, but often catches the eye especially of runners who know how to admire the beauties of a simple life, to remove the curtain of routine and to enter another reality.

I say this because I have learned to appreciate running without speed, without endurance, without the desire to be among the best. In this case, it seems natural to me to appreciate the joy of the moment and to give an immense value to the joy that only the artist feels when his sight begins to shine on the tones on which the chromaticity of his work is based.

It is explicable how an athlete can see everything through the artist's eyes: testing his gaze, slipping freely from one element of decoration to another, receiving what is beyond words.

If you run without enjoying the beauty of the landscape, it's like when the sun tries to slip its bright rays through a thick gauze cloth: you will never fully know the transition from one color to another. Here is what it means to run only to win a place on the podium: it is the reflection of a fragment of the fleeting beauties of life, it is an experience of imaginary rupture, a hesitation in focusing on revealing the contrasts of shapes and tones, a cross shining like a flame silent (used as a symbol of evanescent superiority).

It's too late to go back in time to look once more at what my eyes have lost sight of: getting a well-deserved place on the podium. For now, I limit myself to noting that a man who looks around and does not know what to please his eyes with, is a prisoner of a performance context that will never be satisfactory. That means being alive in your unity, but dead in your totality.

Leadership: Do you have to start from the realization of a somewhat unexpected reality, in order to be able to express in a special way what is beyond the visible horizon?

Even the farthest hiding place of the places I passed restituted its secrets, picture after picture, event after event. And if I participate in future running races, I will be more careful not to lose sight of the beauty of nature, the wonderful views, the different aspects of the places. I am sure that my clear, cheerful, unmistakable eyes will remain open in front of any dream images for which only painters know how to read the lively background, adapting it to the composition of an alternative, transcendent, symbolic reality.

Please consider my words as a testament to the fact that everything my eyes have noticed around can draw attention to an ultimate meaningful revelation, Evedeschantiss, that is, what has become inspiration is precisely the fruit of what I have admired especially. For the eyes whose sight resembles a dream are the eyes whose sight does not close after midnight, and whose gleam is glimpsed every time the light reaches a repeated pattern of angles and rivers.

Therefore, the tendency that predominates in the artists' space is observed, affirming their dominant thinking: they gather together everything they see, and turn everything into a long-lasting memory.

Consequently, a clairvoyant eye is never a fleeing eye, but one that sees from afar what is quite close. I arrived at the finish line a bit later, but the aesthetic background on which the actual understanding of the representations of nature unfolds opened a much more spectacular horizon for me, whose immensity could only be comprehended by the most penetrating eyes.

Leadership: What exactly generated in your reality the truth that beyond the horizon you're seeing was that visible line of artistic evolution indicated by the tendency of your High Ego to forget certain emotionally charged contents?

The sight of the splendid landscapes made me forget the wishes and the risky actions that could have led me to occupy a place on the podium. The beauty of nature, matched by the beauty of the soul, are far more important than a distant goal that does not ensure your fame, but only the justification of a pride released in small doses and for short periods.

While my eyes were transfixed on the greatness of nature, I was trying to relate to the content of the novel "Exuvii" written by Simona Popescu. She could see with her own eyes and understand things much more clearly than I could, though she thought of a multitude of wonderful nonsense, making and breaking miraculous worlds, in which she herself was involuntarily the most interesting character:

"I kept playing and rewinding an imaginary band. I was watching sections, divisions, coagulations. Strange arabesques. Dizzying rosettes like in my old cardboard kaleidoscope. Then something indistinct turned my gaze to a corner of the room. There was a blackboard with a secret hologram hidden in it. And a dissonant voice seemed to say to me: Are you afraid? And then, I don't know... I would have liked to move, but it was very, very late."

Indeed, it is difficult to imagine a reality from which my eyes cannot avert their gaze, especially since what happened to me revolved around a world foreign to my way of understanding things. A very good runner won over, through the wonder of art, the grace and greatness of an Eden springing from admiration for the height of artistic consciousness.

And if my eyes will ever focus on a thrilling end to the race, but without much appreciation in the artistic field, I will remember that an artist's biggest mistake is to try to catch up with that "very late", rigid and taciturn, which cancels any aesthetic expressiveness.

The High Ego that an artist must always be aware of – has as a foundation the commitment to describe a new vision of the world in a realistic way, through great subtlety, so that the image projected by it against the background of a work of art will never to be lost.

The Sight Of Eyes Reconsidering Their Gaze belongs entirely to those people endowed with the spirit of an artist who know how to see a work of art, in all its splendor, even behind a colorful picture, but also around a dynamic image.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sight-of-eyes-reconsidering-their-gaze.html

The Sight Of Eyes Secretly Observing Themselves

On July 27, 2021

An artist is always caught between two different, and yet similar, worlds when he concentrates his efforts on asserting his creation.

I don't know if you've ever looked in the eyes, for a moment, a being whose gaze you can't get out of your mind, and even looking at it carefully you would realize that it's someone other than you ever thought it would be. I tell you this because I looked at myself in the mirror, more changed than usual, believing myself to be a kind of Atreyu face to face with the Enchanted Mirror, big and cloudy, where he could see himself vaguely, trying to pass through it (if only he dared enough to do so).

Only here do things get really complicated !

Indeed, I let myself be guided by a lucid calculation, taking into account all the things I knew and did not know about myself, a mathematical and image calculation, comparable to holding the conversation in front of a mirror that goes across times without altering their essence, somewhat similar to the monologue of an artist who feeds on the euphoria of his creation in an attempt to find that Genexyrthus(the reference point to which times, human destinies converge).

The gaze is a special work "tool" of the artist that can provide the eyes with a new vision of what it means to visualize the aesthetic that is manifested in everything. Or looking at himself, the artist sees himself centered around a curious self, open to the new, amazed by an image that flickers in front of the truths of the world.

This moment surprises me completely. Especially now, when the mirror seems to spread a more and more diffuse light, from all directions, but of low intensity, imitating the light of a candle. It is clear that I have eyes only for myself when I look at myself in another version of myself, as a symbol of self-knowledge and wisdom, which requires the placement of a mystical gate between reality and illusion. Why would I have eyes for someone that does not resemble me?

Leadership: Is the image that composes you the image that inspires you to be yourself in a world that is constantly trying to survive through the story?

And that's why I looked at myself with different eyes than I usually do, trying to go deeper into the maze of the enchanted mirror. Because in front of my straight, deep and sensitizing gaze, the entrance into a kind of self-search loop unfolds beyond the daily limitations, beyond the inherent tumult of life, beyond the masks of conventional roles with which I had often come to identify.

More interesting is the fact that in front of the mirror there is a soul so pure, sincere, creative, unique only by its way of transmitting to the mind an impulse associated with a change of image that is intensely felt by the psyche. Of course, the things I see and notice when I look at myself in the mirror are imperceptible to the ordinary person's eye, especially when it comes to a magic mirror like the one in "The NeverEnding Story":

"I can't tell you anything about it from my own observation, only what I've gathered from various reports. In fact, this mirror is a gate that is both open and closed. It looks silly, doesn't it? Maybe it would be more appropriate. "Let's say it's neither closed nor open. Although it's just as creepy. In short, it's a large mirror, or something like that, even though it's neither glass nor metal. In any case, when you are in front of it, you see yourself – but not as in an ordinary mirror, of course. You do not see the outward appearance, but the true inner being, as in reality, the one who wants to go through the gate must enter into himself – to put it that way."

Leadership: Does the exercise of seeing beyond one's own horizon involve accepting a reflection that constitutes the size of a space that loses its material attributes?

As you can see, I have come to present a realistic setting in a fiction of immanent metaphorical representations. For if I consider looking in the mirror as a transition to another plane of reality, spiritual and immaterial, it is because only in this way could be forged the image of an anterior and posterior duration of a feature film in which the natural surpasses the imagination, and keep you breathless.

In turn, the mirror looks at me as if it sees itself reflected in a double of its own, which helps it capture my image and transmit it to the matrix of a linear transformation, where the image is converted into warmer or grayer tones. Or to highlight this look of the mirror is an attempt to awaken the affective disposition of the eyes which comprise the artistic side of beauty only with the soul of a narrator outside the strict universe which he evokes with emotion, sincerity, much warmth, giving him his high esteem.

Please understand. The mirror has neither the idea of eternity nor that of the immensity of space, but only the narrator can brilliantly provide him with a feeder of meanings in a metaphorical, spiritual and charming language. And the operation of transposing man into a mirror image is the matrix of an unmistakable stylistic imprint.

I also say that a simple mirror can decisively influence your condition. I feel certain feelings of joy in the moment, remembering that I tried to see through the mirror glass my own double lined in a parallel universe, both to understand the difference between what I think I already know with my mind, and the true knowledge that comes from the cohesion with the essence of a visual idea and an ideal vision.

Leadership contains the way you see yourself in a spatial-temporal mirror, the only one able to reflect the nature of your self treated as an exit variable from an exterior that offers no admittance for inner life.

The Sight Of Eyes Secretly Observing Themselves is identical with the sight of an artist who knows how to impose his vision by producing visual expressions well integrated into the reality of the present time.

This artist is always caught between two different worlds, and yet similar, between two transforming infinities that crowd into each other, synchronizing in a symbiosis lasting eons, striving for an absolute materialism that can blind the reason of the normal man in front of the truth on who discovers it about himself.

Have you ever been amazed by your own reaction in a situation where the image that composes you is the image that inspires you to be yourself in a world that is constantly trying to survive through storytelling?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sight-of-eyes-secretly-observing-themselves.html

The Sight Of Sights

On January 05, 2022

When you look at something carefully, the reality of that image is imprinted on you.

I'm headed home. And what do I see? An orange peel thrown as if deliberately at my feet. I know it's an orange peel, because I know what a brightly colored orange looks like, even if it's lightly covered with snow. Just keep an eye on it in time, because you have so much to see around it, so much truth hidden in fragments of reality that, bizarrely, seems to open another world ahead.

And what is an orange peel? It is a world of life translated into an experience of bold, yet delicate color, taken to a vintage-retro area, expressed by an accentuated certainty regarding the aesthetic sense.

I lift it from the ground, clear it of snow. The shape of the orange peel, in the shape of a circle resembling a parable or dome, and which if it had been transposed into the drawing would have turned into a protective, calming and tonic halo of light, revealing a certain state of reverie, invites us to the rich imaginary world of artists. A certain meaning places the orange peel in a sphere of new relations between color and perception, between emotion and the aroma of a nostalgic perfume.

Such an approach of form and color would present a curious analogy, in conception and bill, in the way in which Salvador Dali rendered the passage of time, which I also feel in one way or another, more acute or slower.

The orange peel seems to be covered by a mystery, a hidden and inaccessible reality, automatically rendered in a logical exposition made according to the most natural rules of a moment of escape from the picture of a changing society, in an "open plan" area in which the diffusion and the few accents of light focus here and there on geometric figures specific to the Tuareg culture. Looking at it simultaneously affects both the spirit and the technique of producing images on a flat surface, usually paper, through graphic signs that serve to distinguish minimalism within essentialism.

Leadership: Can you change the outcome of the impact you have on the creative process, through an effort of the self to manifest itself as an effect of "transparency" against the background of a static image?

Voluntary simplicity is the heart of the painting, as is the state of the orange peel when viewed through a Mannerist window, or through an existential filter that unifies everything in a warmer hue, declining in countless hues and shades of yellow, orange and pink. And if I looked at it through an ocean whose lens cuts out strips of reality and, after enlarging them, bringing them closer for a moment to other aspects of the environment, I would get a theme full of sensitivity and lyricism.

If I look at it more closely, as the artist looks at his work in progress, combining the parts of a whole, I could give back the calm glow of an end-of-winter painting in which the glitter of something golden could be seen from a distance. Here my task is to render an element of nature which, expressed by the warm affection of a flat figure, or of a three-dimensional body in recursions, can trigger a "re-paint" directly or indirectly. And not only that. The orange peel should convey a lot of emotion, be able to animate and completely change the appearance of a decor capable of inducing a mood of melancholically.

But no matter how abandoned I am in the face of the news of the moment and the daily life so diverse, the orange peel gives me, beyond the retina of the eyes where I find myself in a temporal point, an image probably identical, but not one of identity, of the cohesive, elevated self endowed with sufficient empathic reflection.

Leadership: Can you increase the vitality of a static image to develop a more realistic view of the transition from the certainties of an easy-to-understand present to the level of development of a self-revelation experience?

Yes, I could retain in my mind for a long time the idea of using an orange peel to feed and express my authentic self through a sort of false mystery, by means of an algebra of images. But until the orange peel is outlined in a simple drawing in which even the slightest accents of admiration for the height of expression become visible, I will not be able to get rid of the vivid feeling of being tied to someone or something.

My own self is a reflection of the creative attitude, not just a free contemplation of beauty, along a gaze that slides from the depths of the soul in the direction of a mirror effect (in which the reflective plane is chosen arbitrarily).

I, who know how to appreciate any element of nature, like no one else, I who can raise an orange peel to the rank of muse through the intrinsic importance it exudes to my self, depending on the interpretation I give to its form and presence In a pencil shaded setting, I can appreciate everything around me at its true value. In fact, the spiritual unity of a thing lies in the way the artist manages to restore that inexhaustible vitality that only human beings possess, without being forced to resort to a "retelling" by arranging images of nature in an unnatural order.

Here the focus is on the possibility of understanding an image that becomes double, on the one hand symbol, on the other personification. The orange peel, later colored in a three-dimensional space and viewed as an object with flat faces, two visible and two seen through transparency or diffusion, brings to the artist's attention the undeniable merit of probing his Ego through a metamorphosis: "you become the result of what you create".

The experience of self-development actually involves a reporting of the experience of looking at the elaboration of a subjective image whose content is defined by a question: "What is unique and is found in all?"

The Sight Of Sights reflects the artist's ability to relate his Ego to the meaning attributed to an image in the foreground of which is a seemingly insignificant thing. In this way, I remember Marcus Aurelius who urged every man to define and describe the object whose image appears to him at the level of the soul:

"Always formulate the definition and a description of the object whose origin operated on your representative capacity, so that you realize what it is, in its empty substance, in its whole or in all its aspects, and indicate to it, within itself, its own name and the name of the elements of which it is composed and which are to be decomposed."

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sight-of-sights.html

The Silence Of An Introspective Gaze

On April 09, 2023

What you really see is what you feel when you experience an unforgettable moment at full intensity.

On Saturday I ran another half marathon. A lot of people, a charming atmosphere, and a rather difficult route to travel. Running is part of the challenge to find yourself, a benchmark of self-worth, a journey through an endless labyrinth of the human mind, but it is also an event of maximum depth and lucidity. Of course, it is a source of intense, controlled emotion. But it is also a source of unshared thought, through the vital substance, of an incredible emotion, Rejuvenescimento do Espírito, a form of matter that pumps oxygen into tired cells, acting chemically as strongly as dopamine.

During the run, when the sweat runs down your forehead and all over your body, when you are more focused than ever with every step, only then do you deepen into the attentive calm of meditation and inner peace: "All that I have I give to Silence", representing a state of spirit framed in a real image, photographed as if with the function of detecting nerve discharge impulses. You must take into account the magnetic coupling of these states induced by the transformation of rectilinear-reciprocating motion in order to reduce the excess tension in the joints and produce limited warming of the body.

Really. The body heats up, acquires a different posture, has a different acceleration in a different direction. And when you exhale all the air from your lungs, in a constant rhythm, when all the nerves waste their time in a labyrinth of trials, only then do you eliminate all the annoyances, all the bad thoughts, all the worries. You become a barometer of calmness and reliability, calmer in the soul, more inclined to listen to your body, beyond the exponent of a positive power, Selemrhus Lutelfusios, seen as part of the action of spirit on matter. Because thought is matter, and the body is also matter, so one must pass through the other to ensure a continuously variable gap between tension and intensity.

Leadership: Can you raise the value of a unique experience to the rank of "unforgettable memory", offering a picture of your own spiritual path that not everyone has access to?

And even if you run faster, when your thoughts are accompanied by deep emotions, the heart still beats quietly, very quietly, quietly and equal to the magnitude of the intensity of the soul to expand its horizon in the mystical dimension of Sancristhas, a confirmation of detachment from banality, a personal path beyond the daily turmoil. Resolutely, from the impulse of an instinct of scope is born a heavy fierceness and an exaltation of good mood which, mixed together, have become destiny in a universe never beginning and without end, a kind of unhindered call to oneself, a free inclination to the rhythmic beauty of a revealed "intimacy", something grand, divine.

The pleasure of feeling free. The heart beats by itself, beats rhythmically, gratefully, evenly and quietly. You are calmer, more relaxed, under the action of a dynamic force capable of making a point of view with the direction of movement that makes you feel that you would like to give more substance to the "frame". A pleasant silence surrounds you right in the middle of the action, the calm seizes you more and more, you feel a deep inner peace. The whole body is stretched and relaxed, even if the muscles contract through a voluntary command.

Leadership: Can you describe an emotion capable of generating an intact self-image, such that viewing it has a positive impact on your performance?

This is what tranquility means, to seek to discharge your energy through a sporting activity that prolongs the youth of the spirit, raising the value of a unique experience to the rank of "unforgettable memory", offering an image of the world that not everyone has access to.

And look how they run, they don't say anything to each other, they don't look at each other except in the case of overtaking, rather they feel, they synchronize perfectly on the route "forward", rejecting the state of relative rest. This silence, a pause of pure emotion, away from noise and speed, changing the course of the next step, becomes a means of concentrating on a stable and constant rhythm of running.

Leadership: Can you create your own visual story when thoughts interpose between an activating event and the emotional consequences of the decision to travel long distances?

Whoever runs further with his mind, not just with his body, will glimpse the truth expressed by Alexandre Dumas in the novel "The Hand of Providence":

"The only irrefutable lesson that experience gives you is that the soul, the intelligence, the passion, the genius, do not exist without the rest, without matter, without the body, without clothing. The crowd sees only what their eyes catch. And in vain we say: I don't care what the crowd thinks ! The firmest convictions waver and grow restless when success does not confirm them. We all need this echo of thoughts to prove our viability by repeating it. So it is necessary to succeed, and not talent succeeds, but how you apply it. Not the soul, but the garment. The greatest diamond in the rough is a simple stone which the peasant crushes under his foot; but polish it and you can buy the key to the royal cabinets, or the queen's apartment."

So listen carefully. The thought of the runner, the force that triggers the impulse of energy, must be supported by a preferential mobilization in one direction, avoiding the demon of competition that terrorizes all professionals. I myself, driven by an energy located at the center of a resettable self-confidence, I who left a part of my soul every time on the mountain trails, I who always showed patience and tolerance towards the prevailing emotional spectrum, I promised so many times to seek release by running, in an oasis of peace with landscapes as if painted.

For this I had to avoid the tinge of morbid pride, which looks good in contrast to the weakness of losing hope in my own powers, when the echo of thoughts was shyly hidden in the dignified control of muscular fever. In my case, the diamond, the precious stone that has always characterized me, the powerful conductor of energy that invited me so many times to introspection and self-observation, was the talent to put my thoughts in order, to understand the concrete situation down to its last implications.

Leadership cannot be separated from the vision according to which: "what you really see is what you feel when you experience an unforgettable moment at maximum intensity".

The Silence Of An Introspective Gaze captures the moment when you become equal to yourself, beyond the magnitude of the event you are taking part in. He who does not know what is happening within himself is a stranger to any vision, just as he is a stranger to the world who does not know the beings that are found in it.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-silence-of-an-introspective-gaze.html

The Silent Truth Unfolded In The Book Of Life

On January 22, 2014

Perform countless incursions in the hidden world of reason, so that you climb to a higher level in your personal development.

I was engulfed by doubt. Was I truly in front of what the philosophers call argentum vivum? The investigation process of what could determine a fragmentation of the connection with the stodgy improbable of an imaginary world was in alignment with the most innovative tendencies in art, to use the operation principles of a closed and very complex space. That demarcate science from pseudoscience.

Performing countless incursions in the hidden world of reason that was accomplished only through science, guided by understandings and metaphysical suppositions or by the philosophical concepts of time, altogether relying myself on systematic observations, I went beyond the inability to understand the connection between value and identity. Which defined me in relation to the expectation horizon of a foreign authority that continuously monitored me. I started to find out who I truly am in relation with an Ego oversized by a relatively enticing imagination, but distorted by an Alter Ego that always made reproaches to me.

Was I fighting against the current, against my own conscience, against my own intellectual structure that filtered every identity imperfection? The various phenomena of knowledge, feeling, and will, by reference to certain things and the way I saw them, were subordinated to a reason that seemed to have long existed before me and to which I was hurrying to obey.

Leadership: Do you accept to be the slave of a reality clad with appearances that place a perspective of great significance at the limit of what you think, justify and apply according to an addition of knowledge that does not give you the opportunity to get rid of the "wandering" element?

I had put myself in relation with the construction elements of a personality that made me feel disproportionate, thus deforming the true conditions of my connection with objective reality. The detailed study of the battle field where the two orientations confronted each other, one towards self-knowledge, the other towards experimentation, sometimes in an abstract direction, enhanced the increasingly closer cooperation with science.

The incursion in my own world, adapted to a certain context in which what I was and what I wanted to become could be separated in time and space, had become a part of the hidden science that only alchemists knew. Only the alchemists were able to decipher the cryptic message that God implanted in each human at birth. This science had the ability to unite and bring together all my knowledge attempts in a whole, giving me the opportunity to remove myself from the element of "wandering" which came from the perspective of the being I represented.

What is my meaning? In order for me to answer, at least with an estimation, to this exhaustive question I had to take seriously what I thought about myself. More than that, what changes in me in relation with what happens to me as I get closer to the meeting point of the two moving axes: science and life experience.

The knowledge I tied my existence to was a consequence of the intangible reality feeling, a plunge into a time and space without coordinates, no landmarks and no exit, more a desire to capture a significant part of the vitality and imagination of a creator of fiction which crosses the paths of truth. An alchemist expressed this using the metaphor: "Immerse your mind in Hermes' light spring, so that it can guide you towards the truth."

Leadership: Can you create certain conditions of self-exploitation in trying to regain genuine authenticity, without turning the existential background into a vulnerable side of your personality?

The impenetrable foundation on which an authentic leader supports himself, the protagonist of a continuous becoming, is truth. Knowledge that denies or supports the truth of what a man-leader is, cannot be perceived and processed only at a mental level. But especially at the level of template-reality in which he agrees to create certain "illumination" conditions, to operate the self in the attempt to retrieve basic authenticity. In turn, this authenticity rises against its number one opponent: the lack of credibility in the context of an identity crisis.

Beyond the difficult barrier of self-knowledge resulting from personal examination, at the crossroads between the science and pseudoscience to be in agreement with yourself, you must learn to use your heart and intuition. Genuine authenticity is given by the strong belief you serve with devotion to a knowledge, guidance, or grace that does not appear to anyone, anytime, anywhere, and that cannot ignore the level of reality that you experience through your deeds.

When you refuse to listen to yourself, it so happens that the strong contrast between the Ego and the existential background accentuate a vulnerable side of your personality. Do you let yourself guided by understandings and presuppositions that hinder your capacity to accurately define your complex and defining component? Is this component based on the intimate feeling of your own value?

A lack of credibility regarding the application of the measures assumed at a personal level for regulating any disputes that arise from self-listening, unwilling to believe the continuous signals of a rational mind that try to make you understand how much you know and accept yourself as a unique entity, can stop the passage to an extended self-conscience. And it limits your understanding and interpreting about what defines you at the border with the aspects that bring you the weakest motivations.

Leadership: Can you configure a DEPTH trigger that could ignite the break from subjective reality?

Between the science of knowing yourself and leadership there are more cache lines, which are separated by a switch: that stodgy "improbable" of the imaginary world you fall deeper into. These cache lines store in the conscience everything concrete and abstract in terms of perspectives, ideas, and situations. Examining altogether the alternatives regarding the availability to detach yourself from the most persistent opponent – the oversized Ego from a very subjective perspective.

Someone once said: "Truth is the object of our understanding, it is as good as our will, and the understanding can't be charmed with a lie unless when it will be able to choose an apparent evil." Thus, we see in which subtle way the truth of what we are propagates into true leadership, how it is installed in terms of value, among us, here, on our certainties regarding the way in which we evolve. Towards good or towards bad.

Subjective reality refers in this case to that inner reality, places on the most subtle scale of our becoming, which doesn't take into account the echo of exterior reality, going beyond the reference framework in the relationship with the very coherence of our life experiences.

You can trigger the break from the subjective reality you find yourself into, by configuring the "DEPTH trigger" that directs your thinking towards a science of reasoning and judgment unsuspended by the surreal and improbable. This trigger doesn't represent anything else but a burial of what you have been, in favor of what you must be.

To understand the role of reason behind creativity, based on the experience of filtering a transcendent reality, you have to listen to what the Ego tells you of yourself through truths that no one has ever seen and which can only be discovered through a poetic virtuosity.

The Silent Truth unfolded in the Book of Life emphasizes that human value achieved by self-knowledge and assuming your own person. The possibilities of becoming and perfecting the native elements existent in man, as a prerequisite to progress, offer the opportunity of a deeper and more efficient approach to leadership.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-silent-truth-unfolded-in-the-book-of-life.html

The Simplicity Of The Hidden

On December 16, 2013

Discover the defining element, creator of new perspectives, so that you may broaden your horizons of your understanding of man.

- Everything you want to know about Buffalo Bill you can find in the pages from the file. The first principle, Clarice. Simplicity. Read Marcus Aurelius. Of each particular thing, ask, what is it in itself? What is its nature? What does he do, this man you seek? What is the first thing he's after? What needs does he fulfill by killing?

- Anger. Social acceptance. Sexual frustration, Clarice answers skeptically.

- No ! He covets. That is his nature. And how do we begin to covet, Clarice? We begin by coveting what we see every day.

Eureka ! The light-bulb turns on, shines suddenly and blindingly when the filaments traversed by continuous current begin to heat up. In a single moment the random turbulence effect with deformities is nullified. The fuses that plait the crown of reason are re-lit by this blazing argument that needs no demonstration – abscondita simplicitas. This positive point of reference, not taken into account, generates the explosion of mentality from which a new impulse is born, a new instinct.

Leadership: Are you prepared to experience a Self that is unable to manifest itself so strongly that it signals any kind of change, in the context of a particular impulse to form an authentic reasoning?

The laws of physics manifest themselves with maximum depth in the case of Clarice Starling. When a system of forces act upon a body, it activates, it leaves the state of idleness. Same as in a hastily developed film reel, her mind frees itself from the slavery of reason that cannot make way to any efficient approach. As if it was traversed by a continuous current generating intense light, used as a source of mobilization of a new intellectual energy. Instantaneously, she is struck by the defining element creator of new perspectives.

Despite the reassurances given by intuition, information and meticulous analysis of the given case, Clarice never knew what to count on regarding what she truly thought. The pieces of information succeeded themselves backwards, irregularly, like some waves that move at approximately unequal intervals when the sea seems more agitated.

In order to reach common ground, through a fine process of reflection and filtration of information, to discover the truth behind the murders, Clarice should have reinvented her way of thinking. But she didn't possess the essential property of the mind initially – that of discerning in depth the disparate elements from a complex whole. She didn't know how to make the necessary connections, on the grounds of a solid principle.

Leadership: Can you remain dependent on a single defining frame of mind through a non-critical self-exploration to expand the tightest sphere of content between accessibility and relevance?

This was well-said by someone on a website: "The true self can be put together through a non-critical exploration of the self, by accepting what was, for too long a time, hidden, locked, ducked."

In Clarice's case, she must reveal that part of herself that identifies with the criminal's thinking, so that the relevance of her role in relation to events can gain vision and coherence. Here one must consider the accessibility of one's image, the introspection achieved through the probing of the intimate self, the search for answers to the existential problems that she herself has encountered over time.

Stepping into the unknown you extend the area of self-knowledge, but before the unknown you have to climb up a higher more stable step, that no matter how paradoxical it might seem, plays the most important role in building the vision during the transition of applying innovative approaches. It is that stage of "profit", the most important support of research, the most cohesive scope of the content link between accessibility, relevance, complexity and performance.

Place your pattern of thinking in a position accessible to leadership in trying to ascend more frequently towards the peaks of the most significant achievements. If you stay loyal to only one defining framework you will not be able to undo the negative effects of applying some wrong reasoning. Remember that often the positive reference point, not taken into account, can generate that explosion of mentality that gives birth to a new impulse, a new instinct.

And this point must be characterized by a balance of all assets and liabilities used for preparing various types of reasoning, that can be logically taken all the way only by adopting the philosophy of simplicity. Thus, through the experience of the reality in your immediate vicinity, by introducing to the research formula an "advanced search" which gives you immediate access to a high level of thinking, understanding and knowledge of people.

Leadership: Do you find the courage to throw yourself into life, to know it directly, at the risk of changing the entire orientation of your psychic life?

When the sun sets behind the walls, the light dims more and more. By this I want to emphasize the assumed importance of leadership, fenced by the impossibility to approach more or less profound perspectives regarding man through sober thinking.

The area of true excellence in this field, lit by intuition, information and thorough analysis of human types, where the alternative of combining some plus-minus attributes could mean the nullification of any truth or any clues that lead to finding the truth, could always shrink back until almost complete disappearance.

Therefore, if you want to obtain optimal results in the activity of controlling your area of influence, then try to find that defining element creator of new perspectives, so as to expand your horizons of human knowledge. The whole diversity of psychology has as a source of nourishment the habit of always being connected to something outside the self, which can lead to difficulties in connecting to one's own inner experiences, and as a result, to poor management of states of sadness, anger, gratitude or astonishment.

This element stands in the face of the reason for its own behavior in the face of a major unforeseen fact, facing a destiny that could somehow crush your life aspirations in relation to the psychological well-being, and it is: the courage to stop when you feel that if you go any further, you will lose yourself on the road. The courage to accept yourself as you are, even if for others you are a much weaker man than the role you intend to assume. The courage to throw yourself into life, to know it directly, with the risk of changing your entire orientation of psychic life.

But, the question that arises is this: are you interested in the problems of psychology and do you want to witness the truths in which man lives or that he traverses at certain points in life?

The mental life of a leader conforms to the idea of self-evaluation in a whole range of influencing factors that are at war with the origins of hard-to-justify facts – in the perimeter of the tendency to give up that little cut of reality that defines you as a shadow of someone else's image.

The Simplicity Of The Hidden approaches the constituent elements of life without separating them from the context of the reality that reveals to you a different side of your personality, by resemblance with a thinking that denies itself. It means having control over essential issues concerning the relationship with people through a simple analysis that allows quick and effective actions.

 Note: The Silence of the Lambs (1991)

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-simplicity-of-the-hidden.html

The Single Throw Of Dice

On December 19, 2009

Measure your level of experience with other people, without placing yourself above them.

Unfortunately, no one escapes of problems. No matter, how much they get involved in work, in their personal development, in everything they aim to achieve, people will face many difficulties. Especially, the employers. In the times of crisis, the corporate profits fall, which leads inevitably to reduced investment and fewer employees. Obviously, the biggest desire of an employer is to maintain the employees, especially the good ones.

Even so, what if a company recorded an accelerated decrease of the number of customers and its profits are starting to decrease from day to day? Firstly, the employer may try to reduce labor costs without reducing the number of employees. However, if this option does not cover losses, and by this is not achieved quickly a balance, then he is forced to dismantle several posts. That is a big problem.

A few months ago, a Human Resources manager in a big enough company, fired more than 30% of employees, without establishing any criteria for selection, which leads to the hypothesis that the redundant employees, even those loyal and efficient, were not found among his "winner's numbers." As if he decided by throwing the dice the fate of every employee, with the risk of losing his own job.

Recently, I found out that the respective HR manager just got off the banks of the faculty, and did not have the necessary experience to fill the position. It would be easy to imagine a scenario, of how he managed to be appointed to such a high function as a recent graduate. But that is another story.

Leadership: Do you raise your consciousness to the level at which people can accept you without blaming you, starting from the effect of an ultra-fast rise on the features that your image reflects?

In order to dismantle the positions, the employer must make an analysis of the positions that are redundant (i.e. that are extra or dispensable). The next step, the most important, is to establish some criteria based on which to make these redundancies. For example: to dismiss those employees who have more jobs or that are not the only supporters of their families, and to offer them some monetary compensation.

And then to reduce the number of those who received more sanctions, and those who scored badly on professional evaluation, etc. Or, in extreme cases, if the company it is facing a serious crisis, to appeal to a collective dismissal. However, as I said, the most important thing is to set certain criteria based on which to make the dismissals.

It is risky to assume the responsibility as an employer to lay-off or fire employees without establishing objective criteria. By giving with the dice in this situation means to be a weak manager, for you let the "luck" to decide the fate of your employees, they being the ones underlying your institution or company. An effective leader sets out well-established criteria on the basis of which he makes redundancies.

In order to avoid making such absurd decisions, you, as manager of human resources must comply with legislation or rules of the company where it is stated on what criteria shall be made the redundancies, as well as the compensation that would benefit those who remained without a job.

Are the features that your image reflects the most important properties of an ascension that is done primarily on value criteria and not on old criteria or good relationships with bosses?

These features, depending on what defines you as a professional, are given by the value of your previous achievements, the logical consequence of the facts you assume and the nature of the obligations you set for partners or employees.

A free conscience of guilt is conditioned by briefly presenting the image your connection allows with the possibility of a fulminating ascension through your spheres of activity. The latter fosters a harmonious development of the experience of image, relationship and understanding in the guidelines you are addressing.

The Single Throw Of The Dice is associated with giving the chance to make decisions alone, with the presentation of the related advantages and disadvantages, from which the moral reason for identifying the strengths and weaknesses of alternative solutions to solving certain problems. This single throw is misleading because it is not always the winning combination to better substantiate decisions as well as for more efficient team-level planning.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-single-throw-of-dice.html

The Size Of A Masterpiece

On July 13, 2016

Get rid of that status quo that no longer works and is no longer acceptable at the level of manifestation of personal importance, contributing to the dynamics of a new existential landscape through the sublime it contains.

For the very first time, the immeasurable momentum towards the long-awaited recognition lined up for the support of triumphant thoughts, in a delirium of superiority, in a frenzy dictated by the flux of my uncensored ideas, in the decisive match, as a final, between the tendency of embracing the beautiful, good taste, and the product of diagonals that could boost a new existential landscape through the sublime it contained.

For the simple reason that everything revolved around my aspirations for literary creativity, I had to feel more important than ever, with my hopes fully loaded, refilling the stormy need of inner freedom that assaulted the fortress of my old inhibitions. In the excruciating battle for superiority, the first leap of a start towards the great deed, my respect for the mastery of creation, the sensation of "constant hunger" caused by the passion for determining new ideas, complied to the tendency of showing myself in a proper, very intense light.

My status quo was closely linked to the gift of floating in a stylistic vague, in a unique adventure of self-discovery in a reality that does not necessarily have to be believable to make me realize things that cannot be understood other than through a slight detachment from reality. Again, in the foreground of my thoughts was the creative faculty to make sense of a hyper-reality, although it seems like some sort of anticipated cloning of fantasy often encountered with Borges, when the man tries to be a repetition of the same story in another life experience, one completely superior.

Leadership: Do you have the awareness of a certain superiority over a creation that leads its character through the transformations of a world without borders, in the sense that you can use the repetition of the projection of the self in new hypostases?

Dominated by the feeling of immeasurable power, I felt increasingly stronger that I could achieve anything beyond my powers, beyond any expectations. The substance of the power of my productive spirit, confirming the personal important and the expression of a strange compatibility with the state of mind of characters used to notoriety, was finally reacting with the solution of the mixture between events experienced in a dream, read or heard.

If I had been an artist endowed with the ability of maximizing the positive effects of paintings, and not just an artist of the pen having a direct echo over the functioning of the world, I would've probably rushed to achieve a brilliant combination between "Mona Lisa" and "The Persistence of Memory", becoming myself a combination between Leonardo da Vinci and Salvador Dali. Thus, I became the unique character of a journey in the world of art, whose superiority consisted in taking advantage of the lessons of the life experience of other artists in order to create a unique image of myself that dominated by the weight of aspirations to be more than what I am, to be a creator of eternity, in a purely visual universe.

You cannot find a plausible explanation for this phenomenon comprising the tumultuous man, directing him inwardly beyond any limits, to the higher level of the opportunity of rebelling in a formidable manner, with a reckless energy, against that Status Quo implying inaction, indifference, reluctance, isolation.

His eyes suddenly remain fixed somewhere far away, to an imaginary point situated above any other interests, any preferences for certain activity fields, any set of things that displease him, completely subordinating to the robotic tendencies of the psychic of creating proper conditions for a new beginning of a masterpiece. The projection of my self into the hypostasis related to the condition, the way of life and work of the artist, repeated through the relation spirit-matter, idea-reality, could be used as a motivational material for producing a form of remembrance of history.

Leadership: Do you direct the character you want to interpret in the direction of a process that no longer spins in a circle, but rather goes straight forward?

Robert Macaire is the imaginary character invented by Honoré Daumier, serving the artist as a prototype in his satire directed against the bourgeoisie, the pretentious sufficiency, lack of education, semi cultism. In French culture, he represents an archetypal villain.

But this character was, first of all, the creation of a great comedian, Frédérick Lemaître, which in turn built his character after a strange guy, a vagabond met randomly, transforming him during his shows into a well put together trustworthy man. "He had the beauty of a god, the audacity of Diogenes, the elegance of a refined individual, the serenity of a child and devoured dry bread with the majestic race of Apollo eating ambrosia" wrote Théodore Faullain de Banville in his "Souvenirs."

There is only one way of understanding people, beyond what they are able to accomplish, somehow through themselves as characters that dominate the world through the height of their own ideals and expectations, between spiritual challenges and openness to the new. Namely, to only make haste in judging them through the lens of the prototype model that, while in the process of full imagination, they build in their flight towards distant horizons.

To direct the character that you want to interpret in the direction of a process that no longer spins in a circle, but rather moves straight forward, means to rid yourself of that status quo that no longer works and is no longer acceptable. It means to rid yourself of your own conscience, of the values and assumptions that feed it, helping boost a new existential landscape through the sublime it contains.

All theories about man, in which leadership is manifested as a factor of evaluation of the particular elements of representing his attitude in various situations, are at this time deadlocked. It seems to be a crisis of the fundamentals on which rest the order and causes of traversing a difficulty portion of personal transformation, in the excruciating battle for superiority. Because man is no longer the same instrument of confrontation with the limits and prejudices of the world, but rather becomes an instrument of confrontation with his own answers to various revelations.

Leadership: Does your creation address a subjective universe organized in the image and likeness of a character who lives in your thoughts and in your being, but who is marked by a reality that transcends the plan of immediate manifestation?

Therefore, when we relate to the size of creation, first subordinated to an extensive deployment of elements of connection with the individual development of man, our attention should be directed towards a character forgotten by the world, but dominated by the sense of unmeasured power, full of the sensation of "constant hunger" caused by his passion for determining new ideas, influenced by the tendency of showing himself in a proper, increasingly intense light.

When you feel increasingly stronger that you can achieve anything beyond your powers, beyond any expectations, only then does the substance of the power of your productive spirit react to the solution of the mixture between events experiences in a dream, read or heard. You feel that you are part of the world of a less ordinary character, from which your personality takes shape, meant to change the rules of the game in art through the subjective appreciation of a reality that allows itself to be traversed by the experience of a revelation of high emotional intensity, from the very vicinity of the idea of a "meaning of life".

To become someone else, refilling the stormy need for inner freedom that assaults the fortress of your old inhibitions, you must become the creation of your own masterpiece, you must be favored by the existence of a certain predisposition of the type "must have" – that of engaging the stimuli of lifting the level of personal importance, so that afterwards you can reconfigure the typology of the determinant structure along which subjectivity operates on events of major impact.

Creative people are often characters forgotten by the world who, in a corner of life, in the darkness of solitude, have developed the sense of fullness up to the size of a Masterpiece. Only they have the means of the art of total transformation - theirs, into someone else.

Leadership is the power to become the creation of your own masterpiece, with the mention that the reality you experience through the technique of life storytelling must be approached as a way to experience different situations of your own person in a world of fabulousness, abundance of images, ideas and the consciousness that transcends the boundaries of time.

The Size Of A Masterpiece comprises the sum of all attempts of finding yourself in someone beyond yourself, in a delirium of superiority, in a frenzy dictated by the flux of uncensored ideas, in the decisive match, as a final, between the tendency of embracing the beautiful, good taste, and the product of diagonals that can boost a new existential landscape through the sublime it contains.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-size-of-a-masterpiece.html

The Slowly Unfolding Image Of The Autumn Rose

On November 22, 2019

The rose is the seal of a single mystery, formed by the simple addition of a subtle detail in an inimitable artistic formula.

The language of the rose is the monologue of an artist who, in his unconditional kindness, without any constraint, expresses his creative force through the murmured vibration of a feeling of the purest and highest expression. A feeling like this the artist has for virtuous women, or for those rare things picked from nature and taken very close to perfection, for the power of a mother's cry, or for the comfort of the mercy of a God who cares for mankind.

The language of nature is a permanent search for art in every corner of our existence, fragile and vulnerable, laden with vague melancholy or overflowing of soul, pronounced anxieties, affected by the passing of time. The guiding rose, so dear, struck by the inclement weather of late autumn, makes me feel overwhelmed by the pains of a complicated world that, ever more indifferent to the spiritual dimension, has never seemed more fragile.

For years, aspects related to physical, mental and emotional intimacy have not given me an answer to the question: "what is hidden in the life of the one who hides while everything is repeated?". Only the rose gave me an answer, seriously and accentuated, by the magic with which the artist manages to merge intimately, in the same work, the clearing of an alley shaded by old linden trees that invites you to a deepening in the unknown, with the colorful exuberance of the autumn landscape, somewhere away from the eyes of the world.

The aesthetics of the murky landscape, but full of cheerful colors, becomes an event of active appreciation of art when the voice of an unknown speaker, thickened by an autumnally feeling, justified by the rarity of a serious moment, touches (with the echo of destroyed hope) a dusty object, or even a troubled man, in order to be able to make a journey in a place laden with constraints, deeper states and much more intense experiences.

Leadership: Does your personality seek to create a visual identity that allows you to take root in the memory of a unique moment captured in an image with a hint of artwork?

I turned my garden into a space of reflection on the most secret thoughts, a way of exposing a deaf language, without primary quality in painting because it ceases to characterize a landscape to call itself "distinctive". Thus, the landscape can be admitted as a kind of renunciation of the self to be considered "significant" for the experience of revealing a larger reality, worthy of 21st century surrealists.

At this moment, the language I use in the presence of nature is the product of a particular, isolated consciousness, using as an anchor of a message to the future a chain of "n" thoughts characterized by changes in moods, especially those that generate profound symptoms of an emotional nature: exhaustion, sadness, vain glory.

A personality that embraces this language submits with dignity to a work of art that lives, especially through the message it expresses: "everything that hurts or upsets you also makes you see life differently."

Isn't it true that you can feel a hint of hopelessness in my writing, as the colder, more capricious, fiercer weather gets you trapped in a maze of questions, secrets and uncertainties, as if you were entering the atmosphere of the novel "The Name of the Rose" by Umberto Eco?

When the rose loses its petals in late autumn, it is only then that the artist seems to be strongly sensitized to the impossibility of tasting the delights of a multicolored image, as if introduced into an image of the end of the world, as in the vision of the photographer Christian Wærsten.

Here, the highlight of my story, which I will never be able to separate from, is given by the awareness of the aesthetic or spiritual content of a work of art that impresses through the echoes of philosophical substantiality, of the type: "I will never forget myself, no matter if I am a good or a bad painter."

Leadership: Can the living picture of your art be framed in the memory of a time when you experience a depressing state, which can be used as an analogue term for a broader context of knowing and understanding the motivation behind the creative process?

In "The Instant Millionaire", writer Mark Fisher guides a young man to fulfill his dreams. The young man is invited for a walk through a large garden of roses. They walked in silence for a while. The millionaire stopped in front of a rose bush with magnificent flowers and remained lost in contemplation. When he came about, he said:

"I think I've smelled these roses thousands of times, but each time I find it to be a different experience. Do you know why? Because I learned to live here and now. I forget the past and I don't care about the future. The secret is as simple as you could imagine: mental concentration. The more focused your mind is, the more it lives in the present and the more absorbed it is in everything it does. Concentration is the key to success in all areas of life. The more you'll be able to concentrate better, the more efficiently you work, noticing even the details easily missed by others. Gardening helps you observe more and more of the things surrounding you."

Dear reader, every time you doubt yourself, when life will be harder for you to endure, return to this rose and remind yourself of what it represents in a universe that fits your mind, because it and you were made by the same God, to discover in it his work. Concentrate on the relationship between nature and the human being in order to bring up the subject of the Great Work, before you consider yourself an artist of memorable expression, a hermeneut of the image drawn from the mysteries of the worlds of the universe.

The only detail that added in an inimitable artistic formula can achieve a resemblance between you and the rose, is based on the idea of perceiving a composition as a whole, not as a sum of the parts, as an emanation of the impression of an unlimited space, or as a materialization of a force of a surreal nature that only an artist of memorable expressions can produce. Such an artistic formula may be "the spontaneous drawing through a sense of self" or "the coloring of a beautiful thought from the unseen world."

The true motivation of an artist, the one that underpins the creative process, is to capture with inspiration and appreciation "the totality of the world" in a single deep and moving moment, accepting the challenge of interpreting an image with content of "self-reflection" in a corner of reality unbeknownst to anyone.

The Slowly Unfolding Image Of The Autumn Rose highlights a way of exposing the incursion into a pressing world, one which wants itself to be creative, but also an artistic process of constructing the symbols of defining the "self" by assuming the hypostasis of a character who analyzes spiritual states, conceptions, ideas through the echo of a feverish loneliness.

The Snapshot Of Magic In God's Universe

On February 23, 2020

If you want to be more than an artist, then you have to become invisible and omnipresent for the ordinary world accustomed with the obsolescence of ephemeral things.

I would still have something to say about Freddie Mercury, regarding the video "A kind of magic", considering the fact that I could imagine his personality as a strange, powerful, privileged presence, merged with the sacred of an unparalleled thought. A thought full of situation upheavals, full of contradictions, full of inspiration. Such a creator of effects and cyclically integrated lights in an impressive scene setting, decided to strengthen the rule of the kingdom of shadows with a deity accepted as supreme: "I'm the one that exists behind the unknown."

Invested by the astral power with the sacredness of an emotional structure specific to the sensitivity of the genius artists who turn anything into magic, Freddie seems to be the result of the definitive establishment of the mystical point of view, of the spatial directions in the world of optical phenomena. A factor more powerful than light. Rather, a place where light does not reach directly, but only through the "escape" subterfuge in front of a reality check, through the subterfuge to create a more sumptuous appearance not only when it rises from the ground, combining the supernatural with the natural, but bringing its spirit to perfect harmony in relation to the surrounding elements.

A consuming fire, a sun and a shield. One spirit and one illusion. Embodied by the judge king, the preacher or the poet inspired by the museums of a world squeezed with sensitivity, Freddie plays the part with the greatest passion for the fake, but a fake that can be concentrated in a new direction of projection of the enlightened being, attracted to the center of ineffable gravity. A magician is a playing card that you cannot play with on your fingers, for the simple reason that you did not come into its possession, more than that, you lack the flair to read it symbolically.

Leadership: Does the creation in which you find yourself as an openness to the depths of the eternal world, give you the pleasant experience of feeling closer to a "divine" status always revealed in another hypostasis and in another place?

Illusion is a stranger that you think you cannot find because you are driven by an image that does not support any reflection, maybe just a projection on the mental screen of an Ego that cries out: "I am more than I have become ! " In the magician's eyes, burning like two candles in the dark, so many times hidden under another mask, the opening to the depths of the eternal world is mirrored. A world so fascinating that you can never get bored of it.

Well said a Romanian writer named Cornel Ailincăi: "The eye is the organ of knowledge of the glory abode through which the spirit crosses into the world, where the soul is spent for the hope of salvation." But no one can read the eyes full of color, full of dreams, full of "theater dust" of a magician. And the magician says to me with confidence, and only to me it is revealed sincerely: "Turn to me with an eye full of your own gaze."

The art of being a magician is sanctified by divine grace. The lively soul is drawn to God by an unstoppable force, a clear-dark explosion that drives after it and the body, until levitation and teleportation, all being able to outline a unique aura of mystery, perceived only timelessly. In the mind and soul of the magician, so often misunderstood, a better world is assembled through boldness, sacrifice, the spirit of good organizer, the spirit of creation. This is usually not taken into account by anyone.

Freddie Mercury is a God because his magic is immortal, because the mechanics of his magic are invisible to those who do not understand the language and grandeur of art to be the point of communication between the real and the possible, in the form of the materialization of the imaginary. This is the message of the video "A kind of magic".

Leadership: Do you contribute to the building of a knowledge derived from the triumph over the image effects that reveal an avid awareness of authenticity, considering that the value of a creation is the link of the experience that characterizes you?

I made a secret of the art of magic: that of myself being a secret, which I now make available to you. But you are not paying attention to my words, and you have already lost sight of the essence. My world is another world, in a metaphysics of spirit. The true magic is to steal as much of the viewers' attention as possible, but to leave them with a hint of truth, just as great painters leave a minor signature in one corner of the painting.

What makes him a formidable creator himself, the unrivaled master of the show, an artist who births mastery from the effects produced by an interpretation of the self evaluated according to the different conceptualizations of science, is the ability to capture the authentic sense of its superiority in the vibration of a sound of awakening in another life, given in the verse "This rage that lasts a thousand years".

The sound of his music brings to life the numb, unfulfilled spirit, leads him to freedom and gives him spirituality, the experience of regenerating through movement and liveliness. Everything is magic. Please believe me, I'm not Freddy Mercury, he would never be able to describe me as only I can describe him through a process of alterity. A great soul recognizes its greatness only in front of a double.

The great defining knowledge of the artist's personality is the personalization of the experience of meeting yourself in the variant of a manifestation of the creation experienced in a dual role, as a revelation of the absolute.

The Snapshot Of Magic In God's Universe is configured as a kind of artistic moment of great exception, which you cannot separate because you are beginning to be part of an alternative world, ampler and more spectacular. Once you're trapped in it, you also want to be a magician, a supernatural phenomenon.

This artistic moment was staged right now by a director whose name I pass onto silence...

 Note: Queen - A Kind of Magic

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-snapshot-of-magic-in-god-universe.html

The Sorcerer (I)

On August 16, 2010

The day you'll feel able to subordinate as many people as possible, on that day you'll become a sorcerer.

Edmond Dantes thought with great care about the meaning of his unexpected escape from d'If castle. And the fact that he was offered the famous treasure of Spada convinced him of the advantage he had in his favor. He wanted to get revenge, and for his revenge to be complete, he had to set in motion an entire mechanism, but without leaving any trace, any doubts, any signs, only a deep air of mystery, a cold air and full of doubt.

V for Vendetta. The thought of revenge got a shape in his mind as a living image of a magical, dangerous, complicated game, full of intrigues and betrayals, which directly reflect, just like a mirror, his own character, deeply changed by the hardships of life. His mind was always filled wit this never-ending and insistent thought – his revenge.

But in order to touch the painfully sensitive chord of his enemies – those who plotted against him and sent him to prison unrightfully - and to punish them, he first had to scare them and deform their reality, disturbing their minds with scary appearances, with undistinguished voices, with piercing looks, by a long series of suspicions and turns of events – everything with an extraordinary dissimulation.

Leadership: Do you propose to yourself to try an experience of self-revelation from the height of a peak calculated in relation to a situation of the type "trap"?

The kingdoms of kings are bordered either by mountains, either by rivers, either by chances of characters, either by chances of language. But the kingdom of a sorcerer is as large as the entire world, it has no boundaries, only its conscience.

All of a sudden, Edmond Dantes turned into a sorcerer with full powers – the Count of Monte Cristo, who, by manipulating his "crystal globe", could identify with an extraordinary precision all his enemies' moves.

And he was so skilled in understanding his enemies, that, by throwing in their hearts that terrible fear of death, he could feel their heartbeats, each of their breath, their shakes of emotion and fear. Only he was able to see what was really happening deep in their being, because only he could graze like an almost imperceptible shadow in each of their lives.

The trap is the very structure of your character that you give to the story of a life that hides its mysteries from the eyes of the world. Because you can find yourself trapped between its own contradictory hypostases and a duty you have to fulfill.

Leadership: Do you have the power to unlock those areas of impact in your evolution, that constitute a basis for the ways in which virtues are manifested?

A leader knows how to confront the perils of life and their consequences, so that he creates a masterpiece of cunningness, wickedness, plots, intrigues that serve a cause, an idea, a vision or a plan that the leader feels he needs for an exceptional interpretation. Thus, we find out about the existence of a reproduction that conforms to a human model of prudence and wisdom, favored by the pretentions of a scary, but balanced and evolved liveliness, promoted mostly through the regulations of reason illuminated by faith and the multicolored rays of all virtues.

The success of such a plan lies in the capacity to successfully dissimulate a situation, using the nature of the cause and the objectives for which not only an answer is needed, but also a performance that fills any need of resources.

And to know how to do it, so as in every situation, no matter how impossible it may seem, to put yourself in a favorable light by playing an important part and through the liveliness that a new identity gives, requires to know many optimum positions for exerting some pressure over the opposite area, that can be breached through a variety of moves, without impeding the mobility of your own forces.

Leadership based on the ways in which virtues are manifested as tools of one's own valorization, will reproduce the structure of the ratio between inferior and superior, interpreter and his monopoly situation – according to his approach, making permanent or justifying the hierarchy of his existent characteristics.

But before opening new perspectives or making the key moves, a leader-master in the plan of creation – has to find the power to unlock those areas of impact in his evolution, that constitute the basis for the ways in which virtues are manifested. Because virtues tend to reach higher even before facts are born, and they're manifested only in respect to what you perceive as "ups and downs", to something that you're missing, to what you really feel every day, to what you create and what you offer as spontaneous reactions to whatever happens around you.

Leadership: Do you use the description of the background where happenings take place as a radical change of the unique way of interacting with the unpredictable?

Only a sorcerer can do what nobody can. The Count of Monte Cristo guided himself after an old secret of magic: „Nothing must be what it is, only what it is not. And, contradictorily, what it is must be what it could not be."

The sorcerer had his own special way of demonstrating his powers, with a subtlety and gradation of emotions hard to reach by any actor, with an extraordinary scene play which made his illusions seem real. Everything depended on his imagination and his enemies' inattention, as well as the delicacy with which he chose and applied his scenarios. Sometimes, it depended on the warmth of his voice, his clear look, his bon mots which made you entrust yourself completely and obey him.

When the sorcerer appeared, it was either dark, or he gave you the feeling of complete darkness. It was terrifying, shadowed by his own mystery, by his own identity unknown by anybody, and his scene play was full of suspense, nerve cracking. Even if it were daytime, the night seemed to cover his enemies, who felt as if they were caught in the whirlpool of a waterfall: they could crack their heads while falling or escape unharmed.

Calm and unshaken, the sorcerer presented a fearful look for all those marked with red in his calendar, the calendar of judgment, him being the most pure prototype of the correct and hard judge.

Leadership: Do you have the ability to see clearly in everything, just like in a crystal globe?

Strange and impenetrable is the will of the man convinced that his powers are unsuspected and unlimited. The Count of Monte Cristo proved an authentic leadership, solid, by the craftiness and patience with which he built his strategies and turned them into reality. In his ineffable game, everything depended on his will, often leaving the sensation that his is a sorcerer, with unlimited powers, not to be nailed or stopped by anybody, no remorse as any of those stopping the powerful ones and no obstacle of those nailing down those who are too weak.

One of the strong points of a leader is his ability to deepen all things and to clearly see in everything, just like in a crystal globe. The Count of Monte Cristo succeeded in tricking his enemies, often frightening them, since he was always a second ahead of them. A wrong measurement, one erroneous provision, could have made him fail.

But he wasn't meant to fail, not the man, or, better said, not the sorcerer who has the power to take upon him the thoughts of other people, discerning with a mysterious look the quality of souls - not to him, whose mind deciphers well the meanings of everyone's minds, seeing into every unseen movement.

The magic of a reality that is eternally refuted by human comprehension is the triumphant expression of an attitude of decisive intervention in the destiny of lives that separate and intertwine in unexpected ways.

Conclusion: A sorcerer, if it really existed, could have the entire world at his feet. But a leader doesn't have the "powers" and "instruments" of a sorcerer. He can have the entire world at his feet using analysis, synthesis, persuasion, positive psychological induction etc, but never must thoughts of revenge lay at the basis of his actions. Just like he must never consider himself a supreme and invincible judge.

The leader must know how to work his people and, especially, he must let himself be guided by truth and reality.

 Note: Alexandre, Dumas - The Count of Monte Cristo, Youth Publishing House, 1957.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sorcerer-l.html

The Sorcerer (II)

On August 17, 2010

Show your confidence in the properties that provide advantages to your model of perfection, by taking an offensive position throughout the changing.

In order to take his revenge plans to an end, Edmond Dantes had to throw into battle all his weapons, to make use of all his powers, cunningness being his most precious guide. None of his enemies must stand against the inevitable and, for that, it was necessary to distract their attention, to scare them, let them fall prey to desperation.

The world opened at his feet. Dantes was no longer burdened by the years spent in jail, but stately and strong, wise and rich. He had regained the strength of his body and his mind. And as the days passed by, he felt like he was becoming stronger and stronger. And as the days passed, his calling was stronger and stronger. He mustn't restrain it.

The entire power of a sorcerer depends on the other people's unknowing. Nobody must be in the position to ask questions or parry one of the decisions that Dante had already taken. He had no choice, he had to make himself forgotten. So he contorted reality by taking another identity. He assumed the identity of a very rich count and he was skilled enough to hide his true nature, thus tricking everybody. His ability to hide and to dissimulate was so big and convincing that absolutely nobody got through that indestructible wall, thick as those of an imposing citadel.

His kingdom was infinite. He was either a lord, either a pries, either a philanthropist, either a chemist, either a physicist. He was neither French, Indian, Arab or Spaniard – he was cosmopolitan, he had taken up the customs in each and every country, he spoke all the foreign languages. But no country could say it had seen him born.

He earned his fame of a superior man, as if a superior force had taken him to the top of the highest mountain. He was complete, impenetrable. All the people, but his enemies especially, had acknowledged his power and will. He was seen as a man whose knowledge and intelligence surpass by far the usual knowledge and intelligence of other people. The count knew everybody, but nobody knew him.

Leadership: Is the process of building your identity in question, even though it reveals your intellectual finesse?

The leader is often subjected to a rigorous form of association of the power of judgment, on the one hand, arousing admiration, and the power to forgive, on the other hand, settling feelings and emotions in a context which is not always convenient, requiring an enormous responsibility. Here prevails the ability to easily handle in difficult situations, so ensuring some risky rope dancing on the thin twig of life and personal experience. An inner foundation, given by a strong spiritual foundation, that finds justification in self-confidence, is seen more and more pregnantly on the outside, renewed in the possibilities of reason to know the truth, supported by a flawless behavior concerning justice from the law of his own conscience.

According to a quote on the Internet, very suitable here, "a leader must obey the law of his own becoming calling him to new ways, i.e. to rise above the identification with the masses and follow the path of his own calling, which helps him build a unique individuality."

The leader's emotional side often falls on a second plan, as in the art of war, which develops intellectual abilities and physical strength. For the leadership system difficult to diagnose by other people, the ability to provide yourself a human resource without deep "affections" becomes paramount. The usefulness of what you want to collect, assimilate or manage following your transformation proves to be important.

Ensuring your art a certain adaptability to your new self, to the extent of ensuring self-control, but also a direct anticipation of integration methods of an evolution equation in the context of a strategic vision means to emphasize that dimension of evaluative action, which provides sufficient and varied opportunities to demonstrate the result of retouching your imperfections, taken individually or together.

Leadership: Is your mission as a representative of a secret providence required to be proved through the relation between the intuitive image that you have over what happens outside of your own will and the image that the theory of a phenomenon of gaining power is able to give about you?

The man is nothing more than a human being, while a sorcerer is more than a human being, he is a superhuman being endowed with powers, unsuspected gifts – if he wants, he can give orders to the wind, he can even change the laws of existence.

This is the image that Edmond Dantes, alias the Count of Monte Cristo, built for himself in front of the people, with a lot of skills and a special insistence - the image of a sorcerer, who had his ways, stern, mysterious and hard to reach. Indeed, only a wise mind, an intelligent nature like the one of a sorcerer could exert in such a measure his influence/domination on everybody.

The Count had always been careful to dress in black and to have a sober feeling in order to give the feeling of an uncertain and great shadow, a man of darkness, very dangerous, always increasing his feeling of mystery. His appearance always seemed to be miraculous. In fact, he had this amazing power to transform everything, no matter where he had been, into an atmosphere full of uncertainty and unforeseen, a stern an defending atmosphere, threatening for all its enemies. They all felt instinctively that danger loomed upon their heads.

Leadership: Can you develop a vision of a higher order through your shift to a level considered to be a way to open yourself to the prospect of completion of a goal like "nothing is impossible"?

You cannot be somebody if you don't work hard in order to be somebody. Or, in other words, if you don't become famous, then nobody will follow you. Without a shadow of a doubt, this is the principle that Edmond Dantes followed in reaching his main goal - revenge. He knew that the only way to succeed was to increase his power of influence, to become somebody – a special, superior person, who can penetrate the high society of those times. And he succeeded, taking a new identity, using his vast knowledge and psychological abilities to situate himself above everybody else.

Edmond Dantes succeeded in leadership because he had a very good strategy on all plans. But he had an ace he knew how to use in his favor: he had the power to turn from a simple sailor with limited knowledge into a character with manners, with extraordinary knowledge, having a deduction ability above average. He had the power to change lives, he had a power of decision in people's lives, he left his mark on all the people he met and more than that.

The conclusion to be drawn here is that in order to triumph in leadership, you must get to be known, to be in the center of the general attention and sometimes to turn yourself into another person, a superior man. This metamorphosis doesn't rely on wealth, but on a more important treasure: studying, acquiring new knowledge in various fields, behavior, language, character, attitude and even... the adequate look in society.

Have you created to yourself from leadership a model of perfection? How do you demonstrate confidence in the properties that provide advantages to this model? What position are you taking throughout your journey towards excellence? Can you identify the basic steps of the process of changing? It is boldness your most precious guide?

How do you increase your power of influence? Are you making use of your vast knowledge and psychological skills to get above all? Could you transmogrify into a superior man? How do you use your amazing power to change the people around you?

 Note: Alexandre, Dumas - The Count of Monte Cristo, Youth Publishing House, 1957.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sorcerer-II.html

The Sorcerer (III)

On August 18, 2010

Incubate in your leadership your consistent and deepened preoccupation for each of the crucial stages of interpreting your own role, so that your influence over the beliefs of others to be maximum.

The Count of Monte Cristo distracted his enemies' attention with much skillfulness from the essential. He saw that they didn't feel any disaster, that they have no premonition on the perdition that was upon them. He grew fear and uncertainty in their souls, he distracted them by playing with their power of judgment, handling them like toys. By putting traps and temptations in their way, he succeeded in inoculating distrust and doubt, fear penetrating deep into their souls.

The sorcerer had powers that nobody else had, that nobody could imagine. He wove a veil behind which he carefully hid all his movements. He hid behind a curtain from behind which he could observe his enemies' movements, he armed himself with crushing proofs against them, proofs they didn't thought they could be discovered, building a strategy to amplify their panic and totally disarm them.

Leadership: Can you open a new perspective on the background on which your intercessory power is formed before God, at the limit of what is true and what is not?

Almost 20 years ago, his enemies, who had plotted against him and had sent him unjustly to jail, had been very tight in their endeavors. But now, everyone had gone his own way. This is one of the evildoers' weaknesses - after they do something, they break up. And when their roads lead to dead ends, they begin to feel that everything is due to providence.

Here is the hand of God ! With the same strong idea in his mind, the sorcerer played with them just like the autumn wind plays with the dead leaves. He divided the for good, definitely, and they all bended freely. If they had united their forces, they could have kept him away, even test his unshaken power, his apparent immortality. But they didn't understand the powers they were up to. Wherever they were, they felt the fearful presence of destiny.

They felt a weakness inside them, they felt like being haunted by some strange unnatural, unwanted urges. They started losing control over their judgments and over their reasons. They felt like drowning in their own incapability. Affected by the nightmare they were going through, they tried to find out who was behind all the mysterious happenings which were attributable to some bat spirits. But things were far beyond their powers of reasoning. Technically, they were fighting an invisible opponent. Cause how can you defend yourself against the severe hand of God?

Leadership: Do you manage to impose yourself and give meaning to your power, recognizing yourself as an individual separate from the world, and, at the same time, above it?

In order to be triumphant in a battle, you must discover your enemy's weakness and strike him exactly in his weak points, but without letting yourself exposed to any risks. Just like the famous Pope Pio the VI-th (count Braschi), the Count of Monte Cristo hid his hatred against his enemies in order to defend himself against their forces. For fear that, looking deep inside his soul, they could feel the danger awaiting them. In any way, the count behaved so calmly and naturally, as if nothing unusual had happened, as if it hadn't been him behind everything.

It was easy for the sorcerer to channel his powers towards each of his enemies, because he succeeded in weakening their vigilance. He saw to determine them to make unwanted mistakes. They all found themselves in a cobweb of events which they could not interpret because their modest knowledge and ability to understand were blocked by the rapidity of the events, as well as by the conviction that the refutable facts of the past were deeply buried. Practically, all their convictions were turned at 180 degrees.

Leadership: Can you trigger an interruption at a small value of the distance from an immense power, showing that you can overcome the differences in status among people?

The Count of Monte Cristo made use of all the force he had in order to hide both his identity, as well as his aims, arming himself with crushing evidence against his enemies. He was consequent and cunning enough in his attempt to penetrate their minds. The complexity of his game often went far beyond their ability to understand it. Their thoughts were confuse and contradicting, as if they were attacked by occult forces – they had no power upon them. Moreover, they should have stick together, as one body, just like when they plotted against him, but they lacked their power and determination to be together, which made their division much easier.

The only way to defeat a man carked by the fierce thought of revenge or, at least, alleviate his hatred, is to confront him with a lot of courage and a good heart. His enemies could have annihilated his sweet feeling of revenge or even hurt him with his own magic, if they had truly repented. But the sorcerer acted quickly, attacking them fiercely and annihilating their ability to defend or to retaliate.

How big is your influence over the beliefs of others? What is the binder that unites or separates you of them? What are the qualities that make up your character? Can you put them in value? Are you counting on them? Do you know to get use of them in order to convince others to follow you? How can be measured your influence? Do you manifest a consistent and deepened preoccupation for each of the crucial stages of interpreting your own role?

Leadership is in direct relation to the position that you adopt throughout an incidence of events from which results the essential content of a great work, called: Providence !

Conclusion: In leadership, you always need a tactic, which, on one hand, consists in surrounding yourself with loyal, trustworthy people, which will support you in your endeavors, and, on the other hand, you have to annihilate your opponents, by discovering and attacking their weak points. But you must always use real proofs and arguments in order to secure your advantages in front of them. The more the tactics are better laid out, the more solid your proofs and arguments, the easier your road to victory will be.

Also worthy to notice is the way of action (to ensure that "veil of protection"), which must be the legal one, because without being the hand of providence, "the sins of the past" will always get out and make you fail quickly.

 Note: Alexandre, Dumas - The Count of Monte Cristo, Youth Publishing House, 1957.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sorcerer-III.html

The Sorcerer (IV)

On August 21, 2010

Learn how to direct "the change", to be able to add considerable value to the role that you take.

The Count of Monte Cristo was very clever in building his strategy. He was able to observe the soul and the nature of his enemies, reading their intentions as easily as a general can read a war plan. He lured them into his magical scheme, full of traps, sliding like a ghost into their lives, always haunting their consciousness, seeding confusion and anger into their souls, thus outworning them of all power before destroying them.

The sorcerer was a human being, but his formidable powers almost transformed him into a God. He was a character wrapped up in mystery, thus protecting himself well against any attempt to undermine his power. He skillfully used a false name to hide his true identity, keeping his innocent appearance. But his spells were as effective as arrows, strong enough to pierce the shield of his enemies. All of them were weak and unable to penetrate the muddy area of his magic and remove the sufferings he skillfully threw on them.

Leadership: Is the effect of increasing your performance being value by a perfectly symmetrical composition of destiny, justifying your position to add new measures to your duty to promote power?

The sorcerer had the power to control his enemies, instilling fear in them, as well as fascination with his actions and his mysterious behavior. Everyone felt trapped in, unable to escape, no matter how much they would struggle. Everything around them completely collapsed, their attitude being rather skeptical regarding the future. With every step, they felt deep down the strong fear that their end was approaching, like some scared, trapped mice. They couldn't see the cobweb of deceit and lies that the sorcerer wove around them, and that put them in a deadly danger.

Everything truly matched really well. The sorcerer was a very skilled diversionist. He managed to gather the noose around his enemies, who didn't find the strength to make a stand. All his perseverance paid off. Everything happened exactly as predicted, by the strategy he had built with great skill and mastery, with gentleness and patience. It was an endless string of events, facts, symbols, masks, mysterious appearances, change of situations, all giving the impression they lead to a wrong way. But, strangely, there was a mysterious connection among all these, which served to achieve his goals.

The perfectly symmetrical composition of destiny, in order to be complete, must have a broader sense of organization of the Divine work, by going into the world on a mission. The Count had become a sort of employee of a mission where escape requirements are a little more difficulty to accomplish, because he first had to play a game called: "Party for Your Rights", which made his mind contribute and made him always be wary of where the pieces are placed in a mysterious setting, emotion and suspense.

Leadership: Do you shape your identity according to the criteria of your own approaches, in a distorted or transparent manner?

Someone who evolves in rough environments will have a dominant capital close to the culture of "debt settlement" which will ensure his intimidating success, dependent on the virtues of authority that is opposed to the hidden vices that false morality can induce. The culture of debt settlement is somehow in conflict with the positive leading style, but it enforces better the norms required by the thinking that self-analyzes. This way, the reaction to different challenges becomes much more powerful and more complex.

Someone who grants value to leadership, answering more efficiently to external demands and challenges, can generate rejection attitudes when it comes to presenting himself to the world as a defender of values. Which actually reflects his division into two sides: one distorted (when reality does not match your ideal or your image) and the other transparent (in so far as you making your actions and plans known). But it also reflects the opposition between what is valuable in him and what is totally invaluable.

A kind of rational superiority half built, a little vulnerable that excludes almost entirely the inferior elements of personal identity, due to an approach that allows false access to a possible true understanding of life, but that strengthens the ability to make things happen according to his will.

The approaches that you adopt when it comes to controlling access to superiority say something about your own attitude by giving criteria of ordering the dispersed value elements, by placing them in a broader configuration. This way, personal approaches aren't related only with the future built out of too much self, but also with the present build out of the inability to object to a negative reformation, out of the powerlessness to oppose the proud desires of self-fulfillment.

And moral leadership is in disagreement with the winding intentions to treat with hostility everything that happens to you or with the attempts to cultivate confusions around the idea of "Self". Still, leadership never excludes from the success equation the strategy and capacity of shifting the events in favor of personal ascension.

Leadership: Can you put into motion the events in your favor, remaining faithful to actions that only optimize their winnings by multiplying the stake of the game?

The strange events that followed were only the result of a sorcerer. Things changed in the life of his enemies in no time, before they could get used to the idea. Although days have never resembled one another, however, the sorcerer managed, by one of those impenetrable mysteries, to do so that his enemies should get used to the idea that everything repeats itself – thus, he distracted their attention from what really happened around them – but everything happened for a reason.

The unlimited will of Count of Monte Cristo, combined with his faultless flair, started moving mysterious forces – ways to deceive and confuse the enemies, conspiring against them a spell so powerful that they, unable to guess his intentions, forced by circumstances and stricken by wonder, haven't opposed any resistance. He was the master of that chain of events that rapidly succeeded, day and night, and his procedures were undetectable.

For your success in leadership to be absolute, you must become a sorcerer, just like the Count of Monte Cristo. You must know how to direct chance, to lead the course of events in your favor, by the strategy that you built with great skill and mastery, gentleness and patience. You must put in motion those mysterious forces which can make possible all your "wonders".

But for that, you must be as meticulous as possible in selecting the ways of action you must follow and never act randomly, even if you can create that illusion. Also, you must rely only on concise and measurable data, not just on your flair. Keep in mind that the slightest accident, the tiniest inability can rapidly destroy any strategy, no matter how well it would be set in order.

The stake in the wizard's game is to take control by transforming the complex intuitive material of "signs of an open mystery" into a natural psychological side construct.

Conclusion: An excellent leader knows how to run the event (this is the true art in leadership), but carefully, he never leads randomly.

His strategy is always set in order, and whatever may seem accidental is never like that, this meaning that he has the ability to conceive, namely to provide the results of his actions, and also the ability to quickly orient, taking the appropriate measures in situations that change the initial plan.

The careful analysis of causes and their effects, the prompt intervention whenever there is a deviation of the initial plan, are essential.

 Note: Alexandre Dumas - The Count of Monte Cristo, Youth Publishing House, 1957.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sorcerer-IV.html

The Sorcerer (V)

On August 28, 2010

Generate an as higher percentage of credibility, for your leadership to gain relevance due to the special direction given by the center of your own reality.

Through his outstanding and unexpected improvisations and actions, the Count of Monte Cristo reached his goal. Like a magician with full powers, he controlled through various means known only to him the reason of his enemies who, to their dismay, could not discern who is that someone or what is that superior, mysterious force which deliberately put obstacles in the way, which dictated everything and kept them under its influence.

All his enemies fell into a trap of conspiracy, very elaborately woven, and like fish caught in nets, were unable to escape. They ought to have stood against the count with their powers. They ought to have confronted him and undo his spells, looking for signs and ways they could turn into their advantage. They ought to have defended themselves, separate completely of him, through a bridge over which he could never pass. If they had managed to do this, they would have destroyed him. But they failed.

Leadership: Does the turning of your character found at a small distance from the moment of action give incredible ease to your transformation on a personal level as well as the appropriation of the valuable attributes of your character?

The sorcerer conceived his strategy with the great skill of a general. Secretive, displaying to the world a mysterious character, he managed to make invisible his intentions ans his actions, winning the respect and admiration of his enemies. They have come to rely entirely on him, regarding their success both in their professional and in their private lives. In other words, the sorcerer became the center of their universe.

When you're part of people's lives, and especially of your enemies' lives, you can only be full of energy and fast moving. You must be confident in your own strengths, in order to run events by your own will. The sorcerer was tireless in his watch, and his determination was unshakable. His hate was too intense and his impetuous will incited him to more action, causing more and more worries to his enemies.

As he penetrated deeper in their lives, in their sinful, evil and greedy souls, the more he disrupted their lives' courses, deepening their state of suffering and anxiety. Deepened into constant uncertainty regarding their fate, his enemies, bewildered, frightened, out of patience, had to strain to the extreme the capacity of resistance, in order not to be overwhelmed by the feeling of fear.

Although all the events occurring begun since the Count made his appearance, nobody could impute him all those amazing, crazy, confusing events, which predisposed to worries and concerns. The Count looked very smart and capable; he had a calm and confident attitude and an open mind, always proving an extraordinary kindness, like a man with a pure heart.

Does your leadership have expressive or inexpressive "clothing"?

One of the main concerns of leadership is "inexpressive clothing", matching any changes, that fits that mode of being by which man can claim certain territories of influence, except that he does not aim the "show" generating dimension in relation with human perception, but explores the useful and effective dimension of this clothing in the becoming and assuming process of a valuable identity, which sometimes takes a risky, but profitable form.

Leadership creators will never project a strong professional image, ensuring the promoting impetus of a differentiating identity from the group identity, but primarily interesting in terms of its practical role if first of all does not anticipate that moment of obtaining material and spiritual benefits.

It is a kind of revenge that defeats time, creating conditions for a radical self-transformation, subject to a rigorous selection process or theoretical and practical knowledge during the formative stage, following unwritten rules and producing reactions of continuous support.

But the truth is that, evermore in the present, leadership, as a result of rather predictable or planned events, knows an extensive democratization process, moving more and more to what we call "egos clash", close to ambitions of supremacy, to what is expected for years, to the need of lucidity, spiritual awakening. And here we can talk of a kind of "expressive clothing", made on an industrial scale, under which its practicality is on par with safety, multifunctionality and sustainability.

Leadership: Can you change people even if you are not credible in front of them, so that you work best in a present that is both a continuous future and a distant past?

The Count of Monte Cristo knew like no other man how to skillfully avoid all the dangers that could lurch him. He knew how to always appear in a favorable light to all his enemies. If he hadn't had enough presence of mind, a strong sense of creativity and a great power of persuasion, he wouldn't have known how to act in order to achieve his goals. He ensures his present by avenging his past, while he was obsessed with the idea of a future for himself and no one else.

But a sorcerer always thinks about everything. Surrounded by the veil of a generous and friendly man, impressing through puns, always finding other ways to keep the mind of his enemies occupied, they didn't glimpse the truth behind appearances.

Whatever be the purpose you pursue, you can't reach it without people's help, even the one of your enemies. But for people to support you in the steps you take, you must become credible in their eyes. If you don't get close to them, if you don't grow sympathy among them, if you don't show them respect, they will never reward you with trust, and therefore you won't be able to achieve true success. When people believe in you, they release their potential and are more motivated to follow you.

But, like a sorcerer, you must play your role well, because people instinctively feel if someone is trustworthy or not. You must win their hearts, believing in them, to make them really work for you. If you don't create a reality according to their expectations, you will never be accepted to lead them.

The only chance to juggle with any kind of ball in a game of playing God is to hide behind a new identity that creates a bunch of qualities that you do not really have, perhaps giving you the courage you lack, to express yourself freely and firmly in any situation.

Conclusion: The lack of credibility eventually leads to your isolation as a leader and therefore your plans will have no completion. In order to be supported in all of your endeavors, the strategy, the methods and means of achievement mustn't be fancy, but achievable and flawless. Because a shadow of doubt is enough to lose all your supporters.

What is the detail that you should change in you, in order to raise your level of influence? What relevance has this change for you and for the others around you? What do highlight your new style of leadership? Does it reflect a reality that harmonizes and protects your personality, or that it inhibits and diminishes your value?

* Note: Alexandre Dumas - The Count of Monte Cristo, Youth Publishing House, 1957.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sorcerer-V.html

The Sorcerer (VI)

On Septembrie 06, 2010

Learn to realize miracles with all the means made available by intelligence, for your impact with the excellence in leadership to be at maximum.

The Count was carefully watching the crowd that was attending Valentina's funeral. He succeeded, with an ability only he knew, worthy only of a magician with hidden, unsuspected powers, to make everybody believe that the girl really died. He created, with a tremendous mastery, this "illusion". But he knew the girl was actually alive.

He continued to look around. Anxiety consumed him more and more, because Valentina's lover, Maximilien, who was truly in love with her, slipped out from the crowd and disappeared. The Count, who had read forehand what was happening deep inside the young man's heart, also left the crowd, in order to find him.

The last battle with pain. The Count went to Maximilien's home, and even when he was about to end his life, seized by an endless bitterness, the Count quickly entered his room, stopping him from such a reckless gesture.

- My friend, the Count said with an unspeakably gentle voice, don't make hasty decisions.

Maximilien:

- Who could prevent me? For all my hope is crushed, my heart is broken, my life has faded, around me is nothing but mourning and disgust, the earth has changed into ashes and any human voice tears me apart. I would rather die, because, otherwise, I would lose my mind, I would go crazy... You, who said he had all the means given by intelligence, all the powers of matter, you, who play or, better said, who act to play the role of Fate, didn't have at least the power to give a counter-poison to a poisoned young woman. My alleged benefactor, savior of all people, be happy, you shall see your friend dying. Then, with the laughter of madness on his lips, he rushed for the second time to the guns.

Leadership: The way in which your ensemble of privileges respond to the demands of destiny forces and hazard, provides an intuitive and natural way of conforming to a control structure with motivational transmission functions?

A sorcerer, who has supernatural powers, also has full rights over life and death. The destinies of those around him are in his hands.

A burning flame erupted from the Count's throat into his eyes. Feeling his heart melting in his chest, decided for the first time to leave aside his iron, cold, immovable, untouchable mask that he always showed out of caution, for nobody to be able to discover his true identity, for nobody to guess and parry his plans of revenge. He sublimely transfigured into a divine being.

- Listen to me, my friend – I can call you that because, without knowing it, you've been my friend for 11 years. God is my witness that I wanted to hide my entire life the secret from my heart. But now I realize I can't do that. You see, I am the one who saved your father's life, one day he wanted to kill himself, just like you want to kill yourself today; I am the man who sent the bag to your sister and The Pharaoh to your father, I am Edmond Dantes on the knees of whom, when you were just a boy, you played, and whom you all believed to be dead.

Suddenly, Maximilien's wonderful nature completely returned.

- Maximilien, you must live ! Hope. Do not put an end to your life, because a day will come when you will be happy and you will bless life. Please, do trust me. I promise you, I swear to you, if by this time, next month, you won't be the happiest creature in the world, I'll sit you myself in front of loaded guns and a cup with the most dangerous poison. But promise to me, instead, to wait until then and live.

Leadership: Do you approach people in terms of the concept of "diversity of the changing circumstances of life", by analyzing the importance of considering the consequences of customizing an external power?

Put your masks aside and show your true identity so that people know what really lies in your heart. Because you can't escape of what we call, with a very uncertain term, "conscience", in the case that, because of your masks, those around you will suffer. As a leader, your duty is to maintain the optimism in everything they do, in every step they wish to undertake.

For that, you must be able, like Count of Monte Cristo, who saved Maximilien and his beloved one, Valentine, from death, restoring their happiness, to receive your role of benefactor.

But you must be endowed with that sharp mind, like the Count, able to examine everything in detail. To foresee when people seem to lack perspective and no longer have the power to believe in themselves, to fill that inner emptiness that reflects on their work, on their creative, entrepreneurial spirit, on their own will, turning them into defenseless creatures.

An external power that nourishes your mind and leads your life is an effective capacity, an ability to express and realize your will as a mandatory condition for accessing a consciousness of God's reality.

Leadership: Do you have the power to achieve wonders with all available means of intelligence?

As a leader, you must learn a very special way of seeing things, namely to observe not only the people's specific behavior, but to carefully dissect their feelings, above all. You can recognize everything in a man by the way he behaves, waits, hesitates, by his gestures and statements. You must carefully observe a man, maybe an entire hour or an entire day, to watch his gestures, his sparkling eyes, if he hadn't lost his enthusiasm and self-confidence, and finally, if he goes with the feeling of triumph.

Your task as a leader isn't to prolong people's sufferings but, with the joy a father shows to every member of his family, help them put themselves together and make a step toward the future. Remember that, through your position, and having all the means provided by intelligence, you have the power to make wonders.

Leadership is what you create through your personal commitment to changing things and the conjuncture of events that configures a world of limits, of "less", of approximation.

Conclusion: As a leader, you must be a fine observer of human behavior and even of human emotions and see the changes that make their being to stagnate; you must be able to bring at least a little tranquility into people's souls in times of need, presenting things in an optimistic form, but without being... a seller of illusions.

Learn to realize miracles with all the means made available by that penetrating intelligence, obtained through training the Human Resources, for your impact with the excellence in leadership to be at maximum.

* Note: Alexandre Dumas - The Count of Monte Cristo, Youth Publishing House, 1957.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sorcerer-VI.html

The Soul Demands More From The Eyes Than Mere Visual Perception

On November 22, 2024

What you see around you calls for careful reflection on what you discover within yourself.

In every moment of my existence, a silent joy pulsates, a play of light and shadows, a subtle interweaving between solitude and communion with the world. Perhaps they are wandering in a world of fragments of memories, where every corner of the landscape pours out its story. The only thing I really know is that everything changes. Nothing is the same, not even the moment I think I have caught in the palm of my hand, at the cost of a flash of clarity, when blood, this triumphant symbol of life, pulses through my writing hand.

It is an art to know how to surprise yourself so that the eyes see beyond appearances.

Sun. Warm. A cosmic hug. I run through the cornfield, a "Nexoris Temporal Eternix", the space where time loses its usual consistency, only to rediscover the essence of the present moment. Slowly, with great feeling, he caressed the green ears with his right palm as if in a ritual of eternal return, as if each touch were an imprint left in the memory of the universe. Somehow, I feel like I'm living an ever-living memory of last spring, from which the feeling of deja-vu is born, random images pouncing on the heartstrings, asking the eyes not only to see, but to discover the truth hidden in the details.

Charged with serenity, full of good cheer, I pass my palm over the leaves dancing in the wind, and they recognize me not only as a passerby, but as a witness of each moment that passes and remains, at the same time.

Leadership: To what extent do you manage to transform the simple moments of existence into revelations of a perpetual flow experience that transcends time and space through mere visual perception?

At the same time, I lose myself in another place, as alive as my beating heart of pure emotion, from which only art, creation, the sublime can give meaning to my existence. The light that penetrates the retina is only the beginning of a story that only the soul can understand. On the seafront, where the waves whisper endless stories to me, I watch the gravity-defying acrobat in a great leap. Y con la gracia de un momento eterno, his every leap becomes a metaphor for freedom, a poem written with movements in the salty afternoon air. In a hurry, I notice how the passers-by turn their eyes to the horizon, because the waves whisper their secrets only to those who know how to listen to their dreams raised in the sky, as if the breeze carries the echo of endless stories.

In all this hurried time, which I try to stop in my heart, with a kind of stubborn oblivion, the words of Ravic, from the novel "The Arc of Triumph", brighten my thoughts, as if they were written especially for me:

"I never forgot the sight. I had learned that the Earth was a planet and that it revolved, as you learn from books, without understanding. But then, for the first time, I realized that it really was. I could see how The earth traverses the immensity of space. I felt then, with great force, that I was immersed in something from which I could no longer get out. This happened, perhaps, because I had woken up from a deep sleep I had lost my memory and my habits, I looked at the immense sky, moved. Suddenly the sky no longer seemed still and restful to me, and since then it has never seemed so."

Leadership: How can a seemingly mundane moment become the essence of an entire inner universe as you understand the eternity mirrored in each passing second?

The present moment is a meeting point between the past and the future, a space of infinite creation where more and more characters come to life. The old man with the ice cream in his hand, in front of the gas station, looks like a character from an impressionist painting, where light and shadow create an air of mystery on his face, "Luminaris Ethereal Synoptix", a confluence between past and present, between childhood and wisdom .

And here, it's as if Ravic wants to add something deep and unseen from me: "Look, Nicu. This man knows nothing. He doesn't know which wings touched us. He looks at us and doesn't see that we -I changed. This thing is very bizarre in the world: you can become an archangel, a madman or a criminal - no one notices anything. But when you miss a button - everyone notices this."

Indeed, a simple glance at the landscape can reveal truths that words cannot express. I think that maybe this happens to all people when they get lost, in a blanket of silence, only then do they find their essence. Does true freedom consist in letting life flow through us without trying to fix it in rigid, stifling, suffocating time frames?

And flowers, so many flowers around. Am I the only one seeing them? Am I the only one who can smell them? Dominating as if in the middle of this triumph of light, a wreath of flowers in the path of so many eternal beauties is looking for its creator, that one artist capable of giving them back a drop of color, a dreamy breeze crossed by light, a small opportunity of eternity.

Leadership: Do your memories always come back with greater clarity than the moment you lived, allowing a simple touch to carry the weight of your entire existence?

"Joan smiled at her. A gesture of closeness, a step forward to the moment of total abandonment. Ravic put his arm around her shoulders. She leaned against him. She felt something open in him and spread, warm, gentle, comforting, something who pulled him down with countless hands, and made him unable to stand on his tottering legs, instead of forgetting and walking, yielding to the call of blood, the call from beyond the millennia, when there were no brains and thoughts, suffering and doubt, but only blind happiness and blood."

I think it's a paradox of existence. Time is not measured in seconds, but in the intensity of the moments that remain engraved in our memory. How come this? Beyond all expectations, it seems to me that I live simultaneously in multiple dimensions of the world, of reality, of space and time, mirroring the joy of children in the big wheel, the smile of the unknown seller, the curious look of passers-by, the love story of young people who have no known the mirage. Not yet. Or not at all.

Each interaction becomes a piece of the mosaic of my existence, a confirmation of the deep connection that binds all beings in an invisible fabric of meaning and significance. Maybe it's time to delve into my own inner universe, hoping that understanding will bring light, because that's what art means: knowing how to transform emotions into creation, putting in the foreground the authenticity of experiences and the depth of connections between the beauties of the world.

Leadership can be derived from the ability to lose yourself and find yourself in the small moments that build eternity, cultivating spontaneous connections between the stories of the world.

The soul demands from the eyes more than a simple visual perception, it demands a certain distinct meaning for which emotion becomes the bridge to the inner world, from a single point of view: "to see deeply is to understand life". Thus, every moment lived becomes another dimension of reality, from which, perhaps, I will be able to discover more than the artistic act of seeing, but that essential and authentic truth defined by experience in the following way: "to feel what you see and to understand what feel".

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-soul-demands-more-from-the-eyes-than-mere-visual-p

The Soul Game

On January 09, 2011

Strive to penetrate inside the territory that can allow you to express your "artistic" side, to establish a level of mutual resonance with those around you.

The king of France, Francis I, was right when he said that women often change. But he did not mention the fact that, for a woman to change, she needs to meet a great man that would do her good, animate her mind and, above all, have the power and desire to touch her soul.

In the following, I would like to talk to you about a scene from the movie "Pretty Woman (1990)" which, beside the importance it has in terms of leadership, also reinforces the truth of my words.

I'm sure that you've seen the movie and you know the story. In short, the controversial businessman, Edward Lewis, hires a prostitute, Vivian Ward, as a call girl. She fulfilled that part for a week, living with him in a luxury condo and accompanying him to his business meetings.

On the morning of the seventh day, Edward reminds Vivian that their relationship must end the next day. And, because they spent a wonderful week together, he arranged for her to have a home, a car and everything else she needed for her to stop selling her body.

Leadership: Do you try to detach yourself from the state in which you accept what happens to you by approaching your own creation that no one can penetrate?

I want the fairy tale ! A mute and painful silence followed, when the girl's heart was filled both with tenderness and sadness. Her eyes, which were simply magical, expressed so much serenity, but also disappointment. With a voice in which you can easily guess a deep anxiety, a voice full of emotions, concern and sensibility, Vivian told Edward, as though she had let her last hope die:

- When I was a little girl, my mother used to lock me in the attic when I misbehaved, which happened quite often. And I used to pretend... I would pretend I were a princess locked in a tower by an evil queen... And then, all of a sudden, a knight with a white horse would come galloping and he would take off his sword. I would wave at him, and he would climb the tower and save me.

Then, the camera focused on Edward, who was looking with an unspeakable compassion at the girl who had reached the climax of her despair. His eyes carried all the words that her lips could not utter. The fire in her eyes and the greatness of her dream disclosure had a special effect on him. He felt like that doctor who, trying to save his patient, he almost killed him.

The only personal creation in which no one can penetrate is the vision of a life filled with regret, which only needs a purpose to be fulfilled.

The study of mentalities underlying leadership functioning, so those mentalities that have the greatest impact on behavior and latent in relationship with other people, makes more and more momentum. Important contributions of leaders to the development of a solid thinking and empathy, that can shape the character and personality of people around, saving them from a "spiritual damnation", begin to assert ever more.

More and more sources seem to indicate that the artist's elite in shaping people, in a continuous training and reform, manages to crack that hard shell of materialistic and hard thinking, that can no longer raise to any spiritual horizon.

Carefully managing their value resources to counteract a massive erosion of the trust they rejoice, this pioneering elite finds new opportunities to follow the footsteps of excellence and to feel at its best, reassessing its position, attitude, approach, ideas, behaviors, words and deeds that can inspire people around.

Fields will never bear ample if they do not have enough water. Learn from the mistakes of your own limiting thoughts and beliefs in order to remedy any flaws of character. This is the only way to peace with yourself and to ensure the highest quality of leadership.

Are you an artist who can draw the beautiful out of people's souls? Strive to enter inside the territory that can allow you to express your "artistic" side – which operates only with the beautiful inside you and the beautiful in other people. Express your feelings. Break the habit of wearing gloves in relation with others.

Beautifully shape your personality and thinking, bringing a steady flow of positive vibrations in the leadership's maintenance plant. Bring out that part of yourself that others do not know in order to get to a higher level of existence and for your leadership to raise to a higher level of evolution.

Leadership: Do you slowly detach yourself from that psychology of expectation and confirmation of your own worth, to consider the image the one next to you as a creation expressing the particular sensitivity of a creator of new worlds?

A leader enters the world of those around him, calling on the good side of their soul. A line from a well-known song of the Swedish pop band, Roxette, sounds like this: «Listen to your heart before you say Good Bye».

This was also the message that Vivian indirectly sent to Edward, clarifying his true feelings towards him. She was more convincing and more sincere with the feelings that had to be only simulated and not actually experienced.

Just like the great painter of "reality", Millet, gave to the blossomed tree a pretty modest place in his paintings – that of an element of a composition with wider literary meanings, so did Edward give Vivian a pretty modest place in his life – that of an "element" of company for his business meetings.

But everything suddenly took another turn when Vivian revealed to Edward, on a natural and friendly tone, the great secret of her heart. Through her brief and touching speech, she changed everything; she entered into his soul and managed to pull something good out of it: love and affection.

A man is stingy with his feelings but, when he gives them once, he gives them forever. Struck by the kindness in her eyes, by her special charm, by the gentleness of her character, by her childish, yet serious sincerity, Edward listened to his inner urges and never let Vivian go.

"It will be great. It will be just like I always dreamed it would be. Like in a fairy tale, isn't that right?" And Vivian's fairy tale turned to reality, because she focused the antennas of her soul to his inner depths. This is one of the most important keys in leadership.

No other man had such a great echo in her life. No other man has had such profound feelings for her.

The dream has its projection in imagining a reality that exists only when you read stories, but which was deliberately thought of by God for a certain phase of the unfolding of His plan.

In The Soul Game, you don't compete with anybody, but you must save somebody. First, you have to save yourself from a slow, but disastrous failure. Then, those who show a special empathy towards you and who are able to pull something beautiful from your heart.

Human soul is an unknown and quite fragile realm, which the leader isn't allowed to play with. A great leader, who wishes to remain a leader, must be careful with the feelings, respectively with the soul of the people he works with.

You must have the willingness and a special talent to emphasize the "beauty" of the human soul, so that they resonate with you. So you better be careful with the hearts of the people you work with.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-soul-game.html

The Soul Of A Lost Treasure

On April 04, 2013

Enhance the value of your existence, by fighting against the factor that pins you down in submediocrity.

Solitude is now the only touchstone for Laura Quinn, the only way to rid herself of the connections to the world, her only ally against that cancer that slowly bit her away, day by day, eating her whole life, pinning her down in mediocrity. You have the feeling that you are looking for shades in the wrinkles of this being who only ever knew office work, you suspect that it is building a truth that is convenient to an invincible power that allows it to succumb to instincts of adapting to cumbersome captivity, as it is called, fraudulent, freedom.

The truth is that she cannot share with anyone the same fate of the man revolted by the whims of a strange Providence. For one moment, she was alone on the patio, lost in a bleak thought. Without allowing ourselves to be touched by her beauty and her kindness, we will subtly examine her features like they belonged to an infinitely sensitive and discreet person, that that had been abandoned like a convict in a dark world, where she could die of sadness and despair. Because that's what she ended up being.

The primordial factor that freezes you in sub-mediocrity is your presence in a place where the past and present meet in a destiny centered around the notion of "end of the world".

Gently, her eyes scrutinize the darkness of the night. Indifference, contempt, distress. The remains of refinement mixed with shards of pride. By her tense, pensive attitude, with tired eyes, as if everything in her was falling apart and building itself together again like a chemical bond, generating that sever reaction of its own nature that can't occur the other way around – we can notice, of course, that amalgam of poor, bleak feelings that take over her completely, like a somewhat virulent germ when it affects a highly-resistant host that defends itself well against it.

But what is the nature of the bond that forms between the defining elements that make Laura hope and dream about the moment when she will completely forget everything, when all that matters is only herself and nothing else? To feel the light, to feel the life, to feel that awakening and godly touch that's missing in her life, the one that heals every sadness, every pain and every suffering.

Leadership: Is your intervention in creating a beautiful result allowing you to access a reality created from your own essence which, through her negation, manages to transform a story into one person?

There are thoughts that one should never reveal in front of anyone else, because by revealing them you awaken such a mystifying pain, especially in the one who harbors them. Colors, lines, spaces, mixtures of elements cu certain meanings, unequal forces that were tested, used, then revised repeatedly, forming natural glue that hardens and becomes very solid.

And these kinds of bonds randomly disposed in a freestanding system that doesn't have any light source, thus creating a dim spiritual essence, acquire secondary meanings. By transforming Lara Quinn in a "Mo", an aimless robot that manifests itself as tendency, the diligent tendency of hiding in herself, of abandoning her most precious values and everything that she considered as being part of her reason.

Also, we can't be indifferent towards her Ego and her attitude. Her head lifted towards the skies, as a form of respect to God, her only trustworthy ally, the only one that understands her. The sum of her thoughts, as some sort of prayer that nobody needs to hear, take her from one state to the other, opening once more the doors to her heart.

All these small gestures easily betray an enormous power: hope. Reminding us of a character from Alexandra Dumas' novel, Eva de Chazelay, who even though was helpless and suffering, deep down inside she was hiding a treasure, a multitude of qualities that waited to be revealed. Chazelay Eve's story is synthesized in one person, Laura Quinn, who often denies the essence of her connection to God, but never abandons the complicated the possibility of a new creation representatively called "New Man".

Leadership: Do you have a major role in the vision you form of a destiny inspired by the saddest truths of life, directly proportional to the pride of being considered the primordial mark of a generic belief in the sphere of interrogation: "What voice was heard coming from beyond the end?"

In "Memoirs", writer André Maurois said that "it is a great madness and almost always punished for you to come back and want to relive at the age of forty everything you loved or enjoyed at twenty." Laura Quinn is of this age, and she does not even have the luxury of exteriorizing herself like others to give alarm signals about her intellectual and social condition. Solemnly, she accepts a dull destiny only with the hope that something will happen in her favor, without discerning the errors of her own life, without seeking to correct them through illusory solutions.

Basically, Laura Quinn has a major role in her vision of a destiny inspired by the saddest truths of life, that she always orientates after the direction of the wind of change, making sure that all her activities take place in line with the hope of a new beginning. From the a spiritual over-flow, she acquires the necessary energy to fulfill all the goals in the short term, it is the responsibility of her wisdom to appreciate every day through the small joys offered by the fragility of the still unspoken dreams, even if the majority prove to be some chimeras, some vain promises.

Even less clairvoyant people could have read the mystifying passion on Laura's face, the tearing pains that threw her in the unfathomable abyss of disdain. Understand and step away, dear human being ! But the simultaneous command of her agreement frequencies can't fulfill the partnership relationship, the one-on-one relationship between the inner and outer worlds.

Only an instantaneous burst of the soul could change her mood. Only another thought, more intense and better optimized could bring her serenity back. Only one component of the system that defines her as human can react in a temporal framework: magic, stepping out of the critical area, going towards something else, towards a new beginning. A step that must be made with full confidence in the great world of life.

Leadership is the potential positive area created by the vision that you form about a destiny inspired by the saddest truths of life, a destiny that can be challenged at any time, turned to the cardinal point called "A parable point."

The Soul Of A Lost Treasure points out the tendency of shutting yourself in, of abandoning your most priceless values that always guide you further on. If you want this treasure to be accessible, then enhance the value of your existence by fighting against that factor, which keeps you stuck in mediocrity.

 Note: Flawless (2007)

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-soul-of-a-lost-treasure.html

The Soul Opens Its Horizons Alone

On December 01, 2014

Take the liberty of redefining yourself, correcting the error of obeying the past that follows you.

It was rumored that the unfortunate one had once been a naval officer, jailed for Bonapartism. True, thought the Count, God made me float above the waves and flames. And so, the poor sailor lives in the memory of a few storytellers. His terrible story is told at the fireside, and those who listen to it shudder when they hear how he pierced space in order to sink into the depths of the sea. He was number 34. They say he was so accustomed to darkness that he could see a needle in the darkest corner of the cell. But it took him ten years to be able to do it, thought Monte Cristo.

Yes – he thought – this is the stone I was sitting on. Here is the trace of my shoulders, inscribed on a wall. Here is the trace of the blood that flowed from my forehead one day when I wanted to smash my head against the walls... And these numbers... I remember... I wrote them one day when I was calculating my father's age, to know if I would ever find him alive, and Mercedes' age so I could know if I would ever find her free. Once I've done the math, I had a moment of hope... I had not thought of hunger and unfaithfulness. I no longer asked for freedom, but remembrance. More than anything, I feared going crazy and forgetting.

Leadership: Do you resort to concealing the truth by establishing a different truth, or to distorting reality by projecting an unreal world?

You cannot hide your past, just as you cannot choose your parents. Truth, characterized essentially in that it thickly covers itself with confidentiality and non-disclosure, but doesn't eliminate the pain of losing yourself in the game of life, in the interaction with the past that you remember through a sort of subjective constraint, is the first of the coordinates that define your personality in moments of deep emotional movement.

Truth is a kind of victory of reason to withstand the pressure of events in a constructive way, without leaving behind a false image of the reality you endured in an attempt to give meaning to life. To justify the concealing of truth through the fact that you feel guilty, confused, not knowing how to find liberation and peace, by refusing to answer consciousness' solicitation of tricking these feelings, actually means to consent to your suicide, to deny the best in you, it means to lose all the momentum towards the heights of personal fulfillment.

The distortion of reality through the game with the possibilities of confessing experience, of your own disappointments, of your identity shadowed by a past insufficiently blurred, may cancel the report of succession between overcoming the obstacle called "the fall into an unimaginable abyss" and the positioning on a perfect stage of life and society. Memories are a hint of the truth invested with a vote of confidence, completed with the trend towards inferiority complexes, an indictment against your real nature that contributes to the perpetuation of counterfeiting your self-image.

Leadership: On what relies the truth of a consciousness that sits above reality, knowing that what binds you to the person you cannot compare with someone else is the apanage of a fragile Ego that feeds on a permanent blackness of memories?

In leadership, this can be translated through the fact that you've wasted your possibilities of controlling the "error" of recognizing yourself as such or, rather, of discovering yourself too late as an exponent of the power of doing what very few manage to do – to connect to the truth of what you are. Leadership is the force of answer to the areas affected by adverse experiences, by the lack of understanding of what is good and what is bad, offering high operational capabilities in training processes. Leadership begins with what you are when you are deprived of the freedom of choice and are forced to develop your ability of personal responsibility.

Resorting to concealing the truth by establishing a different truth means to make abstraction of what you once were, and to be in agreement with what you know you've become. No wonder writer Alexandre Dumas confessed: "Only the weak see everything through a black cloth. The soul opens its own horizons."

This implies man's freedom in redefining himself by correcting the error of obeying the past that follows him, maneuvered by an unseen force, but countered with a responsible attitude. Truth is an important moment in the preparation of man for the actual confrontation with an Ego who experiences the humility of constantly experiencing a true process of consciousness.

Well said the powerlifter Konstantīns Konstantinovs: "Memory is another reality in which we participate with a double existence – the present and the past. Our life is in fact only an accumulation of memory."

And I am of the opinion that the truth of a consciousness that rests on such an existence, is measured by the feeling of the inability to see beyond its own limits, needs and imperfections.

The consciousness that rises above reality is that inner voice that urges you to certain actions, but it does not motivate you to serve a place and a time that is repeated through the feeling of nostalgia, sensitivity and devastating loneliness.

The Soul Opens Its Horizons Alone designates that rise above the past, that liberation from what you came to be at one point: a prisoner of pain. The distortion of reality through the projection of an unreal world is equivalent with living as a prisoner who doesn't have the right to open the door of his prison and escape – even if, normally, you're a free man. The present can become, through the process of remembrance, a permanent oscillation between the two worlds – that of reality and unreality – modeled by thoughts, feelings, shadows and desires that surround you.

The world of the modern man, as a product of reason and feeling related to the consciousness expanded in the present, ensuring the full value of his dimension of a distinct entity, operates through an exclusive algorithm, divided into two steps. The first step is to liberate yourself of confusion by knowing what you need to avoid remembering. The second is to accept yourself as a promoter of an approach that aims to dismantle the old identity and to construct a new one.

This algorithm, amid a strong feeling, experienced mainly as a reflection of the past and present, turns leadership into an equation of identity's continuation.

 Note: Alexandre Dumas - The Count of Monte Cristo, Youth Publishing House, 1957.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-soul-opens-its-own-horizons.html

The Soul's Closets

On March 18, 2011

The people's conception about you is supported by the deep meaning that they give to you and your leadership.

You keep waiting for the answer that never comes. Your deepest desires remain unfulfilled, because they slip down in the background when it comes to your flourishing career. You're like a passenger who's alone on the way to a highly sought, impressive, appreciated, but gloomy and sad destination. Your life resembles a "hopeful" movie, but nobody watches it, and the movie theatre always remains empty – because it has action, but it lacks romance.

It's also the case of multimillionaire Edward Lewis – the main character in the movie "Pretty woman (1990)", which I've told you about in my previous articles. His life was rather an unceasing come and go. Always caught in the midst of the struggle for the better, which could have lead him closer to reaching his high ideals, he had no time to worry about maintaining a truly satisfying personal life.

But that was until he met Vivian Ward, a luxury prostitute, whom he hired as a call-girl. Although at first their relationship was strictly professional, in time, has transformed into a beautiful friendship. Discussing more and more one with the other about their lives and how they became the persons they were – she, a prostitute, and he, a businessman, talking about their dreams, their failures, but also their achievements, they got to know one another better.

Leadership: Do you validate every experience you live through what you are out there when you lean towards the sweet-sour taste of living at "chance" or at a "whole" level?

If you understand people, you have the power to change them. Edward's soul was like an empty house, where the memorable inscription: "I'm not home" was hanging on the front door. But falling under the spell of Vivian's feelings and in love with her, his soul was once again awakened to life. His pending ended. She was the answer to all his questions, revealing him a new aspect of life, a new world in which love and devotion were the most worthy and beautiful virtues.

Vivian's opinion about Edward changed when she realized who he really was. He was a good man, who really devoted himself to his career, aiming to the highest tops, but who had lost almost all his cheerfulness and happiness. She understood all his feelings, anxieties and "secrets" and realized his mood; even if he tried to express something else, she understood all his meanings and thus knew what string to pull in order to sensitize and completely change him.

To live by chance means to not pay attention to the things that attract you, to not experience them in a meaningful manner or one close to your soul. While living life at the "whole" level means paying attention to the things that define you or to those you feel that you identify with, it is to put yourself in a role that, to your liking, you will try to materialize your desires, being less motivated by the desire for power and fame.

People's conception about you is supported by the deep meaning that they give to you and your leadership. Leadership is like a tree the roots of which are anchored in people's hearts.

Leadership: Can you think of yourself as your "double", without complying with a personal image that disturbs the soul?

The general theory of leadership, of the genesis and structure it is based on, which I enounced on numerous occasions, always involves in its dynamics the existence or inexistence of reports, criteria, evidence, circumstances and serious reasons for change, which are common and powerful taken as reference. It may prove an ideal reagent to measure the smoothness and adequacy of each person to the requirements of his own state of life, in a society increasingly devoid of promoting true values.

The osmosis between different levels of commitment and involvement, to ensure the resources needed for emotional, not just material survival and development, stopping you from advancing on the road of wandering, will allow you to discover in yourself answers to serious questions raised about creating a new setup of unity of your own being and existence.

If you think of yourself as a kind of your "double", a magical force of radical combat of narrow ideas about life, pulling down the real concreteness of the emergence of phenomena of consciousness from the ensemble of unfitting conditions to be great in deed and in thought, you can understand the great importance that you need to give to present life time.

This "double" of yours, this look in the mirror of another reflection gives you the key to internal issues that you have avoided for years in a row, better focusing your attention on qualities that you hide deep within yourself. Your double is the experience you are experiencing through an Alter-Ego that registers longings, revelations, comforts, revealing different facets of your soul that inspire you to be better, more patient and tolerant in your relationship with other people.

The most admirable virtue of the leader is intimately connected with the willingness to devote yourself to a spiritual life that seeks materialization in hanging on to the so-called "transition agreements" between what constitutes you as a more grandiose version of your Self and what it represents you as an entity of humanity.

In the novel "Manon Lescaut", the abbot Prevost said a very nice things that remained stuck in my memory: "Nothing is more admirable and gives a higher price to virtue than the confidence with which you knock on the door of some people's hearts, whose honest character you al ready know."

You can determine the issue of a mutual trust if you often interact with people and only if you're spiritually fulfilled. If you possess the appropriate personal qualities, if you resemble a lot with those around you when it comes to mentality, honesty and commitment, they will get close to you and will become increasingly willing to follow you. In order to exist in people's hearts, you must deeply anchor into their reality, values and feelings.

The beneficial reality where a leader has to anchor his feelings, feeding from the accumulated lessons of life lived by the motto: "Forgive me for existing, can I do something for you so that it will be good for both of us?"

The soul's closets control the quality of your leadership and protect you from your worst enemies: stress, fatigue, depression, anxiety, etc. They possess enough power to help you focus on the most important aspects of your life that, because a full professional life, you may have forgotten. They help you find yourself in everything that you do, in the people that surround you. They help you regain yourself, providing you a shelter, in case of danger.

The results of a quality leadership also depend on the mutual feelings that develop as a result of a longer collaboration, because we are talking about people, and not about robots. A career cannot be accomplished as long as people are not sentimentally fulfilled.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-souls-closets.html

The Sound Of Music

On October 25, 2014

Get out of the usual pattern of the style imposed by preferences of a rigorous vision, skillfully managing the effects which should be revealed in the magical light of your own creation.

Whenever rehearsals end, composer invites Sergei Eisenstein to attend recording. Each time the director finds a detail to be revealed, a dramatic effect that has to be stressed. "Thus we improve a lot our music effects", said Prokofiev. Eisenstein enthuses for his music. But the composer is also satisfied.

During one recording, I hear people around muttering: "It sounds so strange ! " Nobody understands what the great composer meant, until Prokofiev, noting the bewilderment of those around, tells them laughing: "Music is nothing like Prokofiev".

But later, he would candidly tell his wife: "I hear a beautiful song on the radio, and – lo and behold - it was - Arise, ye Russian people – from the Nevsky movie ! " *****

Leadership: Do you draw the line where "detail" turns into an effect extending the creative dimension?

Along with the so-called originality of complexity, based on renewing correlations between "detail" variables dependent on a certain representation on the support of the line of creation, we could speak of a micro-aesthetics which involves not only content, but reports of meanings and forms considered properties of individual perception, translated into structural elements of an evolved series of improvements.

The meanings and forms attributed to a content varying, in terms of difficulty, depending on theme and spreading, in tandem with new accuracy and quality requirements contained in a style consistent with own personality, are considered more carefully and finally integrated into a new structure to support the ideal of perfection.

Here we can talk about a leadership that gives great measure to your performance and ability to recognize the meaning and form to be a uniqueness option. You need to realize by yourself and draw the line where "detail" turns into an "effect of extending the creative dimension", accentuating the need to materialize any input of meaning and form into an outstanding result.

The detail that must be revealed in order for a creation to obtain an effect of originality with a lasting impact is an exit from the classic pattern of artistic expression, followed by instilling a deeper meaning of retrieving a part of you.

This part of you is the essence of a changing world and, at the same time, the essence of a life lived wholeheartedly.

What triggers an overall reset of leadership is the ability to get out of the usual pattern of the style imposed by the preferences of a rigorous vision, skillfully managing the effects which should be revealed in the magical light of the creation. The one who said: "Due to too strict and thorough vision, an important thing can be lost, the spirit will become insecure and thus you can lose the chance of a certain victory" was very right.

Victory, on the plan of convenient activities aiming at the reinterpretation of creation's structure, in terms of multiplication of meanings and forms of expression, screened in a modern and compact formula, is in fact a natural consequence of the reason to enter where you access is not allowed. In that dimension of superiority where the variations and combinations of uniqueness, often bounded by the opinions of others, can achieve the "Wow ! " amazing value.

The preferences of a rigorous vision differ depending on the way of expressing the Self in the midst of structural and aesthetic changes that give music the power to induce euphoria.

The Sound of Music plays that inner vibration of nature tending to study and detail, in the creation resizing stage, which can rise or fall depending on the satisfaction felt after viewing the final results.

 Note: Ion Barna - Eisenstein, Youth Publishing House, 1966.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sound-of-music.html

The Sovereignty Of The Voice Within (II)

On April 21, 2013

Continue to place yourself at a higher supervision level, so as to ensure the existence of an invincible shield against your own ambiguity.

Laura Quinn. Over her destiny, whose evolutionary curve collapses in the darkest reality, fatality has decided unanimously: "coupable". At the first sign, the poor creature loses her sparkle and stays stunned in an attitude that betrays great pain. The limitless darkness, out of which acute sensations, illusions are detached like uncontrollable war games. What a terrible vision she experiences !

From the moment the small diamond touches the well-polished floor, all eyes point towards her, like she were a criminal whose only option is to hear his death sentence. Enveloped in by the traumatizing feeling that she will be isolated in an inert space, in an impassable territory, Laura transforms herself in a singular product, shaped according to some hidden coordinates, whose development, please excuse our uncertainty, is quite unknown, but we can assume that they define the leadership she will still practice.

A chain of causes and effects produce inside Laura a disturbance, which affects the senses, the molecules that contribute to the formation of her interior universe tie weaker and weaker bonds with her continuity elements. She's alone with herself, with the things she's afraid of, together with her soul, so old, so empty. Any positive thought runs into the impassable wall of covalence with that enzyme that doesn't allow her to digest at ease physical and emotional experiences: the feeling of imposture.

It's such a pity to meet someone in two states, dominated on one hand by lust, devotion, charm, beauty; and on the other hand by lost honors, stained reputation, lost rank, the knowledge of living in a destroyed society. All of these are together in the same simple existence formation, crowded in a sole nightmarish moment that drowns every reasonable impulse and ethical consideration.

Leadership: Can you direct your sight backwards, towards the lost meanings of the identity, which you grant a contrasting role to by the cost you have to pay for resetting your life?

If the conscience doesn't precisely accommodate to a reality that closes on the premises of a lack of vision and limited understanding of expectations, then man won't know the blame he has to assume, he won't be able to defend himself against his own ambiguity, just as he can't escape from the fatal course of things.

Once he went through a regression period, it's harder for him to set free from the waves of his insufficiencies, which sometimes leads to self-destructive resistances and choices "by avoidance". He can get assigned to a role of contrast in a context of "melancholy mixed with a shadow of happiness", or in a "guilt mixed with regret" when reason raises to the concepts of duty and law.

Someone with a high position, such as Laura Quinn, can demonstrate their affiliation to a unifying culture, of trust and performance, specific to leadership only through the diligent attempts of resetting the space that fills them with uselessness. Such a man emphasizes his visibility only by increasing self-esteem when his reason works in a world that is existentially integrating the nature of a new duty towards society, hiding his past and trying to impart to his own metamorphosis another beginning, another way.

Leadership: Are you able to imprint on your life the ideal ending of a being who had the courage to face the unpredictable by fitting it into the plan of a genuine spiritual search?

And if Laura's sight is directed not forward, but through a rearview mirror, backwards towards the lost meanings of the identity, which she grants a contrasting role to, then she will consume her emotions by using an inductive reasoning – which starts from a small error and takes an increasingly higher magnitude. This role of contrast, ranging from emotion to consciousness, from behavior to normality, strikes at the attempt of man to reach his authentic totality: "You are above the line of events if you live by devotion, honest work and will to help others."

When you try to walk all high and mighty in front of existence, with a feeling of superiority based on the position you have and on the power it implies, you won't be able to build an access perspective to a better life, according to an already drafted resistance plan.

Otherwise you will be dominated on one hand by lust, devotion and charm, on the other hand by lost honors, stained reputation, lost rank, the science of living in society being destroyed. All of these are together in the same simple existence formation, crowded in a sole nightmarish moment that drowns every reasonable impulse and ethical consideration.

Therefore, in everything you propose to accomplish, you must also fit into the plan of a genuine spiritual search, that is to educate your conscience, to take it into account and to obey it, but above all to overcome your Ego and cease being turned inwardly.

Leadership: Can you optimize your autonomy if you run in background "Trojan"-like applications?

Autonomy returns the condition of the individual who is happy it a certain independence in relation with an exterior authority or with the central authority – himself. And this autonomy can't be optimized in favor of leadership if the individual runs in background "Trojan" applications. These applications have all the "Set" commands that expose a false superiority based on a sense of contradictions, a true race of destiny, where sincerity becomes ambiguous.

The famous writer, Franz Kafka, by means of his character from the novel "The Trial", truly understood a truth unspoken by many: "I bear within me an incredible world. But how to set myself free and how to set it free without tearing it apart?"

The writer gives the impression that very few people manage to fit in a pattern beyond the natural logic of the duality between human existence, as individuality, and human existence within the sphere of discretionary power – in light of an evolutionary stage in leadership. The image of life, as he perceived it, through a rearview mirror, is much more limited by the factors that regard approaching life, by not finding an inner balance.

The most lasting leadership is build with a healthy life perspective in mind, not based on the model of a mechanical process that produces value, that "harvests the crops", that promotes the potential to such extent, that you don't need acceptance from your own conscience. If the object of interest's perspective is biased, and it focuses on the positive aspects of existence, then neither will the background be correct.

The autonomy of a man is based on the background of his representations of life, of the world and of himself: you can be prepared to accept the spirituality of your imperfections, or you can recognize your "failure" at all levels.

The Sovereignty Of The Voice Within points out that part of the self responsible with existential evolution that transcends any limitation.

The idea is that you should establish a generally-existential perspective, over which you should place your interest elements, then your secondary elements, of leadership and performance, not the other way around. This way everything will be in agreement – mind and feeling under the arches of the call for the better. The call towards your true being, towards returning to authenticity, beyond fears, beyond seclusion, beyond limitations and conditions.

 Note: Flawless (2007)"

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sovereignty-of-the-voice-within-II.html

The Sovereignty Of The Voice Within (I)

On April 21, 2013

Escape from the black hole of your inner universe, by tying strong bonds with your continuity elements.

Laura Quinn. For the blood of the poor human being to quiver again and spontaneously adapt to life, under the effect of a reaction capable to substitute the overwhelming failure, it's at least necessary that a coagulation of her positive forces exist. But where can you find a propitious space for such transformation?

Because even her mood has to fit in an ideal interval in order to obtain optimum transformation conditions. Unfortunately, her essence gets closer and closer to the critical point, which doesn't guarantee total renewal, not even partially.

Don't let the monster that burns even the strongest feelings get close to you ! But the monster prepares for the final strike. The pulsations that generate blood, making the heart beat, lose their intensity and almost stop completely.

In that prophetic moment, when she's caught in the act and arrested by the law enforcement officers, Laura is stupefied, the concentration of the reactant that produces positive stimuli necessary in hostile moments is reduced to zero. She doesn't enter her normal vibration anymore, but remains petrified, as if touched by an icy breath.

A nightmare is like a mosquito that escapes when you want to catch him immediately after it bit you. Laura awakens, a kind of spiritual freedom occurs on command. All the necessary and sufficient frequencies for activating positive and healing energies merge again within her. Now she sees herself alone more than ever, like a rusty bell thrown in the sea by an unseen hand.

The almighty demon of panic and crying, busy with arresting insolvent debtors, can not give Laura more than one instruction: surrender. *****

Leadership: Can the image of your personality be included in the conditions of using a reality related to the power supply of your existence with a "negative of memory"?

Do you feel enveloped in the traumatizing feeling of being isolated in an impassable territory? Do you transform yourself in a singular product. customized according to some hidden coordinates? Does your mood correspond to the requirements that ensure optimum transformation conditions? Does your essence get closer and closer to the point when it causes inner effervescence?

One of the traps that can obstruct you as a potential leader, is the impossibility to focus on what you don't know about yourself. You must put your own image in agreement with accepting reality when you overcome the worst moments, when you are forced to experience suffering as a variant of testing the unexpected. That way, while you close yourself at the order of the momentarily "guilty" verdict, leadership tends to depreciate in its generous representation on life's stage.

Through leadership we can capture man's individual emotions contained in the infinite gallery of reality aspects and the relations they support by his connection to present, past and future, according the attitude change reported to his personal existence. A negative of memory is a black spot in man's ability to create his destiny by the significance he attributes to life, especially when he feels he has lost control of what is happening to him.

In vain you look in the mirror and say "I'll be able to throw myself towards the future" if you do not remember the lessons of the past that helped you to be reconciled with yourself.

Seen from this exterior and interior, dependent on the three times, in different environments he passes through, in the different life situations he goes through, man can forge a new inner look. He can get a different personality configuration that has in its composition a less dynamic propeller, able to produce the great abundance of creative energy.

The man subject to change can be enveloped by so many spontaneous contradictions, especially by the traumatic feeling that he will remain isolated in an inert space of the impossibility to rise above himself in desperate and confusing times. He is subjected to the attempt to conform to the norms of external reality, so that he reaches a point where he transforms in a singular product, customized after some uncertain coordinates, but yet defining for the leadership he will keep practicing.

The only moment in your life when you realize who you really are is when your personal image becomes synonymous with assuming an imminent disappointment or assuming a fresh victory.

Leadership: Do you have the capacity to maintain the sovereignty of your own inner space in an attempt to rise above the suffering caused by the state of things that does not change by itself?

If you've read "New York's Trilogy", you probably remember that Paul Auster character, who overwhelmed by exterior happening, deepening himself in them until exiting the self, he managed to exercise a minimum control over his despair outbursts. Walks helped him to understand the existent connection between the interior and exterior world. Using aimless movement as an inversion technique, he could have brought the exterior world inside of him, usurping the sovereignty of the voice within.

Leadership, much like the expectation you have from yourself, has to rise from the area populated with positive emotions you always refer to in the situation create by the new circumstances you are in, when you're alone with yourself, with the things you're afraid of, with the things you can not separate from, or the things you need to pull harder.

Don't let the monster get close to you, don't let him order you around ! Exert your control over his despair outbreaks. Follow the realistic side of your life on the battlefield between interior and exterior, when that long chain of causes and effects, which produce within you a harmful perturbation of the senses, is unleashed. Don't forget that the key moment show you who you truly are.

If you want to win the struggle with what you cannot accept in yourself in relation to the things you acquire through experience, you must remain faithful to your vision and not get distracted by what is behind you.

When you are en route from the interior – towards the exterior, when you have to relate to the present realities, life can erupt in the most sensible areas, tumultuously engulfing them with the unbeatable force of the authentic underground wire whose range of action leads (when you can't freely activate positive emotions) to psychological, emotional and psychical erosion.

All the necessary and sufficient frequencies for activating positive and healing energies unite inside of you through the full identification of your continuity elements: balance, clarity, judgment, the power of vision, profound peace, optimism and the power to rise above pain.

If you want to consolidate the powerful ties with your continuity elements, escape the black hole of your interior universe. Don't kill, with your illusion, the reasonable impulses and ethical considerations.

The humiliation of being defeated is the state of mind caused by the events of your life, set up by the idea that no matter how hard you try to make a change, you will still be tempted to indulge in indifference and inconsistency.

Check out the events in your area of life (the one most hit by changes) and choose the event you would want to attend !

The Sovereignty Of The Voice Within symbolizes the existence of a command center in our interior forum (established in time and based on solid, stable and inflexible ethical principles), that by interpreting the events around us, monitors and controls our actions. If the supreme commander is corruptible or lowers his expectations regarding the quality of being human, then the effects are or can be disastrous for us.

 Note: Flawless (2007)"

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-sovereignty-of-the-voice-within.html

The Spacious Lounge Of Privileged Encounters

On April 14, 2014

Support the construction of a space for personal expression and affirmation of knowledge, to increase your authority as a maker of creation perfectly assumed and understood.

In the spacious lounge of privileged encounters between fantasy and certainty, in the utopian arrangement loaded with concealed elements, not impossible to handle, to which only a Dante Alighieri might provide the high availability, ruled a chiaroscuro, as in the evening twilight, when the stars are shining, are seen and felt.

I found myself here full of calling and returning to God, from the need to explore a territory full of Persian and Latin thoughts, spiritually modeled at the cross between the deep influence of the Western and Universalist spirit as if I had entered a world beyond my sphere of experience, without making any change in a reality that gives hope that what you see could also be different.

The mirrors of time, maintaining the full unaltered image of parallel worlds, strongly reflected from all over, like in a magic ceremony, creating a never before seen architecture – the Increate – which used multiple messaging processes beyond the rational. The role of the artist in this place resembled the rose in a garden full of colorful flowers, adding splendor to a fullness of nostalgia, wisdom, humor and love, adding meaning to the symbol of faith meant to serve as the norm for all believers.

The place where you set up your intellectual encounters must provide a framework for organizing existential priorities and placing ambitions and ideals in a certain creative perspective on the authenticity of thinking that strives to reveal everything a priori about the world, about things, about reality.

Pictures of the miraculous continually haunted me, like a superior intervention kept secret, because I tried to increase my authority as maker of creation through the perfect art of passing into another dimension, full of symbols and meanings. Concealing secrets and unspoken truths, with the ability to walk easily through the matter from which the world is built, multiplied the force of expansion of the feeling of invulnerability.

And in this lounge, looked for but not found, that by its mysterious nuances would have seduced Elminster Aumar himself, all senses, sight, hearing, touch, were all directly involved, digging simultaneously for answers from the height of sufficiency, without engaging side effects. All these were agreeing upon the same space: the transformation of matter in another order than the one of the forms, an outer one.

This lounge represents the place of a thinking that pulls man out of the universe of a well-known reality, and introduces him into an atmosphere of the magical world, extremes, into a theater of shadows and non-conformist creation.

Every moment spent in this lounge was decisive, because this powerful direction of innovative knowledge stemmed from me. I was not a victim of my own folly, deeply embedded into metaphysical depths, from the desire which does not subside unless fulfilled. But an initiated travelling in the space dedicated to the demonstration of authenticity, trying to distinguish myself from the other scientists through the capacity of elaborating that which seems incomprehensible.

Leadership: Can you extract your own model of understanding the image of a particular world that takes you through the interpretation you give to the effort to be part of a universe where you can retrieve your values, experienced and shared through symbolic elements of a higher SPIRITUAL WHOLE?

The lounge is a space of the brightest minds, a study space of the most important arts and sciences, a place above the world seen with the eyes of an ordinary man, where you can only integrate through imagination, creation, discovery. The lounge is the world of one's own consciousness transposed into a spiritual, artistic, visionary and conceptual ideal.

Anyone can become the inventor of a world designed by the norms of construction and functionality of leadership, conceivable in a fiction that turns knowledge into a mirror of time, casting a strong light on the future, which happens to be both enlightening and obscuring.

This new world underlines the contrast between the attempts through which the individualization of the fundamental elements of leadership is attempted, which appear in retrospect as doomed to failure, and the scientific enterprise itself, whose success, consistent with the agreements of self-fulfillment, now allows us to directly choose the organization of the space of creativity, and thus of professional freedom.

If we want to transform leadership into a "gadget" which could lead us into a new world whose perspective on creation tends to be more extensive and dynamic, so that we may enjoy its functions as we go, all that remains is for us to select, and decide between the possible ways forward in the event of a large increase of the quality indicator regarding the level of performance in scientific research – and the height of sufficiency that is given to us by a position randomly gained and ephemeral, that of a maker of creation.

Leadership: Until when are you going to renew your right of using the space of confidentiality granted by science?

The new gadget of leadership is thus part of the confidentiality space of science, from the "spacious lounge" of privileged encounters between fantasy and certainty, maximizing the potential of representing an alternative knowledge, inaccessible through purely intellectual means. This knowledge casts a light that radiates from within an extremely rich and authentic creation, but confusing because of its complexity and diversity.

The confidentiality space of science is a journey in another time and into a famous legend, so skillfully told that you can relish it with the same skill of the artist to translate in a painterly language the image of an ideal world, a space full of knowledge that does not end at any border.

The leader may renew his right to use this space, having in this sense the merit of having been preoccupied by the discovery and analysis of the grand springs of evolution, and above all of the mysterious force present within his own being, only if he is highlighted by originality, by harnessing hidden worlds, placing them in distinct constructions, which can encourage the evolution of science.

The symbolic elements of a higher SPIRITUAL WHOLE such as: "the differentiation between content and form, control of creation, the existence of parallel universes, secret journals, language codes, ruling beliefs", are tied to how you relate to what happens to you in the plane of a reality of another order, with high meanings.

It depends on you what significance you give to that space of forms and connections between science and esotericism, but with the statement that what motivates you to be persistent in the challenge of exceeding your limits is precisely the courage to create a reality that acts as a substitute for self-knowledge, no matter what happens around you.

The Spacious Lounge of Privileged Encounters is a testimony of the level of knowledge you have achieved, in terms of the criteria of defining the area of research. It is the only space of valorizing the creative potential, where you can be sure you are not risking anything. Because the renewal of thinking and of perceptions, through the variety of creative experiences that achieve the closing of the gap between theory and practice, always imprints upon leadership a stronger direction.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-spacious-lounge-of-privileged-encounters.html

The Spark Between The Contrast Poles

On February 03, 2013

Configure your existential path, without distorting the amplification factor of your own evolution.

I found myself in the situation of a wanderer placed in a world without frontiers, chaotic and fragmented, looking for something to believe in and attach myself to. Without any direction, I felt caught in a context dominated by contradictions and paradoxes, a slight disconnection from a savory habit. The difficult challenge I went through could be perceived as the slow melting of a continuous motivation, of an energy that filled me up, until it overflowed, a decrease of my ability of understanding things, the world, time, and especially of the Man within me.

Sometimes life is an attempt to render the impossible of a relationship with a wider world in an uninterrupted carousel rotation. Somehow, I was living the feeling of disconnection from the element that defined me, that fulfilled me, gushing from me like a spring, but continually flowed in the opposite direction of the normal course. Was the result of a conflict with myself, misleading like a storm that dissipated my inner peace. The intensification of a hypertrophied Ego, extremely confusing and vulnerable.

Leadership: Do you have the ability to rise again from a process of decline and regression as a sign of inner strength and vision in the midst of confusion?

Something that was dispelling in an infinite space, and then returned. A diminution of the energy that reached zero, then starting to rise again, but in the opposite direction. After reaching a new maximum value, opposite the first, decreased again reaching zero. A cycle that was repeating more often, more disjointed, more unpredictable, to strengthen that unnatural of my evolution, in order to fool me more and more - the adverse effect of a suspended judgment, of an unintended reaction.

I could no longer distinguish the truth from false, the illusion of the reality. The one, who would be studied me carefully, a fine observer as Dostoevsky or Balzac, would be placed me in a context, permeated by confusions, unfavorable to my previous intellectual curiosity, amplified by the inability of learning, of cultivating myself in all senses. The demon of confusion abusively enveloped my knowledge, my whole being, affecting more and more my degree of profitability and the factors, on which depended leadership.

An assembly of regression and rapid involution that brings gloomy predictions, characteristic to that hard and tense moment, like a violin string, thin and sharp, more visibly reflecting a form of despair taken to the limit. An assumed error? A warning? Un temporisation of my capacities led to the extreme?

Leadership: Can you look at yourself from a perspective broader than that of your own life, identifying yourself with a reality whose strength is its tendency to oppose any form of understanding?

No one could have understood the logic of my life except by aiming at the ideal of a cause free of emotional tension, questioning the concept of "advanced reality". Just as Gobsec, the moneylender from Balzac's work was playing with his victims, all those people, tormented by shortcomings that come desperately to borrow money from him, in the same way, I felt that someone is playing with me, dominating me by his superiority.

A malignant will, usurious, a major awareness, deceptive, questioning me with cruelty, attracting me forcibly, like a magnet, only to soak avidly and the last drop of light from me, the depth of my own thinking, the core of my identity. A failure of my functioning? Life is a reality crafted by an engineer doing wonders and sharing his inventions through a denial: nothing of what you think you know about the world is yours and what you know about yourself turns into uncertainty and suspicion.

Something unfair and exaggerated in the middle of my knowledge. An electrical phenomenon, like an aurora borealis, which causes an intense sensation, but stormy. An overcurrent in the installation, which lit suddenly the huge LED of my progress and evolution, then turned it off shortly, without having the chance to give a "restore". The spark between the contrast poles, the signal of a state of uncertainty, a desire of exploiting the reality, quickly transformed into a blaze, then extinguishing just as easy as it appeared, in the dark.

Something was distorting the amplification factor of my own evolution. I was obsessed by the idea of possessing more and more science. Yet, tormented by this feeling with very fine cogs, of the uselessness and abandonment, I was awaiting for the redemptive comeback. A red LED that blink on and off repeatedly – to an external electric influx.

A reality whose strength lies in its tendency to oppose any form of understanding is an entity governed by eternal laws, unknown to the common man, an unseen entity and whose principles of operation remain a mystery to the world. And that's exactly what I was trying to do: to face a reality that assaulted my vision of the world.

Leadership: Do you give in to the predestination of belonging to an existence that constantly changes reality, at least as a possibility of experiencing a way of knowing what is not commonly known?

Do you let yourself caught in a context dominated by contradictions and paradoxes? What is the factor that contributes to the slow melting of your continuous motivation to be better? Do you live the feeling of disconnection from the element that defines you? Do you place your identity in a context permeated by confusion? What exactly distorts the amplification factor of your own evolution?

If you do not want to live the feeling of disconnection from the element that defines you, then defend your Ego. Be aware of your limitations in those situations where you are making fast steps towards better understanding the meaning of content, integrating it into your own value system and giving it personal meanings. Do not hurry, and do not diminish the energy in your way to become more efficient.

Just as hypertension increases the vulnerability of your body to the extreme weather conditions, so and you, if you let yourself shrouded by uncertainty in your way of perceiving and interpreting reality, your way of functioning will fall below the degree of acceptance of things that can be changed. Your personality will have to counteract a permanent jarring of thoughts and external reactions to all kinds of stimuli coming and going. A permanent rippling, an interference that never lets you advance towards perfection.

To experience a way of knowing what is not generally known is to dwell in a captivating, resourceful story whose mysterious subject is your own mind that you want to stretch beyond its borders.

The spark between the contrast poles reveals the existence of that conflict between reality and the ability to understand it, which may cause stagnation and even involution.

When you try to better understand yourself through the perspective of what you are experiencing, by placing emphasis on an intellectual and immaterial cause that makes one thing to be what it is, and the means by which you want to know it, you have to ask yourself: how much does it come from reality and how much of consciousness? What exactly is ephemeral and what is constant?

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-spark-between-the-contrast-poles.html

The Special Flexibility Of The Montage Construction

On July 08, 2010

Whoever isn't endowed with the talent of leadership will not be able to take upon himself a great burden and turn it into success.

The prophet started for the palace of the king of Israel, Zedekiah. He had to warn him at any price about the danger threatening him. If the king does not listen to him, there was no possibility of salvation for him, his children and his people.

- Surrender yourself, the prophet said to him. Surrender yourself and kneel down before Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon. There is no escape. You must surrender and beg for his mercy. Maybe he would spare your family and leave the House of the Lord untouched, as well.

Nevertheless, Zedekiah, despite the warning of his prophet, didn't want to surrender. His mind simmered ambitious plans. He was blinded by the splendor of his dream, which was to set free his people from the domination of Babylon and to regain his lands. He was firmly convinced that he could fulfill his dream.

Even so, the prophet looked at Zedekiah with great sadness and realized that he was lost. For he guided him to live in peace, but he wanted war. And starting a war against such a powerful king like Nebuchadnezzar meant pure suicidal.

Leadership: Do you have the opportunity to truly visualize the effects of your actions by experiencing them from the perspective of an improvised role play from the high sense of pride of expressing your personality?

The beginning of an endless hell. Finding that Nebuchadnezzar destroyed a large part of his army, king Zedekiah and his three sons left the palace in the greatest hurry and arrived at the plain of Hebron, where the rest of the Israeli army had retreated. But he didn't get to gasp his breath when he saw above the platform that rose above the city a cloud of dust and inside the cloud, spreading all along the horizon, the Babylonian chariots of battle.

Zedekiah immediately ordered his army to take the position to fight, and his horses be straight away brought to him. "The lord shall fight along with you and you will arrive tonight in the Be'er Sheva oasis as winners" he told them.

However, nobody noticed the terror that struck Zedekiah's face. No soldier could imagine that, in fact, their lord's knees weakened when he saw the hundreds of battle chariots going down towards him at a dazzling speed.

Leadership: Do you work on accepting your own facets that you cannot accept and whose vibration draws situations that you experience in the state of being under the sign of fatality?

A soul tortured by the fear of death. The famous writer Valerio Massimo Manfredi was not wrong when he said: "When a king feels at the mercy of his enemies, his despair and fear increase over the top, thousands of time more than the poorest and most humble of his subjects who have known all his life that he is hollow and defenseless."

Zedekiah was seized by panic. At that very instant, there were so many feelings tormenting his soul. A growing fear seized him every time he saw his enemies vertiginously approaching him, feeling the imminent danger. He thought about Nebuchadnezzar's cruelty and felt an icy tremor of fear rising on his spine. He knew that if he and his children were caught, Nebuchadnezzar would find direful punishments for them, and maybe he would find a way to keep them alive for weeks, months, or years, creating for them an infinite inferno. God knows the tortures and the sacrifices they would have to put up with for the rest of their lives.

With every second passing by, Zedekiah realized even more that he was in a difficult and dangerous situation, which he could not control. The Babylonian battle chariots were getting closer and closer, and like a storm, they destroyed and killed whatever got in their way.

Leadership: Do you rely on accepting some lower values of the module to design a vision, embracing an attitude that clearly shows that you are the adversary of a destiny from which resignation arises?

You cannot run from your mistakes. Zedekiah didn't want to die. He had to run, he had to save his own life and that of his children. With his heart seized by the fear of death, taking his courage in both hands, he left his army, thus committing an unforgivable mistake. For nobody likes coward leaders.

Without a leader, any battle is lost. The whole army of Zedekiah panicked, and people started running everywhere. The Babylonian warriors followed them through the desert in their chariots, as if they were hunting wild animals, killing them all.

As I said in a previous article, the fate of king Zedekiah and his children were tragically. They were caught and enchained. His children were barbarically executed in front of him, and his eyes have been removed and taken to Babylon to live forever in the darkness, carrying inside the pain of losing his children. Values, such as tolerance and refusal of violence, could not instill a healthy vision of the future.

Mircea Eliade was right when he said: "Those who have never endured the struggle for the fulfillment of an absurdity consider to be madness everything that exceeds their weakness and mediocrity."

Open your eyes and see the real you ! Zedekiah was a leader with great ideals, but with a weak character, lacking the spirit of a warrior, and, altogether, unrealistic. Being aware that his army stood no chance against Nebuchadnezzar's army, which was much better trained, equipped and had at his disposal more soldiers, however, he decided to start the war, despite his prophet's warnings. He, therefore, became responsible for the destruction of his entire army and of the death of his son. And the punishment he received, the one of spending the rest of his life groping in the dark, in the abyss of loneliness, held in derision, was within his audacity and his unbelievable courage.

Zedekiah's power, honor and soul were put at a difficult test because he wasn't able to fully predict his future and take measures accordingly. He proved to be unable to manage the events that he himself caused and to be a real leader to his people. Only the greatest human minds, the ones truly audacious and gifted with the talent of leadership are capable of assuming a great burden and turn it into a success. Not the mistrustful, irresponsible and coward natures, like Zedekiah, who abandon his mission and his people in order to save his own life.

What about you? Are you a true leader? Look at the truth with your eyes wide-open. Are you a leader with great ideas, but who rambles on wrong paths in order to fulfill your own goals, just as Zedekiah was?

Leadership is the result of the warnings that must be inscribed on the surface of your own consciousness such as thought, image, desire, fear, from which you can draw an important lesson: "If you want to do pastoral service, never forget who the sheep belong to."

Conclusion: Starting a war without ammunition or a proper strategy is a lost war from the beginning. First of all, a real leader must be honest with himself, must be able to properly assess himself in respect to what and how much he can do, and not to lie to himself, relying on vain illusions.

Foolishness, cowardice, aberrant decisions, incorrect assessments, arrogance, will have repercussions for all, especially upon the leader. Panic will seize him in difficult moments. And once the negative and irretrievable consequences appear, regrets will be in vain, and he will remain nothing but... The Special Flexibility Of The Montage Construction.

 Note: Valerio Massimo Manfredi - Il faraone delle sabbie, Publishing House Allfa, 2004.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-special-flexibility-of-the-montage-construction.html

The Special Part Of Leadership

On April 08, 2008

Evaluate your leadership potential in such a way that the product of the creation you experience through the process of sharing resources (vision, approach and concept) is oriented towards numerous possibilities to expand its content.

The working method of the two artists works perfectly, without roughness. Collaboration always has eight precise successive moments. First Sergei Eisenstein shows the famous composer, Prokofiev, the editing of the sequence. Then the sequence is timed and the director expresses his desires for music. He artistically expresses these goals: "Here, here it must sound as if someone were snatching the baby from a mother's arms", or "make it sound like you hit a bottle with a cap". Prokofiev is always delighted with such artistic indications.

The composer then returns to his hotel room in Alma-Ata, where he transposes the timing noted in a certain number of measures according to the tempo that the music of the sequence is to have. On the plan there is then a metronome, a chronometer and sheets not yet written, but with the notebooks divided into measures and scribbled with all sorts of notes on its meaning only. Once the frames of the composition are thus precisely fixed, Prokofiev composes the music that belongs to this pre-calculated network of measures. *

Leadership: Have you understood that everything that exists outside of you serves moment by moment your path of self-discovery through creation, taking into account the plasticity of an authentic expression?

A modern perspective of the creation you experience (as a wonderful adventure in a whole new world) contributes considerably to the development of cognitive activity in the service of a progressive development of notions that highlight an authentic expression of emotions and thoughts.

The very composition of the various approaches and the knowledge of the notions is a challenge and a mirror of yourself as a creative individual. Immediately, this modern perspective of creation must include the thirst to expose a vision closer to freedom of expression, remarkable possibilities for developing a valuable, concrete and interactive content, which sums up a series of repressed desires invested by the artist in the message of his work.

Of course, the transfer of emotions and vision to other people, through artistic creation, explains how the plastic means (line, color, sound) can appear in everyday life. For example, when you meet a new person who reminds you of someone else, that memory immediately provides you with information, a suggestion, a certain peculiarity regarding certain phenomena, consequences of actions and simple processes, related to the influences of art, which extend through the whole field of artistic creation.

Or only in a harmful personal context, or in a social context that does not predispose to intellectual evolution, the transfer of emotions and vision can be described as a matter of truthfulness, as an undersized tendency of the form you give to the content of your creation. This perspective of vision plots with a sandy substrate, without claims of exclusivity in the disclosure of quality information, conventions and language clichés, can generate a multitude of research and experiments that shed light on how people tend to repeat the pattern of relationships between ideology and how it constructs the new imaginary of the collectivity.

Therefore, the product of the creation you experience through the process of sharing resources (vision, approach and concept) and which can be oriented towards many possibilities to expand its content is closely related to the reflection on the various approaches to life situations that you could integrate, from the point of view of analysis, in a theoretical or practical field.

Therefore, your exterior serves the path of self-discovery through creation when what is contained in it can provide valuable information on the characteristics, purposes and actions that lead to the development of the idea of capitalizing on the vision you render about art and its relationship with life.

Someone on observatorcultural.ro said that the big questions of life are about art and its relationship with life, about the "being playing a role" and the relationship between aesthetics and ethics, about human action and heart seen as mystery, theater as falsehood and, at the same time, authenticity, all these being the themes that build the body of the creation and that also give it a stake of theoretical relevance.

The Special Part Of Leadership emerges from the act of rediscovering the self as a look at the world around which the deepest meanings of art, the mysteries and the peculiarities of creation are most often deciphered.

And here intervenes the plasticity of an authentic expression that stipulates that everything you observe and everything you know can be translated into a language whose stake is the recognition of the potential to give birth to a new dimension of depth in man and art, new creative tendencies, and an authentic vision capable of displaying a wide range of means of expression, such as: words, verbal messages, beautifully outlined ideas, conceptions of a new individual self-form, images of a new perception of reality.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-special-part-of-leadership.html

The Power Of The Magician's Spell

On April 16, 2010

Give a big boost to your leadership, without stopping yourself at that threshold where your vulnerable points are put through a sore trial.

Do you remember the movie "Zorro (1975)"? At one point, Captain Huerta kidnaps Zorro's girlfriend, by setting him a trap.

However, nothing affirms a man's character better than the essential proof of bravery. Zorro, the most astute among all, feels what has been prepared for him. His fantasy sleeps, like a colorless gas, beyond Colonel Huerta's imagination, thus guessing, thanks to his "superior" sense, not only the exact plan of the trap that was set to him, but also the way if escape, the evading and the most advantageous way to salvation.

The genius knows no obstacle. Zorro finds his salvation in the lack of attention with which Huerta has calculated his plan.

"Who does this dangerous phantasm think he is, he thinks he is able to suddenly defy, with a bounce, any trap and to seize the most hidden secrets? How was this frivolous vagrant able to escape the trap set for him with such meticulousness, skillfulness and mastery? What was the spell or the trick which saved him once again from a great trial?" Colonel Huerta wonders with fear in his soul.

However, vain questions ! Zorro and his lover escaped unharmed. Once again, the Colonel proved to be below the people's "savior".

Leadership: Are the actions you fulfill a result of your choosing to stay too long in one place throughout some lessons to assess your possibilities of being someone else?

The right resistance of a single man can overcome any barriers, especially if we are talking about Zorro. The world attributed to him the most extraordinary and impossible things, and he deserves in justice all the praise and appreciation. The glory of a genius cannot faint like a candle. A genius cannot collapse so vertiginously in the abyss of oblivion and evanescence; a genius cannot retire in anonymity after tasting the most sensational triumph.

But, he carries through, inspired by a noble ideal, putting into action the entire instinct of his genius, fighting to transfigure vision into reality. Leaving aside the vulnerable points that put to the test his patience, and his omniscience.

Zorro possessed the so-called inner sense, with which he was able to see with absolute transparency, with a peerless accurateness, the whole scenario his enemy had prepared for him. He has a truly sharp mind, which guarded him from danger, helping him to elucidate the hidden realities, picture the strategy and calculate very well all his possibilities to succeed. And his sharp mind was also the one, which allowed him to adhere to an acceptable level of risk, above everyone, establishing a deep connection, based on trust, with "the heart" of the people.

Do you adhere to an acceptable level of risk, putting into action the entire instinct of your genius?

When you are passing through a key-moment in life, when you are cornered from all directions with threats and vulnerabilities, when trouble seems to stick to you, there are only two things, which can come in between: a sharp mind and an arduous imagination.

Staying too long in one place throughout some lessons to assess your possibilities of being someone else means to risk yourself to imposed a much to great a difference between you and others. It means to prove certain things in order to be in the spotlight, without keeping track of what you have to impose upon yourself: a limit in everything. Or, to be more precise, you must know your limits, how much you can bare and up to what point you are pushed by the struggle of surpassing yourself or the struggle of serving a higher ideal.

Leadership: Do you stay firmly in position by adopting an attitude of winning without becoming a sure victim of the effects of connecting to a value of the type "Empty Artist"?

Are you able to focus on solutions in critical situations? Do you see clearly how things actually are? Do you have a vision of how you might influence them? Do you have the courage to step on a new ground and to get out of the pattern with which you was used? Are you satisfied with your current level of performance? Do you refuse to risk and increase your chances of success? How do perceive you the other people? Can you count on them in the most difficult moments? But, can they count on you?

"Empty Artist" is the exemplary case of a man suffering from excessive focusing on his performance because he found the deepest level of suffering: he came forth with a product that belongs to him 100%, which defines him as an autonomous authority, but he is judged harshly for the quality of the product in conformity, with the basis of a badly configured direction of thinking – partiality in taking decisions, the abuse of power or of trust, favoritism, excessive ambition, rigidity, aggressive competence, etc.

Leadership always incites to reflection and exploration. It is a kind of stimulus that significantly improves your options to filter any attempt to exert your will upon other individuals up to that point where they have to accept you as a superior man.

An ideal of judgment and justice behind the rules of law, which must be applied during this recognition of superiority, it is absolutely mandatory, because it shows your vitality, your entire creative energy that you put it in pushing the huge mechanism of exercising your power on new roads.

However, leadership may also behave like a kind of brake put in the gallop of changes through which you pass, from the lower level to the higher one. This sense of greatness to which you aspire, and which you get to feel after you broke all the barriers imposed by others, it easily becomes an ideal, consolingly thrown into the wind, if you abandon your commitment towards the values and principles in which you believe with conviction (which played a significant role in the successful story of Zorro).

If you do not know how to temper your tendency to jump to a higher level than rushing to reach greatness, you will have a big shock when you will push the "brake pedal". You risk a disconnection from the source of your entire potential of a leader, the loss of that defining energy that is triggered in the direction of the goal and unexpected result.

A great leader responds very well to his actions when leading, but also when he suddenly puts on the brake.

Leadership is the attitude imprinted upon you by the image of an immediate reality that does not oppose the real one.

The power of the magician's spell is the power to deceive the known and unknown enemies, and it is conferred by experience, intuition and the ability of knowing people.

Experience teaches you what actions to adopt in situations of turning points, and how to defend yourself from the known and unknown enemies, which will always stand in your way. Experience and the attentive knowing of people are the ones developing the intuition you needed in order to counteract the actions of your ban intention enemies. Well-knowing the human nature and the way of action of the people around you will help you to take the right decisions, offering surprise elements through which you can annihilate or counteract any subversive actions, to finally achieve your purpose.

Give a big boost to your leadership, without stopping yourself at that threshold where your vulnerable points are put through a sore trial.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-spell-binding-power-of-the-magician.html

The Spirits

On February 27, 2015

Urge your Ego to gain a superior identity in the face of others, giving meaning to a deeper reality.

- Maximilien – said Monte Cristo – the friends I lost do not rest in the dust. They are buried in our hearts, and God willed it, so that we can have them eternally by our side. I have two friends who always accompany me so: one of them is the one who gave me life, the other is the one who gave me intelligence. Their spirit, both of theirs, lives within me. In moments of doubt I ask for their advice, and if I am to do any good, it is due only to their counsel. Ask your heart, Maximilien, if you have to go on and show me a face so vicious.

- My friend – answered Maximilien – the voice of my heart is utterly sad and only promises me misfortune.

*- Only the weak see everything through a black cloth. The soul opens its own horizons. Because your soul is dark, it shows you a clouded sky.

Leadership: How does your personality react to one of the two alternatives: "are you a lonely island" or "a piece of the whole", through the assumed position of the soul and the challenges of existence?

A great man mentally associates his personality, experiences, every deed, every path chosen, every action, with a certain experience and a certain sense, in order to create a harmony between what he is and what he wants to be. Possessing additionally a certain innate capacity for spiritual receptivity, inheriting a gene of intelligence and mentality of his predecessors, such a man will never manifest himself as a wandering being who endures existential adventures, but rather, a model of virtue admired by everyone.

Leadership can emerge as a dominant feature of the spiritual man, in that it attaches importance to a deeper reality, hanging on its horizons of generating trust and credibility, the contours of a veritable alliance with predecessor models of thought and virtue.

The surface of a leader's space of thought and action possesses that depth of the banal passer through this world, but also a perspective of the artist who organizes his painting according to the events that demand his conscience – the perception of adding to the dimension of a more refined identity. But also because the fullness of a belief in a higher force is the most appropriate form of considering yourself to be the source of an order you have not foreseen, but which favors you in one way or another.

Placing himself in a continuing position of his predecessors, in terms of overlapping spheres of appreciation of what is morally correct and what is wrong, such a man will be able to better represent the foundation of a value judgement and the foundation of deep convictions.

A good connoisseur of the signs of the world draws his origins from the knowledge of his predecessors, doing an examination of conscience before God in the way that he opens his horizons in the face of a reality that looks alien and adverse.

Being a lonely island is to remove yourself from the causal force of events that are of major importance to your evolution, by the fact that the image of the world from which you originate is at the disposal of a consciousness beyond time and space, of a consciousness that engages in creating the reality you want.

Reality is what you think of yourself in a whirlwind of visions of other times that place you in a very realistic way in the midst of the present action, in an ingenious context of changing the course of events – a universal intelligence that continues its plan through knowledge transmitted from one generation to the next.

The man in which an almost superhuman serenity reigns lies, through excellence, in an area of external interference – in which the indications of potential polishing and guidance can be found. Your Ego may gain a superior identity over others only if you manage to be more than what you are in every moment in the cycle of life – when you have the opportunity to sincerely share your feelings and the longing for loved ones.

Being a part of the whole is to connect to a higher source of power so that your personality can be associated with the right to be of help to a world that continues to focus on the impact of the struggle between good and evil.

The most important requirements of the human soul are the claim to possess the wisdom of the elderly, the ability to walk in their footsteps, and the need to feed with the satisfaction of a fulfilled spiritual mission. Of course, nothing is harder to traverse than a journey suffocated by the nostalgia of that "unity in consciousness and feelings" that has been impressed upon us in our childhood, or by the nostalgia of a long-lost love, or by the nostalgia of the world before the original sin.

The leader is an emblem of his predecessors, enriched with boldness, dynamism and inspiration, with that moral quality that comes from the wisdom they left behind, shaping him into what he should be: a judge of facts and decisions, a mediator of the desire for change or an instance of modeling power on which others can rest upon.

The words of English poet John Donne will never wilt: "Not one man in this world is a lonely island. Each man is a part of the Continent, a piece of a whole." We all draw from others. And so too the way of being and the highest capacities of the mind and forethought are often transmitted spiritually.

To take into account of ability of embracing the spirit of those who lived, live and will live within you, is something profound, uplifting, which not only inspires you to action, but gets you closer to the stage of a superior man that benefits from the virtues with which he himself is in balance with.

Leadership is the quality of the man invested with a high spirituality to prove the existence of a universal intelligence, by providing an updated knowledge horizon on the perception between past and present, between good and evil.

The Spirits are the reliable friends who live within you, constantly watch over you, enhancing those qualities that give nobility to your life, and in the same time, broaden your sphere of impact and influence. What are those virtues that you have the possibility to perform with their help?

The power to rise above what you are, by assuming a vision of the world and by expanding the experience of using it through action, centering yourself into a profound and constant identity, finds its integration not only in a noble ideal. But above all, in broadening the horizons of knowledge and in deepening the relationships with those who have inspired you throughout life.

 Note: Alexandre Dumas - The Count of Monte Cristo, The Publishing House, 1957.

Source: https://neculaifantanaru.com/en/the-spirits.html

The Spiritual Elevation Minute

On Aprilie 07, 2013

Make a thorough introspection of your Ego before changing the Ego of others.

A man aged 36, shot twice, is critical in the ambulance. His name's Alan Riply. Next to him, the paramedic, keeping his calm, tries to stop the bleeding by pressing the pad on the open neck wound. But nothing more. He can't show his sensibility, or any kind of inner struggle. He's just doing his job.

Plasticity and expressivity are attributed only to a nervous, agitated being, touched by the laser beam of the sublime that urges to a fight, impregnated with the shining ray of true love that can enter in an apparently impossible space. Her name is Ella Brice. And within this woman, with a delicate sensibility, with a very piercing voice, for the first time, there are reaction forces unleashed in favor of her beloved.

Everything that moves her and keeps her still, the passion, the greatness, the determination, the affection, particular forces that don't cancel each other, but are always in the noble service of the everlasting, are once again combined, once again owe it to themselves to contribute. And when like a Pandora, it closes the lid on the box in which all the evils and hardships of the world are gathered, all hope grows, develops in itself, giving it an unsuspected strength in order to save a dying soul.

Leadership: Can you adopt that understanding of reality capable of synthesizing a pathway of life transposed into a "Forever Mine" and a temporal axis of the world around which the unification between material and spiritual is achieved?

Exploring an intensity field in one of its points is done with the help of a force that acts directly and continuously. The essential and fundamental life-generating substance lies within the man himself, in his most secret intimacy. His Ego can be stimulated only by maximizing the forces that give birth to an excessive exaltation feeling, by overlapping the two spaces – past and present, white and black, chiaroscuro.

Determined as a miner, Ella intends to extract the precious ore hidden in Alan. Tensing all her soul muscles, until an emotional heat waters her eyes, she talks openly. Once again her voice dares to express the necessary emotions for the fusion reaction with the subsistence area that still holds him conscious and alive. Her soothing and comforting words spill all their contents, the joy in her heart accompanies this invisible harmony of spiritual union:

"Alan, it's Ella ! Come on, help me ! Please, Alan ! Come on, remember ! Look at me. Do you remember Key Biscane? Come on, try ! The hotel was on the beach. It was spring. The sun shone every day. You were working at a hotel. You were 23. I was on holiday with my husband. He was older than me. We were married for only eight months. He was into politics... I followed you everywhere. I had never done that before. I had never felt that before..."

And exactly in this hour of remembering, it starts operating, the big resurrection begins. In a coma, Alan hears only vague voices, without knowing whose are they. But the appearance of these past flashes unleash in himself a true pressure, the strongest stimuli that – amazingly – bring him back to life.

Unification between material and spiritual is accomplished under the conditions of a story that never ends, but which can equally well integrate into the space of a permanent state of great inner intensity unfolded under the tremors of a memory that marks you for life.

The subtle spiritual fluid stubbornly lingers in him and starts to push through, to radiate from his inner space. Slowly, his eyes open, igniting that licker of happiness that eternity can never tear apart:

